

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

1922

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

BATES HALL.

NOT TO BE TAKEN AWAY.

GEN. LIB.

No. 6153.27 E

v. 18

1922

FROM THE

ROBERT C. BILLINGS FUND

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL CUMULATION

REVIEWS OF 1922 BOOKS

EDITED BY
MARION A. KNIGHT
AND MERTICE M. JAMES

NEW YORK
THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY
LONDON: GRAFTON & CO.
1923

PRINTED IN THE U. S. A.

Benef

15th June, 1960

6153.27 E
11.1
22
22.26

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

Vol. XVIII

February, 1923

Annual number

PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY

THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY

958-964 University Avenue New York City

Printed in U.S.A.

Book Review Digest, published monthly (except February) by the H. W. Wilson Company, 958-964 University Avenue, New York City. Subscription price: One year, 11 issues $8.00. Annual number published separately in February, $6.00; combined rate $12.00.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING

Combined rate for Book Review Digest, Cumulative Book Index and Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature $60 per page per month; two of these publications $50; one of these publications $40 per page per month. Smaller space and contract rates furnished upon request.

A complete editorial reading of an annual number of the Book Review Digest gives a wide view of the literary tendencies and styles of the moment and of the subjects which are occupying men's minds. The mere titles of the books show how different a world it is from that of ten years ago. Tho the volumes dealing directly with the war are surprisingly few, yet its influence is written over all. Surprising, too, in the light of oft reiterated assertions about the bankruptcy of religion and the church, is the number of religious books written, a fact which cannot fail to impress anyone who takes a survey of the year's publishing output. It is a new kind of religious book. The word creative, which often appears even in its titles, expresses this type of book at its best and indicates that it has passed from the region of static thinking about God and Christianity. Another pervasive influence is that of the new psychology. It crops out everywhere, especially in fiction.

One cannot help wondering if, in the remote possibility that fifty years hence there is left anywhere in the world a family which still enjoys its reading aloud around the evening lamp, there are many novels of this day which will be chosen for that purpose. We know of two recent ones which have stood the actual test in a family, following a re-reading of Dickens and Jane Austen which had happily filled a year of evenings. These were Galsworthy's "Forsyte Saga" and Walter de la Mare's "Memoirs of a Midget"—one a remarkable piece of social history, the other a work of pure creative imagination.

Our fiction marks the break up of the old order and the groping toward a new, the notice served upon this old world that the young have taken its badly botched work in hand. Out of it there is doubtless coming something worth while. In the meantime if some of these novels have satisfied the writer's desire for self expression or helped to remove some of his "inhibitions" they have served their purpose. It is not necessary that they should be read or returned to except for such light as they may throw on the social history of our times. Zona Gale, in writing of the American novel of the day finds its malady not in its extreme realism but in its lack of ability to express beauty. "The chief concern of the American novel of tomorrow will be to uncover the beauty of our essential commonplace living as the novel of today has triumphantly uncovered its ugliness."

In that marvelous preface to his "Nigger of the Narcissus" Joseph Conrad has thus expressed the ideal of the creative artist: "He speaks to our capacity for delight and wonder, to the sense of mystery surrounding our lives: to our sense of pity, and beauty, and pain: to the latent feeling of fellowship with all creation—and to the subtle but invincible, conviction of solidarity that knits together the loneliness of innumerable hearts . . . which binds the dead to the living and the living to the unborn. . . . To arrest, for the space of a breath, the hands busy about the work of the earth, and compel men entranced by the sight of distant goals to glance for a moment at the surrounding vision of form and colour, of sunshine and shadows; to make them pause for a look, for a sigh, for a smile—such is the aim, difficult and evanescent, and reserved only for a very few to achieve. But sometimes, by the deserving and the fortunate, even that task is accomplished. And when it is accomplished—behold!—all the truth of life is there: a moment of vision, a sigh, a smile—and the return to an eternal rest."

The staff of the Book Review Digest during the past year, in addition to the two editors, has consisted of Mrs. E. H. Schumm, who has written many of the descriptive notes; Kathleen S. Hayes, who has charge of the Wilson Library of 13,000 volumes and has also written some of the descriptive notes; Wilma Adams, Annette Langrock, and Lillian Bender whose share in the preparation of the Digest has been essential. We are indebted to Miss Mary E. Furbeck of the Economics Division of the New York Public Library for the list of documents for small libraries; also to Mr. Ellwood H. McClelland, Technology Librarian of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, for checking the technical books to be included in the Book Review Digest.

Publications from which Digests of Reviews are Made

- Administration—Administration. $5. Ronald Press Company, 20 Vesey St., New York.
 Am Econ R—American Economic Review. $5. American Economic Association, New Haven, Conn.
 Am Hist R—American Historical Review. $5. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Av., New York.
 Am J Soc—American Journal of Sociology. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Am Pol Sci R—American Political Science Review $4. Frederic A. Ogg, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
 Ann Am Acad—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. $5. 39th St. and Woodland Av., Philadelphia, Pa.
 Ath—Athenæum. See Nation and Ath.
 Atlantic's Bookshelf—Atlantic Monthly. The reviews are reprinted separately in pamphlet form. Copies may be had by any librarian, without charge, on application to the Atlantic Monthly Company, 8 Arlington St., Boston.
 Booklist—Booklist. $2. A. L. A. Publishing Board, 78 East Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
 Bookm—Bookman. $4. G. H. Doran Co, 244 Madison Av., New York.
 Boston Transcript—Boston Evening Transcript. $5.50. (Wednesday and Saturday). Boston Transcript Co., 324 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
 Canadian Hist R—Canadian Historical Review. $2. University of Toronto Press, Toronto, Ont.
 Cath World—Catholic World. $4. 120-122 West 60th St., New York.
 Class Philol—Classical Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Dial—Dial. $5. Dial Pub Co., 152 West 13th St., New York.
 Educ R—Educational Review. $3. Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N.Y.
 El School J—Elementary School Journal. $2.50. Dept. of Education, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
 Eng Hist R—English Historical Review. 32s. Longmans, Green & Co., 55 Fifth Av., New York.
 Freeman—Freeman. $6. The Freeman, Inc., 116 West 13th St., New York.
 Ind—Independent. Published by the founders of the Weekly Review. $3. National Weekly Corporation, 140 Nassau St., New York.
 Int Bk R—Literary Digest International Book Review. $1.50. Funk & Wagnalls Co., 354-360 Fourth Av., New York
 Int J Ethics—International Journal of Ethics. $3. Prof. James H. Tufts, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
 J Geol—Journal of Geology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 J Home Econ—Journal of Home Economics. $2.50. American Home Economics Assn., 1211 Cathedral St., Baltimore, Md.
 J Philos—Journal of Philosophy. $4. Sub-Station 84, New York.
 J Pol Econ—Journal of Political Economy. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 J Religion—Journal of Religion. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Lit D—Literary Digest. $4. Funk & Wagnalls Co., 354-360 Fourth Av., New York.
 Lit R—Literary Review of the New York Evening Post. $2.50. N.Y. Evening Post, Inc., 20 Vesey St., New York.
 Mod Philol—Modern Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Nation—Nation. $5. Nation Press, 20 Vesey St., New York.
 Nation and Ath—Nation and Athenæum. $8.58. 10 Adelphi Terrace, London, W. C. 2.
 Nature—Nature. £2 17s. $14. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Av., New York.
 New Repub—New Republic. $5. Republic Publishing Co., Inc., 421 West 21st St., New York.
 New Statesman—New Statesman. 30s. Statesman Pub. Co., 10 Great Queen St., Kingsway, London, W. C. 2.
 N Y Times—New York Times Book Review. $1. N.Y. Times Co., Times Square, New York.
 N Y Tribune—New York Tribune. $4. 15 Nassau St., New York.
 No Am—North American Review $4. North American Review Corporation, 9 East 37th St., New York.
 Outlook—Outlook. $5. Outlook Co., 381 Fourth Av., New York.
 Poetry—Poetry. $3. 543 Cass St., Chicago, Ill.
 Pol Sci Q—Political Science Quarterly. $5. (including supplement). Academy of Political Science, Kent Hall, Columbia University, New York.
 Pub W—Publishers' Weekly. Zones 1-5, $5; 6-8, $5.50 R. R. Bowker Co., 62 West 45th St., New York.
 R of Rs—American Review of Reviews. $4. Review of Reviews Corp., 30 Irving Place, New York.
 Sat R—Saturday Review. £1 10s. 9 King St., Covent Garden, London, W. C. 2
 School Arts M—School Arts Magazine. $3. Davis Press, Inc., 25 Foster St., Worcester, Mass.
 School R—School Review. $2.50. Dept. of Education, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
 Spec—Spectator. £2 3s 4d. 1 Wellington St., Strand, London, W. C.
 Springfd Republican—Springfield Republican. $8. The Republican Pub Co., Springfield, Mass.
 Survey—Survey. $5. Survey Associates, Inc., 112 East 19th St., New York.
 The Times [London] Lit Sup—The Times Literary Supplement. 30s. $6. The Times, North American Office, 280 Broadway, New York.
 Theatre Arts M—Theatre Arts Magazine. $2. Theatre Arts, Inc. 7 East 42d St., New York.
 Weekly R—Weekly Review. See Ind.
 Yale R n s—Yale Review (new series). $4. Yale Publishing Assn., Inc., 120 High St., New Haven, Conn.

In addition to the above list the Book Review Digest sometimes quotes from the Cleveland Open Shelf; Commission on the Church and Social Service, Information service; Detroit News; Engineering News-Record; Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News; New York Public Library New Technical Books; New York World; Pittsburgh Monthly Bulletin; Pratt Institute Quarterly Booklist; Pratt Institute Quarterly List of New Technical and Industrial Books; Wisconsin Library Bulletin; and other bulletins.

EXPLANATIONS

- Abbreviations of publishers' names will be found in the Publishers' Directory at the end of this number.
 The descriptive note is separated from critical notices of a book by a dash.
 The plus and minus signs preceding the names of the magazine indicate the degree of favor or disfavor of the entire review.
 In the reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review.
 * This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue.

Book Review Digest

Devoted to the Valuation of Current Literature

Reviews of 1922 Books

ABBOTT, WILLIS JOHN. Philip Derby, reporter. 232p $1.75 Dodd

22-18650

"Suppose first that you were a copy boy on a great New York daily and wanted to be a reporter. Suppose that a vacancy occurred on the staff by reason of a reporter being kidnaped by the Black Hand. Suppose then that you went out in your spare time after hours and tracked down that missing reporter, till you located him bound and locked up in a tenement on the East Side, under guard and threatened with death. And suppose you made that discovery at such a time that if you called the police in right away and set the kidnaped reporter free the morning papers would get the story, whereas your sheet was an evening event. What would you do? Philip Derby never faltered. He went home and had a good sleep. And in the morning when his story was safe, he dropped in and let him loose." (N Y Tribune) Incidentally his conduct in the matter won for Philip the coveted title of reporter.

"It is an excellent volume covering the art of newspaper making. And as Mr. Abbott is a veteran newspaper man we may rest assured that he has spoken as one having authority."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 9 '22 200w

"The description of modern newspaper methods constitutes the most valuable part of the book, for it abounds in interesting detail and in pointed illustrative anecdotes, and is obviously based on experience, while the central narrative is not only commonplace but distinctly melodramatic."

+ Lit R p134 O 21 '22 190w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 250w

ABBOTT, ELEANOR HALLOWELL (MRS FORDYCE COBURN). Fairy prince and other stories. 295p $2 Dutton

22-21208

All the stories in the book are ostensibly related by a little girl of nine and revolve about her family of which she is the youngest. The family is of a romantic turn of mind, making a game of everything. In the first story the Fairy Prince appears to Rosalee, nine-year-old's older sister, in the person of the son of her father's best friend. The occasion is Thanksgiving, the time when the family followed a custom of "budding" the Christmas tree. By Christmas time the young man's bud had blossomed into a lover, a true fairy Prince resplendent against a background of parental riches. The other stories are: The game of the bewitchments; The blinded lady; The gift of the probable places; The book of the funny smells—and everything; The little dog who couldn't sleep.

Boston Transcript p5 D 13 '22 230w

"The tale is built to standard specifications, of light fancifulness, mild humor, sentiment, and, now and then, a pleasant whimsicality.

Its episodes are told as if related by a child, but its psychology is not that of real childhood. Its ruling spirit is that of romantic cheerfulness."

— + Lit R p300 D 9 '22 110w

ABBOTT, LYMAN. What Christianity means to me; a spiritual autobiography. 194p $1.75 (9s) Macmillan

230 Christianity. Jesus Christ—Teaching

21-5092

"Lyman Abbott sums up sixty years of Christian experience and interpretation on his eighty-fifth birthday in a discussion of the vital doctrines of the Christian religion, which contains only a brief statement of the philanthropic and reform aspects of Christianity and a very general definition of the Kingdom on earth, in terms of its spirit, but not its content."—Nation

Booklist 17:326 Je '21

Reviewed by H. F. Ward

Nation 113:47 J1 13 '21 470w

"The style is simple and attractive, and, moreover, the narrative is clothed with that fascination which arises when a strong personality reveals itself. Dr Abbott's clean cut statement of what Christianity means to him will clear the air for many persons who have regarded it as emotion, or stated forms, or intellectual beliefs."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 16 '22 210w

ABRAHAM, JAMES JOHNSTON. My Balkan log. 311p il $5 Dutton [15s Chapman & H.] 940.47 European war—Hospitals, charities, etc. European war—Serbia (Eng ed 22-12037)

These memoirs of a doctor in a British Red Cross unit in Serbia describe his experiences in an improvised hospital in Uskub, early in the war. There were no conveniences, not even water. No sanitary arrangements, not enough beds, no bedding, and some fifteen hundred wounded arriving daily. To complete the nightmare a typhus epidemic broke out. It is a story of heroism and of the achievements of modern science.

"A record which for stark heroism of effort and of endurance has not been excelled. It has moreover that charm which made Dr. Abraham's previous book, 'A Surgeon's Log,' so popular. His descriptions give many rarely vivid glimpses of a land of marvelous scenic beauty." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 21 '22 1150w

Sat R 132:694 D 17 '21 120w

"Mr. Abraham has added an interesting—and affecting—page to the history not only of the war but of humanity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p798 D 8 '21 1300w

ACHAD HA-AM, pseud. See Glinzberg, A.

ADAMS, ADELINE. Amouretta landscape; and other stories. 249p $2 Houghton

22-10770

Art in some form is the background of all of these stories told with humor and a finished literary style; and they all turn on some queer freak of chance. In the title story a portrait painter accidentally paints a landscape masterpiece on the reverse side of a panel upon which another hand had already painted, as a jest, a bizarre picture of the model Amouretta, whose sudden death had prevented her marriage to a wealthy connoisseur. By another mistake it was the side of the portrait that was placed on exhibition at the art dealer's. It attracts the eye of the girl's wealthy lover and leads to the discovery of the masterpiece.

Booklist 18:363 J1 '22

"A delightfully unique quality have these all too brief stories. They are exquisite miniatures, in settings which reflect brilliantly the environment of the personalities they throw into relief. They have whimsical humor, a glancing light and color, and a sympathy as delicate as it is keen. Above all, they sparkle with that intangible quality, as impossible not to recognize as it is impossible to describe, which the French, more subtle than we in the comprehension and in the use of the nuances of language, call 'flair.'" F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 31 '22 1050w
Cleveland p80 S '22

"There is a good deal of originality in the tales and some very pleasing bits of humor."
+ Lit R p746 Je 17 '22 200w

"Although the way in which she makes nuances tangible is proof of her finesse, she suffers from the anemia which sometimes falls upon the more refined writers. In their reaction from the sensational they seem to fear to touch the more profound emotions which are always a little embarrassing to the over-civilized, and they confine their attention too closely to those aspects of life sufficiently subdued to be discussed at the dinner-table without any of that indecent exposure of soul which is the terror of the well-bred." J. W. Krutch

— + Nation 115:99 J1 26 '22 180w

"All of them are told with a neatness and care for literary values that lift them above the usual 'arty' short story."
+ N Y Times p19 My 21 '22 70w

"The author's keen sense of humor pervades every story and the reader feels that she enjoys telling the vanities and foibles of these picture-making people. Moreover, her artists are like other people, not so bizarre as to be uncomfortable to live with. Sex problems and lax morals have no place in Mrs Adams's stories; her artists are hard working people confronted with the everyday problems of existence and do not live in a rarified atmosphere."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Je 18 '22 350w

ADAMS, FRANKLIN PIERCE. Overset. 119p $1.50 Doubleday

817

22-22720

Overset is a newspaper term for material set up in excess of daily requirements. Of such material, in the author's sarcastic and funny vein, is the book composed, altho some of it has already appeared in The conning tower, the author's column in the New York World.

"He slays us with such winsome gambolings, such seductive waggery, that there is rich balm in every thrust."

+ Bookm 56:773 F '23 130w

"The comments and little essays are keen, of course, fluent, and snappy without conscious 'pep.'"

Boston Transcript p4 N 4 '22 200w

Reviewed by R. C. Benchley

Lit R p222 N 18 '22 300w

N Y Times p2 Ja 14 '23 200w

"Mr. Adams's book has 119 pages, with happy thoughts on most of them—happy, we might amend, for any folks except the unhappy, at whom more than a few of these darting thoughts are rather sharply directed."

N Y World p6e O 22 '22 110w

St Louis 20:301 D '22

Spring'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 200w

ADAMS, JOHN. Modern developments in educational practice. 302p $2 Harcourt [6s Univ. of London]

371 Education. Teaching

The purpose of the book is to show how in modern educational practice the emphasis has gradually shifted from the importance of the subject matter to that of the child. Education has become paidocentric and calls for an entire reorganization of method and attitude on the part of teachers, of mental standards and measurement of attainments. Several of the more important experimental plans are cited in illustration and what can and cannot be expected of psychoanalysis as an aid to the teacher is clearly set forth. Contents: What underlies the new teaching; The child, the school, and the world; Standards and mental tests; Scales of attainment; The psychology of the class; The knell of class-teaching; The Dalton plan; The Gary contribution; The play way; The project method; Psycho-analysis in education; Free discipline; Index.

"There is more good matter in Professor Adams's chapter on 'Standards and Mental Tests,' for example, than in most of the books on the subject. It just misses being the one adequate brief summary of intelligence testing that has so far appeared." W. C. Ryan, Jr.

+ Lit R p381 Ja 13 '23 620w

"The value of the book with which Professor Adams (now emeritus) initiates his new leisure is that it is a lucid and comprehensive guide to the main activities of modern specialists. It is the kind of book that only he could have written so well. He has the large vision that can see the wood as well as the trees, the joyous assimilative power of the born bookman, the interpretative capacity of the philosopher, and the expository skill of the practised teacher. Professor Adams has produced a perfect Baedeker for the big and puzzling world of modern education." G. S.

+ Nation and Ath 31:770 S 9 '22 550w

"A readable and interesting book. This study, exhaustive neither of subject or of reader, will appeal to a large number of those interested in educational progress. It will appeal to those who are weary of the never-ending claims of the enthusiastic propagandist."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 N 28 '22 360w

Wis Lib Bul 19:21 Ja '23

ADAMS, KATHARINE. Wisp; a girl of Dublin. 309p il $2 Macmillan

22-19478

"The story of a little girl who lives in a dingy tenement, but who makes a world of beauty out of her imagination, and her adventures with some American children who thru Wisp come to feel for themselves the charm of Ireland."—Pub W

Booklist 19:90 D '22

"It is not local color which makes this book. The book is written in a warm, solid style, with flashes, things that strike in on writer, reader, and Wisp. There is substance here." Marion Ponsonby

+ Lit R p196 N 11 '22 90w

ADAMS, RANDOLPH GREENFIELD. Political ideas of the American revolution. 207p il $2 Trinity college press, Durham, N.C.

973.3 United States—History—Revolution—Causes. Great Britain—Colonies 22-15664

"The book is not concerned with the ordinary political philosophy of the Revolution such as natural rights, the social compact and the like but is rather a study of the Britannic-American contributions to the problem of imperial organization during the years 1765 to 1775. The author finds in the writings and speeches of leading thinkers of that period the idea of imperial federation which is at the basis of the present-day British Commonwealth, and concludes that the question of American independence might never have arisen but for Britain's insistence that it was impossible to distribute authority and at the same time retain sovereignty."—Am Pol Sci R

"The book is exceedingly well written, clear, graceful, sure, not hide-bound in expression, and exposing a wide range of knowledge beyond the bounds of the materials in hand. It is a pity that so excellent a book could not have been better printed." C. H. Van Tyne

+ — Am Hist R 28:367 Ja '23 350w
+ — Am Pol Sci R 16:716 N '22 150w

"A thorough piece of research work."
+ Boston Transcript p4 S 13 '22 450w

Reviewed by M. G. Reid
Canadian Hist R 3:364 D '22 1300w

"For a doctoral dissertation, it is an able and well-written piece of work. The contents are rather ill-arranged, with considerable repetition; but some of the chapters in themselves are enlightening essays." S. E. Morison

+ — Eng Hist R 38:114 Ja '23 1000w

"Many if not most Americans who consider themselves well informed upon the position that the colonists took in the growing disagreement with Great Britain will find it to their advantage to read these chapters of Dr. Adams."

+ Lit R p114 O 14 '22 170w

"Very interesting essay."

+ Nation and Ath 32:128 O 21 '22 130w
R of Rs 66:446 O '22 70w

"Written brilliantly along original lines."

+ Spec 130:68 Ja 13 '23 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p571 S 7 '22 70w

ADAMS, SAMUEL HOPKINS. From a bench
in our square. 308p $2 Houghton 22-23262

"The eight short stories in this volume are scened in that same 'Our Square,' which gave Mr. Adams the locality and the characters for a previous volume, 'Our Square and the People in It'—an ancient bit of greenery far over on the east side of New York, the slums round about it, relics of former greatness still watching over it and, take it from Mr. Adams, some very interesting people still frequenting it. The same benignant old Dominie who figured in the previous stories is the narrator of these, reporting what he has seen and learned from his particular bench in a select corner of Our Square. Cyrus the Gaunt appears also, although infrequently, and the Bonnie Lassie, now the wife of Cyrus. MacLachan, Terry the Cop, Polyglot Elsa and others who helped to make the human comedy of the previous book contribute their share to these stories also, although these little dramas are, for the most part, worked out by different characters. The older and more familiar ones merely lending a hand now and then."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:158 F '23

"There is a delicate whimsical charm about these stories of the queer folk and the delightful folk who can be known when one has grown used to a bench and to studying one's fellow creatures."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 13 '22 320w

"It is not 'high-brow' in the least, but written for the enjoyment of that elusive creature, the average man. These are distinctly good short stories from a technical point of view, each the development of a single situation. All of them have interesting and sometimes highly original plots and the characters are vivid and well drawn."

+ Lit R p355 D 30 '22 250w

"Mr. Adams, looking at life through the glasses of the optimist, has succeeded in extracting from it some interesting and diverting sketches."

+ N Y Times p24 D 3 '22 520w

ADDAMS, JANE. Peace and bread in time of war. 257p $1.75 (8s 6d) Macmillan

940.312 European war—Peace and mediation. Woman's peace party. Peace

22-4338

The book is "the outgrowth of an attempt to write a brief history of the efforts for peace made by a small group of women in the United States during the European War, and of their connection with the women of other countries, as together they become organized into the Woman's International League for Peace and Freedom." (Foreword) The author portrays the convictions upon which these efforts were based and interprets her own motives as "protagonist of that most unpopular of all causes—peace in time of war." Contents: At the beginning of the Great war; The neutral conference plus the Ford ship; President Wilson's policies and the Woman's peace party; A review of bread rations and woman's traditions; A speculation on bread labor and war slogans; After the United States entered the war; Personal reactions in time of war; In Europe during the armistice; The aftermath of war; The food challenge to the League of nations; In Europe after two years of peace.

"Miss Addams does not oppose war merely on emotional grounds; she has written an eminently thoughtful and well reasoned book in which she analyzes from personal experience many of the effects of the conflict."

+ Bookm 55:428 Je '22 150w

"A keen, contemplative analysis." E. L. J.
+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser pl My '22 1550w

"The book is impressive alike in its candour and in its lack of malice." W. H. C.
+ Freeman 5:381 Je 28 '22 180w

Revised by C. Seymour
Lit R p147 O 28 '22 450w

Reviewed by Dorothy Brewster
Nation 115:130 Ag 2 '22 700w

Nation and Ath 31:800 S 16 '22 500w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
+ New Repub 31:166 Jl 5 '22 780w
St Louis 21:18 Ja '23

The Times [London] Lit Sup p347 My 25 '22 60w

Wis Lib Bul 18:131 My '22

ADDISON, MEDORA C. Dreams and a sword. (Yale ser. of younger poets) 46p $1.25 Yale univ. press [6s 6d Milford]

811

22-10022

"The second woman to be included in the Yale Series of Younger Poets is Medora C. Addison, who, with her collection, 'Dreams and a Sword,' makes the twelfth volume in this series of younger poets."—Boston Transcript

"To read 'Dreams and a Sword' is to have adventures. Not, alas, the adventures of a soul among masterpieces, but the commoner experience of chancing on an effect of beauty where one had come to expect only the commonplace. Medora Addison has written in this volume some exceedingly banal war poetry, and not inconsiderable sentimental verses, all in choppy lines of monotonous metres."

+ — + Bookm 56:107 S '22 160w

"Within the limits of her brief verses she has so admirably succeeded in interrelating the mood and the weapon, that all misgivings concerning her gift have vanished. With developed powers, a broader based imagination in experience, her productions ought to win her a recognized position among contemporary poets." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 26 '22 750w

"Some of the poems are almost too slight, too young, too unformed, to go into a book. Others, better ones, are typical, gentle women's lyrics."

+ — + Lit R p692 My 27 '22 110w

ADDISON, MEDORA C.—Continued

"Mrs. Addison's mother love and the gentle human understanding deriving from it, add to the charm of her work, which contains a quiet vitality, and appears to be an utterance more directly out of real feeling than out of fancy. It has an engaging simplicity and naturalness. The strength of great imagination is not here, but there are some compensating qualities. Sympathy, for instance, Mrs. Addison's work is fragile but worth while, and in at least three instances—The Quest, In Dreams, and Ships, she has achieved striking lyrics." G. B. S.

+ New Repub 32:226 O 25 '22 150w

"A beautiful poem, 'Ships,' redeems a collection which is more often merely competent."

— + Spec 128:758 Jc 17 '22 40w

"Methodical but graceful."

+ Spring'd Republican p16 Jc 23 '22 70w

"Little flights of a delicate fancy, rather sad in its tender memories and its sense of the transiency of life."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p415 Jc 22 '22 30w

ADE, GEORGE. Single blessedness, and other observations. 224p $1.50 Doubleday

817

22-22718

Many of these observations are a humorist's comparisons between what has been and what is, and comments on people and their ways. We are told that nowadays not to be young is "somewhere between a misdemeanor and a crime" and that "front is a prodigious asset—whether you have the goods in stock or not." The advantages of single blessedness under the author's critical eyes dwindle down to a negative quantity.

Booklist 19:151 F '23

Bookm 56:644 Ja '23 110w

Boston Transcript p2 N 4 '22 400w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:240 O 28 '22 110w

"Good stuff, and not so simple as it seems in the reading. . . You can give this to a great many people and please each one boy, girl, man or woman." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p37 D '22 70w

"If it weren't for the fact that Mr. Ade's book is funny in spite of what he says, it would be rather depressing. We wish that he would go back to writing for himself again and let the country go." R. C. Benchley

— + Lit R p222 N 18 '22 330w

"They are light essays, sunny and sprightly, with quaint twists of thought, but with sound common sense behind most of them"

+ N Y Times p2 Ja 14 '23 400w

"As usual Mr Ade's appraisals are satirical, but not vicious. Perhaps he works a bit too hard in trying to prove that, except for New York, the country is sound as a dollar, but the ensemble is amusing, somewhat provocative, and not so trivial as Mr Ade's free-and-easy style might suggest. Taken in small doses, Mr Ade's observations and ruminations are a good tonic for the jaded mind."

+ — Spring'd Republican p10 D 13 '22 150w

AGATE, JAMES EVERSHED. Alarums and excursions. 263p $2 Doran [7s 6d G. Richards]

824

(Eng ed 22-14077)

"James E. Agate, English critic of the drama and essayist, seems to be a happy blend of Heywood Brown, Stephen Leacock, and at rare moments, George Jean Nathan. He slips from a discussion of prize-fighters to Sarah Bernhardt without so much as shifting gears, and thence, with similar facility, to a Leacockian extravaganza on horseracing. His journeyman critiques of the drama are apparently influenced by Nathan but his more finished papers on Pavlova, Shaw, the Guitrys, and 'The Decay of Criticism' are on a plane with the probings of the more austere Mr. Walkley of the London 'Times.'"—Bookm

"Mr. Agate occasionally goes a-gunning for a pun, and now and then attempts a precious style that ill becomes his informal manner; at best his papers are interesting records of the contemporary stage and contemporary life."

+ — Bookm 56:227 O '22 130w

"The charm of this volume is the author's feeling that criticism should be genuine and, if possible, kindly. No one can deny that it lacks originality."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 O 18 '22 650w

Lit R p130 O 21 '22 300w

"He writes brightly and cultivates relish. He has read Hazlitt deeply for his matter and Chesterton observantly for his style. The result is a vivacious, agreeable, intelligent book that can be read with pleasure and forgotten without pain."

+ Nation 115:sup390 O 11 '22 240w

+ Sat R 133:180 F 18 '22 380w

"His thoughts are intrinsically very much more amusing than those of most of us journalists. . . His book, with its cheerful extravagance, its penetration, makes delightful reading. I do not think I have ever seen a set of newspaper articles come through the test of reprinting with such success."

+ — Spec 128:340 Mr 18 '22 650w

Reviewed by St J: Ervine

Spring'd Republican p8 Jl 8 '22 360w

"A little too impulsively elaborate, a little too adroitly careless (his true carelessness only extends to his proof-reading), his fun is at bottom very human. He is the plain man, proud of his plainness."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p87 F 9 '22 750w

AIKEN, CONRAD POTTER. Priapus and the pool. 67p $2.50 Dunster house bookshop

811

22-5616

"The twenty-five poems which make up the sequence are each complete in themselves and yet each serves, as it should, to develop the central theme. It is the old story of hopeless love (which the reader may or may not interpret as symbolic of love for beauty)."—New Repub

"Apparently he believes in poetry as a craft, a sport, a profession—like boxing or magic—which must be thoroughly studied before it can be improved. He examines other poets accordingly, not to imitate them, but to learn their tricks. He never echoes. His last volume is typical more of his attitude than of his former work. It is briefer, more lyric, more varied; the philosophy remains the same, but the style has changed vastly. Priapus and the Pool is better and worse than anything Aiken wrote before it. Usually it is better, and it lies even more certainly within the traditions of great English poetry." Malcolm Cowley

Dial 73:563 N '22 1200w

"This story of the growth and waning of a love is told in verse which, if you surrender yourself to its syllables, moves like music through delicately various rhythms. Its atmosphere is that of a trance. It is frail, it is fugitive, but it clothes itself in an evanescence strangely beautiful."

+ — Lit R p755 Jc 24 '22 550w

"The volume is typical of Mr. Aiken at his best. It is, as most of his work, beauty drawn from pain. It has his reliance upon a suggestive, tangential approach to his theme (contrasting with the direct, explicit approach) his sense of atmosphere, and, above all, his exquisite sureness of music." Royall Snow

+ New Repub 31:113 Jc 21 '22 800w

"This latest volume of his seems to me the culmination of his gift, to date." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p12 My 7 '22 1500w

"This volume reveals him still liable to lose himself in a wilderness, or perhaps more accurately in a luminous mist, of beautiful words and quiet long-drawn-out cadences; the wanderer, not the voyager; the dreamer, not the teller of dreams. In this languorous climate of his poetry, we go gently on, mildly pleased at all times and sometimes on the verge of delight. . . Mr. Aiken undoubtedly has an innate, yet so far unperfected, power of poetry."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p462 J1 13 '22 300w

AIKMAN, HENRY G., pseud. See Armstrong, H. H.

AITCHISON, LESLIE. Engineering steels: an exposition of the properties of steel for engineers and users to secure economy in working and efficiency of result. 427p il $6 Van Nostrand [25s MacDonal & Evans]

669.1 Steel (Eng ed 22-781)

Contents: Steel melting processes; The casting and working of steel; The heat treatment of steel; Mechanical testing of steel; Plain carbon steels; Alloy steels; Case-hardening steels; Cold worked steels; Tool steels; Appendices.

"The book is very well printed and illustrated, many of the best plates being selected from Mr. Brearley's works, while others show special types of testing machines. The whole subject of the relative value of tests for steels of this class is in a state of flux, and an authoritative statement is not yet to be expected, but Dr. Aitchison has made a good beginning, and his efforts will be welcomed by engineers." C. D. Desch

+ Nature 110:537 O 21 '22 600w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:420 O '22

ALDEN, RAYMOND MACDONALD. Shakespeare. (Master spirits of literature) 377p $2.50 Duffield

$22.33 Shakespeare, William 22-7766

"A compendium of the known facts regarding Shakespeare, and of the prevailing critical judgments of modern scholarship, sufficiently untechnical for the purposes of the general reader, and at the same time uncolored by any desire to prove a case. . . Restatement of the main issues involved in the effort to adjust our view of a world-genius, whose values are absolute and timeless, to the special relationship which his work bore to his immediate audience and age."—Preface

Booklist 19:11 O '22

"His is a modest and scholarly attitude . . . an attitude founded upon very copious reading and long reflection and characterized by a lively distrust of the unproved and unprovable. The author has held himself very loyally to his duty of writing a comprehensive and unprejudiced handbook. It is no small praise to say that a reasonable student of Shakespeare will probably find in the work not very much to dissent from and still less to yawn over." Tucker Brooke

+ Lit R p740 Je 17 '22 270w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:28 Ja '23

"Scholarly in method while broadly informing and instructive in aim. Prof Alden excellently combines his own thoughtful appreciation with sound knowledge or well-considered theory."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Je 18 '22 280w
Wis Lib Bul 19:22 Ja '23

ALDER, WILLIAM FISHER. Isle of vanishing men. 184p il $2 Century

919.5 New Guinea—Description and travel.
Ethnology—New Guinea 22-4090

A narrative of adventure in the cannibal island of New Guinea. The author penetrated to the interior and wilder parts of the island, camped among the natives and observed and photographed them at close range. He describes their barbaric life and customs, their bodily adornment, their festivals and pastimes.

"None of the usual and, be it confessed, sometimes cloying descriptions of the South Sea 'paradises' occur in this refreshingly terse and candid revelative of visions seen by very few white men. . . The record of adventure makes absorbing reading and the many photographic illustrations are as unusual as the adventures they unimpeachably attest." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 20 '22 600w

"The author has a sufficiently interesting story to tell, and although the book is not the work of a trained anthropologist, it gives a vivid and detailed account of primitive life, with remarkable pictures. The style is pleasant and informal."

+ Lit R p660 My 13 '22 100w

"The book is illustrated with photographs which amplify the very readable text and give a good idea of primitive human types and the unsartorial fashions they affect."

+ New Statesman 20:24 O 7 '22 200w

St Louis 20:126 Je '22

"There is a realism in the text, augmented by the photographs, that will develop a creepy feeling, the author proving an exceptionally vivid book-guide for those who would travel with him into the realms of a little-civilized land."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 3 '22 250w
Wis Lib Bul 18:155 Je '22

ALDINGTON, HILDA (DOOLITTLE) (MRS RICHARD ALDINGTON). Hymen. 47p $1.50 Holt [3s Egoist press]

811 22-26308

"This is the first collection of H. D.'s verse to appear since the slender volume 'Sea garden' which was published four or five years ago. She has been called a 'Greek' in mood and temper, because she has taken her symbols, to a very large extent, from the Hellenic world. The other portion of her themes are evoked as symbols from the natural objects and elements."—Boston Transcript

"Not cold, not remote, but a beacon to those who, in a destructive age, believe in life, 'Hymen' is a long flight beyond the poet's earlier 'Sea Garden' both in depth of thought and originality of vision." Winifred Bryher

+ Bookm 56:225 O '22 650w

"No subject can give to H. D.'s art the sense of dimensions; hardly any force can give the sense of action to her verse. Her art is restricted, but in the restrictions nothing is more perfect." W. S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 14 '22 1400w

"For the most part her medium, plastic and utterly obedient, adapts itself. There is nothing tentative and experimental about these last poems. They may stand for the final, accomplished expression of H. D. Comparing them with her earlier work, even admitting that they have lost something of its sharp simplicity, one sees that she has gained immeasurably in depth and range." May Sinclair

+ Dial 72:203 F '22 1750w

"In widening her poetical content 'H. D.' has lost nothing of her beautiful, astringent manner of presentation. A rare artist, indeed! 'Hymen' proves her once more among the most important of recent American poets." Amy Lowell

+ Lit R p364 Ja 21 '22 1350w

"'H. D.' is that unique thing, an imagist poet with passion as well as pattern. There are no wastes of prose in her gemmy pages; there is no conceit, no languor in her pen. She goes on carving her Greek world out of pure, white rock, inlaying it all the while with Mediterranean purple and the hues of wind-flowers infinitely alive. It would require more paper than she has ever filled to analyze the beauty she creates." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 114:499 Ap 26 '22 300w

"In Hymen, more effectively than in Sea Garden, H. D. accomplishes the miracle of fusing warm blood and chill stone. Her marbles palpitate with color; the smallest of her tanagras are flushed with life. More than any of the Imagists, H. D. has the sculptor's way of transfixing a gesture and yet not making it stiff and static; she can capture a movement without seeming to arrest it." L. Intermyer

+ New Repub 29:134 D 28 '21 240w

ALDINGTON, HILDA—Continued

"Perfectly wrought the poems are. Lines haunt the ears as the sound of rain in the South." W. Bryher

+ Poetry 20:333 Mr '22 850w

"So glacial is the greater part of her poetry that it might well serve the purposes today of the poetry of Tu Fu, a Chinese poet of twelve centuries ago who recommended it, perhaps because of similar qualities, as an infallible cure for malarial fever."

— Sat R 132:669 D 10 '21 300w

"There are one or two other poems in 'Hymen' where words are still beautiful, but almost as empty as Swinburne sometimes left words. But perhaps H. D. is still at the stage of writing exercises. I sincerely hope so, for many of her poems show remarkable technical skill and resource; and the modern movement so often shows a lack of these qualities. Perhaps when she is satisfied with her fashioning of the cup she will put something into it." A. Williams-Ellis

— + Spec 128:247 F 25 '22 1150w

"In spite of similarity of theme, and a similarity of treatment, too, there is no monotony in the book. Each poem glows with beauty and with color and is exquisitely wrought."

+ Springf'd Republican p13a Mr 26 '22 340w

"These compositions are rather deadening and monotonous; and the difficulty of extracting any meaning from many of them is not relieved by any special beauty of utterance."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p702 O 27 '21 190w

ALDON, ADAIR. Hill of adventure. 281p $1.75 Century

22-18100

On her sixteenth birthday, Beatrice Deems had received a deed for twenty-three acres of land in the Rocky Mountains near the town of Ely, Montana. A little later she and her sister Nancy and their Aunt Anna decided to spend the summer in Ely, for Aunt Anna's health. After some serious labor disturbances in the town they moved up to the cabin on Beatrice's land. Even there adventure followed them and before the summer was over they had had several meetings with bears and troublesome humans, but Aunt Anna's health improved and a mystery was solved, and the summer ended happily.

— Boston Transcript p6 O 11 '22 160w
Cleveland p96 D '22

"Has an outdoor freshness that is wholesome, even if the characters are rather pen-drawn than real." M. H. B. Mussey

+ — Nation 115:sup619 D 6 '22 100w

ALEXANDER, HARTLEY BURR. Odes and lyrics. 181p $2 Jones, Marshall

811

22-5395

"The 'Odes on the Generations of Man' in this volume were originally published in 1910 by Baker & Taylor, in an edition now exhausted. Several other pieces originally appeared in 'The Mid-Earth Life' (1907), of which only a few copies were printed. A considerable number of the shorter pieces have been published in periodicals, notably in The Midland."—Lit R

"At its best produces deep forged passages of quiet and noble philosophy and at its worst a watered sentimentality as trickily and tasteless as maple sap."

— + Bookm 56:102 S '22 130w

"A neat and correct craftsmanship is here displayed, in a variety of forms, which give evidence that the author has a wide and facile command of technique. A well equipped mind, and a precipitating aspiration are also qualities under command, but that illusive power, that spirit which transmutes and transfuses the ore of experience, physical, mental, emotional into poetry is lacking." W. S. B.

— + Boston Transcript p6 My 13 '22 520w

"There is genuine poetic feeling in many of these poems, but they are sadly in need of pruning. Where the thought is slow-paced, the metre need not gallop, and too often thought is smothered with an amazingly erudite vocabulary. There is an echo of Swinburne about the longer poems, and, sometimes, in the shorter ones on Greek Models, a clear-cut simplicity which redeems many faults."

+ — Dial 73:236 Ag '22 60w

"The matter of many of these poems is interesting, the diction is sometimes distinguished, the ideas of the poems are often large and imaginative; but it cannot be denied that the general impression of the book is heavy. Some fine lines do not relieve a mass of mediocre writing and inflated verbiage. There is much 'poetic license' and affectation."

— + Lit R p708 Je 3 '22 300w

"Mr. Alexander grows very cosmic at times; he employs stilted language and archaic thoughts; he repeats constantly the material that greater poets have handled surpassingly well."

— Outlook 133:148 Ja 17 '23 250w

ALINGTON, CYRIL ARGENTINE. Through the shadows. 233p $1.75 Macmillan

22-9935

An English house party is turned into a comedy of errors by the complications arising from several of the guests assuming characters not their own and having to live up to them. When Sir Richard Atherton, the bachelor host, who was giving the party in honor of an American girl, found that his married sister was unable to come down and be hostess, he hastily impressed into service an unmarried cousin to impersonate his sister. Sir Richard's friend Captain England was called upon to act the part of a spiritualist and thought reader, and his uncle to become a retired Indian civilian. Other adjustments followed, till the house was filled with people who weren't what they pretended to be, and Sir Richard found himself the conductor of a veritable stage performance.

Booklist 18:363 Jl '22

Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '22 440w

Cleveland p91 D '22

"The story is good enough to make one wish it were better. It moves with amazing speed, but perhaps with a speed that is too amazing. Transformations occur too quickly and situations are developed with an arbitrariness that suggests a clever stage-manager rather than a gifted revealer of human folly." J. L. T.

+ — Freeman 6:166 O 25 '22 310w

"A piece of deliciously clever foolery." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 108:526 Je 10 '22 280w

"Throughout all this crowded comedy of errors the author is consistently good-natured to every one concerned. No one is ever, ever allowed to hurt any one else's feelings, and the touches of satire are of the gentlest (and often incredibly naive). In fact, in spite of its neatly constructed comicalities, Dr. Alington's book suffers from being just too correct, too pure a sample of a humor already over-refined. Even in his slang there is something impeccable." Hamish Miles

+ — Lit R p683 My 27 '22 680w

"A graceful and amusing little novel full of an ingenuity which at times gets between the reader and the fun."

+ Nation 115:76 Jl 19 '22 20w

"Light, amusing, and often clever in its handling of the mistakes and cross-purposes of the various characters; its dialogue is natural, and over many of the incidents the author has managed to cast a veil of plausibility. But it dwindles away to a termination instead of rising to a climax."

+ — N Y Times p21 My 21 '22 390w

"Is a hopeful attempt, but not quite an achievement. It provokes an ungracious thought of how much better P. G. Wodehouse could have handled the same theme." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Jl 2 '22 300w

"It is farce, but clever farce; its plot is pretty shaky at the end, but one reads for the laughs and not for the plot."

+ — Outlook 131:264 Je 7 '22 70w

"Will delight both the devotees of humorous and mystery stories. Considered from either standpoint, the story 'makes good.'"

+ Springfield Republican p7a Je 18 '22 220w

Wis Lib Bul 18:218 O '22

ALLEN, CHARLES RICKETSON. Foreman and his job. 526p $5 (15s) Lippincott 658.7 Foremen. Industrial management 22-6015

The book is a companion to the author's "The instructor, the man and the job." Foremen's conferences are an outgrowth of the larger recognition of the responsibilities of the foreman in industrial and commercial organizations. The book is the result of the author's experience as conference leader, as adviser to various industrial plants, and in work whose purpose it was to train adequate representatives and instructors. It deals with three of the most important factors in production: supervision, cost control, and instruction; and contains tables, forms, illustrations and appendices.

Booklist 18:314 Je '22

Cleveland p59 Ag '22

"The volume contains far more pages than are justified by the amount of essential and practical information contained."

— Lit R p626 Ap 29 '22 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:284 Je '22

Pratt p10 autumn '22

St Louis 20:215 S '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p126 F 23 '22 30w

ALLEN, GEORGE HENRY. French revolution. 4v v 1 340p il $10 Barrie 944.04 France—History—Revolution 22-2753

"This is the first installment of an extended work on the French Revolution, undertaken because the author believes that revolutionary changes are the most significant result of the recent war and that, accordingly, the study of an equally great, and somewhat analogous, upheaval will prove to be opportune. In the first volume, called The Prelude, he carries the story to the end of July, 1789. About half the chapters are devoted to a sketch of the development of the kingdom prior to the accession of Louis XVI."—Am Hist R

"It is written in an agreeable style and with a sympathetic tone, but the treatment is superficial and is marred by too many errors. The amount of attention paid to the royal mistresses is characteristic. The life of the people and especially of the peasantry is described in a perfunctory manner."

+ — Am Hist R 28:115 O '22 600w

"The desire of the author to make his work interesting often leads him into the error of giving generalizations without any basis in fact for the support of his generalizations. As a popular presentation of the factors and causes underlying the French Revolution, the volume should serve a useful purpose."

+ — Ann Am Acad 104:175 N '22 420w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 7 '22 900w

"The over-long introductory chapters (more than a quarter of the book) are so crowded with facts, dates, and names that they can be only a source of confusion to the general reader while the information is too elementary to be of any use to the scholar. The intermediate chapters are better written. When he comes to the States General, near the close of his book, two excellent chapters, which augur well for Dr. Allen warms up to his task and gives us his next volume." D: S. Muzzey

+ — Lit R p818 Jl 22 '22 600w

ALLEN, PERCY. Stage life of Mrs Stirling; with some sketches of the nineteenth century theater; with an introd. by Sir Frank R. Benson. 244p il $5 Dutton [12s 6d Unwin]

B or 92 Stirling, Mrs Mary Ann (afterwards Lady Gregory). Theater—England (Eng ed 22-7470)

Mrs Stirling, 1815-1895, was for more than half a century a well-known figure on the London stage, playing many parts, among the best known being Cordelia, which she played to Macready's Lear, Peg Woffington in "Masks and faces," Mrs Malaprop, and the nurse in "Romeo and Juliet." The story of her long career and of her relations with the actors and actresses of her time becomes a considerable part of the history of the nineteenth century English stage. The appendix gives a list of some of the principal parts played by Mrs Stirling. Illustrated with portraits. Index.

Booklist 19:81 D '22

"His work as biographer displays research and understanding, but unfortunately he is given to too frequent moralizings upon the state of the drama and to lengthy excursions into far away dramatic fields." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Jl 5 '22 850w

"The book is longer, perhaps, than is justified by the importance of the subject. Mrs. Stirling was an ornament of her era, but did not greatly influence it. But it is interesting, as are all other such biographies, as an illustration of the sort of apprenticeship necessary to dramatic eminence and as a record of the struggles of a gifted, charming and indomitable woman." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p86 O 7 '22 1250w

"The reader of this book will never for a moment doubt that its heroine was a great artist, but we can imagine him asking himself now and again whether she was in fact a real woman. The doubt is no reflection upon Mr. Allen's faithfulness as a chronicler; it may be a tribute to his skill, for we remember the same question arising in the case of Mr. Lytton Strachey's Queen Victoria. The author does not pretend to describe the private life of Mrs. Stirling, or to give more than a general appreciation of her position as an actress; but it is curious that an exhaustive history of roles and narrative of journeyings, supported by a good deal of correspondence, should offer so little illumination on these points."

+ — New Statesman 18:626 Mr 4 '22 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:598 D '22

St Louis 20:303 D '22

"Mr. Percy Allen who is Mrs. Stirling's grandson, has filled in the outline [of her life] very copiously. Sometimes, perhaps, he is too copious in his extracts from contemporary criticism, his recitals from letters, his views about the stage in different periods, or about the probable merits and demerits of dead and gone players, but his subject is the theatre as well as Mrs. Stirling, and lovers of stage history are apt to love trifles. He writes unobtrusively and lucidly."

+ — Sat R 133:66 Ja 21 '22 920w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p41 Ja 19 '22 1600w

AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA. RESEARCH DEPARTMENT. Clothing workers of Chicago, 1910-1922. 424p il $2 Amalgamated clothing workers of Am., 31 Union sq., N.Y.

331.8 Clothing trade. Arbitration, Industrial L22-231

For ten years the men's clothing industry of Chicago has been the seat of one of the most important experiments in industrial government ever conducted in this country. The history of the Chicago Joint Board during this time presents a vast experimental laboratory in American trade unionism. In its experiments in internal government and in industrial relations have been carried on and have yielded illuminating results. The book, prepared under the direction of Leo Wolman with the co-operation of Eleanor Mack, H. K. Herwitz and Paul Wander, consists of three parts: The growth of organization; Wages and hours; Government in industry. Charts, appendices.

AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA—Continued

Boston Transcript p7 Je 24 '22 100w

Reviewed by H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 115:474 N 1 '22 1000w

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION. TECHNICAL SECTION. Gas chemists handbook, comp. by the Chemical committee, 1922. 2d ed 608p il $6 The association

545.7 Gases—Analysis 22-12252

"Comprehensive manual of sampling and analysis in the whole field of gas manufacture."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:555 D '22

St Louis 21:9 Ja '23

AMERICAN poetry. 1922; a miscellany. 205p $1.75 Harcourt

811.08 American poetry—Collections

The second in a series of biennial collections of American poetry. The book has no editor. The poets who appear come together by mutual accord and they stand as the exponents of fresh and diverse qualities in American poetry. These poets arrange to have an exhibition every two years of their latest work and each of them contributes a group of poems. Most of these poems have not been previously published. The poets represented are Amy Lovell, Robert Frost, Carl Sandburg, Vachel Lindsay, James Oppenheim, Alfred Kreymborg, Sara Teasdale, Louis Untermeyer, John Gould Fletcher, Jean Starr Untermeyer, H. D., Conrad Aiken, and Edna St Vincent Millay.

Booklist 19:44 N '22

"While it cries out for sins of inclusion and omission, yet it presents a dramatic and provocative whole." J. F.

+ — Bookm 56:340 N '22 200w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

Int Bk R p89 D '22 90w

"One feels of 'American Poetry, 1922,' that it demonstrates a national poetry as mature as our nationality, as vigorous as our energy, and struck through with beauties which, even when raucous, are our own. The book, on the whole, seems to be more interesting, more vivid, more highly emotionalized, and more original than the last volume of Georgian poetry. The British technique is less strained, more uniformly successful; the British diction is mellow; the British poet, in the person of a Masefield, still has preeminence; but the American poetry of 1922 is restless with the reaction of ideas upon experience." H: S. Canby

+ Lit R p84 O 7 '22 880w

Nation 115:sup382 O 11 '22 150w

"Contains some of the finest poetry ever written by Americans. This is a collection worth owning and worth studying, in spite of the apparent prejudices of its retiring and somewhat ghost-like editor, or shall we say promoter?" J: Farrar

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 17 '22 820w

Springfld Republican p10 O 27 '22 270w

Wis Lib Bul 18:272 D '22

AMES, JOSEPH BUSHNELL. Shoe-Bar Stratton. 354p il $1.75 Century

22-9194

"When Buck Stratton came back to his Shoe-Bar cattle ranch after the war and found Mary Thorne in possession, he was, of course, much surprised, and, equally of course, he left her in possession, and thereby hangs the tale. But he hired out as cowboy to her superintendent to solve the problem of the change in ownership, and, incidentally, confounded the superintendent, who was a villain a little worse than the average."—Lit R

Booklist 18:363 JI '22

"The tale is well told, the characters are never overdrawn, and there is a minimum of gun-play and brutality. There is, however, no lack of thrilling situations, which do not draw too strongly upon the imagination. Taken all in all it is an entertaining story with a natural and very satisfactory conclusion."

+ Lit R p658 My 13 '22 140w

N Y Times p27 Je 4 '22 60w

AMINOFF, LEONIE, baroness. Love. 307p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

22-20961

The second of Mme Aminoff's series of Napoleonic romances, of which "Torchlight" was the first. (Book Review Digest, 1921) The heroine of the earlier story, the beautiful Térézia Tallien, is continuing on her conquering way, accounted the loveliest woman in France. It is the time of the Directory and the young Napoleon Bonaparte makes his first appearance in the story, just emerging from poverty and obscurity and beginning to attract attention to himself. Térézia tries her wiles on him to no purpose, but from his first moment of seeing the young widow Josephine de Beauharnais he vows that he will make her his wife. His short and ardent courtship, ending with his marriage in 1796, holds the center of this story.

Boston Transcript p6 S 6 '22 900w

N Y Times p22 Ag 20 '22 650w

"The author follows a good model in her style and construction. She revives the manner of the elder Dumas, but she has not his teeming imagination and boundless energy." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 27 '22 200w

"It is a pity to emphasize so unnecessarily; but Baroness Aminoff will even put 'history' after incidents she has read up. We do not like her narrative style; we distrust some of her presentation of 'history'; but Napoleon and the perennial interest in him may enable her to pull through an ambitious task."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p278 Ap 27 '22 350w

ANDERSON, DAVID. Red lock. 347p $1.75 Bobbs

22-19914

"The title is derived from the legend that every now and then, once in several generations, a Colin would be born whose hair showed the single red lock which has been the distinguishing mark of their Elizabethan ancestor, the cruel and wicked old pirate, 'Red Colin.' So when Ken Colin found that he had the lock, he proceeded to illustrate by his behavior that he was of the type it indicated. The scene is laid in the Flatwoods, not far from the Wabash. The beautiful and noble heroine is 'Texie Colin, Ken's sister; the equally noble hero, Jack Warhope, of excellent family, reduced by ill luck and worse management to being the 'bound boy' of old Simon Colin, the rich man of the neighborhood, father of Texie and Ken. There are counterfeiters, murderers, thieves, violent deaths, disguises and a vast deal of shooting in the tale."—N Y Times

"A simple story of pioneers, simply told."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 15 '22 160w

"The charm of the book lies, if anywhere, in its setting. Life in the Indiana clearings on the banks of the Wabash is painted with an idyllic touch."

+ — Lit R p229 N 18 '22 190w

"Very tedious and very amateurish story. The story is poorly written and poorly constructed, extremely long-winded, with page after page of descriptions and explanations which could and should have been condensed into a few paragraphs."

— N Y Times p2 N 5 '22 280w

ANDERSON, ISABEL WELD (PERKINS) (MRS LARZ ANDERSON). Polly the pagan; her lost love letters; with a foreword by Basil King. 239p $1.90 Page

22-17938

"Letters, telegrams and a series of extracts from a young girl's journal tell the story of Polly the Pagan. Polly is traveling in Europe with her twin brother and their aunt. All three belong apparently to the class known as the idle rich. Polly is an arrant flirt and has many admirers, including American and foreign diplomats, officers and civilians. In due time one of her flirtations leads to an engagement and a presumably happy marriage. There is a mystery in the book, too, though not a very puzzling one, concerning a Russian prince who makes ardent love to Polly."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p8 O 28 '22 780w

"For the most part [the letters] read like extracts out of a Baedeker, with here and there delicate expressions of regard worthy of the best Victorian traditions."

Lit R p132 O 21 '22 190w

N Y Times p22 O 1 '22 200w

"The local color will please those who know their Italy, but the story, as it moves along, has more than local color."

+ Springfield Republican p12 O 19 '22 300w

ANDERSON, ROBERT GORDON. Isle of seven moons; a romance of uncharted seas and untrodden shores. 395p $1.90 Putnam

22-8047

In the little fishing town of Salthaven, Massachusetts, Sally Fell and Ben Boltwood plight their love against the violently expressed objections of Old Cap'n Bluster, Sally's father, whose choice for Sally is Philip Huntington, a fine gentleman to all appearances. Ben is shipwrecked and cast upon the legendary island in the Caribbean sea of which he has often spoken to Sally. A message for Sally which he has put in a bottle is delivered just in time to save her from marrying Philip. The "North Star" with Sally on board sets sail to find the island and Ben. Stories of buried treasure and this "Isle of seven moons" have been noised around and soon after the arrival of the "North Star," the "Aileen" of Salthaven arrives with Philip Huntington and his able assistants. Exciting happenings follow, the villains are at last swallowed up by an earthquake, their ship battered to pieces by a tidal wave and the "North Star" triumphantly sails for home.

Booklist 18:363 J1 '22

"Mr Anderson has combined the somewhat trite materials in a pleasant fashion already appreciated by readers of his previous novels, and the result—weakened too often, however, by the sensational element he has thought it necessary to provide—is a story lovers of its kind will doubtless find compelling." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 10 '22 660w

"The author is not as fortunate with the ladies of the party as he is with the men. There is something stilted about all of them. Nevertheless, they all combine to make an agreeable yarn, and that is, after all, what they set out to do."

+ Lit R p690 My 27 '22 360w

"Mr Anderson has mingled his ingredients in the most agreeable manner, taking a lot of romance, a bit of mystery, some adventure, a deal of exotic color, a love affair and some quaint characters. The result is a story that once started in bed will not be put down until the last page is reached."

+ N Y Times p22 My 7 '22 160w

"This is a fresh version of the Treasure Island story, which includes every one of the accustomed ingredients and some besides. This popular dish is served up with a strongly flavored sauce of sentiment, and is lavishly peppered with American slang."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p398 Je 15 '22 100w

ANDREIEFF, LEONID NIKOLAEVICH. Waltz of the dogs; a play in four acts; auth. tr. from the original manuscript by Herman Bernstein. 141p $1.50 Macmillan

891.72

22-18957

This posthumous play depicts the complete disintegration of character after disappointment in love. Henry Tile, about to be married, has taken and furnished a new apartment, forgetting no domestic essential, even to the sunny nursery and its furnishings. In showing it off to some friends he gleefully entertains them with his only musical accomplishment, "The waltz of the dogs." A letter announcing the marriage of his bride-to-be to another man shatters all his expectations. The remaining three acts show a changed man. Drink has taken the place of sobriety, the reliable bank official becomes a defaulter, "The waltz of the dogs" becomes a symbol of degradation and the end is suicide.

"The brittle rigidity and hard inconsequence of the dialogue create just the atmosphere of balked and distracted mental energy which the story demands. The publication of this posthumous play adds one more to the list of characteristic and powerful works left by the great artist." M. L. Mason

+ Freeman 6:285 N 29 '22 260w

"The drama, while certainly not the foremost of Andreyev's work, is yet striking, often terrific. The lack of a definite, centralizing motive prevents the play from being a grim masterpiece."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 7 '23 500w

"I can say quite calmly of the play, it is a terrible tragedy. I cannot shed tears over it. Perhaps it fails to clutch at the heart because Henry is not lovable. It does not tear me to pieces to see such an efficient, complacent person as Henry brought to the dust." Charlotte Dean

— N Y Tribune p10 N 19 '22 60w

"A dismal theme most strangely, fascinatingly developed." M. J. Moses

Outlook 132:620 D 6 '22 50w

"The whole effect of the play is one of cynical superficiality."

— Theatre Arts M 7:84 Ja '23 50w

ANDREWS, CLARENCE EDWARD. Old Morocco and the forbidden Atlas. 295p il $3 Doran 916.4 Morocco—Description and travel

22-26965

The writer observed the life of Morocco chiefly from the oasis city of Marrakesh, the ancient capital of the Moorish empire and for centuries the greatest city of western Islam. He watched its life in the early evening from the great central square where the floating population congregates, visited the old mosques and palaces, and saw the city on its market day when it is thronged with thousands of buyers from all central Morocco. He penetrated over a pass of the Atlas mountains frequented chiefly by wild tribes and banditti, spent a lazy and luxurious life at Aoulouz as prisoner of the caïd and, when released, made his way back over the mountains to Marrakesh.

Booklist 19:79 D '22

"Is an almost perfect escape from whatever your surroundings may be. An American with an eye for adventure, color and romance, has packed his story with beautiful writing and with the quiet sort of thrill that creates the true atmosphere of gipsying." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:90 S '22 230w

"Combining a keen eye for the picturesque with a rare gift of description, Mr. Andrews has written a book with no dull pages. Now a descriptive passage glows with pleasurable emotions; now a love song from the ancient Arabic, and now perhaps a responsive idyl, which reminds one shortly of a dainty bit from Theocritus, until one wonders whether all this is true to nature or if Mr. Andrews, with a gift of dreaming, has dreamt it all and translates it to us into song and story."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '22 480w

ANDREW, CLARENCE EDWARD—C'ont.

"Curiously fascinating travel book." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p35 D '22 50w

"He has a faculty of being able to impart to the reader the elusive charm and color of the scenes he describes and of imparting some of his own enthusiasm for the sights and sounds of the Orient." I. Anderson

+ N Y Times p10 O 29 '22 170w

"Mr. Andrews is a very satisfactory guide—leisurely, meandering, well informed, and graciously discursive."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 26 '22 260w

ANDREWS, GERTRUDE NELSON. Finding youth; a human experience. 62p $1 Atlantic monthly

22-7535

The chronicle of a man fixed in the deep ruts of habit who found himself at sixty thrown on the dump-heap, displaced by a younger man in the position he had held for years. At first his sense of defeat crushed him completely, but by an effort of the will he took an account of himself and acknowledged that he had let himself grow old and lose his interest in life. The answering of a chance want advertisement started him on a new adventure, restored his youth and humor and gave him life richer than he had ever known before.

Booklist 19:16 O '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:320 Jl '22

"Straight-forward, simple, even homely, and it carries conviction in every word."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 My 26 '22 220w

ANDREWS, MARY RAYMOND SHIPMAN (MRS WILLIAM SHANKLAND ANDREWS). His soul goes marching on. 84p 75c Scribner

Roosevelt, Theodore—Fiction 22-6934

"From the pen of the author [of the 'Perfect Tribute'] has come another story, of another great American and another great occasion. Theodore Roosevelt meets by chance a small boy in the Middle West intent on bass fishing. He fraternizes with him for a brief time; and gives him the motto and inspiration of his life. This inspiration sends him and his comrades of the Rainbow division to heroic service on the battlefields of France."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 18:329 Je '22

"It is an exquisite little story."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 22 '22 310w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:197 My '22

Springf'd Republican p7a My 14 '22 120w

ANGELLOTTI, MARION POLK. Three black bags. 375p $1.75 Century

22-17454

This wartime mystery story begins in Paris when the American army of occupation boards the train for Coblenz. On that train a murder is committed, the first fateful glances pass between the war-hero Everett Ramsay and the beautiful Red cross nurse, Lorraine Ivison, and three new travelling bags, of identical make, are mixed up. In the course of the story of many unusual happenings and wild adventures, a frightful German plot is disclosed, an uprising that would have reversed the entire outcome of the war is prevented, and the lovely Miss Ivison is rescued from the clutches of a German junker by her hero lover.

Booklist 19:84 D '22

Boston Transcript p6 O 11 '22 520w

"This is a well-made detective-mystery yarn, with nicely sustained suspense and an orderly elaboration of a good plot."

+ Lit R p93 O 7 '22 170w

"Here is a story written by an author with a real knack for the contriving and the working out of a tale of complications, adventures, perils—the kind of tale that plunges at once into breathless situations and moves on swiftly with the reader's interest kept at high pitch to a sensational climax and a triumphant conclusion."

+ N Y Times p19 S 10 '22 650w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 210w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 120w

ANKER, JENS, pseud. (ROBERT HANSEN). Two dead men; tr. from the Danish by Frithjof Toksvig. 211p $1.75 Knopf

22-12089

The background of this tale is Copenhagen and the seemingly baffling murder of old Captain Saabye and the activities of the Danish police make interesting reading. Saabye's foster-son Einar Lange is at first suspected, but the situation is a little later complicated by the murder of the cobbler of Saxo street, and the mysterious robberies of the early spring are still unaccounted for. Falk, an astute criminologist, gathers the clues cleverly and all these deeds are laid at the door of the real criminal who proves to be the most unsuspected character in the book.

Booklist 19:20 O '22

"A detective tale of excellent pattern, and one with a deal of characterization. It is true that the mysterious personage and the dénouement creak because of the old device of a disguise and a double personality, but this does not prevent the author from curdling the blood of his readers more than once. Anker shows how finely a detective tale really can be written."

+ -- N Y Times p16 My 28 '22 90w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:320 Jl '22

"A literary critic easily recognizes it as written in Scandinavian style, while the average reader will simply count it a good story."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 30 '22 120w

ANTHONY, H., pseud. See Shands, H. A.

APPLETON, WILLIAM ARCHIBALD. What we want and where we are; facts not phrases; with a foreword by Samuel Gompers. 197p $1.50 Doran [6s Hodder & S.]

331.8 Labor and laboring classes—Great Britain. Trade unions—Great Britain

22-6713

The author, who is secretary of the General federation of trade unions, represents the right wing of British trade unionism which stands for the promotion of industrial peace and the prevention of strikes and lockouts by means such as conciliation, mediation and the establishment of permanent boards of arbitration. In sixteen short chapters he deals with current questions affecting the workingmen's interests—the relations of labor and capitol, trade unionism, unemployment, labor unrest, strikes, wages, housing, education, war and armies, syndicalism, communism in Russia and Great Britain, copartnership, trade and taxes. The improvements which he urges are the stabilization of employment, fair remuneration for work done and a fair share of the results achieved.

"He has at his fingers' ends, a practically unlimited store of information. His theories are eminently sane; he has been at considerable pains to verify his facts. Strikes and emigration, trade unionism and war gain his thorough attention. Nor is he at all partial. His premises are based upon the principles of sound economics, not on airy platitudes, the catch-phrases of the moment. His exposition of the wants of labor is clear and vividly set forth, his suggestions are to the manner of attaining those desires as as pertinent and as interesting."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 5 '22 250w

"Mr. Appleton's book will be a surprise to American readers because of its excellent style, breadth of view, frankness and wisdom. Possesses unusual value and interest." W. M. T.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p3
F '22 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:269 Je '22

R of Rs 67:112 Ja '23 100w

"Well worth reading, and packed with good sense."

+ Spec 127:562 O 29 '21 1350w

Survey 47:901 Mr 4 '22 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p631 S
29 '21 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p743 N
17 '21 850w

ARCHBALD, HUGH. Four hour day in coal; a study of the relation between the engineering of the organization of work and the discontent among the workers in the coal mines. 148p $1.50 Wilson, H. W.

331.8 Coal miners 22-11601

The author, writing from his experience of twenty years as engineer in coal mines, describes the conditions under which coal is dug. He shows why the miner is able to get into the mines only two to four days a week; why, when he gets in, he can average only three to four hours' work, paying work, a day. He shows how these conditions affect the price of coal and thousands of commodities that are manufactured with the aid of coal. He demolishes a number of popular conceptions such as that 'the miners won't work' and that strikes are caused by human 'cussedness.' The fundamental causes of strikes have been the same for a generation, this engineer proves, and they will continue as long as the underground operations are run as they are. His book furnishes the public, at a critical time, the facts and the viewpoint necessary for a sane public opinion regarding a diseased basic industry.

"The book is written without bitterness, and offers no easy solution. No distinction is made between conditions in union and non-union mines, except in stating that the latter lack means of redress for grievances, such as the union mines obtain through adjustment boards and union contracts."

Am Econ R 12:488 S '22 250w

"On the whole Mr. Archbald in his book is fair and well-informed. One cannot deny that the book is interesting, that the writer is well informed if not always unprejudiced and that the coal-mine executive will find the book enlightening even though it is written for the public and for university debaters especially." R. D. Hall

+ Coal Age 21:1006 Je 15 '22 3550w

"His analysis of the miner's point of view, and more than that, of circumstances causing that point of view, of which the man himself is not aware, has the advantage of coming from one whose technical knowledge is thorough. The book is a pretty severe indictment of the brains that have gone into coal mining in this country. Unfortunately, it is not easy reading. Mr. Archbald ought to enlist a newspaper man to assist in preparing his manuscript." W. D. Lane

+ Lit R p854 Ag 5 '22 400w

"He knows the psychology of work in the dark and of isolation at the face of the seam underground, possibly out of sight and hearing of any other person. He sees the miner as husband, father, human being, member of the community. He is interested in making a diagnosis, rather than in suggesting methods of treatment; there is little in the nature of a constructive program in his book." W. D. Lane

+ Nation 114:723 Je 14 '22 460w

"Its value lies in its success in finding the crux of the problem in the arrangements which constitute the organization (or malorganization, if you prefer) of the coal industry." W. H. Hamilton

+ New Repub 31:22 My 31 '22 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:332 Jl '22

Pratt p10 autumn '22

Survey 45:220 My 6 '22 40w

Wis Lib Bul 18:129 My '22

ARMITAGE, FRANCIS PAUL. Diet and race; anthropological essays. 144p il $2.25 (7s 6d) Longmans

572 Diet. Anthropology 22-1462

Three anthropological studies entitled Diet and Physique, Diet and Color, and Diet and Head Form. "The author tells what every nation, every known tribe, on the face of the earth eats. He tells why, in his opinion, individuals of one nation are tall, of the other, short; why one race is white, one yellow, another one black; finally, why different tribes and nations have skulls of different shapes." (N Y Times)

Nature 110:308 S 2 '22 150w

"It is doubtful if any book of equal length was ever written that contained so much condensed information. In this age, when about every third person one meets is more than solicitous about his own particular diet the results of Mr. Armitage's studies are bound to be of extreme interest." Van Buren Thorne

+ N Y Times p6 Jl 23 '22 2650w

St Louis 20:210 S '22

"Although we do not find much of weight in Mr. Armitage's anthropological essays, we are grateful to him for attacking a sadly neglected subject, and for collecting a mass of information, relating to the diets of various races, that is probably inaccessible in any other small volume."

+ Spec 128:184 F 11 '22 300w

"Presented in a thoroughly scholarly and interesting way." Ruth Metzger

+ Survey 48:88 Ap 15 '22 200w

ARMSTRONG, HAROLD H. (HENRY G. AIK-MAN, pseud.). For richer, for poorer. 308p $2 Knopf

22-17448

Kenneth Grambling, self conscious, diffident to the point of cowardice and over punctilious in small matters, at the age of thirty is a failure. He is not making good with the law firm in which he is employed. He has blundered into marriage with a girl of fine fiber and strong character, and is putting to a severe test her determination to keep faith in him, by venting upon her his growing irritability over his own sense of failure and their straitened circumstances. Just at the darkest hour, when he is about to lose his job for incompetence, when his rent has been doubled and Miriam is hovering on the brink of life and death after an operation, he pulls himself together and by sheer determination wins a doubtful case at court—his first success which marks the turning point in his business and married life.

Booklist 19:52 N '22

Dial 73:456 O '22 60w

"Whether to call it a realistic novel with the bitterness cut out, or a romantic novel with the sentimentality cut out, is a question. . . It is a fine piece of work."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p10 D 31 '22 600w

"As a technician in the realistic novel the author of 'Zell' has already amply demonstrated his ability. To say that 'For Richer, For Poorer' is not, in the opinion of this critic at least, as striking as 'Zell' is not to say that it is not an interesting and workmanlike book. The author of 'Zell' is no amateur. Simply, in the array of the books I hope he may give us, it will not, I think, prove one of his best." W. R. Benet

+ Lit R p899 Ag 26 '22 1350w

ARMSTRONG, HAROLD H.—Continued

"It is a firmly knit story, rapid, vivid, economical with the exact relation of means to end—the novel of a craftsman as well as an artist."

+ New Repub 31:365 Ag 23 '22 130w

N Y Times p20 Ag 13 '22 500w

"Mr. Armstrong tells a dull tale of dull people and yet contrives to make a most appealing book of it. The story of his struggling little lawyer and his wife is without any of the familiar complexities—without, indeed, any complexities at all—but by its sincerity and good clean writing it wins through to a high place on the fiction list of the season." Hunter Staggs

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 27 '22 600w

Wis Lib Bul 18:219 O '22

ARMSTRONG, WILLIAM. Romantic world of music. 239p il $5 Dutton

927.8 Singers

22-21331

Lively and anecdotal reminiscences of famous opera singers and of one pianist, Paderewski. Beginning with Patti and Nordica, Mr. Armstrong's sketches include such recent stars as Jeritza and Rosa Ponselle. Each sketch is illustrated with a portrait. Contents: Adelina Patti; Lillian Nordica; Nellie Melba; Ernestine Schumann-Heink; Ignace Jan Paderewski; Mary Garden; Enrico Caruso and John McCormack; Frieda Hempel; Pasquale Amato; Amelita Galli-Curci; Maria Jeritza; Prima donna romances I: Jeanne Gordon, Rosa Ponselle, Lucy Gates; Prima donna romances II: Lucrezia Bori, Marguerite D'Alvarez, Florence Easton.

Booklist 19:149 F '23

"In form what Mr. Armstrong has evidently attempted is to make of the life of each person a romance. Whether, to this end, he has utilized in best fashion his wealth of material is open to question. The author has hardly convinced the reader that the musical world is romantic."

— Boston Transcript p3 D 2 '22 450w

Reviewed by Hildegard Hawthorne

Int Bk R p35 D '22 40w

"It is a book of musical entertainment, which the general as well as the musical reader can enjoy. Mr. Armstrong's reminiscences have the vivid quality of personal experience." F: H. Martens

+ Nation 115:554 N 22 '22 350w

N Y Times p18 O 22 '22 2000w

"About this work is no trace of formal biography. The sketches are vividly written in the best of newspaper style."

+ N Y World p7e O 22 '22 210w

ARNIM, MARY ANNETTE (BEAUCHAMP) ² gravin von (COUNTESS RUSSELL). Enchanted April. 313p $1.90 Doubleday [7s 6d Macmillan]

A chance advertisement in the Times, alluringly worded, of a small medieval Italian castle to let for the month of April, appeals to Mrs Wilkins and Mrs Arbuthnot, as offering a means of escape for a brief space from home, husband and duty. To lessen the strain on their resources they in turn advertise for two other ladies to join them and share expenses. They secure an elderly widow and Lady Caroline Dester, a wealthy but discontented young beauty, and the oddly assorted quartette, all strangers to each other, journey by different trains to their castle. Sunshine and wistaria have an almost instantaneous effect on two of the party. The place seems flooded with love. They immediately want their husbands and send for them. The others respond more tardily to the witchery of the place, but by the time the young owner of the castle has appeared and proved an acceptable lover to Lady Caroline, sunshine and flowers and love have done their perfect work. On the first of May everybody goes home transformed.

Booklist 19:161 F '23

"The situations are enormously funny. It almost runs into straight farce but escapes miraculously. Nevertheless, it is the most amusing book we have met with in a long time." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 6 '23 800w

"With all its charm—and it has winsomeness, a frolicsome and often sardonic humor, and occasional flashes of caustic analysis—it is little more than a graceful whimsy, cleverly conceived and rather less cleverly executed." Amy Loveman

— + Lit R p431 F 3 '23 650w

"'Elizabeth's' new story is so frankly the optimistic farce that it is as to beguile a critic or his sternness. Its author is surely the least vicious of satirists, but that is no reason for denying the existence of the satire, for she has a real talent for gently puncturing pompous virtue, and if there are moments when she totters on the edge of Pollyannaism there is a streak of very genuine wit which saves her." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 116:124 Ja 31 '23 250w

"In The Enchanted April [the author] has lapsed back into the unplumbed seas of artificial femininity." Rebecca West

— New Statesman 20:270 D 2 '22 1300w

"The book is not nearly as entertaining as its author's earlier 'Christopher and Columbus,' for instance, and it suffers from being a great deal too long drawn out. But it is a pleasant, if somewhat saccharine, little story, with some neat phrasing and a genuine feeling for color and for beauty." L. M. Field

— + N Y Times p17 Ja 7 '23 900w

"This is not a book to criticize, but to read, enjoy and hand on to a friend." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p22 Ja 14 '23 1250w

"We know of no one with quite the touch that Elizabeth possesses. We know of no book since 'Where the Blue Begins' that we like so much. 'Enchanted April' doesn't crusade, or condemn, or exhort, or expose, or inspire. It merely calls your attention to this unstable, ridiculous, lovable thing, human nature, and invites you to smile at it." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Tribune p20 Ja 21 '23 1400w

"We expect from Elizabeth a tang, an acerbity, which in 'The Enchanted April' she does not provide. Her bitterest books are her funniest: this one is nowhere bitter, and in only a few places funny. But it is charming throughout. We have all dreamt of such perfect holidays, and here we can read of one. It is a pure pleasure." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 134:928 D 16 '22 180w

"It is quite impossible for the reader to believe in the extraordinary effects which the climate of San Salvatore has on the characters of the story. The dramatis personae all develop a condition of rather fatuous beatitude, which fails not only to convince, but even to interest the reader. In the last part of the book the comedy degenerates into farce—and farce of a rather 'knockabout' variety. It is melancholy to have to acknowledge that 'Elizabeth,' who has always delighted us with her light touch in comedy, here develops a decidedly heavy hand."

— Spec 129:sup663 N 11 '22 400w

ARTHUR, WILLIAM. New building estimators' handbook: a handbook for architects, builders, contractors, appraisers, engineers, superintendents and draftsmen. rev and enl ed 1002p il lae $6 U. P. C. bk.

692.5 Building—Estimates

22-15573

"For building contractors, architects, and appraisers. Mainly records of costs and quantities of material in building construction. Contains also some description of methods, specifications, and reference tables."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:45 O '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:563 D '22

ARVOLD, ALFRED G. Little country theater.
2 220p il $2.50 Macmillan
792 Theater—Little theater movement
22-23817

From his own experiences with farming communities and from letters received from farm women all over the country, the author shows up the great need of our rural and small town populations for recreation and cultural opportunities, for self expression and stimulation of their creative instincts. He shows how in many places, and especially in North Dakota, this need has been met by the people themselves thru the country theater. Not only have suitable plays been presented by home talent, but in many instances the plays have been written, the scenery painted and the stages built by the farmers and agricultural students. One of the plays, written by a young farmer, is given in full. Other forms of entertainment that are beginning more and more to enrich rural life are the out-door pageant and the county play days. The bibliography includes general references, books on country life, suggested lists of plays, and books on the presentation, production and promotion of plays.

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 20 '23 360w

"The story of the rise of 'The Little Country Theatre' in North Dakota is interestingly told in Alfred G. Arvold's excellent book."
+ N Y Times p12 F 4 '23 700w

ASHMUN, MARGARET ELIZA. Including mother. 211p $1.50 Macmillan
22-18646

A quiet story of an attractive widow, with two young daughters, who supplements her small income by giving readings. To the older daughter, Shirley, falls the duty of "bringing up mother," acting as her business manager, guarding her from the consequences of her careless habits, restraining her extravagances. The book closes with the prospect of a second marriage for Mrs Delafield and an end to the family makeshifts.

Booklist 19:162 F '23

"Will find a certain popularity with the high-school girl. But the story tastes like a magazine; it was written for quick consumption, and should be labeled 'Immediate—Perishable.'"
M. H. B. Mussey
+ — Nation 115:sup619 D 6 '22 60w

"Not distinctive, but interesting and acceptable as a book for the in-between period."
Wis Lib Bul 18:275 D '22

ASHMUN, MARGARET ELIZA. Support. 357p 2 $2 Macmillan
22-20172

Divorced after six years' unhappy experience of marriage, Constance Moffatt came back to her Middle West home, prepared for difficult adjustments in her life, but little realizing the complexities and limitations of the life that awaited her. By dealing quietly and bravely with each difficulty as it arose, she achieved for herself an increasing independence, had the satisfaction of renouncing an alimony which was galling to her pride, adopted a child, and started a home and business for herself.

Booklist 19:158 F '23

"Written in simple style, this novel proceeds gently and logically, but undramatically. It is the story of a brave woman wisely bent upon rising above her environment. 'Support,' while lacking humor, still gives us real characters sympathetically drawn with the Main Street pencil."

+ Int Bk R p60 Ja '23 280w

ASKWITH, GEORGE RANKEN ASKWITH, baron. Industrial problems and disputes. 494p $5 Harcourt [21s Murray]

331.8 Labor and laboring classes—Great Britain. Arbitration, Industrial. Strikes—Great Britain
21-10033

"Covers thoroughly the English labor situation and takes up in detail the various labor crises of the last thirty years in the United Kingdom. Points out the necessity for simple ways of presenting grievances, improving conditions of labor and reducing the danger of unemployment. Written especially for English readers but valuable to students of labor conditions in general."—Booklist

Am Econ R 12:655 D '22 450w

Am Pol Sci R 16:160 F '22 60w

Booklist 18:174 Mr '22

"The merit of his book lies in its reserve. Yet one lays it down with regret that its author did not venture a suggestion for just one daring, glorious blunder. But he is a sensible Englishman." H: R. Mussey
+ — Nation 114:346 Mr 22 '22 170w

Reviewed by Ordway Tead

New Repub 30:118 Mr 22 '22 60w

"A very wise and instructive book."
+ Spec 125:816 D 18 '20 1370w

"Rich in experience, full of color and interwoven with the philosophy and keen perception which has made of that Englishman the dean of labor arbitrators."

+ Survey 48:80 Ap 15 '22 500w

ASQUITH, MARGOT (TENNANT) (MRS HERBERT HENRY ASQUITH). Margot Asquith: an autobiography. 4v 3-4 239:227p il $6 Doran [2v; v 2 25s Butterworth]

B or 92

"Mrs. Asquith is no longer the heroine of her own book. Her personality is, of course, felt in the extracts from her diary, and she expresses her opinions with the same trenchancy, brevity and vivacity, but the focus has changed. With the exception of some interludes about her children, she has confined herself to chronicling the political events and incidents connected with them of which she was a passionately interested spectator. Her husband, not herself, is the hero of these volumes. Loyalty and conviction in one naturally full of fire and prompt pugnacity, set the note of the book, and it is one more likely to be immediately understood."—New Statesman

"The final two volumes of her autobiography are gay and interesting, and seeing that they are about politics, that is no mean testimony."
Ruth Hale

+ Bookm 56:761 F '23 360w

"In depicting with a few bold strokes the salient features of prominent characters—Milner, Campbell-Bannerman, Morley, Joseph Chamberlain, the Master of Elibank, Kitchener—she has few superiors among professional writers. Frequently, too, she lets fall, quite by the way, remarks that show an exceptionally acute observation, not to say penetrating insight. In neither volume does she supply much new material for the historian. . . . It was felt by many readers of the earlier volumes that the publication of this autobiography did no service to the reputation of Mr. Asquith. That opinion will be confirmed by a perusal of this second part." H. W. Horwill

+ — Nation 116:101 Ja 24 '23 $80w

"This book has been received in a more friendly spirit than the first instalment. But with that remarkable book it has much in common, namely, candour, fervour and acuteness. It is much more political than her first book."
+ New Statesman 20:supxx D 2 '22 50w

"It is the comment of a direct and unbeglaimed mind, it is the comment of an instinctively honest mind. Natural bias colours everyone's impressions—usually surreptitiously; Mrs. Asquith never conceals hers. She may be inaccurate, but she is always transparent. These are the qualities which make her memoirs more valuable and alive than other people's."

+ — New Statesman 20:332 D 16 '22 1750w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p1 D 10 '22 2600w

"She has no sense of form or order in writing, not even a chronological sense, and 400 pages of chaos is demoralizing, to say the least. Cabinet meetings and nursery teas, new hats and new governments jostle each other on familiar terms. . . . Her first offering frankly dealt with whatever private life she has had. This second lot surveys a period of immense historic interest, during which she was in contact with very many of the 'great figures' then in the spotlight. She saw them, too, behind the scenes. And still the record concerns only Margot." Isabel Paterson

ASQUITH, MARGOT—Continued

N Y Tribune p19 D 31 '22 1350w

"Take it altogether, the second book is not quite so amusing as the first. Still, there are some excellent things in it."

+ Spec 129:1005 D 30 '22 1900w

"There is no reason why this second volume of Mrs. Asquith's autobiography should arouse the same resentment as its predecessor. It contains nothing that will shock, but much that will command understanding and evoke sympathy. The book is, in fact, an apology for a career which, we doubt not, a later generation will review in a kindlier light than the present. But it is acceptable enough now, because Mrs. Asquith's style is always neat: because out of an inexhaustible amount of material she has, on the whole, chosen those items which agree most vividly with the average memory."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p760 N 23 '22 1100w

ASQUITH, MARGOT (TENNANT) (MRS HERBERT HENRY ASQUITH). My impressions of America. 217p $1.50 Doran

9173 United States—Description and travel. National characteristics, American 22-19811

"The greater part of her book, of large type and wide margins, is given over to a detailed account of her trip—the discomforts of train traveling, the social functions she attended, the circumstances attending each lecture, what she said to the many people she met, the stupidity and the puerility of the questions asked her by the newspaper reporters who swarmed about her wherever she went. She is as assiduous as a society reporter in preserving and mentioning the names of the people who entertain her and whom she meets, here, there and everywhere, as well as her estimates of them and of their surroundings. Mrs. Asquith seems to have carried home with her a comprehensive horror and condemnation of two things, our railroads and our newspapers."—N Y Times

"In style, the book is much like Mrs. Asquith's lectures, vivaciously unimportant. It seems for the most part to be the attempt of a very tired woman to put down enough words to fill a book. And when she can't think of enough words, she quotes at great length certain favorable press notices and letters; finally, with the end of the book in sight, she pastes up Clarence Day, Jr.'s review of her daughter's book 'I Have Only Myself to Blame.'" R. C. Benchley

— Bookm 56:221 O '22 650w

"One cannot call this new book brilliant, daring, or delightful in any measure. That it reveals far more of Mrs. Asquith's personality than the previous two volumes makes it worth reading." D. F. G.

— Boston Transcript p5 N 11 '22 520w

"The interest of it lies in the strange naïveté of a woman of her age who can take such impressions seriously. There is a perpetual youth about Margot Asquith. The book might be the fly-away, scrambled impressions of a girl of eighteen."

+ Lit R p167 O 28 '22 580w

"It is a very personal book. Margot Asquith stands out in the centre of the beam from the searchlight every minute of the time."

— N Y Times p2 O 29 '22 1650w

"It may be pleasant enough at times to say and do exactly nothing. But why write a book about it? On the other hand, why not? And why grieve if Margot is not monotonously perfect? Life itself is a tale told by a minor author." Will Cuppy

— N Y Tribune p9 O 22 '22 650w

St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

"Always frank, often amusing, her story is easy reading."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 D 4 '22 550w

ATHERTON, MRS GERTRUDE FRANKLIN (HORN). Black oxen. 346p $2 Boni & Liveright

Mary Ogden, the beauty and belle of her day in New York, had married a Hungarian diplomat, Count Zattiany, left America and passed out of the knowledge of her friends except as an occasional report of her was brought home by some returning traveller. Then after an interval of thirty-four years, there appears in a fashionable New York first-night audience a beautiful young woman who is a replica of the Mary Ogden of memory yet who cannot be her daughter since the Countess Zattiany was known to be childless. Seen repeatedly and always alone, she becomes the center of mystery and conjecture. Men are fascinated by her. Lee Clavering, a brilliant young journalist, more bold than the rest, finds a way to meet her. She offers an explanation of her identity which is accepted but hardly believed. Then one day she tells the truth about herself and the mystery develops into a miracle story. She is on the point of marrying Lee Clavering when, as suddenly as she had appeared, she takes herself back to Europe and out of his life.

"It is indeed a notable book—a thrilling piece of reporting. Mrs. Atherton stuns one by her sheer cleverness; but her art never wavers. 'Black Oxen' is by far her greatest story." C. H. Towne

+ Bookm 56:762 F '23 750w

"A green writer would have made a horrid mess of such a plot; Mrs. Atherton is too wise to be sensational. . . . It is as social description, done with a power that beats into shape, a turgid style, that one must praise 'Black Oxen.'" H: S. Canby

+ Lit R p411 Ja 27 '23 1300w

"The novel is loosely constructed, though very clever, and in many ways very interesting. It is too long, and toward the end it drags more than a little. The book is unusual in its handling of an idea which but a little while ago would have seemed altogether fantastic, and it contains a good deal of interesting comment upon contemporary manners and theories."

+ N Y Times p14 Ja 21 '23 1200w

"It is more than likely that its somewhat sensational theme will overshadow its higher merits as an entertaining and well planned novel containing a clever and delicious exposé of the feminine mind, a series of deft characterizations, perhaps the frankest comment yet offered on New York social life of to-day and thirty years ago, and some excellent and vigorous writing." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p17 Ja 28 '23 1250w

ATHERTON, MRS GERTRUDE FRANKLIN (HORN). Sleeping fires. 299p $1.90 Stokes [7s 6d Murray]

22-2602

The story describes straight-laced, scandal-mongering San Francisco society in the 'seventies. A young married woman, of strict moral principles and orthodox opinions on divorce, being neglected by her husband, falls in love with a brilliant journalist, the only person in whom she has found true companionship. They separate, but when she hears that he is going to the bad with drink she tries the same method as a short-cut out of life. Succeeding only in making her husband divorce her she now resolves to rescue her lover from the hell into which he has plunged himself and to begin a new life with him. Altho the task involves her own descent into hell she conquers.

"The descriptions of the degradation and drunkenness into which Masters had fallen read like an old-fashioned tract, and the picture of a San Francisco society that frowns upon divorce strains our powers of imagination." M. K. Ford

— Bookm 55:194 Ap '22 350w

"It is carelessly written and its infelicities of style are conspicuous. The dramatic force of the story, however, saves it, and once more Mrs. Atherton gives us a new thrill." E. F. Edgett

— + Boston Transcript p6 F 8 '22 1250w

"A severe disappointment. Even the style is not faultless and the picture of San Francisco in the '70's is not enough to make up for the rest."

— Dial 72:432 Ap '22 100w

"The story is told with the author's well-known ease of manner and fluent diction. It makes small demand on the part of the reader in the way of comprehension, but the situations are forced and unnatural, and, taken as a whole, the book does not show a true picture of life." C. B. Royster

— + Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p2 J1 23 '22 230w

"All the value of this book, as of its predecessors, for me, must lie in its pictures of the San Francisco scene and society (in the narrower sense) of a special period. That is 'good value,' and quite sufficient return for reading the book." H. W. Boynton

— + Lit R p447 F 25 '22 1100w

Reviewed by Hildegard Hawthorne

N Y Times p6 F 5 '22 190w

"It is so sensational as to be yellow and even more disagreeable than it is tragical."

— Outlook 130:309 F '22 '22 80w

"Frankly all this is inexplicable: and, moreover, the violently coloured scenes in the American underworld, frequently slipping into blatant unreality, are ill suited to Mrs. Atherton's undoubted gifts. It is a great pity that a novel so ably and scrupulously begun should end in a splutter of damp fireworks."

— Sat R 133:638 Je 17 '22 640w

"The chief characters are analyzed with keen insight, and their principles and impulses are fearlessly bared. It is one of the most active and strongest stories Mrs Atherton has written."

+ Springf'd Republican p13a F 19 '22 900w

"Except for ladies' fashions, which she describes very prettily, her detail is not very vivid for these days of ours. There is something almost faded in her way of writing, but it has the compensating advantages of being graceful and easy."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p362 Je 1 '22 470w

Wis Lib Bul 18:103 Ap '22

ATKEY, BERTRAM. Winnie O'Wynn and the wolves. 310p il $1.75 Little [7s 6d Cassell] 22-608

Winnie O'Wynn was a penniless orphan and her father had warned her that all men were wolves. Against these handicaps her assets were an angelic face—violet eyes and golden hair—and an air of youthful innocence that was irresistibly charming. With these she traveled to London and proceeded to fleece the wolves so effectively that within six months she had a balance in the bank of over twenty-three thousand pounds and among her personal possessions a fine race horse, a car, a luxurious wardrobe and some jewelry, plus her disarming innocence. How she managed it makes an amusing tale.

"The sordid little tale is, after all, innocuous."

— + Boston Transcript p4 Ja 18 '22 280w

"In general, the episodes are most amusingly told; but a heavy strain is put not only on such readers as suffer from a Pollyanna complex, but also on those who like a bit of probability to spice their mental desserts."

— + Lit R p371 Ja 21 '22 350w

"A frivolous little story this, all soap bubbles and froth, but it is ingeniously contrived, is written with much cleverness, and underneath its bubbly surface is a keen edge of satire."

+ N Y Times p23 Ja 15 '22 300w

"The episodes are clever and funny, but the story doesn't end, it just stops."

+ — Outlook 130:229 F 8 '22 70w

"He does this so very neatly, and with so much more ease and competence than are usually given to such things, that we are led to suspect him of the ability to make a good showing at much more exacting work if he should choose to attempt it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 18 '21 300w

ATKIN, GRACE MURRAY. Captive herd. 311p $1.75 Crowell

22-18553

An ambitious young Canadian comes to New York with dreams of wealth and power. He had loved his mother and now loves only himself and his chances of advancement. Employed by two wealthy Jewish bankers in a position of trust, he uses his confidential knowledge to enrich himself at their expense. While still in Canada he had had an affair with an engaging young girl which had been serious on her part but a pastime with him. After his double dealing is exposed and he loses his position, he returns to Canada, bethinks himself of Natalie and for the first time in his life sees himself as an integral part of the human race. He learns to fit himself socially and ethically into the herd, marries and founds a family.

"With a literary style that is militantly modern and alive, Miss Atkin propounds a philosophy of life, forceful and sincere, that is an answer to the aggressive attitude of the younger generation. The development of Vacla's character and the bringing of 'enchantment' for the disenchanting are skillfully treated, while the style of the book, epigrammatic and impressionistic, is genuinely artistic."

+ Lit R p33 S 16 '22 220w

New Repub 32:317 N 15 '22 80w

"The weakness of 'The Captive Herd' is that it is too much of thesis and not enough of novel."

— N Y Times sec7:6 O 1 '22 370w

"It is unfolded in such curious, stilted phrases and by means of such a creaky and incredible plot, that one finds it hard to follow through, in spite of large type, short chapters and good paper." Isabel Paterson

— N Y Tribune p6 S 17 '22 100w

AUGHINBAUGH, WILLIAM EDWARD. Advertising for trade in Latin-America. (Century foreign trade ser.) 282p $3 Century

659 Latin America—Commerce. Advertising. Foreign trade. United States—Commerce 22-2097

The book deals with the commercial advertising possibilities of the entire western hemisphere south of the Rio Grande. As advertising is applied psychology, the author sets forth the difference existing between the character and mental habits of the Anglo-American and Latin-American public which must be taken into account if success is to be attained in an otherwise promising commercial field. He considers in turn the various obstacles that have to be overcome and the methods that promise good results. Many facsimiles of advertising posters illustrate the prevailing types of pictorial advertising. The appendix consists of a complete list of Latin-American publications that can serve as mediums for advertising campaigns.

Booklist 18:218 Ap '22

Cleveland p59 Ag '22

"The book suffers from a tendency of its author to succumb to the easy journalistic hyperbole, and here and there one finds inaccuracies, in such matters as population figures, for example. Notwithstanding these shortcomings the book has value. It contains an important feature in its appendix of a list of newspapers and periodicals of all countries of Latin America. Throughout the book are also scattered

AUGHINBAUGH, W. E.:—Continued
 hints and suggestions which if taken with a grain of salt should prove useful to any planning the conquest of these markets."
 — + Lit R p586 Ap 15 '22 250w

Reviewed by R. J. Walsh
 Nation 114:538 My 3 '22 500w

"As a medical practitioner in South American cities he has been enabled, in more respects than one, to place his finger on the pulses of our Latin neighbors and to prescribe for their ailments, physical and mental, the latter covering the whole psychology of business. Indeed, his book is an energetic and exceedingly vivid discourse as to the best means of getting under the Spanish-American skin for the purpose of appealing to the trading instincts of a people whom merchants in these United States pretend to understand and which Dr. Aughinbaugh says we most decidedly do not."
 + N Y Times p13 Ap 16 '22 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:284 Je '22
 Pratt p21 summer '22

AUMONIER, STACY. Heartbeat. 282p $2 Boni & Liveright
 22-15851

"Mr. Aumonier's tale represents the rather unhappy and sordid career of a girl who is the illegitimate daughter of a Chancellor of the Exchequer by a liaison in his youth with an actress. The girl is brought up, in ignorance of her origin, as his admitted daughter, and only learns the truth after his death. She turns to her mother's profession, and marries the leader of a band of popular comedians known as 'The Frolicks.' The portrait of this man, vigorous and good natured, but egoistic and rather demoralized by success and applause, is excellent. His wife's infidelity brings their marriage to a tragic conclusion. She bears a son to her lover, but is driven by poverty to surrender him to a rich woman who is willing to adopt him; and she ends as the mistress of a young business man who has a wife and children somewhere in the Midlands."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"While it does not stand as the highest achievement of its author's pen, it is head and shoulders above most of the season's outpour of fiction—an incisive, swiftly-told, and consistent novel, written with grace and vitality."
 + Dial 73:579 N '22 120w

"His heroine has the saving grace of honesty with herself, at least. She is no humbug. The reader is made to understand her contradictory nature; to sympathize with it; to see it as human and believable. And this is to say that it is the creation of an able writer." E. L. Pearson
 — Ind 109:106 S 2 '22 170w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
 Ind 109:110 S 2 '22 220w

"An absorbing tale by a writer who is always an artist." L. W. Dodd
 + Lit R p83 O 7 '22 480w

"One has a sense that Mr. Aumonier has not quite fulfilled the imaginative urge of his conception."
 — New Repub 32:76 S 13 '22 260w

"Mr. Aumonier's creations are dyed in the fast dyes of the authentic imagination. They are received into the mind at the time of reading; they are forgotten; but when they are recalled their colours are as bright as ever. Casually, indolently as Mr. Aumonier invents them he achieves that confusion between the real and the imagined world which is the envy of all artists. . . The pity is that Mr. Aumonier has chosen to work out his theme in a world where beauty is not." Rebecca West
 + — New Statesman 19:540 Ag 19 '22 1000w

"The story of Barbara is one that is too dramatic not to keep its readers tensely interested, and yet it does show a soul in the making. Mr. Aumonier is able to write and to think, but this does not cause him to lose perception of the romance of life. . . The book is brilliantly written and never overwritten. The men and women who come into it are admirably visualized, rounded out, actual."

+ N Y Times p28 Ag 13 '22 800w

"It is a good novel, a story well told, containing several scenes of great dramatic poignancy." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 3 '22 250w

"Certainly, this is not one of his best books. But it is a highly interesting book for all that. If we do not, and cannot, believe in the heroine as a single developing person, giving unity to all her occasions, we do find ourselves convinced by some of the specific relationships into which she enters." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 134:259 Ag 12 '22 650w

"It is interestingly enough written, but it's not a book that bores to the core of life. It is meant to be a 'searching psychological study.' It is not searching; it is cleverly and readably plausible, with plenty of action and melodrama, or at least near-melodrama."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7a S 17 '22 200w

"A vigorously told but rather a depressing tale."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 Jl 27 '22 160w

AUSTEN, JANE. Love & freindship; and other early works. 174p $2 Stokes [6s Chatto & W.]
 22-26878

These early experiments with her pen are said to have been written when Jane Austen was seventeen years old and are now published for the first time, with a preface by G. K. Chesterton. "Love and freindship," a sentimental romance told in the form of letters, is, as Mr. Chesterton terms it a rattling burlesque. "Lesley Castle" is an unfinished novel in letters. Following these is a "History of England, by a 'partial, prejudiced, and ignorant historian.' Several shorter pieces are added. The end papers are decorated with water color heads of the kings of England made by the novelist's sister, Cassandra.

"Delicate satire, excellent fooling. Most of all is the bewildered reader amazed by the extreme modernity of the humor and insight of this burlesque. In an age that took with portentous seriousness its sense and its sensibilities, its pride and its prejudice, it is astonishing to find this clever and demure little analyst of human nature pricking the bubbles of sham and sentimentality with her incisive wit." A. L. Grant
 + Atlantic's Bookshelf N '22 500w

Booklist 19:52 N '22

Bookm 56:513 D '22 150w

Boston Transcript p6 S 27 '22 900w

Dial 73:682 D '22 80w

"Anything from that beloved pen is worth reading and having, and these skits—they are scarcely more than that—of the young apprentice, written for the amusement of her home circle with no thought of publication, have really a delicious humor of their own."

+ Ind 109:281 N 11 '22 380w

"A satire, a burlesque, and an unadulterated joy." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p38 D '22 40w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

Int Bk R p11 Ja '23 1400w

"One thing is certain, that, unlike the first brouillons of great authors, Jane Austen's are characteristic of her greater work."

+ Lit R p871 Ag 12 '22 450w

"The devotee of Miss Austen will read with avidity and rejoice with exceeding great rejoicing over these bits of fooling that have at last been rescued from the oblivion in which they have lain since they were left to her sister Cassandra. Absurd with the unrestrained absurdity of a burlesque, bubbling with the gusto and naïveté of youth, they move irresistibly to mind, but they are more than merely supremely amusing. They are revealing as the expression of an attitude of mind and a method of art that later wrought to such high achievement, and they are interesting as foreshadowing definite moments and personalities in Jane Austen's maturer work." Amy Loveman

+ Lit R p265 D 2 '22 500w

"She is only humming a tune beneath her breath, trying over a few bars of the music for Pride and Prejudice and Emma. But we know that there is no one else who can sing like that. She need not raise her voice. Every syllable comes quite distinctly through the gates of time. And whatever they may say about her genius and her cousins and Mansfield Park we are content to listen all day long to Jane Austen practising." V. W.

+ New Statesman 19:419 J1 15 '22 1750w

"No one can read this little book without being infinitely moved by other than by laughter. For here she is—this Jane Austen of library shelves and book-cases—here she is, human, laughing, alive, taken unaware, as she must so often have longed to be taken. Never before has she quite escaped from the rectory." Zona Gale

+ N Y Times p1 S 17 '22 1850w

Reviewed by Esther Murphy
N Y Tribune p8 S 24 '22 1050w

Reviewed by Burton Rascoe
N Y Tribune p5 O 1 '22 80w

"Not only are they wholly delightful in themselves, but they show already in the bud those qualities of irony and humor which are the flower of her later work. The later Jane Austen can, in fact, be recognized on nearly every page."

+ Sat R 134:66 J1 8 '22 360w

"No disciple of Miss Austen must fail to read this engaging little scrap-book."

+ Spec 128:723 Je 10 '22 750w

"Both the admirer of Jane Austen and the lover of fun-of literary as well as of juvenile fun—will find diverting material here."

+ Springfield Republican p7a O 29 '22 640w

"Love and Friendship" and the 'History of England' will give pleasure to all who like to watch genius kick its youthful heels; and even in the other pieces there is every now and then a sentence one would be sorry to have missed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p393 Je 15 '22 700w

Wis Lib Bul 18:253 N '22

Reviewed by Wilbur Cross
Yale R n s 12:410 Ja '23 1400w

AUSTRIAN, DELIA. Life and times of Juliette Récamier. 169p il $4 Seymour, R. F.

B or 92 Récamier, Jeanne François Julie Adélaïde (Bernard) 22-11797

"In 'The Life and Times of Juliette Récamier' we read how Juliette, marrying at the age of fifteen, serenely leaves her elderly husband, goes to Paris, and becomes the queen of the literary world, attracting to her brilliant salon such notables as René de Châteaubriand, Victor Hugo, Prince Augustus of Prussia, Benjamin Constant, and Napoleon's brother—not to forget the friendship of Madame de Staël."—Bookm

Bookm 56:102 S '22 120w

"Miss Austrian has been untiring in her research, and admirably conscientious in presenting, en masse, the result. But the method! Anecdote piled upon anecdote, and then the accumulation jumbled together after a kaleidoscopic fashion which grows to be as wearisome as it is confusing." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 17 '22 620w

"The writer's methods are as floating and fluctuating as the butterfly vision she pursues. She goes forward and backward, mixes up her dates, is sometimes even in her eagerness a little ungrammatical. And hers is no bread-and-butter biography. If we wish to know the exact events of Mme. Récamier's life, her relations with her husband, the amount of her income, we must look elsewhere. What we mostly get is a succession of soul states."

— Lit R p778 J1 1 '22 420w

"Delia Austrian has presented Juliette Récamier in such an objective, impersonal way that it serves chiefly to show a need and opportunity for one of those new and human studies of the real person." F. G. Woolston
— New Repub 32:104 S 20 '22 540w

AYSCOUGH, JOHN, pseud. (FRANCIS BROWNING DREW BICKERSTAFFE-DREW). Mariquita. 268p $2 Benziger [6s Sands]

22-14351

"Mariquita is the daughter of a well-to-do Texas ranch owner. She has spent a part of her girlhood at the convent at Loretto, beyond Denver, and the priests and nuns and her companions of that community form her sole stock of memories. Her father, though accepted unquestioningly, and his cowboys though ministered to faithfully, do not really enter into her life. It gradually dawns upon those about her that she belongs to another sphere. Even her lover—for the chance of a best kind of human love comes into her life—recognizes this, and much as he desires to win her, hardly hopes or believes that he ought to. Only her father, half Spaniard, half Indian, retains enough of the caveman in his disposition to try to compel her to conform to his will and the ways of the world. But the passive energy of her absorption in God so impresses every one else that he can do nothing. So in the end she becomes a nun of the contemplative order. That is all."

—Lit R

"If the purpose of this novel circumscribes it and thus keeps it from reaching distinction, it is, none the less, without any gross demerits, if one grants that such purpose is not, from a strict literary point of view, a drawback."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '22 150w

"The author has surpassed himself in this intimate study of a crystalline spirituality, made fascinating and lovely by his artistry."

+ Cath World 116:108 O '22 700w

"The story is certainly not one of propaganda, but amid our fiction of the world, the flesh, and the devil it is as refreshing as an oasis in a fiery desert."

+ Lit R p558, Ag 5 '22 390w

"John Ayscough tells the story very prettily—a story for girls, though destined, I suspect, to be read with greater enthusiasm by mothers and aunts, who may find the heroine's divine selfishness touching." Forrest Reid

+ Nation and Ath 31:688 Ag 19 '22 150w

"Much delicacy of touch and not a little skill in writing are displayed in carrying out these simple developments of an uncomplicated plot, which is wholly without surprises and possesses in itself but little interest. John Ayscough appears to have more appreciation of the great plains of the Northwest than acquaintance with their realities."

+ N Y Times p22 J1 23 '22 500w

"It is a book for quiet tastes, but the savour is delicate."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p475 J1 20 '22 410w

AYSCOUGH, JOHN, pseud. (FRANCIS BROWNING DREW BICKERSTAFFE-DREW). Pages from the past. 244p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans

B or 92 22-5561

"Recollections of those days of crinolines and vicarage gardens described in Trollope's novels, and humorous anecdotes of an earlier generation whom John Ayscough has known personally, are loosely interwoven in 'Pages from the Past' to form a background of comparison for manners and customs of today. However, the book is principally taken up with personal experience, though some space is given to contrasting 'two worlds as different as any that ever existed.'"—Bookm

Booklist 19:17 O '22

AYSCOUGH, JOHN, pseud.—Continued

"Unfortunately the subject matter lacks a certain amount of connection and sequence which is only partly overcome by the conversational style in which it is written."

— + Bookm 55:538 J1 '22 140w

"Has a greater value than its title suggests."

+ Cath World 115:688 Ag '22 150w

"These essays are written in delightfully crisp English, full of pungency without any straining after paradox, and interspersed with anecdotes. It is a pity the writer lets himself go in a tirade against 'anarchy' or 'Bolshevism,' bringing present-day political controversy into this bower of Victorian repose. The book is a sincere temperamental study which deserves to remain with us as one of the sort of books people then read."

+ — New Statesman 19:194 My 20 '22 250w

"Extremely entertaining. There are many humorous stories in the book, and it flows along in a gentle river of pleasurable mellow prose that ought to engage the attention of most readers. One does not necessarily have to be a Roman Catholic to enjoy the book."

+ N Y Times p13 Ag 13 '22 250w

"His tone is friendly and urbane, but has the spice of apt retort and repartee. Altogether this is a gracious and cheerful book." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:499 J1 19 '22 700w

St Louis 20:223 S '22

"Monsignor Drew is a close and shrewd observer of social life; his delicate and lambent humour plays delightfully about the various changes that have taken place since Plancus was consul. Nothing could be better of its kind than the chapter, for instance, which he devotes to the changes in household furnishing which he has lived to see."

+ Sat R 133:609 Je 10 '22 680w

B

B. L. T., pseud. See Taylor, B. L.

BABBITT, ELLEN C. More Jataka tales. 94p il $1.25 Century

398 Folklore—India. Jatakas 22-9163

"The Jataka tales, regarded as historic in the Third Century B.C., are the oldest collection of folk-lore extant. . . A 'Guild of Jataka Translators,' under Professor E. B. Cowell, professor of Sanskrit in the University of Cambridge, brought out the complete edition of the Jataka between 1895 and 1907. It is from this source that 'More Jataka Tales' have been retold." (Preface) These stories told for quite young children are about the doings of both men and animals, and of the tricks they played on one another. They are illustrated by silhouettes.

Booklist 18:337 Je '22

"It is not easy to say exactly wherein consist the charm of these unpretentious tales. There are many little stories for children that are simply told and well, but I have read few which so unerringly use the right words; moreover, they are quite free from that over simplicity which is condescension to the child." E: Sapir

+ Freeman 5:404 J1 5 '22 650w

"Children who derive delight from the portrayal of the ingenuity of the animal world (and what child does not?) and who clamor for something new in the way of folklore should find in this small volume with its lavish array of charming illustrations a source of genuine pleasure. Miss Babbitt has told the old fables in simple language, with sufficient repetition in the use of words and phrases to make her volume a useful aid to the mastery of reading."

+ Lit R p828 J1 22 '22 180w

"The tales are written with simple directness, as in children's story books, but can also be enjoyed by adults who read into them the deeper meaning that was theirs in the original ancient writings, the whole collection being regarded as sacred Buddhist lore. The very clever and striking silhouette pictures of Ellsworth Young add greatly to the value of the whole work."

+ N Y Times p13 Je 4 '22 540w

Wis Lib Bul 18:187 J1 '22

BABBITT, HAROLD EATON. Sewerage and sewage treatment. 531p il $5 Wiley

628.2 Sewerage. Sewage disposal 22-2038

"Textbook prepared for the author's classes at the University of Illinois. A good general treatment, characterized by attention to principles rather than details of practice."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Am J Public Health p335 Ap '22 1¼col

Canadian Engineer p479 My 9 '22 1¼col

Engin News-Rec p659 Ap 20 '22 2¼col

Industrial Management p254 Ap '22 ½col

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:17 Ap '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:279 Je '22

St Louis 20:267 N '22

BABCOCK, WILLIAM HENRY. Legendary islands of the Atlantic; a study in medieval geography. (Research ser.) 196p il $3.50
Am. geographical soc. of N.Y.

911 Geography, Medieval. Geographical myths 22-7636

"Mr. Babcock has surveyed the evidence for the existence of various legendary islands which are to be found on old maps and globes, with a view to their justification or condemnation." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "At great length and with vast minuteness he examines every shred of evidence concerning the extraordinary myth, [Atlantis] not alone in the narrative of Plato, but elsewhere, concluding with the observation that every solution of this problem must be conjectural. Other stories of legendary countries and islands, less popularly known than that of Atlantis, Mr. Babcock has discovered and considers at length. The explorations of St. Brendan, in various versions of the story; the mythical island of Brazil; the island of the seven cities; the problem of Mayda; early accounts of Greenland; the islands of Zeno; Antillia and the Antilles." (Boston Transcript)

Booklist 19:79 D '22

"The little known narratives are searched out of the obscurest of writings, discussed with great learning and illustrated by remarkable ancient maps and charts."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '22 500w

"In making these identifications Mr. Babcock is at pains to disclaim any intention of being 'offensively dogmatic.' He merely presents his own deductions from evidence which he has been at some pains to gather. With some of these deductions other scholars will no doubt disagree. Indeed, not a few of Mr. Babcock's conclusions appear to be little more than guesses. But there can be no doubt that his book lifts a corner of the veil which has obscured the subject of the pre-Columbian voyages to America, and makes reasonably certain the view that Christopher Columbus merely followed in the footsteps of others." W. S. Wallace

Canadian Hist R 3:359 D '22 750w

"The book contains an excellent selection of reproductions and is welcomed as a contribution to the study of early cartographical efforts and their value in unfolding the story of geographical discovery." W. H. Barker

+ Nature 109:803 Je 24 '22 1150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:518 N '22

St Louis 20:222 S '22

"It is pleasant to voyage with Mr. Babcock among these romantic islands, real and imaginary; and at the end of our cruise we can place his carefully compiled log on our shelves with the consciousness that we have a handy book of reference when we wish to refresh our memories on any particular point; for he has provided a good index and plenty of illustrations."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p469 J1 20 '22 1500w

BABSON, ROGER WARD. Future of the churches. 112p $1 Revell

261 Church 21-21583

"It is not often that a professional economist turns his trained attention to purely religious themes; but if he does it is interesting to note his conclusions when he applies to religious questions the same methods that he employs on things economic, political or educational. . . . He suggests four possible reforms if the church would regain its power in the community. 1. We should recognize that churches are no more divine institutions than colleges, hospitals, farms or even factories. Either all worth-while organizations are divine else none are, and are subject to economic laws. 2. We should be sure that the churches give the people a real equivalent for the time and money which the churches demand. 3. We should be careful how we preach altruism. 4. We should get away from the idea that the church is an organization or club existent for its 'members'."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 13:211 Ap '22

"We find him a close reasoner and a sane thinker." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 14 '22 600w

"His argument is sound throughout. The book is valuable if only because of its attack on too much denominationalism and too little plain business efficiency."

+ Lit R p327 D 31 '21 240w

"In biblical interpretation Mr. Babson is open to criticism. But the church should be thankful for this criticism of its work from a new point of view."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 My 16 '22 540w

BACHELLER, IRVING ADDISON. In the days of Poor Richard. 414p il $2 Bobbs

22-14188

"The scenes of 'In the Days of Poor Richard' are diverse. They open in the wilderness of northern New York with a party of men and women rescued from the Indians, and they close in Philadelphia. Between these the hardy Jack Irons, who falls in love in the woods with the beautiful Margaret Hare and in due time marries her, proves himself valiant in peace and war, going to Albany, to Boston, to London, to Philadelphia and elsewhere in his endeavor to make his way in the world and in pursuit of adventure. The story progresses through the Revolutionary War, stops to relate many of its incidents, sets forth pen portraits of some of its leading figures, and closes on a note of tranquillity and hope."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 19:19 O '22

"It places Franklin as one of the great personalities of the epoch, and draws him in his familiar habit as he lives and as he is known to us through the pages of American history. Its romantic episodes and peculiarly fictional part are decidedly unoriginal and commonplace." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 J1 19 '22 750w

Cleveland p91 D '22

"This story is apparently extremely well documented. It purports to have been drawn largely from original sources, actual letters and records of the family whose exploits and romances are woven into the book. Although the reference to documentary sources is slightly overdone, giving at times a stilted and artificial flavor, in the main a high degree of verisimilitude is attained, and the movement is more sustained and better directed than is frequently the case in novels of the historical or quasi-historical class." S. S. A.

Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 D 10 '22 950w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Ind 109:206 O 14 '22 600w

"It is all told in the agreeable style of which Mr. Bacheller is master, with a real devotion to the period and the events and the characters that made it what it was. A deal of hard work lies behind this book. Possibly if there had been a little less of preparation, a bit of stiffness apparent at times would not have obtruded. But the history in it is good sound history, and the story is certainly likely to make it widely read, to make it at least as popular as any other of the novels by this excellent craftsman."

+ — Lit D p55 Ag 19 '22 1050w

"Here we have a good though not an outstanding American historical novel, in which there is a finely patriotic spirit. For certain passages and incidents it is worth adding to any library of Americana. The love story is no better and no worse than most 'popular novel' love stories. The accounts of the Indians are much more worth while."

+ — Lit R p835 J1 29 '22 850w

"Considered as fiction, the story interest of the book suffers somewhat from the fact that the action is spread so widely and carried through so long a time. But this is in part compensated for by the variety and rapidity of the incident. Something is happening or about to happen all the time, and the events are always vigorous, full-fledged, man-sized action. But it is as vivified history, as a vital historical picture, that the book has its greatest interest and its greatest worth."

+ N Y Times p15 J1 16 '22 1500w

"His style has no merit save a stiff simplicity. His psychological insight is not profound. The construction of his tale is clumsy; it lumbers along. His ear for dialect appears to be a little dull. But he has a story, and it moves consistently from a beginning to a conclusion. It is definitely placed in time and space and plausibly motivated. It is indubitably sincere. When it is finished one is left with a sense of having been informed, not mystified. By these qualities it ties up with reality." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p5 J1 16 '22 650w

"A delightful picture of Benjamin Franklin the man, but also stirring incidents of Indian fighting and historic glimpses of England and America in Revolutionary times." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 132:119 S 20 '22 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:460 N '22

Pratt p35 autumn '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:216 O '22

BACON, ALBION (FELLOWS) (MRS HILARY E. BACON). Consolation. 25p 75c Atlantic monthly

240 Spiritual life. Death 22-7677

This little book of thirty-five pages, originally published in the Atlantic Monthly, records a spiritual experience which brought the writer an assurance of immortality so comforting and sustaining that she has shared her experience by telling it to others in need of a like consolation.

Boston Transcript p6 My 31 '22 120w

Lit R p796 J1 8 '22 240w

St Louis 20:204 S '22

BACON, RAYMOND FOSS, and HAMOR, WILLIAM ALLEN. American fuels. (Mellon Inst. technicochemical ser.) 2v 636;615p il $12 McGraw

662.6 Fuel 22-17473

"Comprehensive work dealing in general with the technology, selection, and economy of fuels. Special topics are treated by men who are well known in their respective fields. Contains several brief bibliographies and frequent references in text or footnotes."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:499 N '22

BAGGER, EUGENE SZEKERES. Eminent Europeans; studies in continental reality. 283p il $2.50 Putnam

923 Europe—Biography. Kings and rulers. Statesmen 22-22647

The author has selected his subjects from central and southeastern Europe whose peoples, he holds, are disguised to the American and English mind as causes, and their leading personalities as symbols. His object is to present the men and one woman who for the past eight years signified central European history, as human beings and not as symbols and political abstractions. Contents: Queen Marie of Roumania; King Ferdinand of Roumania; Eleutherios Venizelos; King Constantine I of Greece; Thomas Garrigue Masaryk; John Bratiano, jr.; Count Michael Karolyi; Ignace Jan Paderewski; Dr Edward Benes; Nicholas Horthy.

Booklist 19:155 F '23

"Crisp, even sharp studies. You may not agree with all Mr. Bagger's estimates, but you will be thoroughly entertained and stirred up by him." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R 1:37 D '22 40w

"Mr. Bagger's portraits are vivid and interesting, but not, in the true sense of the word, artistic. Had he not gone to such pains unnecessarily to practice an art not his own, his work would have been less ambitious, perhaps, but historically more valuable."

— + Lit R p299 D 9 '22 470w

"I wanted Mr. Bagger to go on writing, when I closed his book: go on, first, because some of his chapters needed filling; but go on, in any event, because he is so fair an interpreter of events almost invariably bristling with propaganda; because he is one of the most far-sighted and sophisticated assorters of data now writing on Central European affairs in the American press." C. Merz

+ New Repub 33:205 Ja 17 '23 1300w

"Into these ten sketches he has packed not only a vast amount of excellent character drawing and a volume of entertaining anecdotes, but a good deal of historical information which will be new to most Americans, even of the class who ought to know it."

+ N Y Times p1 N 19 '22 2100w

"Mr. Bagger has produced a book that is fascinating, entertaining and stimulating and that abounds in fine writing, which, while it does not attain the even perfection of the later Mr. Strachey, his fore-runner in literary dissection, is superior to anything like it, in the same field of political writing, done in this country."

+ N Y Tribune p11 N 12 '22 850w

R of Rs 66:671 D '22 150w

"Those who desire intelligent views and information will gain it from his biographies. But those who read it will understand that he is consciously working up to a popular vogue which has proved successful in the market, and they will not find in it the rare instinct and distinction of style which can only give such a book an exceptional place in the literature of the day."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p824 D 7 '22 150w

BAGGULEY, WILLIAM H., ed. Andrew Marvell, 1621-1678; with an official record of the tercentenary celebrations at Kingston-upon-Hull and in London. 132p il $2 Oxford [6s Milford]

821 Marvell, Andrew

"A collection of tercentenary tributes to one of the greatest of minor poets, here honored with the sort of homage one might expect from men like Augustine Birrell, Edmund Gosse, J. C. Squire, and with a remarkably, though not unexpectedly, brilliant essay by T. S. Eliot."

—Nation

Reviewed by D. J. Henderson
Lit R p82 O 7 '22 1100w

Nation 115:418 O 18 '22 40w

"Constitutes a fitting tribute to a man, who, by virtue of some half-dozen of his poems, is rightly accounted a great poet. [The book] leaves Marvell where he was, and sure of a permanent niche in the temple of English poetry." G. E.

+ New Statesman 19:298 Je 17 '22 1600w

"It is a volume which all lovers of the poet would be glad to possess."

Sat R 133:636 Je 17 '22 720w

"Mr. Eliot in his essay very clearly defines the special quality which makes Marvell's work so valuable to English poetry, a quality born of idealism and sanity, inheriting therefrom a calmness, ever on the verge of rapture, expressed through a wit that makes the work 'classical' in the true meaning of the word."

Spec 129:373 S 16 '22 400w

BAILEY, EDGAR HENRY SUMMERFIELD, and BAILEY, HERBERT STEVENS. Food products from afar; a popular account of fruits and other foodstuffs. 287p il $3 Century

664 Food 22-16734

The authors, who are experts in the chemistry of food, provide in this book a popular description of the raising and marketing of imported foods. They show how the commodities are grown in the lands from which we import them, how they are prepared for the market and how transported. Successive chapters treat of Italian macaroni, nuts from many lands, oils from Italy and Spain, dried fruits of the deserts, various continental cheeses, rice and spices from the Far East, coffee and cocoa from Latin America, bananas from Central America, foreign fishes, and other exotic foods known only to those of our population who are travellers.

Booklist 19:39 N '22

"Popular and exact, entertaining and informative."

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 16 '22 180w

Lit R p166 O 28 '22 60w

BAILEY, HENRY CHRISTOPHER. His Serene Highness. 345p $2 Dutton [8s 6d Methuen] 22-6938

A tale of romance and adventure in the eighteenth century. One political intrigue after another keeps the reader busy and the gallant hero, Christopher Hope, meets the turn of fortune's wheel in true cavalier style. He finds himself in Salm, a little kingdom between France and Austria involved in a net of plots concerning the succession to the tiny throne. Thru all runs the inevitable love story and at last Hope himself is made Prince of Salm.

Booklist 18:329 Je '22

"The story is delightfully told."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 5 '22 480w

"One of the best recent novels of the 'good old days when men were men.' It is written lightly, with a droll twist, and an appropriate style. The dialogue is apt and dramatic. Somehow the author has managed not to overtax the reader's credulity."

+ Lit R p586 Ap 15 '22 150w

"Of a fascinating old-fashioned love story of Europe and of action of some mysterious kind, this book offers an abundance. The story is delightfully told."

+ N Y Times p25 Ap 23 '22 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bu 27:460 N '22

"One of the essentials in a romantic novel is that the characters should take the romantic part seriously, trusting to the splendid impulse, and not pausing to criticize themselves and wonder how a sceptical reader will regard their affairs. Mr. Bailey would, no doubt, have written a convincing story if he had himself seemed convinced by it."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p602 S 16 '20 200w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 Jl '22

BAILEY, JOHN CANN. Some political ideas and persons. 252p $2 Dutton [6s Murray]

824 Great Britain—Politics and government. Victoria, queen of Great Britain. Beaconsfield, Benjamin Disraeli, 1st earl of (Eng ed 22-5628)

These articles, with the exception of the one on Queen Victoria, originally appeared in the Literary Supplement of The Times (London). In the first essay the author confesses himself to be an "unrepentant and unashamed Victorian." The four essays on the political life of Disraeli are in review of "The life of Benjamin Disraeli," by Monypenny and Buckle. After biographical chapters on Henry Fox, Lord Grey, and Lord Randolph Churchill there are some six essays of political retrospect due to the war and conservative in tone.

Boston Transcript p6 O 12 '21 100w
Boston Transcript p6 Je 10 '22

"The space given to Fox, Grey, and Churchill is too short for a full-length presentation, but not too short for an account of the personal political traits of these interesting figures that leaves them standing vividly before the spectator." R. J. Davis

+ Lit R p837 J1 29 '22 210w

"A book which, while throughout refreshingly Victorian in temper, is written with a width of sympathy and knowledge that belong to our own time."

+ New Statesman 18:538 F 11 '22 780w
Sat R 132:694 D 17 '21 130w

"It is a pleasant and instructive book."

+ Spec 128:58 Ja 14 '22 50w

"The fresh thought, the wide knowledge, the easy, lucid style which characterize these articles are fully represented in the first of the collection. It is a study of Queen Victoria, based upon a critical appreciation of 'the best book written about her.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p755 N 17 '21 350w

"The study entitled 'Queen Victoria' is written around Mr. Strachey's book without being in the narrower sense a review of it. Mr. Bailey's judgment on this remarkable piece of historical biography is the judgment of a ripe and appreciative critic, who is yet master enough of his mental balance not to lose his head before any display of literary brilliancy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p68 F 2 '22 1000w

BAILEY, LIBERTY HYDE. Apple-tree. (Open country books) 117p il $1.50 (7s) Macmillan

634.11 Apple 22-2089

The little book is number one of the Open country books series. The author approaches the apple tree as a "living thing, not merely a something that bears apples" and he shows his favorite tree to the reader from every possible point of view. We see it as an object in the landscape, at its tasks of budding, blossoming and fruit-bearing and observe methods of pruning, grafting and harvesting.

Booklist 18:218 Ap '22
Cleveland p59 Ag '22

"A delightful little book, peculiarly lovable and winsome for all practical knowledge and horticultural erudition with which it is infused. There is no gardener nor householder but would be the happier and wiser for reading it."

+ Lit R p571 Ap 8 '22 100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:18 Ja '23
Pratt p20 autumn '22

"Underneath the bloom of sentiment and poetry, there is the solid fruit of horticultural science, popularly expressed."

+ Springfield Republican p10 Je 7 '22 240w

"Though scientific in content, the pleasant chatty style of this book will appeal to all nature lovers. The author not only knows and understands growing things but loves them for themselves."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:130 My '22

BAILEY, LIBERTY HYDE, ed. Cyclopaedia of farm animals. 708p fl $6 Macmillan

636 Dairy products. Domestic animals. Meat 22-14041

This is volume three of the "Cyclopaedia of American agriculture," now out of print. Like the other volumes it is the work of many contributors. Part one covers the animal and its relations; the domestication of animals; their physiology, breeding, feeding, diseases, exhibiting of livestock, wild life and its relation to agriculture. Part two deals with the manufacture of animal products; dairying, meat and related products. Part three covers the individual farm animals.

Boston Transcript p6 My 17 '22 230w

"Many will welcome the opportunity this reprinting gives. The book is helpfully and generously illustrated."

+ Lit R p570 Ap 8 '22 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 17 '22 70w

BAILEY, LIBERTY HYDE, ed. Cyclopaedia of farm crops. 699p $6 Macmillan

633 Farm produce. Crops 22-14042

Volume one of the "Cyclopaedia of American agriculture," now out of print as such, is here published independently, this volume and the one on farm animals being the most called for of the set. Two hundred farm plants grown in North America north of Mexico are dealt with by more than a hundred experts. Part one covers the plant and its relations: structure and physiology; insects and diseases; plant breeding; plant introduction; crop management; growing plants under cover; seeding, planting and yields. Part two covers the manufacture of crop products, preserved and in the form of juices and liquors. Part three covers the different individual crops and the methods of cultivating them.

"He covers practically the whole range of farm cropping in the United States and Canada in a manner that will appeal alike to the practical farmer and the student."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 17 '22 70w

BAILEY, MARGARET EMERSON. Value of good manners; practical politeness in the daily concerns of life. 294p $1.75 Doubleday
177 Courtesy 22-11185

The book is not a treatise on etiquette, but a general resumé of courtesy in the daily concerns of life as the outcome of a practical wisdom that cannot be estimated in mere time and money values. No relationship is omitted and the value of good manners is demonstrated in family life, between man and wife, parents and children, master and servant, host and guest, in friendly intercourse and conversation, and between employer and employee as a business asset.

Booklist 19:7 O '22

"She says what she has to say so interestingly and sensibly that no one can doubt that it should be accepted as the ideal and standard book on the value of good manners."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 31 '22 260w
Cleveland p72 S '22

"It deals with manners rather than with manner and does so in a free, informal style that is quite in keeping with the text. We have an impression, while reading the book, that we are merely overhearing the author chatting with a friend."

+ Lit R p796 J1 8 '22 260w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:326 J1 '22
Pratt p7 autumn '22
St Louis 20:203 S '22

BAILEY, MARGARET E.—Continued

"A wise and sane discussion. A good book to use with young people."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:214 O '22 30w

BAKER, EDNA DEAN. Parenthood and child nurture. 178p $1.50 Macmillan

136.7 Child study. Children—Management and training. Parents 22-11009

The object of the book is to teach parents the needs of childhood and how to become their children's true companions and friends. It presents a summary of the facts of child development from birth to eleven years, dividing this period into four secondary periods: infancy, from birth to three years of age; early childhood, from three to six years; middle childhood, from six to eight years; and later childhood, from eight to eleven years. For each period the physical characteristics are shown in their bearings on mental, moral and social development and the necessary equipment of home and parents to further this development. The last chapter is devoted to the activities of the child in the home, such as are provided by the story, music, dramatizations and the manual arts. Each chapter is provided with a list of questions for further study and references for supplementary reading, while an extensive general bibliography is given in the appendix.

"The treatment throughout is non-technical and well adapted to the needs of persons with little or no background of reading in this field. The book should serve an excellent purpose as a text for a parents' club or similar group. It would also be worth careful reading by kindergarten and primary teachers."

+ El School J 23:318 D '22 400w

J Religion 2:559 S '22 10w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p827 D 7 '22 70w

BAKER, KARLE (WILSON) (MRS THOMAS ELLIS BAKER) (CHARLOTTE WILSON, pseud.). Burning bush. 93p $1.25 Yale univ. press [6s 6d Milford]

811

22-18285

"This book contains some very charming lyrics: 'The Four Kings' would pass credibly well in any company; 'Street-ends' is a poem of surprise and wonder; 'Orders' is a vivid picture of nature in her commanding moods. One sees glimpses of imagery, of gentle and rather colorless symbol."—Lit R

"There are flashes of beauty here. . . Yet with it all there is a feeling of dissatisfaction with the book—as if the poet had sardonically locked the better part of herself away from prying eyes, and given only external flashes. The incompleteness is tantalizing; it is too omnipresent to please." Clement Wood

— + Bookm 56:349 N '22 160w

"'Burning Bush' has a good deal of what we rather lukewarmly call 'nice' poetry, for want of a more expressive adjective, but no silver heron rises from the marshes that Mrs. Baker stirs."

— + Lit R p251 N 25 '22 300w

"Karle Baker has imagination, but too often she allows it to be replaced by mere whimsicality, fancy and cleverness in phrasing a thought. All of which is delightful, but minor. Pruned, this tree would demand little but praise. For Burning Bush unquestionably contains fine things." G. B. S.

+ New Repub 32:226 O 25 '22 250w

"'Burning Bush' only occasionally yields 'the full moon riding high'; but it is vivid with honest sympathies."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p787 N 30 '22 180w

BAKER, OLAF. Dusty Star. 302p il $2 Dodd [7s 6d T. Butterworth]

22-21352

"'Dusty Star' was an Indian boy who was given a wolf-cub for a pet, which he trained to be as a dog, in companionship. At the same time the boy gained much insight into the mind of the wolf, until he was almost half a wolf himself. Even among the Indian people such a friendship was uncanny, and the jealous and distrustful in the tribe attempted to kill the wolf. But 'Dusty Star' and his strange companion ran away into the land of Carboona, where they experienced many strange adventures, until he was induced to return to his tribe, bringing his wolf-pet with him in spite of opposition. The triumph for boy and wolf comes when, aided by 'Kiopo' as the beast was named, the tribe, led by 'Dusty Star' rout an attack of Comanches."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 19:162 F '23

"An admirably designed and composed story, which should appeal to children who are beginning to develop a love for nature, as represented through the animal kingdom. The story is fascinating, and inspiring in its suggestions of the possibilities of friendship between children and animals."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 15 '22 220w

"[The author's] tendency to analyze the mental processes of the denizens of the wilderness is not very convincing. Nevertheless, the book's wealth of adventure will delight the younger members of the family, especially if their elders will read it aloud to them. The four full-page illustrations are full of the mystery and thrill of forest and mountain."

+ Int Bk R p60 Ja '23 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:35 Ja '23

"A vivid and realistic tale of Indian tribes on the Western prairies, with many sidelights on their customs and superstitions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p730 N 9 '22 30w

Wis Lib Bul 19:26 Ja '23

BAKER, RAY STANNARD (DAVID GRAYSON, pseud.). Woodrow Wilson and world settlement. 3v 432;561;528p il $20 Doubleday

940.314 Peace conference, 1919. Wilson, Woodrow 22-23112

Mr Wilson turned over to the author the collection of papers and documents which he brought with him from the Peace conference, a large part of which have not been published heretofore. This material consisted of the complete minutes of the Council of four, the reports and memoranda made for the President by members of the American delegation, British and French reports, Mr Wilson's own memoranda and notations and the varied correspondence, appeals and resolutions which came to him from every part of the world. From these original and fundamental documents, and based at all points upon them, Mr Baker has constructed a record of the Peace conference, set forth the American policies and the struggle of Mr Wilson and his advisers to apply them, and shown what the results really were. Thruout he makes large use of quotations to develop the narrative.

"Mr. Baker's tone is one of honest and painstaking exposition, and the theme is of such tremendous importance that this handling sets it forth more impressively than any other could. We observe a great historical phenomenon through the least-distorted medium that has so far been vouchsafed us. This work may be counted practically final as a contemporary record of the genesis of the League. It will be a source book of the whole Conference for all future historians." V: S. Clark

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 700w

"The most important and authoritative narrative of the Peace conference from an American standpoint, which has appeared. Dignified and honest in tone it is a painstaking exposition in defense of Mr. Wilson's policies at Paris."

+ Booklist 19:153 F '23

"Mr. Baker has evidently written his material for aiding posterity in forming its conclusions regarding the greatness of his idol. But things other than special pleas will accomplish that task." E. J. C.

— Boston Transcript p8 N 25 '22 1450w

Cleveland p95 D '22

"A frank and dignified presentation of Mr. Wilson's case in defense of what happened at Paris during the making of the treaty of peace. Mr. Baker is a loyal friend, a stout and honest fighter, and the tone of admiration in the book is not slavish." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:310 N 25 '22 500w

"A work which will be of inestimable value in the future. Mr. Baker has rendered a valuable service by presenting documentary evidence which should refute many of the misrepresentations and dispel erroneous impressions about what took place at Paris. He also brings to the reader's consideration important questions which remain unsettled and are of concern to America." N. H. Davis

+ Int Bk R p26 D '22 3200w

"Mr. Baker has been given a rare opportunity and he has earned the gratitude of historical students by disregarding the obvious difficulties involved in a detailed study of Wilson's work at Paris. It would probably have been safer for him to have postponed publication until the heat of political passions had to some extent cooled, but history has profited by his courage, for he has effectively disposed of several myths which have threatened to achieve the standing of facts." C. Seymour

+ — Lit R p319 D 16 '22 2600w

"These volumes piquantly evoke again that drama of misconception and wasted effort—wasted, certainly, so far as his own country was concerned. They are a valuable contribution to history, however, in the way of bringing to light data which should have been made public property long ago and which are now released as a matter of private enterprise." W. L. McPherson

+ — N Y Tribune p12 N 12 '22 1500w

"Mr. Baker is too responsible an author to indulge in special pleading when an opportunity of such profound significance, and of such historical dignity, confronts him. He has had unrestricted access to the Wilson materials, and has endeavored to use them with impartial justice." A. S.

+ R of Rs 67:81 Ja '23 1900w

St Louis 21:18 Ja '23

"This work will inevitably rank as one of the authoritative sources of the history of the conference."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 13 '22 210w

BALMER, EDWIN. Breath of scandal. 360p $1.90 Little

22-15852

"The Hales are a representative Chicago family of good social standing and some popularity. On the evening of a dinner party and dance, Marjorie, their only daughter, learns that her father has been shot in the apartment of a Mrs. Russell in Clearedge Street by the woman's divorced husband. Marjorie is mentally stunned. Although the shocking incident is well covered up, it changes her life completely. In an effort to get understanding of a world she had not known existed Marjorie leaves home and rents a room with another girl in Clearedge Street. At least, that seems to be the reason for this suddenly extraordinary behavior. She gets a job and knocks about at night with her room-mate, Clara, and finds out how immoral all men are, and, we are assured, emerges from this experience a girl of a great deal more character and sagacity."—N Y Times

"An even-minded story, its mainsprings carefully examined, but before the point of desperation on the author's part is reached. Balanced, sane, and with a graphic premise, normal." R. D. W.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ag 26 '22 650w

"Mr. Balmer has produced in this novel one of the best built and most dramatically efficient stories among the season's output, but the book is more than that. It is a thoughtful, earnestly conceived book; a novel with a purpose, though it never becomes crudely didactic."

+ Lit R p32 S 16 '22 550w

"The specifications of this book are nicely calculated with respect to strains and stresses, but they remain specifications. Mr. Balmer's novel suggests a comparison, unfavorable as regards reality and significance, with Mr. Galsworthy's masterly treatment of scandal in The Forsyte Saga, Fraternity, Saint's Progress and elsewhere."

+ — New Repub 32:76 S 13 '22 260w

"Mr. Balmer has disregarded the human element pretty thoroughly. His characters are not real and his psychology is not sound. The whole thing rings untrue. He has treated his material in the current magazine serial manner, and the result is a good bit of suspense, with an equally good bit of tawdry cheapness that the initial plot does not deserve. It is the method of the movies."

— N Y Times p21 Ag 13 '22 400w

"Mr. Balmer sets his stage admirably, but pulls the strings of his puppets clumsily, so that one sees them for what they are, especially when the show is done and he is packing them away." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p8 S 24 '22 500w

Outlook 132:304 O 18 '22 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:3 Ja '23

BANNING, MRS MARGARET CULKIN. Spellbinders. 290p $2 Doran

22-18858

"The participation of women in political affairs and its influence upon the relations of the sexes form the theme of this novel of life in a city of the Middle West. The spellbinders are a group of women who have undertaken to organize the members of their sex to play a more effective part in politics. There are four of them, and they represent four distinct types. 'Spellbinders' is not a political novel in the ordinary sense of the word. Political issues as such do not enter into it at all. It deals solely with the readjustment which must take place when women find absorbing interests outside the home."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:121 Ja '23

Boston Transcript p4 S 30 '22 750w

N Y Times p17 S 3 '22 480w

"A little more depth of character analysis and distinction of style, and this would have been a notable book of its kind." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p8 S 3 '22 420w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:3 Ja '23

"Mrs Banning creates no illusions but endeavors to give her readers some studies of real women, shorn of the cloak of romance and sex interest with which so many writers enfold them."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 17 '22 250w

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY (RICHARD STILLMAN POWELL, pseud.). Right end Emerson. 270p il $1.75 Dodd

22-17731

Russell W. Emerson, a student of the Alton Academy, was working his way thru school. During the summer he acted as waiter at a summer resort, earning enough money to open up a small sporting-goods store in the school town, in partnership with his room-mate George Patterson, nicknamed "Stick." The interest of the story is equally divided between the pair's struggles with their store and the fortunes of the school's football team for which Russell at last scores a great victory.

"Delightful, but soft. The first chapter ought to be preserved as a surpassingly clear transcript of how the tale talks. It is very funny."

+ — Lit R p208 N 11 '22 80w

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY (RICHARD STILLMAN POWELL, pseud.). Turner twins. 280p $1.75 Century

22-17724

The twins, Ned and Laurie, were so much alike that even their most intimate friends could hardly tell them apart. When they entered Hillman's School they caused quite a diversion with their quaint ways, and soon became very popular. Ned elected to play football, and altho he was not the great hero the boys took him for, he managed to make a fair showing. When the great game of the year came the Turner twins saved the day. A hunt for hidden treasure and its successful ending adds zest to this story for boys and girls of from twelve to sixteen.

BARBOUR, RALPH H:—Continued

"Barbour doesn't take the time to give us essence of boy, as does Tarkington, but he offers the real thing, single strength, in a book that is never dull."

+ Lit R p208 N 11 '22 110w

"It's a very satisfactory Barbour story, and what more does the Barbour constituency want?"

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 15 '22 160w

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY (RICHARD STILLMAN POWELL, pseud.), and HOLT, H. P. Over two seas. 265p $1.75 Appleton

22-4436

The boys, Peter and Dick, sail away from Boston to Havana on the "Viking," with Dick's father as captain. After a collision in a bad fog and Dick has fallen overboard and been rescued from the briny deep, they reach Cuba. From there the "Viking" is ordered to China and the boys are allowed to accompany her. Then their real thrills begin. There is the terror of a terrific storm in the Pacific when the sea rolled mountains high, then they are all forced to abandon the "Viking" because of fire. They land on one of the Solomon Islands in the South Seas, and the boys' efforts to rescue Dick's father and Chips, the ship's carpenter from Banhua, chief of a savage tribe, is indeed a truly exciting adventure.

BARING, MAURICE. Overlooked. 200p $1.75 Houghton [6s Heinemann]

22-27462

"Mr. Baring's technique is unique. His story, which is of an involved and delayed love affair, with endless cross-purposes, is told, first, as it appears to a blind man staying at a French watering-place, who is the partial confidant of several actors and spectators of the drama; next, as it is fashioned into a published story by an able but obtuse novelist, one of the spectators, whose immediate comments have already been given in the first part; and lastly, as elucidated in conversation between the blind man and a psychological expert, with the additional light of one or two further facts. And all within two hundred pages of large print! And then we are not given any clear solution!"—Sat R

Booklist 19:121 Ja '23

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '23 850w

"Here is a book that can boast originality. It is clearly and tersely written, and the story, for lack of superfluous embellishments, stands out in dramatic lucidity."

+ Int Bk R p60 Ja '23 520w

Reviewed by Kenneth Fuesle

Lit R p315 D 16 '22 640w

"Is Mr. Baring's whole novel a satire on the psychological novelist? Even its involved technique, while it is curious and interesting in itself, suggests just the bare possibility of satirical intention." Forrest Reid

Nation and Ath 32:127 O 21 '22 260w

"As a novel, it hardly exists; as a sample of Mr. Baring it is, of course, auriferous." Rebecca West

New Statesman 19:630 S 30 '22 900w

"The story is very slight indeed, but it is ingenious in method and subtle in development and, although the interest wears a little thin sometimes, it is, on the whole, written with such cleverness and distinction that it holds the reader's attention. It is a study of character so delicate and so complicated that it reminds one of the machinery of a tiny watch. Mr. Baring's American readers will be glad to meet him again in this new phase of his many-sided literary talent."

+ N Y Times p27 N 19 '22 640w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p10 N 26 '22 240w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 133:186 Ja 24 '23 120w

"Mr. Baring, with his extraordinary fineness of mind and sympathy, his extreme skill, might, by his implied precept, suggest that we can hear how the tale is told; but his example teaches better." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 134:417 S 16 '22 600w

"The formal idea is ingenious and interesting, and though the medium is a difficult one, it is not by any means an impossible one. As we remarked at the outset, a partial failure by Mr. Baring is very much more enjoyable and interesting than the successes of many other writers."

+ Spec 129:436 S 30 '22 780w

"Why, one asks oneself, with a vague feeling of ingratitude, is Mr. Baring's new novel so disappointing and almost dull? It is written on an unusually ingenious scheme, but his book is so unsatisfactory. It is not a novel."

—The Times [London] Lit Sup p583 S 14 '22 880w

BARING, MAURICE. Puppet show of memory. 457p $5 Little [21s Heinemann]

B or 92

22-18150

"Maurice Baring's life has strayed pleasantly between the following foci: Eton, Germany, Cambridge, Paris, Copenhagen, Rome, Manchuria, Petrograd, Constantinople. His 'Puppet Show' consists of the extraordinary odds and ends of human personality which he has stored away in the museum of his quaint and much amused mind. He has the facility of setting down the trivial in literature with charm and the unimportant in circumstance with the pomp of well-chosen prose. He has recorded much about British institutions, which does not escape to the public elsewhere. As a 'spoilt' diplomatist he shows up the comedy of British diplomacy, while his intimate details of home life and childish reminiscence would make the notebook of a Meredithian novel. What he has written is perhaps the nearest thing to the Paston letters, if one can imagine those dull but unique records of mediæval family life transmuted by a brilliant cosmopolitan, war correspondent, dramatic critic, traveller and connoisseur of books."—Lit R

Booklist 19:50 N '22

"It is the facile charm with which inconsequential bits are described that in the composite make so vivid and delightful a picture. To all these Mr. Baring brings the touch of a true literary artist. If he uses pathos it is a pathos made doubly poignant by straightforwardness, simplicity and restraint, if he is humorous the humor is never strained but is delicate and illusive. His criticism is discriminating and illuminates the thing criticized instead of exhibiting the critic himself." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 23 '22 1250w

Cleveland p95 D '22

"A most varied and pleasing book of recollections. It belongs to the class of easy and informal autobiography—a kind of book which Englishmen are now writing with more and more success." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:78 Ag 19 '22 220w

"The book is colossally long for Maurice Baring. It is full of stuff and stuffing and often the stuffing is as good as the stuff itself. Mr. Baring's autobiography is literary caviare, something between the diaries of Wilfred Blunt and the letters of Edward Fitzgerald, and to the initiated we say draw near!" Shane Leslie

+ Lit R p867 Ag 12 '22 1850w

"Once we realize the lack of imagination in Mr. Baring, we can enjoy the qualities which he has in such abundance. The book, then, should be read not for any direct light it throws on Mr. Baring's character, but for its inimitable vignettes of a departed Victorian London, its glimpses at the town and country life of a rich Liberal peer, its fine and humorous sketches of a society which we are beginning to learn may have been funnier than ours, but was nobler, more amusing, and, in its way, more cultured."

+ — Nation and Ath 31:326 S 23 '22 1150w

"The book is full of pictures of things he has seen, and some of these are charming. A book in which one can gather handfuls of good stories but the stories which are best of all are those which derive their point from the flowing context, a context of wide, quick sympathy with what is amiable, patient, brave and droll in human nature."

+ New Statesman 19:302 Je 17 '22 1150w

"One of the many charms of the book is that the reader comes so frequently upon observations made by the way, thrust casually into an account of travel or of residence somewhere or of acquaintance with some one, that engage the attention and stimulate thought. One can scarcely open the volume anywhere without seeing at once something beguiling, something that holds the attention and leads one to read on and on, from one subject to another."

+ N Y Times p11 S 3 '22 1950w

Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 60w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:513 N '22

St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

"Those who take it up will not easily put it down. Mr. Baring's pen is felicitous. As an observer he is witty and eloquent without being prejudiced."

+ Sat R 133:552 My 27 '22 640w

Spec 128:753 Je 17 '22 1800w

"In spite of the unity of this book, the early part of it is conspicuously the more interesting, because in the later part Mr. Baring uses again a great deal of material which we have seen before in other books of his. One could wish that he had left what he has already written on Russia to speak for itself and had given us more of his childhood."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p338 My 25 '22 1100w

BARKER, ELSA. Fielding Sargent. 319p $2 Dutton .

22-20879

Altho in novel form the book is practically a treatise on psycho-analysis. Fielding Sargent, having after the death of his wife retired from business, is facing a nervous breakdown. His physician sends him to Dr Sigurd Aubrey, a psycho-analyst. In the course of the treatment, minutely described in its successive stages, the entire life of Sargent from early childhood is laid bare, with the various mental phases thru which he passes on his way to a complete cure and psychological re-education. Dream analysis, as conducted in the form of conversations between the doctor and his pupil, is one of the interesting features of the book, as is also the romance which forms an illustrative asset to the doctor's theories.

"Most of the characters are mysteries to us and to the author as well. In fact the book is really a kind of pseudo-intellectual rummage sale. The Dottie Dimple books would be more stimulating."

— Boston Transcript p5 N 4 '22 350w

"The book will entertain the average reader in the manner of a detective story. It propounds and solves a ready-made mystery rather skillfully. At the same time it presents very vividly the methods and doctrines of psycho-analysis."

Lit R p272 D 2 '22 160w

"It has no plot excepting the sustained interest of the gradual exposition of the protagonist's complexes by means of the doctor's questions and deductions. But this interest is so cleverly wrought and developed that it is difficult to perceive how even the general reader, who is not particularly interested in psycho-analysis, will not relish it."

+ N Y Times p21 O 15 '22 580w.

"There is not a vague word in the book, not an idea other than lucid. It is the best introduction to psycho-analysis of which I have any knowledge, certainly much more satisfactory for the general reader than the ponderous tomes of the professors." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 29 '22 1050w

BARKER, HARLEY GRANVILLE. Exemplary theatre. 270p $2 Little [3s Chatto & W.]

792 Theater

22-11544

Mr Granville-Barker's thesis is that the theater should be nationally recognized as a branch of public education and the drama be made a common factor in community education. The first chapter takes the form of a dialog between a man of the theater and a minister of education in which the arguments for and against the educational uses of the dramatic method are presented. Then the author proceeds to develop his plan of a school with a theater as its center to be used both for the production of plays and as a means of education. Finally, he outlines the method of producing a play and some difficulties in the way of modern producing.

Booklist 18:354 Jl '22

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 12 '22 1500w

Cleveland p68 S '22

"Some of the details of Mr. Barker's ideal will appear undesirable to certain of his readers. There is something too much, perhaps, of emphasis on the need of racial expressiveness. But the book does not pretend to offer a complete system, nor does it demand absolute acceptance even as far as it goes. The special arrangements of Mr. Barker's own exemplary theatre will, however, from the very authority of their source interest many. It were a pity if his sound and pithy passages upon a host of related topics, do not interest still more." R. A. Preston

+ — Freeman 6:333 D 13 '22 $20w

"One of the most serious-minded, carefully wrought books on the theatre." R: Burton

+ Lit R p755 Je 24 '22 700w

"The critic who has read it as much as once through will be found crossing the lobbies on first nights with an invigorated step. It will have given him consolation, guidance, and—yes, one may even say a gleam of hope. [Mr Barker's] reformed theater is here, between these covers, minutely mapped out. It is probably not a perfect scheme, but nobody can study it without realizing its close practicality." D. L. M.

+ Nation and Ath 31:130 Ap 22 '22 1650w

"The book is hard reading because of its lack of outline and definite paragraph by paragraph, and even sentence by sentence sometimes. There is an agreeable intention of informality; but it is without the pungent beat, the tap, the blow, the accent, the stress that direct and clearly-felt talk might give. But in spite of all this Mr. Barker's book is worth the running to read. Its point of view is sound and based on good experience. It bears the impress of fine associations with men and intellects of distinction and importance. And it reminds us yet once again of the neglect and significance of the theatre as a social institution." S. Y.

— + New Repub 31:281 Ag 2 '22 410w

"Lacks the simplicity of style, the clarity of exposition and the finality of conclusions which are essential to propaganda. From the main course of his argument Mr. Barker is constantly diverted to explore fascinating but bewildering sidetracks; essential outlines of his scheme he is content to leave vague, while he fills in details that might well have been omitted and, still more fatally, the desire to represent his scheme as a serious one often impels him to make it unattractive." F. B.

— + New Statesman 19:70 Ap 22 '22 1900w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

Outlook 132:619 D 6 '22 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:512 N '22

Pratt p24 autumn '22

BARKER, HARLEY GRANVILLE--Continued

"The interest of the book lies chiefly in the many questions about the theater which it suggests, without attempting a categorical reply. It seems generally the author's aim not to dogmatize but to open up profitable lines of thought on many controverted questions."

+ R of Rs 67:111 Ja '23 110w

St Louis 20:247 O '22

"About two aspects of the present book, there can be no sort of doubt. First place, it is very ill-written; and second place, scattered about its pages are some of the most informing obiter dicta about the theatre in all its aspects that have ever been set down in black-and-white. These casual remarks, dropped by the way, make the book one which nobody connected with the theatre can afford to miss."

+ Spec 128:432 Ap 8 '22 1000w

"Granville-Barker is not only an idealist, he is a playwright. He has encountered the difficulties with which he deals. Yet, as a solution to those difficulties he offers a discussion rather than a fulfillment. He is thinking on paper, and occasionally a curiously mixed rhetoric hinders the free passage of his thoughts from the printed page to the mind of the reader."

Springf'd Republican p6 J1 17 '22 390w

"Mr. Granville-Barker's plea for a renovated theatre does not make easy reading. It would take many readings of this book to elicit all the author's meanings, to pick up the thoughts dropped between the lines, and to sort the gains out into their logical pigeon-holes. Meanwhile the judgment of a reader laying aside the book for a while with at least some notion of its main drift is likely, despite all perplexities, to be: 'This, after all, is the common-sense of the matter.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p177 Mr 23 '22 4000w

"A highly suggestive book, not always easy or satisfactory reading and often lacking in emphasis and direct pattern of statement and idea, but unfailingly sincere and long pondered."

+ Theatre Arts M 6:346 O '22 330w

Wis Lib Bul 18:251 N '22

BARNETT, ADA. Man on the other side. 277p $1.75 Dodd [7s 6d Allen & U.]

22-7409

The man on the other side was Dick Thorpe, an English soldier killed in the war, whose loving spirit yet lived and made itself felt at Thorpe Farm which had been his house and which, after his death, came into the possession of Ruth Seer. Ruth had not known Dick, but she listened to the spirit of the place and it guided her in all she did. Thorpe Farm remained a place of rest, sanctuary for young and old and especially for children and animals. But at times another spirit haunted the place, that of a German, a friend of Dick's who had also been killed in the war but whose soul had passed out in hate. Both spirits battled for the possession of Violet North, the girl whom both had loved, and who was becoming insane in the conflict. By her faculty of seeing thru the veil and laying hold on the good, Ruth Seer was able to nurse Violet back to sanity and to exorcise the evil spirit.

Booklist 18:363 J1 '22

"If one reads it, one must accept the castor oil of spiritism, but it is only fair to say that the milk in which it is administered is of admirable quality."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '22 340w

"In spite of her metaphysical subtleties, Miss Barnett can handle concrete matters pleasantly enough. Altogether the book contains much fine feeling, delicate perception, and tender sentiment, operating for the most part with delightful independence of reality."

+ Lit R p643 My 6 '22 260w

"One cannot but regret that Miss Barnett has chosen a theme which must of necessity limit her audience. Such sensitiveness to beauty and fineness of feeling deserve a wide range of readers. Even with a difficult subject, she has created a wholesome, fresh and sane atmosphere."

+ N Y Times p20 Je 4 '22 380w

Wis Lib Bul 18:253 N '22

BARNES, THOMAS ALEXANDER. Wonderland of the Eastern Congo; with an introd. by Sir H. H. Johnston. 288p il $9 (31s 6d) Putnam 916.7 Kongo, Belgian—Description and travel. Natural history—Africa

(Eng ed 22-20667)

"The Eastern Congo is the region of the great volcanoes, the mountains of the Moon, the land of the man-eating Wambusas, of the pigmies, of the giant gorillas, the tailless; of the elephant, and the okapi. Adventures which would raise the hair of ordinary mortals were mere domestic occupations for Mr. and Mrs. Barnes. Wandering about in almost undiscovered jungle, drinking the water of rivers used by the Barundi for burial grounds, lunching calmly in territory so infested by the mountain lion that it is possible to take pictures of him, travelling for hundreds of miles attended only by Safari porters of known man-eating propensities, and climbing smoking volcanoes through fire and snow and ice—these are but everyday occurrences. . . Nor is it all adventure. The student of customs will revel in specific accounts and practices, even pictures, of the savage rites of jungle chiefs."—Boston Transcript

"The spell of the primeval forest, the true breath from the veldt, fills Mr. Barnes' big book. There is something about these pictures, some natural character as of the author's just happening upon them, which make all these amazements of a practically unexplored country very real. . . It never occurs to Mr. and Mrs. Barnes that their own performances are heroic. It is this very naive intrepidity which makes the charm of the volume." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 29 '22 680w

"One's cheerfulness rises in the Congo forest under the influence of this energetic and light-hearted entomologist; and now and then, by odd chance, he does reveal vistas of uncanny form and unearthly radiance, as though he were a figure by Jules Verne lost in another planet. You feel you must go to Lake Kiwu, if it is but to die there." H. M. T.

+ Nation and Ath 31:595 J1 29 '22 700w

New Statesman 19:692 S 30 '22 850w

Reviewed by I: Anderson

N Y Times p10 O 29 '22 220w

"The pages are full of good stories and thrilling adventures. The book will be a joy to boys and girls and to all those who have not completely forgotten romance and adventure. The scientific inquirer will find a great deal to interest him in the appendix and tables, which give a summary of the new insects and rare beasts that the expedition brought to light."

+ Spec 129:275 Ag 26 '22 860w

"The expedition was undertaken to obtain entomological specimens. There is not, however, much about insects in it that is specific. The insects will possibly be the subject of a technical work; this book is written for the general reader, and describes things that will interest him in a way that he can understand."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p501 Ag 3 '22 2050w

BARNUM, MADALENE DEMAREST. School plays for all occasions. 186p $1.25 Barse & Hopkins

812 School plays

22-8072

The author, who is a teacher in the Brooklyn schools, has prepared a collection of short plays which can be presented by children. There is a play for each of the following holidays: Labor day, Columbus's birthday, Thanksgiving, Christmas, Lincoln's birthday, Washington's birthday, May day, Arbor day, Peace day, Memorial day and graduation day. Directions for costumes and properties are given at the end of each play.

Booklist 19:23 O '22
Cleveland p67 S '22

"These little plays, by their homely, jolly quality, suggest that newest kind of plays for children in schools, the kind that the children themselves work out with teacher's help in setting and costumes. It is too bad that the last plays in the book, for commemoration day, graduation day, etc., became rhetorical, as these days are apt to do."

+ — Lit R p156 O 28 '22 140w
St Louis 21:19 Ja '23
Spring'd Republican p7a O 1 '22 60w
Wis Lib Bul 18:216 O '22

BAROJA Y NESSI, PIO. The quest; tr. from the Spanish by Isaac Goldberg. 289p $2.50 Knopf

22-21802

The book is the first of a trilogy to be followed by "Weeds" and "Red dawn." Manuel, a country boy, is sent to Madrid where his mother is a servant in a lodging house, and is apprenticed to a cobbler. Here he makes the acquaintance of the underworld and his experiences are contained in a succession of pictures of Madrid slums and low life. For the most part Manuel leads a vagrant life, consorting with thieves, gamblers and beggars, his brief periods of employment being almost equally full of misery and hardship. Again and again he is tempted to throw in his lot entirely with his low-lived companions, but something clean and wholesome within him always shrinks from the contact. At last he comes to understand that he belongs not to the night-owls—with their pleasure, their vice and the night, but to the working folk—with their labor, their fatigue and the sun.

Booklist 19:158 F '23

"It is a vivid, haunting, acid picture."
Int Bk R p54 Ja '23 2350w

Reviewed by Drake de Kay
Lit R p335 D 23 '22 350w

"Baroja paints the scenes in vivid colors but with absolute detachment, offering no comment and drawing no moral. There is a touch of Dickens, grown sardonic, in the humor of such scenes as the boarding-house in the opening chapter of 'The Quest.' Ernest Boyd
Nation 115:719 D 27 '22 1700w

"A tale told in essentials only, and these as elemental as grit. . . A sinister tale, perhaps, but not a sordid one. Its terms are too true for that, and it is sinister only in the sense that all such elemental living is sinister. For Baroja is too much of an artist to falsify his matter in any interest. . . His art—so firmly and truly grounded—attains the vitality and beauty of hard things, things that endure." Whitney Wells

+ New Repub 33:76 D 13 '22 400w
N Y Times p23 N 5 '22 540w

BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, bart. Courage. 49p 60c Scribner [2s Hodder & S.] 179 Courage

22-14220

In his rectorial address delivered at St Andrew's University, Sir James M. Barrie calls upon youth to use courage in the great fight that seems to be coming between them and their elders, to demand their rightful share in the shaping of the new world and to demand it courageously. He goes on to offer some advice about how to exercise that courage.

Booklist 19:5 O '22
Bookm 56:356 N '22 100w
Cleveland p72 S '22

"Whimsical, deeply humorous, packed with a philosophy which is not out of date, because it does not urge us to break up the old machine and do nothing, at all. One of the fine essays of our decade."

+ Lit R p900 Ag 26 '22 270w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:467 N '22
Pratt p7 autumn '22
St Louis 20:235 O '22

BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, bart. Dear Brutus; a comedy in three acts. 140p $1 Scribner [5s Hodder & S.]

822 22-23092

A fantastic comedy built about a group of people who, having made a mess of their lives, are given a second chance, but do no better with it. All except Dearth, the artist, whose faith had been destroyed by a selfish wife, and who finds in the magic wood a dream daughter on whom to lavish the affection of his generous and loving nature.

Booklist 19:114 Ja '23

"'Dear Brutus,' while not an example of Barrie's very finest work, is a charming and haunting play."

+ — Lit R p270 D 2 '22 70w

Reviewed by Charlotte Dean
N Y Tribune p10 N 19 '22 720w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p809 D 7 '22 420w

Wis Lib Bul 19:22 Ja '23

BARRINGTON, E., pseud. "The ladies!" a shining constellation of wit and beauty. 268p il $3.50 Atlantic monthly

22-26882

In a novel way some famous women of wit and beauty are re-created in the words and manner they might themselves have used in telling their own stories. The method is more imaginative than historically correct but it is very successful in reviving the grace and romance which must always belong to these women. Thus "The diurnal of Mrs Elizabeth Pepys" is the diary with which she might have countered her husband's, if she had read it. "The mystery of Stella" imagines a dramatic meeting between Stella and Vanessa. "The golden vanity" is the story of the beautiful Gunning sisters revealed in imaginary home scenes and a managing mother's maneuvers to secure rich husbands for her daughters. Other stories are "My Lady Mary," "The Walpole beauty," "A bluestocking at court," "The Darcys of Rosing."

"A charming and admirably made book which, although it neither proves anything nor tries to prove anything, does offer us in each case a perfectly satisfactory substitute for the truth. Always in character with time, place, and person, always vivid and sympathetic." C. N. Greenough

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '22 640w

Booklist 19:44 N '22

"Has, in turn, the caustic wit of Lady Mary Montagu, the cold sparkle of Fanny Burney, and the smothered fire of Stella."

+ Bookm 56:227 O '22 140w

"Poignantly appealing are these portrait-sketches. Yet so delicately wrought that only their reading can make clear their unique charm." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 30 '22 650w

"It must be said that Mrs. Barrington has succeeded admirably both in giving an air of veracity to her inventions and in piquing the reader's curiosity. A pleasant book indeed." P. E. M.

+ Ind 109:314 N 25 '22 320w

New Statesman 20:supxx D 2 '22 40w

BARRINGTON, E. I.—Continued

"As a piece of book making the volume is particularly successful, and there actually seem to be no misprints, marvel of marvels these days." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p5 N 19 '22 1050w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23

Springf'd Republican p10 O 4 '22 430w

"It is altogether an enterprising literary venture, carried out with a good deal of gusto."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p766 N 23 '22 140w

Wis Lib Bul 18:252 N '22

BARRINGTON, EMILIE ISABEL (WILSON)
2 (MRS RUSSELL BARRINGTON). St Luke of the nineteenth century. 486p $2 (7s 6d)
Longmans

The subtitle introduces the book as "an old-fashioned story about a few gentlemen and gentlewomen, and some others, who lived during the reign of Queen Victoria." It tells, in a quiet way, of the personal problems and the loves that confronted the various members of the family of Sir Harry Lavaine and their friends, and is liberally interspersed with mellowed reflections on the conduct of life, on art, literature and religion. The whole pattern of the story conforms to the same quiet gentility. Even Sir Harry's second marriage to a beautiful young woman of doubtful widowhood finds a comfortable solution and Luke Faulkner, the painter and the St Luke of the story, runs true to his saintly character by renouncing his beloved Elaine to the poet Ernest Reodon.

"The narrative proceeds by a process of interminable disquisition; and even when melodrama intrudes it is always in the most discreet manner and without undue impoliteness. It is all about something, just what it is often difficult to determine, amid a wilderness of silhouettes and expositions."

— Lit R p325 D 16 '22 190w

"It is very old-fashioned indeed, and perfectly proper and decorous. The 'gentlemen and gentlewomen' in it belong to the best families of Victorian England, and they never permit themselves to say or do anything that would shock the most delicate sensibilities."

— N Y Times p2 D 10 '22 330w

"An almost fascinating ineptitude marks this volume throughout. One reads on, with 'dull obstinacy,' determined to see if it is possible for the author to keep her pristine ignorance of all the rules of fiction writing to the end of 500 pages. She does it, apparently without an effort." Isabel Paterson

— N Y Tribune p23 Ja 21 '23 360w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p686 O 26 '22 450w

BARTLETT, FREDERICK ORIN (WILLIAM CARLETON, pseud.). Big laurel. 305p $2
Houghton

22-19552

The scene of the story is laid in the Blue Ridge mountains of North Carolina. Bud Childers, the primitive mountaineer, falls in love with Roxie Kester, who lives in the valley. She is a little afraid of Childers whose reputation for desperate doings is well known, and tries to avoid him. At the Howe's summer bungalow, where Roxie is employed, there comes to stay a certain Captain Allston, who arouses Childers' jealousy. Allston and Roxie do like each other but Wilmer Howe, Allston's hostess, is also in love with him. After a good many fights and pistol shots the couples pair off happily, Roxie with the man of the mountains, and Allston with Wilmer.

"The pattern of the novel is no uncommon one, but the ability lies in the telling."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 28 '22 330w

"The descriptions in the book are as admirably done as the action is swift and dramatic."

+ Lit R p162 O 28 '22 220w

"It is a melodramatic plot and one that promises quick action and plenty of thrills. That things do not move quite so rapidly as the reader might like is due to the author's unfortunate habit of philosophizing about the emotions of his characters. As it is, the author has come perilously near to spoiling a very good story."

+ — N Y Times p14 O 22 '22 450w

BARTLETT, HENRIETTA COLLINS, ed. Mr William Shakespeare, original and early editions of his quartos and folios; his source books and those containing contemporary notices. 217p $3 Yale univ. press [12s 6d Milford]

822.33 Shakespeare, William—Bibliography
22-8832

"This book is based on an exhibition held in the New York Public Library in 1916, a loan collection unequalled of its kind. Miss Bartlett's catalogue of this in 1917 attracted a good deal of attention, and since then she has filled in gaps and given complete descriptions of the important books before 1640 necessary for a study of Shakespeare, adding literary and historical notes. She includes spurious works, adaptations of plays of which the ordinary Shakespearean knows little, books which Shakespeare probably read or used, and books containing allusions to him."—New Statesman

"To the ever widening circle of Shakespearean students and collectors Miss Bartlett's work will prove invaluable. The exactitude and compression of her information, the simple statement of facts, and the solid workmanship of the whole betoken not only prolonged experience in the compilation of data, but a stern adherence to the purpose of her work, which precludes the introduction of controversial, theoretical, or extraneous matter." B. da C. Greene

+ Lit R p30 S 16 '22 1550w

"All lovers of Shakespeare, competent or incompetent alike to tackle his text should be glad to have on their shelves Miss Bartlett's neat and precise descriptions." V. R.

+ New Statesman 19:422 Jl 15 '22 850w

"This catalogue must prove indispensable to students and collectors."

+ N Y Times p2 Jl 9 '22 1650w

Pratt p26 autumn '22

Sat R 134:178 Jl 29 '22 1450w

"Miss Bartlett's compact and scholarly book will be of the greatest value to students."

+ Spec 129:86 Jl 15 '22 480w

"Even the exhibition catalogue, which recorded, and with fewer notes, only the books actually shown at the New York Public Library, was the most compact and stimulating guide to the really important Shakespeareana that had been attempted. In this expanded form almost all the bibliographical information which students and lovers of Shakespeare can desire is brought together."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p389 Je 15 '22 1050w

BARTON, WILLIAM ELEAZAR. Life of Clara Barton. 2v 348:388p il $10 Houghton

B or 92 Barton, Clara. Red cross. United States—History—Civil war—Hospitals, charities, etc. 22-4689

The authorized biography of Clara Barton, 1821-1912, who founded the American Red cross society and who was its president from its beginnings until 1904. The book is a full account of her long life and is based upon her journals, an unpublished autobiographical account of her girlhood and teaching experiences, and a vast amount of material including letters, clippings, official and personal records which Miss Barton had collected thruout her life. The emphasis of the book is naturally placed upon her work with the Red cross in war and peace. Many of her letters are quoted in full as well as other documentary material. Portraits and other illustrations. Index.

Am Hist R 28:140 O '22 800w

Booklist 18:233 Ap '22

"A book for the orthodox-minded that the rebellious should acknowledge. . . The adulation of the biographer is not offensive enough to spoil the reader's admiration for the subject of the biography."

— + Bookm 55:204 Ap '22 70w

"The biography of Clara Barton is a contribution to the social, political and personal history of the country." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 15 '22 1600w

Cleveland p35 D '22

Lit R p14 S 9 '22 520w

"Although a relative, the biographer has not yielded to the temptation to write merely an indiscriminating, laudatory account of his subject. He has analyzed her character with clear insight, and, while his touch is always gentle and human, he has not spared her faults of character or her mistakes of judgment. He has evidently tried, and he has succeeded as well as most biographers and far better than some of them, to write an accurate, judicial and sincere account of Miss Barton's character and career." E. F. Edgett

+ N Y Times p18 Mr 5 '22 2050w

Outlook 130:473 Mr 22 '22 60w

Pratt p35 summer '22

R of Rs 65:557 My '22 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:132 My '22

BASS, JOHN FOSTER, and MOULTON, HAROLD GLENN. America and the balance sheet of Europe. 361p il $3 Ronald 330.94 Europe—Economic conditions

21-21684

"The best statement of the present business conditions of Europe that is available for American readers is to be found in this book. Mr. Bass is the well-known correspondent who has been studying conditions at first hand in all countries for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Moulton is a professor of political economy and a financial authority, and both writers are associated with the University of Chicago. Both have studied and observed economic conditions in Europe very exhaustively since the war."—R of Rs

"Bass and Moulton have written a masterpiece of economic observation and analysis. Their work must be considered one of the most important books of the year. They deserve credit for their courage and vision in emphasizing certain very unpleasant economic facts and pressing them upon the attention of the American public. For as they point out, America cannot cut loose from Europe." (Quoted from the N Y Tribune)

+ Administration 3:514 Ap '22 1250w

"Not only has there been a most excellent selection of material, discussed in very brief compass but, what is of equal importance, the volume is written in an interesting manner." W. F. Gephart

+ Am Econ R 12:479 S '22 720w

"A careful, dispassionate analysis of the economic status of Europe in the year 1921, showing the significance of depreciated exchanges and the tendencies toward economic and social disintegration." E. S. Bogardus

+ Am J Soc 28:366 N '22 250w

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 29 '22 800w

"A useful and satisfactory book." R. G.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p2 J1 '22 1150w

Reviewed by C. A. Beard

Freeman 5:93 Ap 5 '22 1550w

Reviewed by Clive Day

Lit R p485 Mr 11 '22 440w

"The authors have rendered an incalculable service by analyzing in a short readable book—which any layman can understand—the factors which are at the root of the world's economic upheaval and the measures which are indispensable to correct it." Maurice Wertheim

+ Nation 114:127 F 1 '22 860w

"I have seen no study of post-war conditions in Europe that approaches this book in its mastery of principle and its effective treatment of the essential facts." Alvin Johnson

+ New Repub 29:132 D 28 '21 1350w

Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 310w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:112 Mr '22

"The book is written with admirable clearness and great force of style. Indeed, a little less warmth and positiveness of assertion might have added to its strength. It is well arranged and excellently printed. There are a number of small errors that should have been caught in the proof-reading but they are not of serious consequence. No economic student would cavil at either the authors' analysis or their remedies." E. E. Agger

+ Pol Sci Q 37:519 S '22 600w

Pratt p10 Ap '22

"There is no current work that seems to us as valuable and as timely in its treatment of fundamental conditions as this compact volume, based as it is upon clear thinking and profound weighing of concrete facts."

+ R of Rs 65:220 F '22 450w

"Of the diagnoses of the European situation that have appeared since Keynes's first book, none will find a more permanent place. It is a quiet, powerful estimate which shatters current illusions not by the persuasiveness of its rhetoric but by the inescapable logic of the facts."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 My 8 '22 1100w

"The trouble with this book is that the subject is too big for its authors. Much valuable and praiseworthy cogitation and expression has not produced an important book." R: W. Hale

— Survey 48:90 Ap 15 '22 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p293 My 4 '22 150w

"An excellent, complete, and elementary treatise. Though somewhat didactic, it will be most useful to those who desire a thorough understanding, and to whom foreign exchange, business cycles, inconvertible paper, and balancing of budgets are so much Greek. In fact, it would make a splendid text-book upon which to base a civil service examination for Senators and Congressmen before they were permitted to tamper with the settlement of these questions." C. R. Noyes

+ Yale R n s 11:864 J1 '22 480w

BASSETT, WILLIAM RUPERT, and HEYWOOD, JOHNSON. Production engineering and cost keeping for machine shops. 311p $3.50 McGraw

658.7 Cost accounting. Machine shops

22-14130

"The principles and practice here recommended have been developed in the course of years of actual installation of improved production, engineering and cost keeping systems in metal trades plants. They have thus been well tested and proved. In the first part of the book, production planning methods are described as concretely as possible. The proposals of this portion of the text should apply with slight modification in the majority of shops. This is also true of the part of the book dealing with cost keeping methods. Those here described should fit fully ninety per cent of American machine shops."—Preface

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:568 D '22

BASSETT, SARA WARE. Granite and clay. 305p $1.90 Little

22-15977

"In the opening chapter the reader is introduced to a pretty little war romance—a love episode between a young man of the Cape Cod fishing hamlet where some of the scenes are laid and the lovely granddaughter of Old Cap'n Allen. He is going to the war, and she sees him as a hero, and so they believe they love

BASSETT, SARA WARE—Continued
each other and exchange their promises. News comes that he has been killed, and Penelope, the heroine, sinks into a state of lassitude that is about to become chronic invalidism when the war ends and the young man returns, made more alive than ever by his experiences. But they have already fallen out of love and their ways sharply diverge, the young man going off to Boston to try his fortune there and the girl rousing to life and determining to find some way to put upon paper the fancies that fill her brain. She, too, goes to Boston after a little, hoping there to win fame and fortune with her pen. What happens to her there, what complications arise, what misunderstandings create much trouble, it takes more than half of the story to tell."—N Y Times

"The whole is ingenious and interesting, perhaps, too, ingenuous and conventionalized."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 S 16 '22 170w

"Does not wear the look of real life, but makes a pleasing enough romance for people who like romance of that sort."

+ — N Y Times p23 Ag 27 '22 600w

Pratt p35 autumn '22

"A simple direct piece of work with enough suspense to hold attention—a love story with an unexpected ending—with a touch of humor, in a setting that is true to things as they are in Massachusetts."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 S 14 '22 180w
Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

BASSETT, SARA WARE. Ted and the telephone. (Invention ser.) 223p il $1.65 Little 22-9418

"Ted Turner, a boy of fourteen, finds vacation work on the estate of the mill owner of the village. He makes friends with the invalid son and shares his studies and many privileges. History and development of the telephone is introduced through the boys' activities in installing one. But Ted is a regular Alger hero and there are many exciting adventures, although emphasis is put on his industry, good will and adaptability."—Booklist

"Interesting but exaggerated."

+ — Booklist 18:336 Je '22

"Miss Bassett describes the kind of sturdy boy we like to picture as Presidential timber. If he sounds a trifle too flawless, with a flavor of commonplace perfection, how much better fitted is the Ted of Miss Bassett's creation to uphold standards of conduct which many immortal characters in fiction have flouted and despised!"

+ — Boston Transcript p5 My 3 '22 120w

"It is a model for a book of this class, succeeding in interesting and amusing while providing a more or less unconscious course in the study of what has become a great business."

+ Lit R p780 J1 1 '22 100w

BATSON, REGINALD GEORGE CYRIL, and HYDE, JAMES HENRY. Mechanical testing. 2v v 1. Testing of materials of construction. (Directly-useful (D.U.) technical ser.) 413p il $9 Dutton [21s Chapman & H.]

620.1 Testing. Building materials

(Eng ed 22-18543)

"Volume 1 deals with fundamental principles and describes various machines and test methods, with chapters on ordinary commercial testing, and the testing of such materials as hard drawn wire, cast iron, timber, stone, brick, concrete, road materials, limes and cements. There is also a chapter on autographic recording instruments. Reading references at the end of each chapter. Authors are associated with the British National Physical Laboratory."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

"The book is first class throughout and to be highly recommended."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:33 J1 '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p126 F 23 '22 40w

BAUDOUIN, CHARLES. Studies in psychoanalysis; an account of twenty-seven concrete cases preceded by a theoretical exposition; comprising lectures delivered in Geneva at the Jean Jacques Rousseau institute and at the faculty of letters in the university; tr. from the French by Eden and Cedar Paul. 508p $4 Dodd [12s 6d Allen & U.]

130 Psychoanalysis

22-24266

The translators define in their preface the present status of psychoanalysis and the author's special contribution to it, which appears to be his insistence on "an unceasing collaboration between autosuggestion and psychoanalysis" and his stressing of the normal rather than the pathological. In his view analysis is a method of education or re-education rather than a curative method and its mission is to point the way to the transformation of suppressed instincts. The author's path of approach is the inductive method. Much space in the book is therefore given to case records, the conclusions from which are represented in his theoretical expositions. Glossary, bibliography, index.

Booklist 19:142 F '23

New Statesman 20:244 N 25 '22 980w

"Those who know nothing about psychoanalysis will probably find that reading the concrete cases here described gives them a better idea of its aims and methods than they would derive from any theoretical disquisition."

Sat R 134:926 D 16 '22 250w

"The latter part of Professor Baudouin's volume contains twenty-seven specific case-histories, which give a practical and human interest to a very suggestive book."

+ Spec 130:64 Ja 13 '23 720w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p691 O 26 '22 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p740 N 16 '22 700w

BAUM, PAULL FRANKLIN. Principles of English versification. 215p $2 Harvard univ. press [10s 6d Milford]

426.2 English language—Versification

(Eng ed 22-20127)

"A clear and not too technical account of the rhythms of prose and of poetry, with a discussion of some of the finer variations in the music of verse, at the end. The comments on the vexed question of free verse are sane and worth noting. [The book] shows us the underlying principles whereon the beauty of poetry is built."—Spring'd Republican

"The serious student of the art of versification will find the book of immense but highly mechanical value."

+ Bookm 56:772 F '23 170w

"I know no book on its subject that I can so confidently recommend to lovers of poetry, be they prosodists or not, for it combines two qualities rarely found together in such books—esthetic appreciation and technical knowledge." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p2 D 24 '22 3000w

"Mr. Baum is a safe and conservative guide, not over-anxious for rigid accuracy of rule, but content to give their proper value to the old-fashioned qualities of music and fancy. His volume is to be recommended both for soundness of judgment and refinement of taste."

+ Sat R 134:888 D 9 '22 450w

"The reader of poetry as well as the maker of verses (whether poet or amateur) cannot fail to benefit by what Mr Baum has to say, and his rather unusual illustrative extracts make the pages the more readable and attractive to all."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 O 30 '22 450w

"Contains a good deal of careful work and copious illustrative quotations drawn from many sources."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p766 N 23 '22 70w

BAYLISS, MRS CLARA (KERN). Treasury of Eskimo tales. 135p il 75c Crowell

22-16155

A collection of Eskimo stories and folklore, told for children. In it are given the Eskimo versions of the story of the flood, the first man and woman, why the moon waxes and wanes, the origin of the winds, and many stories of magic. The author has chosen her material from ethnological reports. The stories are divided into two groups: Central Eskimo tales; Bering Strait tales.

Lit R p210 N 11 '22 110w

Springf'd Republican p12 D 12 '22 60w

BEACH, JOSEPH WARREN. Technique of Thomas Hardy. 255p $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press

823 Hardy, Thomas 22-18800

A study of Hardy from a new viewpoint, that of structure. The author follows the evolution of Hardy's art—his early preoccupation with plot, his large use of irony, the setting of his novels and their growth in dramatic structure. Then follows an examination of the period in the novelist's work which marked a distinct falling off in power and beauty and finally, of his period of artistic realization, when artifice gave way to art.

Booklist 19:73 D '22

"Though a bit heavily handed, this study is of definite worth both to students and to those writers, always among us, who really profit by the example of a great writer's ups and downs."

+ — Bookm 56:774 F '23 120w

"In the art of synopsis, Mr. Beach is fortunately an adept, his summaries of the plots of the novels are complete, the reader of Hardy having little fault to find with his work in this respect. But as a critic he is sadly wanting."

E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 O 18 '22 1050w

"The lovers of Hardy will welcome this latest contribution to the better understanding of his art. But not without reservations. For erudite and perspicacious though this study is, it is not free from certain wrongly conceived critical notions."

+ — Lit R p356 Ja 13 '23 550w

"In the choice of his title Mr. Beach has been unfair to his book. For 'technique' is a limited word, meaning method, manner, literary device, and Mr. Beach's study goes deep into Hardy's substance and spirit. . . Mr. Beach's book is intelligent and searching. It fetches up from the depths of your memory all that is lodged there relating to Thomas Hardy. It sent me a half dozen times to the novels and once to 'The Dynasts.' Criticism which forces you to interrupt it, to lay it down for a moment and turn to the book it discusses, is the real right thing." J. Macy

+ — Nation 115:sup620 D 6 '22 320w

"It is a pity that Mr. Joseph Warren Beach did not choose a title more accurately representing the nature of his useful little Thomas Hardy treatise."

+ — Sat R 135:16 Ja 6 '23 650w

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD. Flowing gold. 377p $2 Harper [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

22-17561

"Calvin Gray is after revenge. His honor has been attacked and his reputation injured by a man who is heavily interested in Texas oil properties. What better revenge could be imagined than to ruin his enemy financially and expose the methods by which his ill-gotten gains were accumulated? It takes some doing, however, especially as Calvin Gray scorns to use dishonorable methods, while his enemy is not hampered by any such scruples. But red blood will tell, and eventually the villain gets what is coming to him."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:121 Ja '23

Cleveland p80 S '22

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Nation 115:416 O 18 '22 160w

N Y Times sec7:6 O 1 '22 520w

"Poor old Ma Briskow is a triumph of sympathetic portraiture. This is the best bit of writing Rex Beach has ever done; not so much technically or stylistically as by the strength of sincerity. . . Great stuff; the whole a notable book of its kind. Nobody would miss it who enjoys what one may call outdoor fiction of the first rank." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p6 S 10 '22 520w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:460 N '22

Springf'd Republican p7a D 31 '22 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p586 S

14 '22 50w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

BEADLE, CHARLES. Witch-doctors. 318p $2 Houghton [7s 6d J. Cape]

22-25807

A story of the black men of Central Africa which draws its interest from the strange life it pictures, with its superstitions, its magic and tabus, rather than from its characters or plot. An American professor of anthropology has penetrated into the heart of the black country, in the interest of research. At a moment of the extremity, when he is at the mercy of the savage natives, he makes a bold stroke, plays on their superstitions by pretending to be a witch-doctor, and not only saves his life but establishes himself as the god of a tribe. Over against the native life is shown something of the pre-war activities of imperial Germany in the territory about Lake Victoria Nyanza and the workings of the German mind as exhibited by Kommandant zu Pfiffer.

Boston Transcript p4 O 7 '22 450w

"A better story and a more intelligible book than 'Batouala.'" E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:167 S 30 '22 110w

"Mr. Beadle remains rather more a psychologist and explorer of folklore and religion than a teller of tales. Not that it is not a good story, for it is; but its construction is awkward, and sometimes even a little confusing to the reader, especially in the earlier chapters. Its movement is jerky and requires a bit of intellectual gymnastics upon the reader's part to keep the proportions right. But the freshness of the material, the occasional excellence of character drawing and the fine scenic effect of the whole atone for minor deficiencies."

+ — Lit R p50 S 23 '22 360w

N Y Times p26 S 17 '22 220w

"Mr. Beadle has fumbled his chance. His book is indubitably interesting, but more as an attempt than an achievement. Though the German officer is a mere stock type and the scientist but a sketch, many of the black men are sharply individualized, and the details of native ceremony and religion are fascinating because they ring true. One feels that the author knows whereof he speaks. What he doesn't quite know is how to write a novel." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p26 D 10 '22 350w

"A book which depends on external unfamiliarities for its romantic effects has a peculiar advantage, but runs a peculiar risk. The externals cannot stand alone. For this reason, Mr. Beadle is not altogether successful in his 'Witch-Doctors.' His characters and his plot are not in themselves impressive enough. The local colour is excellent, but too much is left to it. Still, the book is well worth reading." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 131:321 Ag 26 '22 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p130 Ja 29 '22 210w

BEARD, ANNIE E. S. Our foreign-born citizens; what they have done for America. 288p il $2 Crowell

920 United States—Biography 22-16074

Short sketches of thirty-four men, who, though born in foreign countries, have aided in one way or another in the upbuilding of the United States. Intended for boys and girls, but will be interesting to grown-ups also. Contents:

Louis Agassiz; Michael Anagnos; John James Audubon; Alexander Graham Bell; James Gordon Bennett; Emile Berliner; Karl Bitter; Edward Bok; John Ericsson; Andrew Carnegie; Stephen Girard; George Washington Goethals; Samuel Gompers; Percy Aldridge Grainger; Niels Ebbesen Hansen; Michael Heilprin; James Jerome Hill; John Philip Holland; Samuel Sidney McClure; Ottmar Mergenthaler; Henry Morgenthau; John Muir; Joseph Pulitzer; Michael Pupin; Abraham Mitrie Rihbany; Jacob Riis; Augustus St. Gaudens; Carl Schurz; Edward A. Steiner; Charles Proteus Steinmetz; Alexander Turney Stewart; Nathan Straus; Theodore Thomas; Nikola Tesla.

Booklist 19:90 D '22

Cleveland p83 N '22

"The stories are accurate, well written, and not obtrusively patriotic."

+ Lit R p356 D 30 '22 70w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:599 D '22

St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

"Admirably written biographical sketches. The book is worthy of wide distribution for the information it carries in brief form and for its incentive to our many foreign citizens."

+ Springfield Republican p7a S 10 '22 150w

BEARD, CHARLES AUSTIN. Cross currents in Europe to-day. 278p $2.50 Jones, Marshall

940.5 Europe—Economic conditions. Europe—History. European war—Diplomatic history 22-18525

"Professor Beard considers, from the point of view of a concise political thinker, some of the most important questions that face our after-war world; the future conduct of international relations, the economic problems of Europe and their inevitable American reactions, the Russian revolution, and, finally, 'America and the Balance of Power.' [The book is a] matured reconsideration of the views expressed during a series of lectures delivered at Dartmouth a few months ago."—Lit R

Boston Transcript p6 D 2 '22 400w

"A book wherein lightness of touch and style covers a vast deal of research and original thinking. Perhaps no more objective and dramatic summing up of that hackneyed yet but half revealed subject—war responsibility—has ever been written."

+ Lit R p356 D 30 '22 320w

"Mr. Beard is too intelligent to be taken in by ready-made formulas—radical, liberal, conservative; too sophisticated not to delight in dispelling illusions; yet too humanely sympathetic to fall back into easy cynicism. He is a hard-headed idealist, the sworn foe at once of all that is stupid and selfish and disingenuous, and of all that is soft and comforting and merely well intentioned. Perfectly aware of human folly, he never quite loses faith in human nature. In short, he is a penetrating and informed critic of politics and government. That is what makes this book, and all of Mr. Beard's writings, so eminently stimulating and valuable."—Carl Becker

+ Nation 115:552 N 22 '22 1100w

"In these lectures Dr. Beard gives virtually a complete view of recent European history without cumbersome detail."

+ N Y Times p24 Ja 7 '23 400w

R of Rs 66:559 N '22 70w

BEARD, CHARLES AUSTIN. Economic basis of politics. 99p $1.50 Knopf

320.4 Political science 22-7651

In these four lectures, given at Amherst college in 1916 on the Clark foundation, the author studies the doctrines of some of the political philosophers who have gone before—Aristotle, Machiavelli, Locke, Madison, Webster and Calhoun; the relation between the structure of the state and the economic composition of society; Rousseau's doctrine of political equality; the contradiction between political theory and economic facts.

"These virile essays will interest all students of politics and history." J. A. Woodburn

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:704 N '22 350w

Booklist 19:68 D '22

"The student of economics owes a debt to Mr. Beard for having condensed into the space of just one hundred pages a statement so authoritative, and buttressed by such unexceptionable historical support." H. L. Stuart

+ Freeman 6:45 S 20 '22 850w

"Rarely is more good sense, good scholarship, and good writing packed into a hundred pages than is found in Mr. Beard's latest little book." H. R. Mussey

+ Nation 114:689 Je 7 '22 460w

"As a polemic against vacant political theorizing, this little book is invaluable. But as a scientific concept, Mr. Beard's generalization seems to me to call for rather more thoroughgoing criticism than I can find in this book. For once you grant, as I certainly should, that an intimate connection exists between politics and property, you cannot stop until you have made up your mind what that connection is. And I at least, as an ardent admirer of Mr. Beard's work, have never been able to discover in it a clear conception of how he thinks economics determines politics." Walter Lippmann

+ New Repub 31:282 Ag 2 '22 1350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:330 J1 '22

Pol Sci Q 37:716 D '22 550w

Pratt p9 autumn '22

Reviewed by J. M. Gaus

Spring'd Republican p7a Je 25 '22 850w

"Especially the first of these four lectures ranks with the best literature of the kind in the four points that count: scholarship; good writing; originality and conciseness of thesis." E. L.

+ Survey 48:87 Ap 15 '22 180w

Wis Lib Bul 18:178 J1 '22

BEARD, DANIEL CARTER. Black wolf pack. 220p il $1.65 Scribner

22-20347

"An adventure story of a boy's attempt to find the father he has never seen. He endeavors to trail him in a wild region of the West, and the result is a series of accidents in which a certain mysterious hunter who controls the black wolf pack is the principal figure."—Pub W

Booklist 19:162 F '23

"'Black Wolf Pack' is of special interest to Boy Scouts, but it is the sort of book any boy or any man who carries his boyhood with him, will like to read. Mr. Beard knows the American boy from a lifetime of daily association with him and he has made notable contributions to the literature of boyhood." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 56:204 O '22 80w

"The book is excellent. There is a good mystery story, plenty of sport and adventure, and throughout gripping interest. There is not a boy in these United States, old or young, Boy scout or not, who will not enjoy it and be proud to own it."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 Ja 14 '23 230w

"Thoughtful parents may well inquire whether the interest of boy readers cannot be caught and held by more legitimate means. Fairly well written, and gains by the fact that the author describes scenery and outdoor life from firsthand experience and observation; but it offers a rather cheap pastime."

+ Lit R p375 Ja 6 '23 110w

"Falls to thrill, in spite of the mysterious hunter and the pack of black wolves he has trained." M. H. B. Mussey

— Nation 115:sup619 D 6 '22 20w

BEARINGS and bearing metals. (Machinery's dollar books) 120p il $1 Industrial press

621.89 Bearings (machinery) 21-13575

"A treatise dealing with various types of plain bearings, the compositions and properties of bearing metals, methods of insuring proper lubrication, and important factors governing the design of plain bearings."—Subtitle

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:494 N '22

BEAUMONT, GERALD. Riders up! 331p $2 Appleton

22-19215

"Series of stories of the race track. Each is separate in itself, but all are bound together by the characters which appear and reappear in them. In them live the sportsmen of the old school, the polished bookmakers of the old days, jockeys, trainers, and race track hangers on, all picturesque figures and nearly all people of the past." (Lit R) Contents: Lil' ol' Red Stockings; Shooting Star; Star of Israel; When Johnny comes marching home; The Christmas handicap; Oh, Susanna! Mud and ninety-five; Thoroughbreds; The king of the also-rans; The empty stall.

Booklist 19:153 F '23

Cleveland p86 N '22

"Brimful of life, spirit, and thrills. They are full of action, the characters are real, and the vivid descriptions of thrilling contests on the turf are delightful."

+ Lit R p162 O 28 '22 70w

"Horse-lovers will revel in 'Riders Up!' and even those readers who know little about the race track will find a deal of excitement here."

+ N Y Times p9 O 22 '22 330w

"What skill, what psychology and other qualities are necessary in developing a racer, and what other qualities are essential in a rider are portrayed here by a genuine story-teller. There is some pathos, more humor, and a vast deal of human interest in these delightful sketches."

+ Springfd Republican p7a N 12 '22 180w

"This book contains much American slang which is unintelligible to English readers; but he has a happy gift for description and characterization and a sense of humour which is truthful enough to allow his vulgar characters to be vulgar, and yet saves them from ever being unpleasant."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p785 N 30 '22 80w

BEAUMONT, ROBERTS. Wool substitutes. 190p il $3 (10s 6d) Pitman

677 Textile industry and fabrics. Shoddy. Woolen and worsted manufacture 22-17761

Wool substitutes are not artificial but natural fibrous products. They comprise (1) the filament by-products which accumulate in the process of cloth manufacture; (2) the fiber recovered from waste yarns, fabrics, hosiery and felted goods. These reclaimed wools form a staple material of commerce and the shoddy industry has become a large and important one. In this analytical study of the subject, the various classes and grades of the recovered materials, and also of the by-products are dealt with. The methods of making the materials into spun yarns and new cloths are described, as well as the machinery employed and the variety of fabrics produced.

"Deals in a very thoroughgoing manner, and from the technical point of view solely, with the so-called lower branches of the woolen industry." L: Harmuth

Daily News Rec p11 Je 30 '22 400w

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:33 J1 '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:563 D '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p143 Mr 2 '22 200w

BEAVERBROOK, WILLIAM MAXWELL AITKIN, 1st baron. Success. 113p $1.25 Small [2s 6d S. Paul]

174 Success

22-4390

"In this book we have a distinguished son of the Empire turning to the subject, not as one of the professional writers of 'Success' books, but as one who has really achieved the goal to which they point. We find in Lord Beaverbrook's pages a British view of success that is more attractive than the American. There is, perhaps, less resolute acceptance of the doctrine of Push and more emphasis on sterling moral qualities. He starts with insistence on the three qualifications of judgment, industry, and health; but he is not ashamed to adopt as the absolute condition for the happiness won by success the triple code of conduct which has Scriptural authority—to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly."

—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 29 '22 160w

N Y Times p11 J1 16 '22 540w

"Lord Beaverbrook's book on Success will be found exceedingly good reading from many points of view. Its perfect candour, or, at any rate, air of candor, is refreshing; and, though its author makes no attempt to assume the airs and graces of rhetoric or of literary finesse, the style shows great ability."

+ Spec 127:784 D 10 '21 1700w

"We cordially welcome the collection into a book of these articles. They are full of shrewdness and good sense, expressed in telling and often pungent sentences; they inculcate throughout a high standard of conduct. A young reader will gain much from the perusal of pages, so full of fresh thought and bracing impulses."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p738 N 10 '21 550w

BECHDOLT, FREDERICK RITCHIE. When the West was young. 309p $2 Century

978 West—History. Arizona—History 22-19161

"Mr. Bechdolt has gone to original sources, as far as may be, in compiling this entertaining record of early days in the West, chiefly in Arizona. It is an anomalous book not quite sober history and certainly not fiction, though many of its chapters read like thrilling short stories. It is rather a collection of reminiscences of old times, as told by a few surviving old timers, corrected and amplified by use of documentary evidence. Mr. Bechdolt has not only made use of the few seriously conceived histories of the period, but has gone direct to files of old Arizona papers such as the Tombstone Epitaph."—Lit R

Booklist 19:116 Ja '23

Boston Transcript p10 O 14 '22 360w

"A highly readable narrative, for Mr. Bechdolt is a skilled writer of short stories, but it is also something more than merely entertaining, as one feels that the writer's handling of the raw material is sufficiently critical for the purpose of such a record."

+ Lit R p95 O 7 '22 220w

Reviewed by M. H. B. Mussey

Nation 115:sup619 D 6 '22 60w

"Highly commendable and has a historical value far beyond its modest pretensions. Besides it is eminently readable as pure entertainment." W: McFee

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 750w

"His work has that quality of clarity and directness coupled with the convincing marshaling of fact which belongs to the best journalistic correspondence and makes historical recounting as natural in manner as a plain tale of yesterday's news."

+ Springfd Republican p7a O 29 '22 180w

BECK, L. ADAMS. Key of dreams; a romance of the Orient. 351p $2 Dodd

22-22155

The story is a strange blending of romance and mysticism. Lancelot Dunbar, when he inherited the fortune of an almost unknown cousin and namesake, found that his life had become inextricably bound up in that of his cousin that, in fact, he was carrying on where the other left off. Thus he was impelled to the East and Japan where he found and took up with his cousin's former mistress and became interested in Buddhism. Here also he met an old friend of his cousin's Haridas, a Buddhist monk, who initiated him into eastern mysticism; and thru whom he gained access to a Buddhist monastery, where, but for his worldly entanglements, he would have joined the order and remained for life. These entanglements later brought him the love of Lady Lucia. Altho they both embraced Buddhism and made their home in a temple, his marriage barred Dunbar from monkhood and the higher mysteries.

"Mr. Beck has chosen to combine at least three elements in this story which do not readily mix. The result is a mechanical rather than a chemical combination—the raptures of esoteric Buddhism superimposed upon a European 'triangle' problem story and the British divorce court. It takes a good deal of believing, but Mr. Beck is—occasionally—something of a wizard and is often able to make you forget the inherent incongruity of his theme."

— + Lit R p272 D 2 '22 360w

"The story is written with a keen sense of beauty, both material and spiritual, with poetic imagination, with notable richness and dignity of style and with an instinct for story-telling, for the things of story value, that enables him to keep the structure of his tale from being crushed by the load of other interests that it carries. Through all these the human interest stands out prominently, constantly holding the reader's attention."

+ N Y Times p8 N 19 '22 660w

BECK, L. ADAMS. Ninth vibration, and other stories. 313p $2 Dodd

22-10392

All of these stories of the Far East are filled with its mysticism, its occultism and its doctrine of reincarnation. Some of the characters, as Brynhild in "The ninth vibration," and Vanna, in "The interpreter," walk among the living remembering their former lives and both are destined to open the eyes of a favored individual so that he too may come into knowledge of the past. Contents: The ninth vibration; The interpreter; The incomparable lady; The hatred of the queen; Fire of beauty; The building of the Taj Mahal; "How great is the glory of Kwannon!" "The round-faced beauty."

"A delightful book. It has dignity, restraint, and a sense of fun; it not only chronicles but reveals beauty. The treatment of the occult is free from the exotic mawkishness which often spoils stories of reincarnation and of ancient deities beheld by devout emancipate eyes, it rises above the usual level of the psychic tale which achieves a facile thrill, not through the quickening of spirit but through the titillation of nerve." V. D. Scudder

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf J1 '22 620w

Booklist 18:363 J1 '22

"A group of stories, the distinction of whose style, and the poignancy of whose appeal have already been appreciated by the readers of the various magazines in which some of them first appeared. They will welcome this opportunity to regain a rare pleasure. While to others they will bring perhaps even keener enjoyment—that of the discovery of literary treasure." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 24 '22 600w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"The legends, with their quaint morals, are so well presented that we like to have them linger in our memory, along with other happy, far-off things. Mr. Beck knows his people, his background—and his art."

+ Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 370w

"All of these stories are set down with a fine gift for color and weird beauty."

+ N Y Times p19 My 21 '22 370w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p5 Ag 13 '22 310w

Pratt p35 autumn '22

"Lovers of the Far East will enjoy the 'Ninth Vibration,' but the rank and file of readers will need to study up a bit before being able to appreciate this excellent work. The artistry and workmanship of these stories of a distant realm is admirable, and though the reader feels decidedly without the pale, the spell of the unknown urges him to read further."

— Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 9 '22 140w

BECKER, CARL LOTUS. Declaration of independence; a study in the history of political ideas. 286p $2.50 Harcourt

973.313 Declaration of independence. Political science 22-17960

A study, by the professor of European history at Cornell university, of the political philosophy of the document, of its statement of grievances against Great Britain, the historical antecedents of its philosophy of natural rights, the manner of its drafting, its literary qualities, and its influence and reception at home and abroad.

Booklist 19:68 D '22

Bookm 56:518 D '22 130w

Reviewed by C. E. MacGill

+ Lit R p178 N 4 '22 950w

"We feel that the work would have gained in point of construction had the final chapter, tracing the fate of the ideas of natural rights in the philosophy of the nineteenth century, followed immediately upon the earlier ones which give an account of the rise of the doctrine and of its prevalence in our revolutionary period. In that portion of his task, Professor Becker has been most happy." J. T. Adams

+ New Repub 32:338 N 22 '22 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:604 D '22

R of Rs 66:446 O '22 150w

St Louis 20:303 D '22

"A penetrating and brilliant study both of the document itself and of the ideas which went to its making. Prof Becker, himself possessing a gifted style, shows both in theory and in practice fine comprehension of the artistic qualities of language."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a O 8 '22 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 18:253 N '22

BECKWITH, CLARENCE AUGUSTINE. Idea of God, historical, critical, constructive. 343p $2.50 Macmillan

231 God

22-19244

The purpose of the book is to study the changing idea of God. It shows how a changing view of the world must of necessity influence the idea of God, how impossible it is for the twentieth century to think in terms of the first, and how the new study of Jesus Christ and the new social emphasis in religion necessitates a re-definition of God. The book then goes on to study the idea of God from the historical, the doctrinal and the constructive viewpoint.

Booklist 19:142 F '23

"A book like this, fair to the new thought yet faithful to the good things in the old, makes a promising contribution to the still incomplete 'reconciliation of religion and science.'" E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '22 1100w

"An unusually comprehensive study of the conception of God, including a historical survey, a consideration of modern philosophical discussions, a frank treatment of the important apologetic problems, and an appreciation of the meaning of the idea in religious experience."

+ J Religion 3:106 Ja '23 40w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 23 '23 610w

BEER, THOMAS. Fair rewards. 292p $2.50
Knopf

22-4213

"A story of the theatre but with more of an epic touch than most theatrical stories. It spans an important period in the American theatre from the time of the opening of 'The Prisoner of Zenda' to the recent presentation of 'The Jest.' Mark Walling is one of the great managers, a controller of many theatres, a magnate to whom stars pay ardent if inevitable court. He is the near genius. That is the cause of his deep unrest. He cannot throw aside the commercial aspects of his ventures, go in for what is really art and yet he is vaguely unhappy at his successful productions, knowing them to be full of vulgarities. Success follows him almost relentlessly so far as financial rewards go but the conflict between the artist and the business man is real, and cannot be obliterated."—Boston Transcript

"As an aesthetic achievement, it is no less than amazing. . . One was not prepared to encounter a novel of New York theatrical life so exquisitely etched as this." Burton Rascoe

+ Bookm 55:304 My '22 470w

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 22 '22 800w

"Already known as being beautifully, delightfully written, as presenting the most intelligent and sophisticated analysis of the whole Broadway pageant we have yet had, and as assembling for our enjoyment actually the sort of people one could endure in real life—a type practically extinct in modern American fiction."

+ Dial 72:432 Ap '22 100w

"The most charming novel that 1922 has thus far brought forth. Mr. Beer's first novel is sure to be a popular success; but, what is better, it deserves to be a success." G. W. J.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p2 Mr 26 '22 850w

"The 'Fair Rewards' is not a novel of 'promise'—does not lose its way gloriously in the general direction of this or that kind of achievement. Within its range and intention it is a firm, well-balanced, and finished piece of interpretive story-telling." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 108:397 Ap 22 '22 220w

"His story is neither blatant nor vulgar, though it deals largely with people who are both. His jazz, by which I mean in general the staccato note, incisive and averting at its best, flip and disgusting at its worst, is off-hand, graceful and unforced, and achieves a certain note of distinction." Hulbert Footner

+ — Lit R p483 Mr 11 '22 620w

"A really distinguished novel. The writing is far above the average; it has style and sophistication and personality, intermingled with a truly vivid show of imagination. It even borders on brilliancy, but it is a hard, cold, cynical sort of brilliancy that chills. It almost hurts. It is a book that is never for an instant sweet or kind or touching. There is an embittered satirical strain throughout."

+ — N Y Times p27 Je 4 '22 200w

"Not every one will like Thomas Beer's 'The Fair Rewards,' but few will deny that it is clever. As with some bits of painting, it is amazing to see how by a touch of color here and there, a high light in just the right spot, he makes us see people and things just as he wants us to see them. . . Certainly Mr. Beer shows us things; he can write." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:351 Je 21 '22 320w

"The nature and motives of the characters are natural and convincing, and the reader will be likely to remember them. It may be called a new variation on the biographical novel."

Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22

300w

BEERBOHM, MAX. Survey. il $4 Doubleday
[25s Heinemann]

741 Caricatures and cartoons A22-1142

A collection of fifty-one cartoons, satirical representations of men in public life, done with Mr Beerbohm's characteristic subtlety and finish. Among the literary people caricatured are Joseph Conrad, Bernard Shaw, Lytton Strachey, Philip Guedalla, Edmund Gosse, Hilaire Belloc, and Maurice Hewlett; among the political, Lloyd George, Arthur Balfour, Herbert Asquith, Bonar Law, and Winston Churchill.

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 15 '22 290w

Reviewed by Gilbert Seldes
Dial 72:522 My '22 940w

Reviewed by H. L. Stuart
Freeman 5:237 My 17 '22 650w

Reviewed by W. McFee
Lit R p597 Ap 22 '22 1200w

"Good as they are, the drawings are incidental—a mere excuse upon which he hangs his barbed legends. They are utterly sophisticated and dwell not in the humanities but in the realm of dilettantism become professional." Rollin Kirby

+ — New Repub 30:323 My 10 '22 750w

"'A Survey' is a welcome addition to the several volumes of Max's drawings which have been published before. He has now reached a position of sufficient importance in contemporary English letters to render anything by him one of the larger events of the season wherein it appears."

+ N Y Times p3 Mr 12 '22 1900w

+ Sat R 133:17 Ja 7 '22 470w

"To turn over the pages of this delightful book is to realize how rare a thing is true caricature. He is able to create in each drawing some absurd image which, by a stroke of genius, exactly describes and criticizes the person or state of affairs he is dealing with. . . The satire is often biting, but, with one exception, never unkind."

+ Spec 128:80 Ja 21 '22 920w

"Not every American can display 100 per cent of intelligent appreciation of these 52 drawings; yet most of those who study them will qualify with a 'passing' mark. All but four were shown last year at the Leicester galleries where they attracted much attention. The other four are exhibited for the first time in the present volume."

Springf'd Republican p14 Ap 14 '22

140w

BEGBIE, HAROLD. Ways of laughter; a comedy of interferences. 295p $2 Putnam
[8s 6d Hutchinson]

22-3963

"A dryasdust professor is persuaded by an elderly bachelor to embark upon a kind of rake's progress, accompanied by his unsophisticated daughter. The story of the daughter's subsequent sophistication is tragic enough, and well told, and the elderly bachelor is given an opportunity to justify his existence."—Spec

"When Mr. Begbie tries to be funny he becomes painfully insipid. He transforms situations which might have been exquisitely tender and beautiful into situations which are silly and trite, only because he is so determined to make us smile. The warm human quality of his work, together with a prolixity bearable because of its delicacy make this story appeal to a large circle of discriminating readers. But his insistence upon 'the ways of laughter' make inordinately dull the very passages which ought to have been his best." D. F. G.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 Je 24 '22 450w

"The 'Ways of Laughter' cannot be counted among smiling masterpieces. The Mr. Barnet of this sketch is, I will not say a middle-aged he-Pollyanna, but a too-conscious apostle of the cheerful life." H. W. Boynton

+ — Ind 108:525 Je 10 '22 320w

BEGBIE, HAROLD—Continued

"This book is cleverly written, and some of the serious moments are good, though curiously unsupported by the general tone of the book. May we humbly suggest that all Mr. Begbie needs to make him a really clever writer is a sense of values? Let him become discriminately humorous. His philosophy will not suffer thereby."

— + Lit R p514 Mr 18 '22 200w

New Repub 31:141 Je 28 '22 70w

New Statesman 17:334 Je 25 '21 130w

"It is one of those novels that the reader may sit down to with the confidence that not a single harrowing scene or pessimistic conclusion is to be encountered. Added to the liveliness of the plot is a debonair, semi-humorous style of telling the story that adds immeasurably to the reader's pleasure."

+ N Y Times p17 Mr 26 '22 560w

"The eccentric English lawyer who tries to make the world happy by making it laugh is well conceived by the author, but his humor in actual practice is heavy, the gaiety is forced, and the humorous note is kept up too long."

— + Outlook 130:606 Ap 12 '22 40w

"The book would have been more enjoyable if the story had been left out, and the criticism of modern life put in the form of light essays such as the author can write. Still, we must take what he gives us; without looking too closely at its form, it has the merits a practised writer could not fail to give it."

— + Sat R 132:327 S 10 '21 80w

Spec 127:433 O 1 '21 40w

"While the style is over-elaborate, the text is interspersed with whimsical and clever dialog."

+ — Springfield Republican p7a My 14 '22 230w

"Mr. Barnett's propaganda will tend to produce gloom rather than cheerfulness; and we must observe that the episode of Martha's liaison with Stanger introduces a repellent note entirely out of key with the homely geniality of the story."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p374 Je 9 '21 110w

BELL, AUBREY FITZ GERALD. Portuguese literature. 376p $9.45 Oxford [21s Milford]

869 Portuguese literature (Eng ed 22-12776)

"The first complete guide to Portuguese literature."—The Times [London] Lit Sup. "Mr. Bell's literary chronicle seems first of all the product of a historian; his book does not aim to treat of schools and theories, but to give with as much accuracy as possible the main facts concerning the work and life of each individual author."—Lit R

Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 650w

"Mr. Bell's evident fondness for history tempts him to linger with historical writers and religious and mystic spirits; he is apt rather to speculate upon disputed dates than to surrender to literary beauties; he is more concerned with fact than with the visions of the creative imagination. In short, he is precisely what he aims to be, the historian rather than primarily the appraiser of Portuguese letters. The book bears the stamp of quiet, soundly supported scholarship and will appeal chiefly to students in quest of a solid background for the more amenable fields of aesthetic appreciation." I: Goldberg

+ Lit R p742 Je 17 '22 660w

"It is encyclopedic and sound and it deals with a body of literature more interesting than many readers have had a chance to realize."

+ Nation 115:76 J1 19 '22 40w

"Scholarly and encyclopedic." J. B. T.

+ Nation and Ath 31:660 Ag 12 '22 1000w

"He has taken the right line of preferring to compose a volume of literary annals rather than of literary criticism, and although at times the lists of unknown names become rather bewildering, Mr. Bell has a real gift for judicious summary, and inspires one with confidence in his critical judgment. He is also right, to our mind, in confining his judgments within national limits. He can write vividly and intensely."

+ New Statesman 19:300 Je 17 '22 850w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:507 N '22

St Louis 21:12 Ja '23

"Learned and well-written book."

+ Spec 128:311 Mr 11 '22 200w

"When he deals with Gil Vicente and Camoens Mr. Bell can make us feel what we have lost by closing our eyes so long to the glories of Portugal's Golden Age. But we wish he could have made his 'snaps' into a 'film' of the whole literary movement."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p153 Mr 9 '22 1600w

BELL, BERNARD IDDINGS. Good news. 108p $1.35 Morehouse

230 Religion. Christianity 22-6833

The author, who is president of St Stephen's college, Annandale, New York, served as a chaplain in the war and the chapters of this little book came into being in barracks room talks. They are a simple presentation of the fundamentals of Christianity, an attempt to show that it is a rational, human and personal thing, and that faith in God is possible to men and women no nobler, wiser or better than the men and women of today. Contents: The unknowable God; The knowable God; The heroic God; The saving God; The blessed company; Christ's kind of a church; Our social duty; Our individual duty; Why we talk with God; How to talk with God; The touch of Jesus.

Cleveland p72 S '22

BELL, CLIVE. Since Cézanne. 230p il $2.50 Harcourt [7s Chatto & W.]

759 Cézanne, Paul. Painting. Aesthetics (Eng ed 22-13542)

Criticisms of the post-Impressionist school of painters which descends from Cézanne and in which his influence is so clearly traceable. "To the young painters of 1904," the author says, "Cézanne came as a liberator: he it was who had freed painting from a mass of conventions which, useful once, had grown old and stiff and were now no more than so many impediments to expression. To most of them his chief importance was that he had removed all unnecessary barriers between what they felt and its realization in form." He traces Cézanne's influence in the work of Rousseau, Renoir, Matisse and Picasso, Bonnard, Marquet, Friesz, and Derain, chapters on individual artists alternating with chapters on aesthetics, art criticism, negro sculpture and "jazz."

"Mr. Bell's criticism is delightfully agile jumping, and so attains its end. If only the painters had left all the antics to the critics!" H. L. Seaver

+ — Atlantic's Bookshelf N '22 500w

Booklist 19:42 N '22

Cleveland p93 D '22

"I find Mr. Bell's writing enormously stimulating, and I consider that if you have any pretension to an interest in painting, you must read his latest book. You may hate it. You are certain to disagree with some of it. But you can neither neglect it, nor be bored by it. . . . He is usually wise, and always epigrammatic. Behind his most outrageous dogmatism, you can detect the modesty of the worldling." Raymond Mortimer

+ Dial 73:215 Ag '22 1450w

"The field upon which he enters here is a wide one, and the deftness and delicacy of perception with which he picks his way across it are matters for constant delight. Some of the best work of his career finds its way into this collection as a result. The concluding paper, 'Plus de Jass,' [is] the best analysis of the recent 'craze' that one can recall." L. Bauray

+ Freeman 6:91 O 4 '22 2250w

"Mr. Bell's collected journalism is so engaging and so unpretentious that any critic cavil seems ungracious. Yet the vogue of such writing is unfortunate. Lacking balance and real seriousness, its suggestions of an anarchical and anti-social sort are likely to be taken by young artists and art lovers as so much gospel. These essays make not for clearness but for a return to the old Symbolist Muddle."

+ Lit R p874 Ag 12 '22 360w

Reviewed by H: B. Fuller

Nation 115:234 S 6 '22 1100w

"As a stimulus to the enjoyment of art it is the most provocative that we have. But it is always a matter of pleasure. He calls himself a connoisseur in pleasure, and in Plus de Jazz—a dazzling piece of writing—he rejoices that the ragtime disease is dying, and that the 'the age to easy acceptance of the first thing that comes is closing.' Mr. Bell is extremely fastidious; he demands the best, and his philosophy is a high and glorious hedonism that most readers will find irresistible." T: Craven

+ New Repub 31:311 Ag 9 '22 1200w

"Mr. Bell is honest, he is sincere, and he is a servitor of beauty, a champion of good taste, a valiant defender of culture, and he would not let vanity stand in the way of the universal good. In this book he lends his fine emotional sensibility, his alert intelligence and his happy prose style in the service of beauty, taste and culture. He provokes ideas and images, he aids sensitivity, and he entertains. That is much."

Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p5 Je 25 '22 1500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:501 N '22

Pratt p24 summer '22

"Brilliant criticisms."

+ R of Rs 67:111 Ja '23 100w

"Mr. Bell always speaks with more than papal infallibility, and distributes canonizations to his friends and those he admires with kindly generosity. But underneath the crudities and the complacent dealing out of haloes of immortality there is to be found scattered up and down the book the real appreciation of what is essential in a work of painting or sculpture."

-- + Spec 128:563 My 6 '22 450w

Springf'd Republican p6 O 23 '22 640w

"Mr. Clive Bell enjoys pictures, which is rare, and enjoys writing about them, which perhaps is not so rare. But the result of this double enjoyment is that we can enjoy what he writes."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p167 Mr 16 '22 1450w

BELL, LOUIS. Telescope. 287p il $3 McGraw 535.83 Telescope 22-11434

"Dr. Bell, an expert engineer, has written this book mainly in the interest of amateurs who explore the heavens for study or pleasure. It represents an attempt to assist the user of the telescope to a better comprehension and a more intelligent application of his instrument. The only approach to popularization comes in the first two chapters, which tell of the evolution of the telescope from its crude beginnings in the spectacle glass; the following sections are devoted to its varieties, to the construction of their parts, to such accessories as micrometers, spectroscopes and photometers, and to ways in which the telescope may be mounted and housed. His closing chapter stresses the valuable work that may be done for the advancement of observational astronomy."

—Boston Transcript

"Technical mastery of the whole subject is visible throughout."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 26 '22 400w

"It is not intended to be a handbook for the professional astronomer, though there are many facts in it which will undoubtedly add to his store of information. It will also be most useful to the teacher and student of astronomy. The style is easy; the diagrams and their descriptions are remarkably clear. The material is presented largely from the practical point of view with a minimum of optical equations, though abundant reference to more technical treatment is made in the bibliographies at the end of each chapter. The faults of the book are chiefly those of omission, and there are several points upon which more information would be most welcome." C. S. Furness

- Lit R p6 S 9 '22 800w

"An excellent account. . . The book is not free from mistakes." J. W. French

+ Nature 110:627 N 11 '22 580w

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:33 Jl '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:410 O '22

Pratt p15 autumn '22

St Louis 20:287 D '22

BELL, MRS MARY I. M. (OTTLEY). Short history of the papacy. 390p $5 Dodd [21s Methuen]

282 Papacy. Roman Catholic church—History 21-20142

"In the preface to this historical sketch the author tells us that its purpose is 'to concentrate on the moments of great importance, connecting them by a thin thread of narrative from which much that is relevant will be omitted for lack of space.' She gives no bibliography, few references to original authorities, and is too prone to quote from authors without giving chapter and verse, or even sometimes the names of the authors themselves."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"As a literary production this work is passing fair, but as a history it is utterly unreliable."

+ Cath World 114:689 F '22 420w

"For those who are anxious to learn something about every Pope who held office from Peter down to Pius X this would be a satisfactory volume. On the other hand, for those who desire something more than an extremely well-annotated list of Popes, Mrs Bell's book is a disappointing one." C. W. Walker

+ Lit R p431 F 18 '22 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:326 Jl '22

"The lack of a good short history of the papacy in English has been admirably made good by Mrs. Bell. Written from the Catholic standpoint, it is studiously moderate. A feature of the book is its skilful combination of a narrative with a reflective treatment, though the latter necessarily suffers from the lack of available space."

+ Sat R 132:436 O 8 '21 620w

"Her book is well written, interesting and in the main commendably accurate, though the proofs have not been read with so much care as we could wish."

+ Spec 127:754 D 3 '21 150w

"The disadvantages under which a book of this length labours in dealing with so vast a subject are obvious, and it is to the credit of the author that her narrative is lucid and never dull."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p666 O 13 '21 350w

BELLAMY, FRANCIS RUFUS. Flash of gold. 293p $1.75 Doubleday

22-18651

"Nancy Van Wyck is the daughter of the richest man in Clewesbury. All her life she has been accustomed to have men at her feet, but her only emotion has been the thrill of conquest. Her heart is untouched until she meets David Carpenter, a young physician, who has given up his practice among the more prosperous members of the community to go into the slums and devote his life to the healing of those who are unable to pay. What was intended, by her, to be a mere flirtation ripens into love, and she marries him and goes to live with him at Brotherhood House, where he has a dispensary and conducts his clinic. In the beginning Nancy is perfectly happy in her new home, but it is not long before she misses the gay times at the country club, the theatres

BELLAMY, FRANCIS RUFUS—Continued
and the restaurants. Then she encounters Forrester Stone, a business associate of her father's. His passion almost sweeps her off her feet. She still loves her husband, but when she is with Stone she feels that she cannot much longer resist him. Only when it is almost too late does she discover that real, lasting happiness cannot be found except in forgetfulness of self."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p6 S 27 '22 640w

"The story moves, though Mr. Bellamy's style is bad and his vocabulary worse; the people are real enough for all practical purposes."

+ — Lit R p50 S 23 '22 200w

N Y Times sec7:6 O 1 '22 500w

"The book is written with clear insight into the mental conflict of Nancy, each character living true to the place and part selected for it. The story is one which will appeal to both men and women equally and will hold the interest from cover to cover. Nancy is a real girl and David a real man—and in the finding of themselves the author has done a very clever piece of work."

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 22 '22 420w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. House of commons and monarchy. 188p $2. Harcourt [7s 6d Allen & U.]

328.42 Great Britain—Parliament—House of commons. Aristocracy (Eng ed 21-5869)

The author's thesis is: The House of commons was formed by, and is essentially part of, an aristocratic state; England having ceased to be an aristocratic state, the House of commons is ceasing to function. Beginning with a history of the institution and of its name, he goes on to explain the nature of an aristocratic state and to show how the aristocratic spirit has disappeared from the House of commons and is disappearing both from the governing class and from the governed. He then gives his reasons for believing that the House of commons is incapable of reform and considers what should or may supplant it, reaching the conclusion that it must be replaced by monarchy, supported by councils representing real interests.

"Of dogmatism there is quite enough and to spare in the book, but the author's grasp of parliamentary history, on which he at times relies to prove his point, is not impressive."

— Am Pol Sci R 15:309 My '21 100w

"All the reason and the sense in this little volume—and there is a great deal of both in it—bring the author at length to a perfectly impracticable proposal, the re-establishment of monarchy. For that reason it leaves the impression of brilliance and of futility which so many of Mr Belloc's political books have."

+ — Ath p72 Ja 21 '21 180w

Booklist 18:212 Ap '22

"Mr. Belloc's arguments are ingenious, and he succeeds in making out a strong case; but his conclusions strike one as insufficiently established, and one accepts them with reluctance."

+ — Bookm 55:315 My '22 130w

Freeman 5:406 Jl 5 '22 350w

"His thesis is simple, and his argument very skilful and very stimulating." C. M. Lloyd

+ Lond Mercury 3:573 Mr '21 550w

"Mr Belloc is always entertaining, but his habit of making asseveration do duty for demonstration should make his readers duly dubious about his conclusions."

+ — Nation 112:796 Je 1 '21 300w

Reviewed by T. Q. Beesley

N Y Times p3 Ag 21 '21 4700w

"Mr Belloc has a way with him that compels respect; a model style, lucidity, and confidence. Even when we disagree, we admire. But these very qualities sometimes, as in the present instance, prove his undoing. His very confidence betrays him; his clear thinking makes him muddle-headed."

+ — Sat R 131:72 Je 22 '21 850w

"Mr Belloc has written a vivacious and suggestive essay, which has the merit of returning to first principles, but which yet leaves the feeling that his treatment is too slight."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p383 D 30 '20 900w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. The Jews. 308p $3 Houghton [9s Constable]

236 Jews

The author states impartially the problem which arises from the presence of the Jew everywhere in the midst of a non-Jewish world. He maintains that the friction between the Jews and the nations among which they are dispersed is growing more acute and he traces the cause for the new gravity of the problem to the leadership which Jews have taken in the Russian revolution and the quarrel of the proletariat against capitalism. "The Bolshevik movement," he says, "was a Jewish movement but not a movement of the Jewish race as a whole" and it is a great injustice to impute its evils to the whole race. He examines the causes of friction, the position of the Jew in the world at large and in England, and the effect of the Zionist movement. The remedy which he has to offer is "respectful segregation or recognition"—a recognition of the Jews' separate nationality and encouragement of the institutions which emphasize this separateness.

Booklist 19:6 O '22

Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '22 1000w

"The general considerations, set down with fine candor, intelligence and generosity, should influence profoundly the public mind, although numerous matters of detail might well be disavowed. We do not feel, for example, that Belloc's analysis of the Jewish situation in the United States is even relatively complete. But, all in all, The Jews is written by an unusually sympathetic and lenient Belloc who is at the same time very fascinating."

+ — Cath World 115:825 S '22 450w

Cleveland p72 S '22

Reviewed by H. L. Stuart

Freeman 6:139 O 18 '22 780w

Reviewed by Shane Leslie

Lit R p717 Je 10 '22 960w

Reviewed by Lotta Levensohn

— Nation 115:99 Jl 26 '22 980w

"Mr. Belloc has the reputation of being an anti-Semite, and he is at great pains to prove that he is nothing of the sort. He is not successful, for hate and dislike, far more than murder, will out. The whole point of Mr. Belloc's book is that there is something in every Jew inherently and eternally alien and hostile to every European. Why, then, all this pother about being restrained in language, about being impartial and judicial, about not hurting feelings, and about not being an anti-Semite? Mr. Belloc is so restrained and judicial, and takes so many words and so round-about a road to his restraint and his verdict, that his book becomes dull and flat, his meaning obscure, and his mind confused."

— Nation and Ath 31:123 Ap 22 '22 1450w

Reviewed by C. J. H. Hayes

— New Repub 31:193 Jl 12 '22 1550w

"It is hard to review such a book seriously. To do so would mean to give a running commentary, pointing out inaccuracies and illogic on every page. The marvel is that such a thing should have secured reputable publishers. Few are likely to read it through, or to benefit by doing so. As for the Jews, having survived Balak, they are sure to survive Belloc." H. G. Enelow

— N Y Times p14 My 28 '22 2600w

"It is the frankness of Hilaire Belloc's discussion of the Jewish problem—a frankness as interesting as it is devoid of indelicacy—that gives the principal value to his book. This value is limited, on the other hand, by the fact that the problems, being one of social attitudes rather than tangible political or economic factors, is not subject to regulation in the ordinary sense. There is no public programme to be advocated; the book will do good just so far as it influences the attitudes of individuals."

+ — No Am 216:567 O '22 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:471 N '22

"Mr. Belloc gives us in a thoughtful book grave warning of an approaching crisis, and proposals for averting such a disaster as conflict between the Jews and the nations in which they live."

+ Sat R 133:393 Ap 15 '22 1100w

"Mr. Belloc's book is interesting in a high degree. Though it is in intention a cool book, it will not be liked by a great many Jews. On the other hand, the more excitable and furious anti-Semites are sure to consider it as making all sorts of admissions that ought not to have been made. For ourselves, these admissions seem just and reasonable, and are, indeed, the part of the book which attracts us most. . . But though we go a long way with Mr. Belloc as regards his premises, we cannot agree with his conclusions."

+ — Spec 128:528 Ap 29 '22 1650w

Springf'd Republican p8 O 3 '22 420w

"One thing that seems never to have occurred to Mr. Belloc is that possibly a Jew hater may not be the most competent person to secure accurate information from or about the Jews. Unfortunately, the book, because of its author's literary reputation, and because of the genuine interest in its subject, may have a large circulation and encourage prejudices rather than sound thinking." B. L.

— Survey 48:628 Ag 15 '22 650w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Mercy of Allah. 336p $2
Appleton [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

22-11292

The scene of this clever satire on modern business methods is Bagdad where one Mahmond, of fabulous wealth, relates to his seven impecunious nephews the history of his life and the secrets of his wealth. The story is told in weekly instalments between the hour of public executions and beheadings and the hour of prayer, for the old man is profoundly convinced of the mercy of Allah, and never misses his devotions to the giver of all wealth. Beginning his career as a stowaway and petty thief, he rapidly acquires a fortune by every manner of lying and stealing, is repeatedly beaten at his own game, undergoes a court trial—an amusing parody of our administration of justice—makes millions by exploiting creative genius, becomes a monopolist, devises a great banking scheme, finances both sides of a war, and finally enjoys the peace of the soul that extreme wealth alone can give. Of his seven listeners it is the youngest nephew who proves himself a worthy disciple.

Booklist 19:19 O '22

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p6 Je 24 '22 1150w

"Belloc's irony is delicious. The Mercy of Allah is bound to rank high among Belloc's best work."

+ Cath World 116:258 N '22 160w

Reviewed by E. T. Booth

Lit R p851 Ag 5 '22 1100w

N Y Times p25 Je 4 '22 440w

"The form which Belloc has chosen is excellent. The book is an effective lampoon on contemporary business methods and economic theories, presented with great good humor and the ebullient wit that is so characteristic of all the work of that genial English satirist." H. I. Young

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 23 '22 750w

"Though the author does not altogether escape the penalty of a certain monotony in the plan of his story and in his conceptions of its various characters, his ingenuity is quite equal to diversifying the narrative sufficiently to make it highly amusing."

+ — No Am 216:286 Ag '22 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:532 D '22

Pratt p35 autumn '22

"The Mercy of Allah is altogether a finer achievement than Mr. Belloc's earlier political satires. Occasionally [he] overdoes his satire badly."

+ — Sat R 133:555 My 27 '22 380w

"The book as descriptive of ingenious knavery is entertaining reading. We, of course, fully realize that Mr. Belloc while he turns his Persian tale has his eye on England and her new rich. He has contrived nevertheless to get a distinctly Eastern atmosphere into his book, be it in intention satire or parable or only plain fiction."

+ Spec 128:663 My 27 '22 280w

"The tale is lively and well told; his pudding has its plums of wit; but we have an uncomfortable suspicion that Mr. Belloc believes his amusing caricatures, not alone of lawyers but of all his other butts, to be far more nearly a true picture of society than they actually are. Mr. Belloc can make his wrong-headedness amusing, but it remains wrong-headedness all the same."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p306 My 11 '22 650w

BELLWALD, AUGUSTIN M. Christian science and the Catholic faith. 269p $2.50 Macmillan
289.5 Christian science. New thought. Mental healing 22-11458

Beginning with a short historical survey of mental healing and a discussion of the causes which may account for the success the movement has gained, the author proceeds to analyze from the Catholic standpoint the philosophy of the system and to appraise the religious and Christian content of Christian science, New thought, and kindred movements. Mrs Eddy's career is sketched and the controversy between her and Mrs Stetson. The author's attitude, tho critical, is not controversial and he dismisses many of the charges which have been leveled against the cult. There is a fourteen-page bibliography and an index.

"A full account and an excellent criticism of Christian Science from the Catholic standpoint."

+ Cath World 116:103 O '22 430w

J Religion 2:559 S '22 40w

"From the point of view of Roman Catholic orthodoxy, it may be recommended as a fair and scholarly statement; and even those who feel that their own belief is as far removed from Roman Catholicism as from Christian Science itself will find here some good exposition and some sensible criticism." J. Baillie

+ New Repub 32:180 O 11 '22 120w

St Louis 21:4 Ja '23

"A learned, full, careful historical and critical investigation."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p603 S 21 '22 70w

BEMAN, LAMAR TANEY, comp. Selected articles on current problems in taxation. (Handbook ser.) 350p $2.25 Wilson, H. W.

336.2 Taxation. Taxation—Bibliography

In part one the general principles of taxation are presented. Part two deals with the proposed sales tax, and part three with the state income tax. In parts two and three where debatable questions are considered, the discussion is divided into the affirmative and the negative side and a brief is given on each side.

"Part I is too brief and elementary to be of much use in a college course, but parts II and III, especially III, would make very good collateral reading. Even part I would be very desirable to place in the hands of public speakers and editorial writers, or anyone else who is in the habit of expressing his views on matters connected with taxation without having studied the fundamental principles." R. S.

BEMAN, L. T., comp.—Continued
Tucker

+ Am Econ R 12:520 S '22 150w
Daily News Rec p11 Je 30 '22 440w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:209 My '22
Pratt p11 summer '22

BENCHLEY, ROBERT CHARLES. Love conquers all. 310p il $2 Holt
817 Humor 22-20941

The book contains a collection of the author's humorous contributions to various papers. They are sarcastic squibs on everything that is going on in the life of to-day: in the family, on the street, in business, in literary, journalistic and artistic circles and in sport. Illustrations by Gluyas Williams.

Booklist 19:73 D '22

Reviewed by Edmund Wilson, Jr.
Bookm 56:636 Ja '23 720w
Dial 74:104 Ja '23 80w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Ind 109:310 N 25 '22 350w

"Will get a laugh from anybody who looks into it." Hildegard Hawthorne
+ Int Bk R 1:38 D '22 40w

"Marred by too many essays of the routine,
stereotyped, machine-made order; but Mr.
Benchley largely succeeds in offsetting the stigma of professionalism by his cheerful effrontery, riotous high spirits and monstrous fertility in preposterous invention." Lawrence
Mason

+ — Lit R p363 Ja 6 '23 650w

"'Love Conquers All' is quite the most amusing collection of essays that has appeared since the publication of 'Of All Things.' The author has surpassed himself in his second volume."
H. I. Young

+ Nation 115:584 N 29 '22 260w

"Mr. Benchley is an exaggerator par excellence. He is silliness itself delivered with a mock gravity that but emphasizes the burlesque."
N Y Times p2 Ja 14 '23 350w

"Mr Benchley is not so eager as Heywood
Brown to pour a pint of puns into each essay,
but he has no objection to tossing in a pocket-ful or so. Usually he writes in a serio-comic manner, occasionally reminiscent of Mark Twain. For the most part, however, the essays are strictly Mr Benchley's."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 D 13 '22 210w
Wis Lib Bul 19:22 Ja '23

BENEDICT, BERTRAM. Larger socialism.
243p $2.50 Macmillan
335 Socialism 21-9609
For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

"The broader minded socialists should welcome such a champion as Mr. Benedict. His book has an effect like opening a window and allowing fresh air to enter a room filled with air overheated and stale from having been repeatedly breathed by the occupants." V. E.
Helleberg

+ Am J Soc 28:360 N '22 180w
Am Pol Sci R 16:161 F '22 70w

"This is an extraordinarily clear and candid book. The author is a member of the Socialist Party but he possesses the rare ability to treat
as hypotheses what most Socialist Party members worship as dogmas, and to test them in the light of reality. The result is perhaps the most thought-provoking work on socialism that has yet been written in America." P. H.
Douglas

+ J Pol Econ 29:833 D '21 700w

"This book is the friendly, intelligent attempt of a liberal Socialist to bridge the gulf between the world of 1914 and the post-war world."
Arthur Gleason

+ New Repub 31:140 Je 28 '22 550w
Wis Lib Bul 18:46 F '22

BENET, STEPHEN VINCENT. Young people's pride. 300p il $2 Holt

22-20536

The sensitiveness and pride of youth in matters of love and the willingness of age to accept a pittance at any price are the contrasted themes of the story. Oliver Crowe nearly wrecks his chance of happiness by abruptly breaking off his engagement to Nancy Ellicott in hurt pride over her success as an illustrator while he is still floundering ineffec-tually in the toils of authorship. Ted Billett errs by blurting out his overseas lapses from conventional morality in the same breath with his declaration of love. On the other hand, the elderly married man and father of marriageable children is content to eat humble pie and accept a plausible explanation on its face value rather than jeopardize his belated happiness with a mistress.

Booklist 19:84 D '22

"He writes well, but his second novel holds more of promise than of fulfillment. The best of it is delightful, but it is not all best. Moreover, something very lovely is being toned down to meet the light of common day." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 S 20 '22 980w
Cleveland p80 S '22

"It is a better story, as a story, than 'The Beginning of Wisdom,' less pretentious and less clogged with detail; less immature. Its plot is slight enough, hardly more than the development of a situation." H. W. Boynton

+ — Ind 109:241 O 28 '22 550w

"All who like a modern story of the modern young person, male and female, will enjoy this amusing book." Hildegard Hawthorne
+ Int Bk R p70 D '22 30w

"The tale is unwisely extended far beyond its natural length. With this patent defect, 'Young People's Pride' is entertaining and often highly amusing." T. Beer

+ — Lit R p64 S 30 '22 1150w

"That Mr. Benet should discard the trailing draperies of his muse for the practical if undistinguished tweed of realistic prose may not offend her; but to find herself compelled to wear the sleazy, meretricious fabrics of the scenario and the mystery story must hurt her vanity considerably." F. H.

— New Repub 32:229 O 25 '22 260w

"Mr. Benet's novel is without the sensational quality which has marked so many of the books dealing, or purporting to deal, with the younger generation; it will have no appeal for those who enjoy being shocked, or for the prurient-minded. It is frank at times, with a clean and honest frankness for its people are not saints; but it is never ugly. Taken as a whole, this book of Mr. Benet's is the best produced in some time by any of the younger generation of writers." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p14 O 1 '22 620w

"'Young People's Pride' is a very adequate novel . . . in most ways the most satisfactory
novel of the written-to-death Young People.
You do not compare it in daring or in realistic power with what Mr. Fitzgerald has done, but you are apt to like it a good shade more."
T. C. Chubb

+ — N Y Tribune p7 S 10 '22 600w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23
Wis Lib Bul 18:354 N '22

BENET, WILLIAM ROSE. First person singular. 300p $2 Doran

22-8941

In this mystery romance the real heroine hovers like a ghost about the story, without coming bodily into the scene until the very end. Twenty years before the tale begins a certain Gertrude Gedney, at the age of sixteen, had run away from her home in a colonial town of Pennsylvania and had become a myth.
Now, after twenty years, a Mrs Ventress of New York, of about Gertrude's age, takes a furnished house for the summer in the same town and excites its curiosity. For the more complete mystification of the reader the personality mystery involves a literary mystery. Just as the town gossip crystallizes into the legend that Mrs Ventress is Gertrude Gedney and the inner circle is puzzled over the identity of the literary pseudonym Richard Terrill, the real Gertrude turns up and proves herself to be Richard Terrill, while Mrs Ventress reveals herself as the authoress of numerous lurid best sellers, hiding away from her fame in order to turn over a new leaf.

Booklist 18:364 J1 '22

"Mr. Benét has shown himself very clever in sketching vivid characters. They reveal him more accurately than anything else in the book. It is undeniable that there is a certain patness about some of his plot situations which strikes our senses so long trained to the realistic novel." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 My 13 '22 1200w
Cleveland p80 S '22

"Its positive qualities run in the following order: excellent dialogue, good power of characterization, and an interest in plot. The author is not ashamed to have a story to tell. So long as a writer can, in his first novel, describe attractive men and women, and also others who are mean or petty, and do it as well as Mr. Benét has done here, it is no business of his reviewer to try to dictate to him. He may be permitted to say that although the author's interest was probably more centred in the puzzle plot, his success was greater in his people themselves." E. L. Pearson

+ — Lit R p699 Je 3 '22 1150w

"Mr. Benét again and again shows signs of possessing the knowledge, insight, power, of a novelist in an uncommonly high degree. He has obscured all these qualities by telling a yarn and cultivating a manner not his own." L. L.

— Nation 114:724 Je 14 '22 600w

"There is a good deal of clever writing interspersed throughout the very long book, but the story is not well constructed, and sometimes drags badly." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ — N Y Times p13 Je 18 '22 480w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:320 J1 '22
Springf'd Republican p7a J1 9 '22 330w
Wis Lib Bul 18:219 O '22

BENHAM, WILLIAM GURNEY, comp. Dictionary of classified quotations. 653p $5 Crowell

808.8 Quotations A22-1220

In this dictionary of quotations from authors of all nations and times the passages quoted are grouped under subject headings, while an index to these headings, with cross-references, provides other places where the searcher may look for quotations. There is also an index of authors, giving nationality and dates of birth and death.

Booklist 18:373 J1 '22

"The arrangement is good, but the subjects treated are not comprehensive enough."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ap 19 '22 150w
Freeman 5:191 My 3 '22 1450w

"The book does not pretend to comprehensiveness, but there is no reason why it should. Its function is to afford assistance when assistance is required, and it fulfils that function amply."

+ Lit R p642 My 6 '22 280w
Outlook 130:560 Ap 5 '22 50w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Lilian. 293p $2 Doran [6s Cassell]

22-23568

"Lilian is the daughter of a middle class proprietor of an art school. He lost his money through bad judgment on the market and died without a penny. He had kept Lilian home to look at, and she had not learned to earn her living. She was thrown upon the world. Lilian gets a job as a typist in an all-night typing establishment. She runs away with her employer, a middle aged man, who has undertaken the job of making her, because, as he imparts to her, 'a woman wants making. Only a man can make a woman. She has to be formed; she can't do it herself.' The woman maker takes her to the most elegant of places, the Riviera. There his job becomes a matter for the most delicate technique; he makes her a mistress of the art of love. The great tutor develops, conveniently, a mortal pneumonia, and on his deathbed he is informed that there is to be a child. Again he is generous; he turns over his typing establishment to Lilian. Thus is Lilian able to lord it over the cats who have been gossiping about her."—N Y Tribune

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p4 N 25 '22 1300w

"'Lilian' is not an impressive book. Whether or not it belongs to Bennett's best brand, it certainly falls short of his best quality." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 109:389 D 23 '22 700w

"'Lilian' is somewhat after the manner of 'The Pretty Lady,' but by no means as fine a book. It has speed, precision and movement, but it seems to us a little lacking in emotion. We are not deceived by its ease into believing that this was a week-end job upon the part of Arnold Bennett, but we do feel that he is merely taking his technique out for a little exercise in order to keep it in condition for more exacting tasks to come." Heywood Brown

+ — Int Bk R p19 D '22 880w

"'Lilian,' in spite of its breezy competence, is neither much better nor much worse than the stories constantly turned out by providers of popular entertainment who have never attained Mr. Bennett's fame." J. W. Krutch

+ — Nation 116:124 Ja 31 '23 100w

"'Lilian' is a slight, extremely lively, extremely prosaic, admirably written, adroitly told story; it will count in Arnold Bennett's work, though it is long short of being a great novel. Candour is one of Mr. Bennett's greatest literary assets; a level head is another; together they almost deodorise the vulgarity always present in some degree when he describes people as he does in this book, 'having a good time.'"

+ — New Statesman 20:110 O 28 '22 1650w
N Y Times p10 N 5 '22 750w

"A very light story, Mr. Bennett's very lightest. But it is told with a narrative skill and sprightliness that never deserts Mr. Bennett." Burton Rascoe

+ — N Y Tribune p8 N 12 '22 950w

"Accomplished, if uninspiring, technique devoted to things not worth doing." Gerald Gould

— Sat R 134:726 N 11 '22 210w

"Full of vulgarity, and again and again its effects are produced with a flashy precision which is both excessive and superficial. Where, then, is the merit of the book? It lies in the writer's power of story-telling. The story is without complexity, a straightforward, simple narrative (the easiest form of novel to write); but Mr. Bennett has made it vivid and he has made it dramatic. The scenes and events, live with a hard and rather brutal brilliancy."

+ — Spec 129:sup662 N 11 '22 1000w
Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 14 '23 420w

"Mr. Bennett is an amazingly able craftsman; in the clever jointing of his work there is nothing to indicate the position of the flaw within—if there be any. It is no part of his scheme to represent the girl as giving herself out of passion and so ennobling her action by the acceptance of risks. She is exhibited frankly as longing for fine clothes, and as conceiving love as no more than a sentimental warmth of which she is to be the cherished object. . . . Mr. Bennett is the most indulgent of writers to the children of his fancy, and we have to like them; and, in a purely material world such as that in which they have their being, they ring true."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p664 O 19 '22 560w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Love match; a play in five scenes. 117p $1.50 Doran 822

On the closing pages of this comedy of love, when Hugh Russ and his young wife Nina are having one of the periodical quarrels which alternate with their brief periods of rapture, Nina's sister intervenes and tells them that they are no better than a pair of children, that marriage is not and never can be logical, that the husband who argues and reasons with his wife is lost, that the fundamental thing in the relations of these two is that they are absurdly in love with each other and that this fact is enough to build their happiness on. For the rest the play consists mostly of lively dialogs between Hugh and Nina.

Booklist 18:355 J1 '22
Cleveland p66 S '22

"Not Bennett at his best, except in the brilliant opening scene. It is Bennett gone back to his pot-boiler days, but carrying with him flashes of his later and more philosophic wit and a mellow knowledge of human nature. A rather unimportant drama, nevertheless."

— + Lit R p779 J1 1 '22 70w

"The possibilities have not been translated into dramatic terms. The opportunity for humor is self-evident, yet the author has not made the best of his self-created vehicle. 'The Love Match' does not radiate wit. It is often dull and verbose in the quality of its dialog."

— Springfield Republican p8 S 26 '22 200w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Mr Prohack. 313p $1.75 Doran [7s 6d Methuen]

22-6319

Mr Prohack at forty-six, after twenty years in the Treasury department, finds himself among the "new poor" to which state the war had reduced the salaried middle-class. Just as his wife had announced her utter inability to manage any longer on her house-keeping allowance he most unexpectedly comes into an inheritance of ten thousand pounds a year, an income which in a short time is doubled. Mr Prohack's endeavors to become a practising philosopher and to acquire the gentle art of idleness, his mild adventures in romance and his son's in high finance, his whimsical dealings with his wife and the sudden signs of fragility in himself and his wife as the result of their wealth, all this is told with humor and an undertone of sarcasm. In the end he comes to the decision that "some one ought to be economic and productive" and that, tho it might kill him, he would die producing.

"A light-hearted and lightweight satire on the vanity of riches and the weaknesses of human beings. If it is true that the test of a novel's excellence is its power to touch the sense of recognition, 'Mr. Prohack' should be most excellent; for it not only touches that sense but smites it." E. W. Hawkins

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf My '22 440w

"Less serious than the Five towns stories, but amusing and entertaining."

+ Booklist 18:235 Ap '22

"It is a charming story, tinged with authentic and whimsical irony, rapidly told, brightened by suave humor and tightened by good drama." Burton Rascoe

+ Bookm 55:198 Ap '22 390w

"The novel has no plot whatever, no momentous crises, no sensational incidents; nevertheless, when we close this volume of more than four hundred solidly printed pages, it is with the unusual feeling of having been agreeably interested from beginning to end."

+ Cath World 115:698 Ag '22 190w

Cleveland p34 My '22

"Has a little of all of the best things in the various Arnold Bennetts who have entertained this world. Mr. Bennett's grave triviality has always been one of his most endearing qualities; here it is joined to everything expert in his manner of telling a story and to his abounding, if not high, humour."

+ Dial 72:431 Ap '22 120w

"There is no doubt that Mr. Bennett has done much better than this in the past. The book reads like a good-humored parody of the author's own style. So shrewd a judge of books as Mr. Bennett must be perfectly well aware of his own mannerisms, and here he seems to have accentuated them, to the detriment of the story." W: McFee

— Lit R p483 Mr 11 '22 980w

"Mr. Prohack" is an entertainment, a successful entertainment, for of all Mr. Arnold Bennett's lighter novels it is the most charming. . . In 'Mr. Prohack' there is no faltering; the end is as good as the beginning." Forrest Reid

+ Nation and Ath 31:268 My 20 '22 920w

"Mr. Bennett has showered honours a little too thick on his modest hero. He is credited with a disturbing faculty of seeing things baldly as they are; he also sees them with a beglamoured eye. It is this double and conflicting vision in Mr. Bennett which makes this novel queer, as well as vivid and extremely honest."

+ New Statesman 19:96 Ap 29 '22 1500w
Reviewed by L. M. Field

N Y Times p14 F 26 '22 880w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:197 My '22

Pratt p34 Ap '22

"It is an extremely interesting, amusing, provocative book. The psychology of this Mr. Prohack is well and truly done; the trouble is that it works through external circumstances of an artificial, elaborate, and yet rather incredible kind."

+ Sat R 133:498 My 13 '22 370w

"No reader can finish this book without acquiring an affection for Mr. Prohack, he is entirely delightful and perfectly alive and human. But when we come to the character on which Mr. Arnold Bennett has most obviously prided himself, the wife Marian, our sympathies are alienated. . . Apart from her, Mr. Bennett's book is extraordinarily dexterous, most amusing and well-observed. It is satisfying, long, thoroughly amusing, full of mild, agreeable cynicism, and puts no strain on the intellect."

+ Spec 128:694 Je 3 '22 1000w

"We have enjoyed 'Mr. Prohack' with a curious mixed enjoyment like a dish in which sweet and bitter cross and heighten each other . . . You might call the book satire or farce and it is both, but mainly farce."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p287 My 4 '22 1700w

Wis Lib Bul 18:103 Ap '22

BENNETT, HENRY STANLEY. Pastons and their England; studies in an age of transition. (Cambridge studies in mediæval life and thought) 289p $5 Macmillan [15s Cambridge univ. press]

914.2 Paston letters. Great Britain—History

—Lancaster and York, 1399-1485. England

—Social life and customs (Eng ed 22-26479)

"The Paston Letters were written between the years 1422 and 1509, chiefly among members of a Norfolk family which rose from the standing of yeomen to knighthood and a position of importance in the shire. The correspondence forms an unequalled store of evidence about certain orders of English society during the last stages of the decay of the feudal system and just before the dawn of the Renaissance and a museum of documents for the life of the landed gentry and the ranks immediately above and below them; but for readers who are new to mediæval studies it is a museum largely without labels, and the services of an explanatory guide are desirable. The expository method of 'The Pastons and their England' consists in taking a number of subjects—the rise of the family, marriages, parents and children, the occupations of women, houses and furniture, books, law, religion, and the like—and discussing them in the light of the Letters, with illustrative extracts from the text and from other contemporary sources."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 18:359 J1 '22

"To students of mediæval life this volume, with its systematized information, should be of considerable value."

Boston Transcript p6 J1 12 '22 340w

"Mr. Bennett has on the whole accomplished his task admirably, and the book is one which will be read with interest by many who would never have attempted to study the originals, but now will be incited to do so." C. L. Kingsford

+ Eng Hist R 38:106 Ja '23 900w

"It is possible to piece together from these letters a vivid picture of mediæval life."

Llewelyn Powys

+ Freeman 6:20 S 13 '22 1100w

Lit R p31 S 16 '22 600w

"Mr. Bennett has proved himself an excellent reproducer of a dead society, mainly because Mr. Bennett has been cautious. Sweeping arguments from single instances are not to his taste. . . We cannot be quite sure that the Pastons were characteristic specimens of their class. They were so to some extent, but they probably exaggerated its faults."

+ — New Statesman 19:190 My 20 '22 980w

"We can pardon sentimentalism in an editor when we find an eye for the picturesque, a talent for description, and ability to write simply and directly. Mr. Bennett has gone to a large number of contemporary sources to eke out gaps in the Paston correspondence, and has made adequate use of them."

+ — Sat R 133:442 Ap 29 '22 800w

"A certain degree of modernization of the text is inevitable, in the interests of the general reader; but the process is by no means pure gain. Any sort of exegesis, displaying and disentangling the fifteenth century to the twentieth, is bound to result in false values. . . The connective narrative might have been retrenched to make room for much more of the actual stuff of the Letters."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p161 Mr 16 '22 3200w

BENNETT-THOMPSON, LILLIAN. See Thompson, L. B.

BENOIT, PIERRE. Salt Lake; tr. from the French by Florence and Victor Llona. 377p $2 Knopf

22-5458

The American publisher of this French novel, which appeared serially in the Revue de France, advertises it as a best-seller in France. It is a melodramatic tale of Salt Lake City in the days of Brigham Young, its heroine being a beautiful Irish-American girl who fell prey to the Mormons.

"Surely no personage of such fiery breed would have tamely consented to the indignities heaped upon M. Benoit's heroine, and with the first touch of unreality his tale falls into little bits. Yet she is presumably to be the strongest character in the book. The rest, Père d'Exiles, Sarah, in particular the Reverend Jemini Gwinnett, are excellently portrayed. On the whole, M. Benoit has done quite well enough in reconstructing troublous and amazing times in a land other than his own."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '22 350w

"M. Benoit has succeeded in outlining a story with a thematic idea that has possibilities—but all that he has done is to outline it. His story has a solidly built framework and not much more. His superstructure is unnatural and disproportionate and he has created opportunities which, followed out, might turn his story from its baldly awkward manner into a tale full of life and feeling." H. W.

— Detroit News p16 My 14 '22 360w

"As a result of telling such a tale in the barest of scenario styles M. Benoit has sold 150,000 copies in France in a few months. Discussing Benoit and 'Salt Lake' in the New York Times, Stephane Lauzanne says that 'after all it's the public that must be right'; but we must say that it seems to us that this is a peculiarly unfortunate example by which to prove the success of the method of popular acclaim for the election of immortals." J. W. Krutch

— Nation 114:sup438 Ap 12 '22 350w

N Y Times p16 My 28 '22 150w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERICK. Miss Mapp. 310p $1.75 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

From the bow window of her garden room which commanded an excellent view of her street and her neighbors, the ill-natured and inquisitive Miss Mapp observed the High Street of Tilling and the social movements of her neighbors, sometimes supplementing her view by observations from her roof with a pair of binoculars. From her window she planned the strategy of her spiteful campaigns and watched with a special vigilance the doings of her two bachelor neighbors, Major Flint and Captain Puffin. The story is satirical thruout, a malicious picture of life in a small town, its bridge and tea parties, its gossip, meanness and snobbery. It has a few comic situations.

"This new novel does not belong with the best work Mr. Benson has done, even though that best is itself not of so fine a quality as one feels that he might have produced had he so chosen. This latest book is clever, as all that he does is clever, light, amusing, satirical, written in the smooth and easy style his earlier books have made familiar to us. Its people are real: one acknowledges their verisimilitude, and is deeply, humbly grateful to that beneficent fortune which was so kind as to cast one's lot elsewhere than in Tilling, the home of 'Miss Mapp.'"

+ — N Y Times p14 F 4 '23 900w

"Mr. Benson is a satirist. He invents prodigiously mean and silly people and then, by exposing them in ridiculous situations, rubs in how silly and mean they are. But, as he never credits any of them with even the smallest degree of sense, pluck or kindness, the satire entirely fails of its effect. The whole book is utterly unworthy of Mr. Benson's considerable reputation." Gerald Gould

— Sat R 134:684 N 4 '22 220w

"Not even the smart and natty writing of Mr. Benson can galvanize any life into the futilities of his Sussex Tilling."

— Spec 129:975 D 23 '22 350w

"Mr. Benson is playing a game, and a game that he has long been known to play better than most—the game of mimicking stupid and ill-bred people. They make good flavouring, but poor food."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p630 O 5 '22 310w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERICK. Peter. 327p $1.75 Doran [7s 6d Cassell]

22-15212

Peter Mainwaring gave just enough of himself to the various social functions in London to answer requirements. He was always courteous and liked by most people but there was a curious reserve about him for which his parents were no doubt accountable. His mother, to use her own expression, had had her individuality hammered back into her by the intolerable egoism of a husband whose conceit in his prowess as an artist was overwhelming. Peter had a staunch friend in Nellie Heaton, but he never allowed himself to care too much and she married some one else. Silvia, a boyish attractive girl loved him. He seemed to care for her in his cold way, and she had money, so they were married and led a harmonious life devoid of all real love as far as Peter was concerned. Then the test of his love came, and he realized how strong the impulse was that made him risk his life for Silvia.

BENSON, E. F.—Continued

Booklist 19:19 O '22

Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '22 800w

Cleveland p90 D '22

"In 'Peter' [Mr. Benson] has applied his talents to a story that is almost able to make his characters' social twaddle and everlasting innuendo interesting and significant. It cannot quite do it, but it almost can."

— + Lit R p795 Jl 8 '22 260w

"As a study of love and marriage among the new generation the novel is especially interesting. For it is keen in its analysis, delicate in its probing into motive and action and in its report sensitive to every shade of purpose and conduct. 'Peter' is a charming story, written with all of E. F. Benson's old-time skill and knowledge of human nature."

+ N Y Times p18 Je 25 '22 600w

"'Peter' is a pleasant, competently told tale and good summer reading."

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 9 '22 700w

"In his new novel Mr. E. F. Benson has probably embarked upon the difficult attempt to describe the psychology of the young people who have grown up since the War and it must be confessed that in the early chapters he is rather successful. The minor characters make a good background to the story, though Peter's terrible father, who executes large cartoons in oil colours, is so highly caricatured as to be absolutely incredible."

+ — Spec 128:405 Ap 1 '22 320w

"'Peter' will cause no stir, will never rank with 'Dodo' as something of a scandalous success, but it will not dampen the ardor of those who look forward to another of Benson's entertaining novels as an event worth waiting for." S. A.

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 16 '22 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p155 Mr 9 '22 370w

Wis Lib Bul 18:216 O '22

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. Prisoners of Hartling. 273p $1.75 Macmillan [7s 6d Collins]

22-3895

"A very rich old man [Garvice Kenyon] insists on all his children and grandchildren and relatives living with him in his country house; if they show the slightest disposition to move and live their own lives he very delicately gives them to understand that they will be cut out of his will; and gradually they lose all initiative and sit in Hartling 'like a party in a parlour, all silent and all damned.' Into this circle there blunders a young doctor, a grandnephew of the old man, who gradually becomes subject to the paralysing influence of the situation and is rescued only just in time by the youngest girl of the family. They resolve to go away together and marry, and the announcement kills the old man. After his death it turns out that he has been amusing himself at his family's expense, as in a will made forty years before he has left everything to the least attractive of his daughters; but she, one perceives, will carry on the business."—New Statesman

"Few [novels] progress so steadily towards a rational outcome as 'The Prisoners of Hartling.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 18 '22 850w

"Mr Beresford has done rather well the difficult job of distinguishing the individuals in this unit of greed and servility and apprehension, less well the easier characters of the two rebels against authority. The climax is good and the anti-climax, which the author thoroughly understands how to use, is remarkable. The single fault of the book is a sort of gentle dullness in several reaches of a none too lively stream."

+ — Dial 72:535 My '22 130w

"Although it is not an important addition to the Beresford shelf, perhaps, it is, nevertheless, a competent novel which gets sharply under the surface of people and lets the consequences develop without any high-handed interference from the author." L. B.

+ — Freeman 6:22 S 13 '22 120w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Ind 108:333 Ap 1 '22 250w

"The limpid simplicity of Mr. Beresford's diction, the subtlety of his portrayal, and the consummate skill of his method of description carry his book despite lack of striking incident and without more than the most primary complications. . . . The unconvincingness of Garvice Kenyon himself makes of 'The Prisoners of Hartling,' despite its exquisite artistry, a novel not nearly so good as its merits portend." Amy Loveman

+ — Lit R p503 Mr 18 '22 780w

"In this book, at least, Mr. Beresford has become a story-teller pure and simple. And so we can say nothing about it, except that it is a very good story. There is no escaping from it. Once begun, it has to be read through to the bitter end. But it is a pastime only." J. M. Murry

+ Nation and Ath 31:24 Ap 1 '22 1600w

New Repub 31:141 Je 28 '22 100w

"An exceedingly ingenious book written round a quite original idea. The trouble is that there is no pleasure to be sucked out of the book, except the dry, intellectual pleasure of observing its ingenious construction. As Mr Beresford has not unleashed his style on this occasion this cannot be counted among his best books." Rebecca West

+ — New Statesman 18:678 Mr 18 '22 190w

"In style and characterization, in proportion and development, in the handling and portrayal of the various Kenyons, individually and as a group, the novel shows an artistry, a restraint and sense of values which are exceptional. 'The Prisoners of Hartling' is a novel that has interest, reality and distinction." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p11 Mr 19 '22 620w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:260 Je '22

"It is told with Mr. Beresford's accustomed mastery of his material and economy of style."

+ Sat R 133:446 Ap 29 '22 200w

"In spite of the originality of its theme, 'The Prisoners of Hartling' has too slight a motive to be quite worthy of presentation as a full-length novel. Having made this protest, we may acknowledge that the idea is admirably worked out, and the picture of the luxurious and intolerable conditions at Hartling, a country-house near London, is admirably conceived and executed. The book is well-written and the differentiation of the characters, though their circumstances are all the same, is cleverly contrived."

+ — Spec 128:309 Mr 11 '22 550w

"The novel is not Mr. Beresford's best. Nevertheless if it lacks the substance of the Jacob Stahl trilogy, and never quite attains the sparkle and finish of 'The Jervaise Comedy,' it is a distinct improvement upon 'Revolution' its immediate predecessor. The author is headed in the right direction." G. B. Dutton

+ — Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 500w

"Mr. Beresford's style is limpid, his construction finished, and his delineation of unusual character always effective. But there is a strain of improbability about the whole. Mr. Beresford has so carefully shut in the action behind the stone wall of Mr. Kenyon's prison-house, that he loses the advantage of grouping his special cases with the more normal crowd of the world."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p139 Mr 2 '22 460w

Wis Lib Bul 18:216 O '22

BERGENGREN, RALPH WILHELM ALEXIS. Gentlemen all and merry companions. 247p il $2 Brimmer

These ten short stories are all about the merry adventures of ten fierce pirates. In the first story they are all becalmed on Nonesuch island, seated comfortably in rocking chairs—appropriated from a New England missionary society—but bored to death, for none of them can read. With the first stirring breeze they sail north and capture a schoolma'am. All goes well now on the island until the pirate scholars begin to conjugate the verb love. Then war reigns, but the strategy of Mehitabel and the youngest pirate, Jonathan, wins the day and forces the rest to take them safely back to her father's cranberry farm on the Cape. Contents: Mehitabel; His idol's eye; Delilah; Dead Man's inn; The friend of man; The queen of girls; Fannie; Eight bad men and true; The glue that binds; The refining influence of Captain Kidd.

"Deep knowledge and keen humor are interwoven with the nonsense of this book into so perfect a whole that readers of all ages will delight to set sail with these gentlemen all and will unquestionably find them merry companions." L. H. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 13 '22 460w

"These pirates of Mr. Bergengren's are most amusingly and most endearingly childish. And the style in which their hankering after higher things is narrated is most engaging. They are buccaneer kin to Barrie's Captain Hook. They will be enjoyed by devotees of 'The Bab Ballads.' Mr. Bergengren's interspersed songs and chants are quite delicious, and in John Sloan the book has found its perfect illustrator." W. R. Benet

+ Lit R p335 D 23 '22 720w

"These pirates of Ralph Bergengren's are in a class by themselves. Burdened with crime as they are, or pretend to be, these gentlemen adventurers are as merry a crew as ever scuttled a ship or forced a luckless victim to walk the plank."

+ N Y Times p14 D 17 '22 380w

"Mr. Bergengren has made the most of the childishness and naivete of his pirates, but he has not overworked the qualities. His writing sustains the illusion, and the chronicle is not patently impossible. The chants they sing are splendid, and John Sloan's illustrations are the last ingredient that makes the book, a thoroughly enjoyable bit of excellent humor."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a F 4 '23 300w

BERNHARDT, SARAH. Idol of Paris; a romance; tr. from the French by Mary Tongue. 320p $1.75 Macaulay [7s 6d C. Palmer]

22-5071

The story of Esperance Darbois, who wins the consent of her father, a professor of philosophy, to allow her to follow a stage career. From the moment of her first appearance her path is crowned with success and she becomes much beloved by the public of Paris. Victorien Sardou is charmed with her grace, a duke and count duel for her hand, and through the book we follow the triumphs, joys, temptations, and sorrows of this young actress who finally weds the Duke de Morlay.

"The story never for a moment becomes vital or gripping."

— Boston Transcript p5 My 3 '22 220w

"As a novel the thing is preposterous. Nobody can understand or approve of the combination of great genius and sentimental goose that Mme. Bernhardt offers us in Esperance Darbois." G. W. J.

— Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p7 Ap 23 '22 1000w

"Her book is entertaining and it holds the attention, but it seems to have been glossed over into the serial story type, when it might have been really powerful. The translation seems flat in places."

+ — Lit R p608 Ap 2 '22 160w

"The book is full of action, has bright dialogue—as one might expect with the name of such an author on the title page—and with it all, a fairly strong, well sustained, logical plot."

+ N Y Times p16 Ap 30 '22 600w

"It is an innocent, old-fashioned little story, and romantic young ladies with stage aspirations will derive great, if fallacious encouragement from its pages."

+ — Sat R 132:646 D 3 '21 440w

BERUETE Y MORET, AURELIANO DE. Goya as a portrait painter. 1td ed 216p il $15 Houghton [52s 6d Constable]

753.6 Goya y Lucientes, Francisco José de

"The author of this work is a leading Spanish critic and Director of the Prado Museum. It deals, as the title indicates, with only one side of the painter's genius; but it is a side on which he was a pioneer of much that is most characteristic in modern art, and Mr. Selwyn Brinton who translates the work, hazards the statement that Goya is 'perhaps the greatest portraitist who ever lived.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The work in its entirety is worthy and admirable." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 N 29 '22 1150w

Lit R p386 Ja 13 '23 400w

"Altogether, Goya emerges from these pages as a much more credible person than we have known hitherto. . . With excellent photographs for evidence, the comments of so sound a critic as Beruete, a bibliography of writings on Goya, and what seems to be a complete list of his portraits, this is indeed a book to be received with gratitude." C. M.

+ Nation and Ath 32:59 O 14 '22 600w

"A beautifully illustrated, thorough monograph. It ranks among the best books on one of the most interesting of European painters. It tells the reader more about Goya's life, too, than any other book in English about him."

+ New Statesman 20:supxviii D 2 '22 40w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:23 Ja '23

"Señor Bernete has a very thorough command of the material of his study; but while conveying a lot of information, his volume is a little loose and discursive in its style as well as provincial in its outlook, and will probably in most cases be consulted as a work of reference and perused as a picture book rather than read through."

+ — Sat R 134:552 O 14 '22 450w

"Senor Beruete y Moret has made a minute and searching study of Goya's work as a portrait painter. His has given a detailed account of his technique, the phases of his development and the influence which he exercised upon the future of painting. In spite of his deep admiration for his subject's painting he maintains throughout the book an attitude of just and reasonable criticism."

+ Spec 129:sup668 N 11 '22 1800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p601 S 21 '22 50w

BEST, WILLIAM NEWTON. Burning liquid fuel. 2d ed rev and enl 341p il $5 U.P.C. bk. [25s Spon]

662.6 Combustion. Liquid fuel. Petroleum as fuel 22-2457

"A practical treatise on the perfect combustion of oils and tars, giving analyses, calorific values and heating temperatures of various gravities with information on the design and proper installation of equipment for all classes of service." (Subtitle) In the compilation of this revised and enlarged edition of a book first published in 1913, the author has derived his data from thousands of actual tests. It is very fully illustrated, the equipment shown being selected from 42,000 installations in successful operation. These illustrations are not mere photographs but give interior construction and reveal the most modern application of liquid fuel so as to obtain perfect combustion.

BEST, WILLIAM NEWTON—Continued

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:285 Je '22
St Louis 20:215 S '22

BEWER, JULIUS AUGUST. Literature of the Old Testament in its historical development. (Records of civilization; sources and studies) 452p $5 Columbia univ. press

221 Bible. Old Testament—History, Literary 22-16183

A literary history of the Old Testament which traces the origin of the individual books, shows how they grew out of the life and history of the people, how they in turn influenced the development of Israel, and how they finally became united to form the canon of the Old Testament. The chapters follow the order in which the various books originated.

"The treatment is scholarly; and the author's feeling for literary qualities enables him to offer many a happy interpretation which the ordinary professor of theology is apt to miss." H: Neumann

+ Freeman 6:403 Ja 3 '23 550w
J Religion 3:104 Ja '23 40w

"Notable and inspiring book, felicitously edited by Professor James T. Shotwell. . . By the helpful contribution of the editor the information is so deftly interwoven with the illuminating quotation that the reader almost unconsciously comes to regard the whole as a kind of persuasive introduction to the Book of books." J. S. Auerbach

+ Lit R p334 D 23 '22 1450w

BIBESCO, ELIZABETH (ASQUITH) (PRINCESS ANTOINE BIBESCO). Balloons. 168p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

22-23118

"Her plan [as in her first book] is to get into the middle of the situation or the person and choose the vital point. In seeing and showing the point Princess Bibesco is unerring—the point of a tragedy, of a Dalmatian dog, of a jest, of a prig, of a life. The author will just play a chord for you: something quite simple, she professes, glad or sorry as it may be; but listen, and you hear its implications ringing away as high and as low as you can catch them. One feels as if in the presence of a very shrewd eye, by no means unkindly or hard, but sensitive and quick to notice how people are playing the social game. Behind the perception of comedy, and of the comedy in sadness, lies thought; and the touch is that of a musician, the revealing touch."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Underneath the patent vanity of the surface there remains something really unusual in these sketches. Princess Bibesco possesses a fund of vitality and the inestimable gift of seeing things from a slightly original angle. What [she] lacks is true understanding, a real sympathy with the people about whom she writes. Until she gains some measure of that understanding it would be useless to prophesy a brilliant career for her. She amuses us for a moment, but she repels us, for her brilliancy is a shallow brilliancy." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 6 '22 850w

"Clever writing this certainly is, but its air of pretentiousness is unwarranted. It is as far from brilliant writing as polished brass is from sunshine."

+ Lit R p423 Ja 27 '23 420w

"There is much in it to baffle the stupid, little to shock the respectable; the book will not be a success in the suburbs. Almost all the stories in it deal with love, but it is the intellectualised love that is more a refined occupation than a natural impulse." Raymond Mortimer

New Statesman 20:383 D 30 '22 1100w

"She possesses the power of comprehending the quality of little things, of emphasizing the hardly noticeable trait or gesture or word that illuminates the entire situation. It is the sort of thing that must be whittled down carefully; the approach must be delicately made; it is so easy to overwrite. In 'Balloons' the author has been particularly successful in restraining herself from any undue emphasis. The situation is flashed before the reader and a single phrase drives it home."

+ N Y Times p25 N 26 '22 550w

"Princess Bibesco is an artist in brilliant superficialities. Here are sixteen sketches as colorful as their title would suggest, yet of no more permanent stuff—sketches that leave a marked impression of brightness and little more. Words are piled into puzzling but effective forms; phrases are turned with deft sensitivity; throughout the book is distilled a curious and distinctive charm of sophisticated femininity and of feminine innuendo." S. T. Beach

+ N Y Tribune p32 D 10 '22 700w

"However smooth and self-sufficient their outside may be, there is a good deal 'in' these little sketches and stories. The range is wider in this book than it was in Princess Bibesco's first book. She tried there once to 'carry a thing through,' and did not do it well. Here she carries more and carries it farther without a stumble."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p859 D 21 '22 400w

BIBESCO, ELIZABETH (ASQUITH) (PRINCESS ANTOINE BIBESCO). I have only myself to blame. 172p $2 Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

21-20192

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

"They are exquisitely done things, sometimes perhaps too ostentatiously decorated with description, and occasionally lacking a nicety in the choice of words, but, for all that, excellent studies. They tantalize because they insist on continuing after the finish mark, they irritate because they are so short; but most of all they harm because they are so real."

+ Bookm 55:76 Mr '22 160w

"The book contains several neat and convincing scraps of microscopy." V. G.

+ Freeman 4:550 F 15 '22 300w

"The indictment that I draw against this book is that it is brilliantly done. Its fatuity should have been obvious, its style should have been as vicious as its philosophy. Its trumpery emotions, its tin-plated sentiment, its shoddy standards, should have been celebrated in a fashion as worthless as themselves. But unfortunately, it is nothing of the sort. The book is clever, witty, highly entertaining from cover to cover." G. W. J.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 Mr 12 '22 420w

The stories that the Princess Bibesco has gathered into her book are vivid, vulgar episodes, without beginning, without end, and without explanation. She writes in short, snappy sentences, and her knack for similes is untrammelled by respect for God or man. She sketches characters with the quickness and vividness of a cartoonist. She has undoubtedly done exceedingly well what she set out to do."

+ Lit R p420 F 11 '22 300w

"The brief tales and sketches unite the acuteness of a worldly philosopher with the candor of a precocious child. Things that everyone knows thickly and dimly she raises into the clearness of a truly watchful consciousness and expresses with a frank naturalness and worldly elegance." L. L.

+ Nation 114:261 Mr 1 '22 400w

"They are not only charming, and fresh, but they have a nobility; they are seriously concerned with our lonely emotional needs. And there are things in them that touch the very core of one's heart." Clarence Day, jr.

+ New Repub 30:115 Mr 22 '22 1500w

Reviewed by Rebecca West

New Statesman 18:621 Mr 4 '22 470w

"There is little literary or artistic quality in these stories, exclusively concerned with the stale reiteration of passion and we are unable to discover the 'wit' and 'brilliance' that might be some compensation for the gross lack of taste that is conspicuous throughout the book."

— Sat R 133:203 F 25 '22 1350w

"They are indiscreet up to and beyond the limit allowed by the conventions even of this indulgent age."

— Spec 128:246 F 25 '22 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p91 F 9 '22 450w

BIBLE. OLD TESTAMENT. Modern reader's Bible for schools: the Old Testament; by Richard G. Moulton. 2v v 1 536p $2.50 Macmillan

22.15

22-3124

In the belief that the present form and arrangement of the Bible with its mixture of great and small, text and note, matter and appendix, poetry and prose, are a hindrance to its literary appreciation, Dr Moulton has prepared this volume, following the companion volume of the New Testament. By selection and condensation, by the omission of exegesis and notes which interrupt the continuity of the narrative, and arbitrary chapter and verse divisions which take from the pleasure of Bible reading, he has brought out the unity of the Bible and presented it in literary form.

Booklist 18:211 Ap '22

"In so far as it leads to a better acquaintance with the Old Testament it will of course render valuable service; but the editor's literary arrangements must not be taken too seriously."

J Religion 2:330 My '22 50w

"The selection and rearrangement have been done with admirable skill, at least to the end of producing a coherent, unified literary product. No doubt opinions will differ as to the need of doing it at all, but there are obvious gains in the process. It certainly is more readable and more likely to hold the youthful student's attention than the Bible as an unmitigated whole."

+ Lit R p478 Mr 4 '22 180w

"Valuable introductory notes have been written, modern scholarship has been given its due. It is not a substitute for the old book, but is suitable for the upper grades of our schools, nor is its value confined to the young."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Jl 2 '22 230w

BICKERSTAFFE-DREW, FRANCIS BROWN-ING DREW. See Ayscough, J., pseud.

BIERSTADT, EDWARD HALE. Aspects of Americanization. 260p $2 Stewart Kidd

325.7 Americanization. Immigrants in the United States 22-11161

The author endeavors to give what he believes the correct point of view on Americanization and also to supply the information needed by the worker in that field. He cautions those interested in the work not to look upon the foreigner either as a political menace, an industrial unit, or a refractory child but as a normal human being forced to live for the moment under abnormal conditions which need Americanizing far more than the unfortunate immigrants who are obliged to undergo them. He shows up that pseudo-Americanization that has made Americanization but a synonym for suppression and holds that Americanism cannot be taught but must be experienced; i.e. the immigrant must be helped to become, so far as it is possible for him, an active part of America. Information regarding the activities of organizations engaged in Americanization is given in the appendices.

Booklist 19:146 F '23

"Mr. Bierstadt slashes to the marrow of the situation with a clean yet merciless weapon, revealing America to herself with unflattering clarity."

Bookm 56:518 D '22 180w

"For those who desire a better understanding of this immensely intricate subject, I know of no one volume more likely than this of Mr. Bierstadt's to clear the atmosphere and present a really humane and American view of the immigrant." J. P. Gavitt

+ Lit R p45 S 23 '22 480w

Reviewed by Esther Johnston

Nation 115:528 N 15 '22 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:475 N '22

R of Rs 66:447 O '22 80w

St Louis 21:5 Ja '23

Survey 48:531 Jl 15 '22 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:250 N '22

BIGHAM, CLIVE. Prime ministers of Britain, 1721-1921. 370p il $8 Dutton [21s Murray]

923.2 Prime ministers. Statesmen, British (Eng ed 22-13612)

The book sketches the personal history of the thirty-six men, from Sir Robert Walpole to Lloyd George, who have held the office of Prime minister. The introductory chapter describes the evolution of the office and its name, and the last chapter is an analysis of the average length of office, origin, profession, qualities of leadership, etc. There is a full-page portrait of each man, a bibliography and an index.

Booklist 19:81 D '22

Boston Transcript p6 S 16 '22 450w

"This is no 'Mirrors of Downing Street,' but an eminently safe book for the young."

+ Ind 2:19 S 23 '22 110w

"Presented in brief and entertaining style, and the information which they contain is remarkable for its amount and variety, and in general for its accuracy."

+ Lit R p246 N 25 '22 380w

"Mr. Bigham's characterization seems to us easy and competent. He does not aim at epigram, but we suspect him of humor. Else why should he inform us that Lord Salisbury's specific against democracy was 'dogmatic religion, protection, and security?' We quarrel, without malice, with an epithet or two. Such small qualifications made, we applaud Mr. Bigham's accomplishment in the art of delineation in brief."

+ — Nation and Ath 31:509 Jl 8 '22 450w

"This handbook is unoriginal, but serviceable, impartial and studious."

+ — New Statesman 19:106 Ap 29 '22 210w

"Mr. Bigham's book would have been more illuminating had he been better versed in modern historical methods. He has certainly performed a useful service in bringing together the facts concerning the lives of the thirty-six men who have been Prime Minister. But historical science is now well beyond the stage where it can be satisfied with mere compilations of facts."

+ — N Y Times p6 N 19 '22 1400w

"Mr. Bigham's book is a comprehensive, serious and fair-minded history of the premiership." F. D. Perkins

+ N Y Tribune p28 D 10 '22 650w

Pratt p32 autumn '22

"We should like to congratulate the author on the sympathy, fairness, understanding and knowledge with which he has dealt with so many diverse characters and so long and controversial a period of history. He will, however, pardon us if we suggest that his book might have been more useful to the uninitiated reader if his Prime Ministers had been arranged in a more strictly chronological order."

+ — Sat R 133:417 Ap 22 '22 1000w

"His volume is a perfect treasure-house of good things, well and appositely set forth, in regard to the leading statesmen of the last two centuries. The bibliography at the end is a formidable list, but unlike the compilers of some lists of the sort, the author has read and re-read the books he schedules. If anybody with a sense of history wants a truly delightful piece of historical writing, plenteous

BIGHAM, CLIVE—Continued
without being stodgy, here is his chance. Prime Ministers of Great Britain does not contain a dull page." J. St L. Strachey
+ Spec 128:591 My 13 '22 2950w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Man from the wilds.
331p $1.75 Stokes [7s Ward, Lock] 22-2316

John Wreay was Canadian born and had lived all his life in the northern wilds as prospector and explorer, until the death of an English uncle made him one of the trustees of the uncle's step-daughter, Alice Elliot. When John, after some delay, arrives in England and finds that the estate has been mismanaged since his uncle's death and that Alice's inheritance is slipping away from her, he throws all his pioneer energy and knowledge into the breach to save it. It involves the reopening of an old copper mine of doubtful value and risking what little is left to himself and others. Alice, a wilful young girl, is inclined to resent his strong hand and to find him dull. In the course of his efforts the "forlorn hope" yields up unexpected riches and Alice discovers in John himself a veritable gold-mine of stanch and lovable qualities.

Booklist 18:235 Ap '22

Boston Transcript p7 Mr 18 '22 270w

"Furnishes excellent material with which to waste a few hours without being any the worse—or better—for it. It is not, however, a good book to go to sleep with. Somehow one doesn't go to sleep at once."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 JI 23 '22 170w

"It is literary artisanship of a high order, even though one might hesitate to give it a higher rating. It is all sufficiently well done to lift it above the commonplace average of such work."

+ Lit R p420 F 11 '22 200w

"The author shows himself, as is to be expected of a veteran in this class of fiction, a skilled literary craftsman. Not only are his descriptions colorful, graphic and convincing, but the plot carries one along smoothly, and the narrative has a full measure of suspense leading up to well-turned climaxes."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 4 '22 170w

"The situation is novel, and the 'man from the wilds' gets himself and his ward out of difficulties and into happiness, not very brilliantly, but still quite successfully."

+ Outlook 130:473 Mr 22 '22 130w

"The book compares favorably with the author's previous work and will, no doubt, satisfy his followers."

+ Spring'd Republican p15a My 7 '22 180w
Wis Lib Bul 18:134 My '22

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Northwest! (Eng title Mountaineers). 309p $1.75 Stokes 22-16874

"Jimmy Leyland, the son of a Lancashire mill owner, is a bit of a waster, but needs only British Columbia to make a man of him. He has got into bad company gambling and drinking. Luckily, a nice girl gives his slumbering self-respect a jolt, and starts him on the road to reform. He buys a ranch in the bush and tackles the strenuous life with an axe. But bad company is easier to pick up than to shake off. His sporting friends hang around and get him into a peck of trouble, with game wardens and mounted police. Plenty of things happen before Jimmy is through with the harvesting of his wild oats. He makes a clean job of it in the end, and when he goes back to England, to his inheritance, he takes with him a wife, a rancher's pretty daughter who, one feels, will know how to keep him in order the rest of his days."—N Y Tribune

"[The author] has a perfect right to mystify us in the beginning of the book. We expect him to do that. But when he keeps us guessing after the book is closed, we feel that we have been duped. It is bad policy to leave the reader with such an impression. Satisfied customers are just as important to a novelist as to a storekeeper."

+ N Y Times p28 Ag 27 '22 420w

Reviewed by W. Harris

N Y Tribune p4 Ag 27 '22 240w

Outlook 132:304 O 18 '22 50w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 180w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

BINGHAM, HIRAM. Inca land; explorations in the highlands of Peru. 365p il $5 Houghton 918.5 Peru—Description and travel. Incas 22-21189

The book represents the results of expeditions into the interior of Peru, conducted in 1911, 1912 and 1915 under the auspices of Yale university and the National geographic society. The party made the ascent of Coropuna and discovered on a peak of the Andes the remarkable lost capital of the Incas, Machu Picchu. Mr Bingham's account of these explorations is equally interesting as a book of travel and as a record of archeological work of great importance. There are numerous illustrations, a glossary, a bibliography, and an index.

"Treating a subject on which there is already a very extensive bibliography, Professor Bingham is not inferior to his brilliant predecessors—Squier, Markham, Wiener, Middendorf, and others. But the earlier pages are only a preparation for the last, which are an original contribution. Professor Bingham, as the discoverer of the Machu Picchu, Rosaspata, and Vilcambamba ruins, was the fittest to write their descriptions and the true interpretation in regard to Peruvian history." V. A. Belauende

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf F '23 450w

Booklist 19:118 Ja '23

"Like his earlier volumes it is colorful, and he does not neglect the dramatic moment. The thrill of discovery is given us here, as well as that of exploration." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:623 Ja '23 300w

"All the fascination of quest and conquest in the realm of exploration went into the making of this book and is sure to emerge again in the reading of it." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 15 '22 900w

"Interestingly written, and not only constitutes a valuable contribution to our knowledge of the antiquities of the country, but is also important as a record of travel in one of the least known parts of South America." M. H. Saville

+ Lit R p365 Ja 6 '23 1100w

"The account will prove of absorbing interest alike to the archæologist and the lover of travel books."

+ Outlook 132:675 D 13 '22 60w
R of Rs 66:672 D '22 60w

BINNS, OTTWELL. Lady of North Star. 291p $2 Knopf 22-4239

Corporal Bracknell of the Northwest Mounted Police had followed the man he hoped to take prisoner over four hundred miles of frozen waste. At the journey's end the stillness of the day is broken by the crack of a rifle shot. A young woman with the tell-tale rifle in her hand appears suddenly and then a few yards further on Bracknell discovers the body of Koono Dick, the object of his search, murdered, apparently, by his own wife. The story develops the solution of this mystery.

Booklist 18:235 Ap '22

"Mr. Binns makes his land of the great outdoors very alluring. Its discomforts are never mentioned, and its charms are idealized. Altogether a splendid, readable story."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 18 '22 310w
Cleveland p27 Ap '22

"On the whole, the book is written with a rather beautiful sobriety, depending for its effect not on a false meretricious punch but on the actual suspense and appeal of the situations."

+ Lit R p746 Je 17 '22 240w

"If the author of 'The Lady of North Star' was ever carried away by his story, there is no evidence of such sincerity in its pages. The tale rings hollow, and we cannot believe it because we cannot feel that the author believed it himself."

— N Y Times p7 Mr 12 '22 370w

Wis Lib Bul 18:134 My '22

BINYON, LAURENCE. Selected poems. 184p $2 Macmillan
821 22-12646

A selection of some seventy poems from this English poet, much of whose work has not been published in America. They are quiet, reflective poems, written apparently without effort and with a strong sense of meter. One of his longer poems, "The death of Adam," is included, also his tribute to America in the war, in the poem entitled "The new world."

"It is the sort of verse teachers used to like to read aloud in school because of its academic sense and the perfect beat of its feet. Every poem shows traces of careful workmanship which effectively irons out the original inspiration."

— Bookm 56:227 O '22 180w

"It is impossible to deny that there is a great deal, mainly traditional, in these poems. But who could deny the spirit that catches something tranquilly beautiful in the ancestral line of English poetic vision? At once, reading these poems, one becomes aware that here is the presence of an element that seems to have been smothered among the younger English poets. . . It is an art that reverences dignity, but a dignity gentle with a revealing radiance of the human spirit." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 15 '22 1200w

"Mr. Binyon is a true poet, although not of very heavy caliber; and his verses are full of a beauty which, if not of the highest order of loveliness, is still beauty. It required cleverness, sense, and true poetic talent to produce the little song with which this book begins." G. W. J.

+ — Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 25 '22 680w

Reviewed by W: R. Benet
Lit R p820 Jl 22 '22 450w

Nation 115:131 Ag 2 '22 20w

"Some of the work included is mediocre, much of it is charming though not especially important, and a few pieces possess that distinguished ring of finality which proclaims the achieved poem."

+ — Outlook 132:772 D 27 '22 350w

"His work voices the loneliness of the human soul, the striving after truth, the aspiration for the highest in love and in beauty."

Springf'd Republican p8 Je 17 '22 130w

BIRCK, LAURITS VILHELM. Theory of marginal value. (Studies in economics and political science) 351p $6 Dutton [14s Routledge]

330.1 Value. Prices. Economics 22-7424

"The purpose of this treatise is not to give an entire system of economics, but to initiate the student in the methods, notions, or fundamentals of the marginal theory, and at the same time to carry him so far as to enable him to work out the problems for himself." (Preface) The mechanics of economics are reserved for a second volume. Contents: Utility: Value and market; Relations of subjective prices; The normal market; Manipulated prices.

"Leaves one with a sense of university futility. Here is no lack of scholarship or honest hard work—but to what is it devoted?" H: R. Mussey

+ — Nation 115:283 S 20 '22 170w

"The aridity of the book is relieved by the acuteness of the analysis, and by many an unexpected application to the facts of the market-place and the problems of life. Altogether a work of subtle reasoning and acute observation too abstract and complicated for the ordinary reader, but suggestive to the advanced students; a book which the London School of Economics has done well to include in its valuable series."

+ New Statesman 19:48 Ap 15 '22 260w

BIRD, STEPHEN MOYLAN. In the sky garden; posthumous poems; preface by Francis Barton Gummere; selected and arranged with a biographical sketch by Charles Wharton Stork. 82p $1.50 Yale univ. press [7s 6d Milford]

811

22-20312

"The creator of these poems was a young West Point cadet who, under the intense wretchedness of environs not congenial, of enforced companionship distasteful to his high minded, clean hearted youth took his own life. Most of the poetry has the crudity of unformed ideas, but it is vivid with an idealism strangely set apart in the world's school life and reading the story of his youthful tragedy, one realizes the emotions from which have sprung these thoughts."—Lit R

"Set for the most part in carefully planned lines and filled with echoes of the past decades. The last lines, written just before his death, are his own epitaph, and are singularly lovely."

+ Lit R p232 N 13 '22 130w

"The poems collected in this volume show a poignant love of nature and a natural gift for song, a graceful fancy, a longing for beauty in all its forms, but no particular originality. They are the singing of youth, of talented youth, and they have a brightness and a lyricism that must delight any lover of music in word and line, but they are not yet the expression of an individual personality. They are the exquisite reflections of the outer world on a quick, sensitive spirit, however, and well worth preserving in this form, since they are all we shall have from the young poet." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ — N Y Times p16 N 5 '22 400w

"Mr. Bird shows a high quality which might have led him to fame."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p750 N 16 '22 20w

BIRDWOOD, WILBUR D., pseud. Euclid's outline of sex; a Freudian study. 68p il $1.50 Holt
817 Humor 22-22795

In this burlesque on psychoanalysis the author constructs a life of Euclid out of his unconscious, proves that he had a grandmother and an Oedipus complex, that he could never get away from the eternal triangle, that the story of Balaam's ass is a sex story. He makes other illuminating revelations that had escaped Freud. Illustrations by Herb Roth.

"Appallingly dull. The true identity of the writer is unknown to me, but he should be thankful for his anonymity. There is scarcely a single visible spark of humor in his entire book." R. E. Sherwood

— Bookm 56:767 F '23 120w

"This book is a real lark." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R 1:37 D '22 30w

"On the whole, the book is really funny. The quips are positively gay at times. The puns have not the metallic ring fashionable among the hard pushed collymist wits. Here and there an epigram startles by its felicity. And there is, in spite of a not inappropriate tartness, a good-humored streak. The take-off has escaped the cheapness of most American professional entertaining. But the author has done the one unpardonable thing. Wilbur D. Birdwood split our diaphragm when, under noble auspices, he first appeared. Padded and illustrated, he has lost much of his brightness."

+ — Lit R p260 D 2 '22 750w

Nation 115:696 D 20 '22 100w

BIRDWOOD, W. D., pseud.—Continued

"Proves to be a rather pointless attempt to apply humorously Freudian rules to Euclid. Of course 'the triangle' enters largely into this mirthless exhibition. Nothing is sadder than a would-be comical book that fails to come off."

— N Y Times p2 Ja 14 '23 200w

"I read it half way through without finding a single joke, much less any hint of parody, wit, satire or humor. Some of the literary efforts of the psychoanalysts are really funny; this book isn't." Burton Rascoe

— N Y Tribune p8 N 5 '22 60w

BIRKBECK, WILLIAM JOHN. Life and letters of W. J. Birkbeck; ed. by his wife, with a preface by Viscount Halifax. 390p il $5 (15s) Longmans

B or 92

22-20384

William John Birkbeck's life-work consisted in his close studies of the Russian Orthodox church with a view toward effecting its union with the Anglican church. He also distinguished himself by his researches into church music, both Russian and Anglican. Viscount Halifax writes a preface to the volume in appreciation of Mr Birkbeck's character and rare scholarship. After some introductory biographical chapters the book consists chiefly of letters linked together by explanatory notes. Appendices and index.

"The present volume despite what some readers may regard as a certain parochialism, has qualities and content which might well arrest the attention of many beyond the pale of discussion over the historical importance and the immediate value of church ceremonies and traditions. For sidelights on great questions, if for no other reasons, even the most hardened 'modernist' may find in such a volume food for thought."

+ Lit R p246 N 25 '22 440w

"Birkbeck was a man of one idea, and in pursuit of it remained oddly blind to the faults and wickednesses of the Russian ecclesiastical system. Mrs. Birkbeck has done her work well, and the book has some good illustrations."

New Statesman 20:340 D 16 '22 250w

Spec 129:565 O 21 '22 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p644 O 12 '22 1100w

BIRKENHEAD, FREDERICK EDWIN SMITH, 2^d 1st viscount. Points of view. 2v 248;246p $12 Doran [42s Hodder & S.]

824

"A collection of what are usually called 'fugitive pieces,'—addresses, essays, and obituary appreciations. The first essay deals with Lord Esher's book on Kitchener. Lord Birkenhead has pulled it to pieces—irreparably. His contribution to the controversy on 'Should a doctor tell' exhibits him in the role of lawyer par excellence. His claim is not merely that doctors should consent to give evidence in abortion cases but that it is their duty to give early and spontaneous information to the police."—New Statesman

"A good deal of [the book] is of exceptionally high quality. The first essay is a particularly fine piece of trenchant and convincing criticism. This, and others of Lord Birkenhead's essays, will provide valuable material for future historians of the Great War; for he combines knowledge with the precision of a great lawyer."

+ New Statesman 20:214 N 18 '22 1000w

"If the intrusion of the ego merely affected Lord Birkenhead's style, it could be dismissed as an irritating mannerism. But it vitates the very substance of his achievement. . . . What Lord Birkenhead has done is to magnify any one and anything that has happened to be in contact with his own illustrious individuality." P. W. Wilson

— N Y Times p10 Ja 7 '23 2500w

Spec 129:767 N 25 '22 1400w

BIRMINGHAM, GEORGE A., pseud. See Han-nay, J. O.

BISCH, LOUIS EDWARD. Your inner self.

2 195p $1.50 Doubleday

130 Psychoanalysis

22-19922

The book presents a very simple statement of the fundamental mental functions and reactions that form the basis of psychoanalytic theory and practice. The author believes that psychoanalysis is a mental house-cleaning and a character-builder, a reduction to first principles of mental functioning, of which every conceivable law, habit, custom, belief, or endeavor that is characteristic of man is the result. He explains the psychoanalytic classification of these principles, the terms used and their significance. The book has an introduction by Dr William A. White, a list of suggested readings, glossary and index.

"Better balanced than some presentations of the subject."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 8 '22 330w
Wis Lib But 18:270 D '22

BISCOE, C. E. TYNDALE—. See Tyndale-Biscoe, C. E.

BISHOP, JOHN PEALE, and WILSON, EDMUND, jr. Undertaker's garland. 192p il $2 Knopf

818

22-19822

The book contains fantastic descriptions of deaths and funerals in verse and prose, in which satire and grim humor are blended with reflections on life and the war. The lengthy preface, explaining the motives for the book is by Edmund Wilson, jr. as are also: The death of the last centaur; The funeral of a romantic poet; The death of an efficiency expert; The death of a soldier; Emily in Hades; and the epilogue. Mr Bishop contributes: The prologue; The funeral of Mary Magdalene; The death of a dandy; The funeral of an undertaker; The madman's funeral; The death of God; and Resurrection. The decorations are by Boris Artzibasheff.

"Cynicism, considerable romanticism, unclothed reality, and much humor—all these things enter into this surprising combination of prose and poetry. The decorations by Boris Artzibasheff fit into the sardonic tone of it all, and offer a black funeral atmosphere which the publisher has also helped with his binding."

Bookm 56:511 D '22 130w

"The whole book is far more noteworthy for its intelligence (for its ideas) than for any outstanding method or technique of presentation. Structurally the prose pieces are better because their proportions are suitable to their content and the disposition of the parts is well arranged; those in verse are almost without exception too long. But nothing in the book gives evidence of haste or indolence or contempt for the practised art, and nearly everything in it has something of an alert, a sophisticated and watchful intelligence." Gilbert Seldes

+ — Dial 73:574 N '22 600w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

Int Bk R p88 D '22 350w

"The variety of talent shown in 'The Undertaker's Garland,' as a whole, is a warning discovery. And if any one has run away with the impression that the book is depressing he had better revise his judgment. We are glad of Mr. Wilson's clear integrity of intellect and of Mr. Bishop's powers of imagination. Both men display gifts of wit, audacity, unsentimental tenderness." W: R. Benet

+ Lit R p145 O 28 '22 1350w

N Y Times p2 Ja 28 '23 780w

BISHOP, JOSEPH BUCKLIN. Charles Joseph 2 Bonaparte; his life and public services. 304p il $2.50 Scribner

B or 92 Bonaparte, Charles Joseph 22-24561

Charles J. Bonaparte, 1851-1921, was the grandson of Napoleon Bonaparte's youngest brother, Jerome, whose marriage to Elizabeth

Patterson of Baltimore, tho it was as soon as possible nullified by Napoleon's council of state, laid the foundation of the Bonaparte family in America. A lawyer by profession Charles Bonaparte early devoted himself to civil service reform and to the fight to free his city and state from the power of the political bosses. Later, during the Roosevelt administration, he was Secretary of the navy and then Attorney-general. The biography closes with some appreciations, from prominent men, of his character and services and some formal tributes from associates.

"The character and works of Bonaparte are unfolded sympathetically, vividly, interestingly."
+ Bookm 56:772 F '23 110w

"Mr. Bishop's work shows evidence of haste and toward the end it shows itself to be somewhat disconnected. But Bonaparte's personality and genuineness shine through a more or less slovenly job of biographical writing." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 23 '22 1700w

"Mr. Bishop has done an excellent piece of work. His style is attractive without being forced, and he presents Bonaparte to us in many interesting aspects, with the vividness of a succession of good photographs."

+ N Y Times p10 D 24 '22 2200w

"With the primary advantage of having as his subject a man whose family history has always formed one of the most interesting chapters in American history, Mr. Bishop marshals extraordinary ability as a biographer. His nice sense of selection in the anecdotes and incidents brought together, coupled with a fortunate clarity and vigor of style, makes the book one of the year's most interesting biographies." S. T. Beach

+ N Y Tribune p18 D 31 '22 1050w

BJORKMAN, EDWIN AUGUST. Soul of a child. 322p $2.50 Knopf

22-6606

"An analytical study of the thoughts and emotions of a small boy, from his fifth to his fifteenth year, is presented in Edwin Björkman's new book and first novel. The volume is apparently intended principally for parents and educators. It deals with much care, and a delicacy that saves it from ever becoming offensive, with certain phases of adolescence usually ignored in fiction. The book has no plot. It tells, simply and well, if at somewhat too great length, of the entirely commonplace life of little Keith Wellander, who lived with his parents and his old grandmother in Stockholm during the latter part of the last century."—N Y Times

"An impressionistic novel of exceptional psychological value—both in the fidelity with which it adheres to its major theme and in the vividness with which it is presented. As a narrative of adolescence, it is honest and inclusive without being morbid, while as a study of environment it is so successful that it virtually imposes upon the author an obligation to write a sequel."

+ Dial 73:233 Ag '22 60w

"Beauty, intuition, significant form—is conspicuously lacking in 'The Soul of a Child,' and perhaps it is just as well. I like immensely Mr. Björkman's novel for its honesty, its simple realism, its freedom from 'eloquence and frills.' His treatment, for instance, of what journalists and school-teachers like to call 'sex-problems' is refreshingly casual and unportentious." Cuthbert Wright

+ Freeman 5:521 Ag 9 '22 1850w

"It is more than merely well written—it has virility, strength and wisdom. The style makes it extremely easy to read; but the content makes it worth reading." G. W. J.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 J1 23 '22 600w

"It is serious, almost humorless. Told with the care of an artist."

+ Ind 108:311 Mr 25 '22 110w

"An Interesting and instructive narrative. A time will come, however, when we shall all know the sociological and psychological truths which Mr. Björkman presents. Then this work must stand on its merits as a novel. And it will fail. It will fail primarily because it lacks the completeness essential to a work of art." J. J. Smertenko

+ Lit R 5:23 Mr 25 '22 540w

"It will undoubtedly be said that certain portions of this narrative are tolerable because the handling is delicate. It is nothing so self-conscious; it is nothing that pays so obvious a tribute to the falsely nice. The manner is plain and earnest. It is as unconscious of false shames as a tree or a grave animal. It takes the nature of life for granted. It envisages life as it is with a natural piety, an unperturbed acceptance, a deep but cool meditativeness. The writing is a model of its kind." L. L.

+ Nation 114:601 My 17 '22 820w

"An honest record of a boy's inner life, treated more frankly than in most books of its kind. If it is not to be followed up, it is mere document; if it is only the prologue to a history of Keith Wellander, it cannot yet be judged." Edith Rickert

New Repub 31:194 J1 12 '22 250w

"The book is well written, and the people and events it describes are all of them natural enough. The material is handled deftly, in a discreet and cleanly manner, and to those especially interested in its subject the book will no doubt prove both valuable and entertaining." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p11 Mr 12 '22 480w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:197 My '22

Reviewed by Donald Slesinger

Survey 48:84 Ap 15 '22 250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 J1 '22

BLACK, ALEXANDER. Latest thing, and other things. 303p $2 Harper

824

22-2771

Whimsical, humorous, thoughtful can be applied to this collection of essays. In the title essay the latest thing in news, fashion, scandal, style, et al, is treated both whimsically and humorously, but when it comes to the latest thing as an idea—to which no one can open his door without risk—the seriousness sets in. In "The dictatorship of the dull" the author characterizes the dullness that "feels itself to be the appointed custodian of respectability" and as such exercises a tyrannical dictatorship. Some of the other essays are: The truth about women; Half gods and the goddess; The producer; Foreigners; Legs; Coincidences; On Broadway; Respite finem; Artist and audience.

Booklist 18:228 Ap '22

"Many of his subjects are of no great significance, yet he makes them interesting; most of his essays make no attempt at an overburdening intellectual content, yet they are suited not only to please the reader, but to stimulate thought. And one and all are valuable as presenting a fresh and open-minded point of view toward literature, art, or the problems of contemporary life." Burton Rascoe

+ Bookm 55:203 Ap '22 150w

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 4 '22 1050w

Cleveland p70 S '22

Dial 72:538 My '22 80w

"The book contains many well-flavoured reminiscences of New York, the camera-chapters being particularly diverting. Against this background, his andante attacks on the weaknesses and fads of the present are not—and are not intended to be—deadly." L. B.

Freeman 5:430 J1 12 '22 160w

Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 40w

"The reader who skips from preface to page 85 and reads on to page 231 will enjoy a rich and juicy morsel, well seasoned and highly flavored. The more ambitious essays on the foibles of humanity and the formulæ of art, not excepting "The Dictatorship of the Dull," which is the best of them, fail to interest because they are neither sufficiently profound to make an original contribution nor sufficiently personal to form an individual reaction. Sound and solid observations they are, but neither arresting nor amusing."

BLACK, ALEXANDER—Continued

— + Lit R p454 F 25 '22 280w

"These papers incite a reflective mood, inspire to gentle argument, hold many a smile. There is nothing startlingly new in them, nothing noisy. They are agreeably stimulating, which is what an essay ought to be, and they are informal, which is an excellent quality too often overlooked." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p16 Mr 26 '22 1150w

"Always readable and sometimes epigrammatic, these essays may well be characterized as 'up to the minute.'"

+ Outlook 130:391 Mr 8 '22 30w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 18 '22 350w

Wis Lib Bul 18:181 Jl '22

BLACKMAR, FRANK WILSON. Justifiable individualism. 142p $1 Crowell

323.4 Individualism

"This small volume is a protest against the mass play of modern social life to the neglect of individual culture. It claims that undue emphasis has been placed on social and economic organization, reform laws, and group activity as means of human progress, and too little stress upon the development of the moral and intellectual integrity of the individual."—Publisher's Note

Reviewed by E. C. Hayes

Am J Soc 28:480 Ja '23 600w

"Unadulterated slush." H: R. Mussey

— Nation 115:283 S 20 '22 90w

R of Rs 66:448 O '22 80w

Springf'd Republican p8 O 3 '22 200w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Bright messenger. 378p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Cassell]

22-9183

Mysticism, transcendental lore and psychoanalysis are here blended into a somewhat weird tale. The circumstances of his birth have given Dr. Fillery a complex against humanity which fostered his innate tendency to peer behind appearances into the hidden secrets of nature, and led to further repressions of the natural man in him. When in the course of his practice as psychopathist a dual personality is given into his charge who, in one of his phases, strikes sympathetic chords in the doctor's own mind, the latter's neurotic disposition is increased. He is restored to his sane self thru his assistant, Dr. Devonham, who has an unimaginative grip on the realities. Diagnosing Dr. Fillery's repressions correctly, Dr. Devonham calls in the aid of a lovely woman, whose love the former has resisted for the sake of a higher service to which he supposed himself called. The author delves deeply into and speculates much on the creative forces of nature and the evolution of higher forms of life.

Booklist 19:19 O '22

"Interested or not in the supernatural, the reader finds the conflict of wills gripping, the descriptive passages charming and the character delineation individual and outstanding." F. A. G.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 10 '22 980w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"Believing though one may that Blackwood's long stories are less successful than his shorter, one feels that he is swiftly learning how to present his lovely paganism in more extended themes and that as a transitional work 'The Bright Messenger' holds out a promise of very fine things to come."

+ Lit R p779 Jl 1 '22 440w

"A message so confused and a language so redundant, florid, and hectic that they make us very well content with a bluntness of perception which is unable to be penetrated by them."

— Nation and Ath 30:564 Ja 7 '22 150w

"It is his point of view, the content and quality of his thought, no less than his amazing ability to express the all but inexpressible, which set him apart. For what we call the supernatural he accepts as the natural. . . . There is a wonderful beauty, a wonderful sweep and splendor and radiance in the way Mr. Blackwood has developed his idea, developed it both dramatically and spiritually." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p14 My 14 '22 950w

"Again Mr. Blackwood has suffered philosophy to usurp the art of story telling: In his last novels he has drawn up an elaborate parade of interminable disquisitions where tedious psycho-analysis drives drama from the stage, and the plot is attended by windy divulgencies in which the incredible is explained by psychology instead of being shown in action and appearance." A. D. Douglas

— N Y Tribune p7 S 3 '22 960w

"No one equals Mr. Blackwood in delicate imaginative manipulation of the psychically mysterious or monstrous. On the whole, however, one feels that his peculiar genius (and it really is genius) is better suited to the short tale than the elaborated romance." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:352 Je 21 '22 90w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:320 Jl '22

"Mr Blackwood's treatment of the supernatural has created for himself a special public who will find in this work the qualities they have learned to expect from him. Though the book does not rank with the author's best, it is fairly typical of his method."

+ Sat R 132:672 D 10 '21 80w

"A curious and uncomfortable blend of reality and unreality, of paganism and nature worship, of things that are and things that may be. That it is well written needs no emphasis."

— + Spec 127:869 D 24 '21 60w

"To those who enjoy having the incognizable interpreted with mysterious thrill, the book will afford satisfying occupation. For a story of its sort, it is above the average."

— + Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 16 '22 140w

"A high-soaring, deep-searching story. . . . Those for whom these great matters are not too high will doubtless find here the stuff of much hard thinking and warm discussion. And the plain man, even if he skip here and there, can hardly fail to enjoy the dramatic force and strangeness of many of the scenes, and the splendid visions of power, of beauty, of service which Mr. Blackwood (especially when he does not try too hard) calls up."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p715 N 3 '21 550w

BLAKER, RICHARD. Voice in the wilderness. 342p $2 Doran [7s 6d J. Cape]

The central figure in this rather slow-moving English novel, Charles Petrie, is a genius, ironical and lovable, who in middle life turns from music to play writing. To preserve his own individuality from the exacting claims of his neuroathenic wife, he has isolated himself from the activities of his family. The discovery of musical promise in his daughter Cynthia arouses his interest and sense of responsibility, and to protect her from her mother's selfish invalidism and to enable her to develop her talent, Petrie once more takes his place in the household. Cynthia returns from abroad to find a more normal family life with her mother's health restored. Petrie has preserved the secret of his play writing, and it is only when he has suffered a paralytic stroke that his family discover his identity with the greatest dramatist in England. It becomes increasingly evident to Petrie that one after another of his household and friends are sacrificing their lives to his helplessness. Since his whole philosophy is opposed to such immolation, it finally seems to him that the only solution is suicide.

Booklist 19:121 Ja '23

"Few characters in contemporary literature have been more graphically depicted than Petrie. He has in him the pulse of real life; he is singularly human. Because he is portrayed so vividly we are willing to forget the shortcomings of the novel; we are ready to forgive its prolixity and to overlook a conclusion that appears strained and by no means inevitable; we are inclined to forget that Petrie himself is in the end credited with a success that is a trifle too sudden and too complete to seem entirely plausible."

+ — Lit R p131 O 21 '22 300w

"A remarkable novel. It is remarkable for its characters, for its story and for the manner of its writing; so, since in every case it is admirably remarkable, it possesses a triple distinction which is rarely met with in first novels or for that matter, in twentieth novels." B. R. Redman

+ N Y Tribune p9 N 19 '22 1100w

"The best first novel we have read for a long time. There is an easy mastery about its presentment of character and a reliance upon the value of character itself for the enchainment of our interest, as opposed to mere material episode, which would do no discredit to any author we know at his twentieth essay. A most courageous and memorable novel."

+ Sat R 133:611 Je 10 '22 500w

"There is a remarkable sureness of touch in his general design and in his selection of character-revealing detail. The gesture, speech, and environment are seldom superfluous, all blending into a harmonious creation of personality. But one does feel that, at present, there is just too apparent a carefulness in his craftsmanship, a dash of the 'brilliant' novelist, which is further emphasized by the relaxation in the second half of the story."

+ — Spec 129:183 Ag 5 '22 380w

"Although individual characters may have got a little out of hand, the book as a whole offers a fresh, sympathetic and often sparkling commentary on human nature in general, and particularly on certain aspects of English family life."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p395 Je 15 '22 560w

BLANCHARD, GRACE. Island cure. 186p il $1.50 Lothrop

22-6525

Needing a vacation, Jean Beverly is advised to take the "island cure"—a tour of the lovely islands of the Maine and Massachusetts coasts. They prove to be isles of romance, for at the outset of her tour, the charming heroine falls in with a prosperous young Lawrence mill owner and by the time they have made the island circuit, helped along by a convenient yacht-owning relative of the hero, the cure is complete.

Booklist 18:329 Je '22

"The author has not overburdened her story with too many characters. Neither has she portrayed her background with too great elaboration. The photographs are excellent, and the effervescent dialogue is just as sparkling at the close of the novel as it is in the first chapter."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 29 '22 190w

"There is nothing at all bitter or dingy about this sprightly, decorous, solid, Bostonian, and prosperous tale, which leaves one with a pleasant taste in the mouth, as well as with an objective for the summer vacation."

+ Lit R p706 Je 3 '22 200w

"The theme of 'The Island Cure' is slight, but it is put together with some degree of grace and charm."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ap 30 '22 70w

"Some readers, even among girls, might prefer more islands and less romance, but there is enough description to relieve the sentimentality."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a D 17 '22 180w

BLANCHARD, LUCY MANSFIELD (MRS CHARLES HARVEY BLANCHARD). Chico; the story of a homing pigeon. 141p il $1.75 Houghton

22-16881

Andrea and Maria were two little Italian children, who spent their days playing about the Cathedral of St Mark in Venice, where their mother's uncle, old Paolo, was caretaker. One day Paolo gave Andrea a baby homing pigeon for his very own. Every morning Andrea and the little Maria fed and cared for the bird, which they named Chico. When Chico was old enough to fly Paolo and the children taught him the early lessons of the "homer," and when the war broke out Chico carried some important messages for Italy.

Booklist 19:56 N '22

"We love the little Chico from the time he breaks through his shell to the time when he is one of the acknowledged heroes of the World War."

+ Cath World 116:429 O '22 50w

"The sense of Venetian beauty alone would make this little book good food for children, who crave beauty naturally and so often cannot find it in books. The lines of the story are clear and simple."

+ Lit R p327 D 16 '22 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:611 D '22

"A most appealing story. Much of the book's charm is in its Venetian atmosphere and the glimpses of an ancient and beautiful city and of the sweet and happy home life of Andrea and Maria and Chico."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 D 12 '22 90w

BLASHFIELD, EVANGELINE (WILBOUR) (MRS EDWIN HOWLAND BLASHFIELD). Manon Philpon Roland; early years. 383p il $3.50 Scribner

B or 92 Roland de la Platière, Mme Manon Jeanne Philpon 22-5234

Of the two volumes on Madame Roland planned by the author the first only was finished before her death. It constructs the earlier life of Madame Roland from the latter's own memoirs and from the author's painstaking research into documents, leaving this heroine of the French revolution on the threshold of her public career. A number of tentative sketches for the second volume are printed in the appendices. The book is illustrated with numerous portraits.

Booklist 18:327 Je '22

"Mrs. Blashfield's book is carefully and ably documented." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 4 '22 1250w

"It is delightfully written, with keen insight into the intellectual and moral development of Manon Philpon, but as a contribution to the history of the French Revolution it can have little value as compared with Mrs. Pope-Hennessy's classic study of Mme. Roland." D: S. Muzzey

+ — Lit R p818 Jl 22 '22 160w

Reviewed by Carl Becker

New Repub 31:229 Jl 19 '22 1150w

Reviewed by I: Anderson

N Y Times p16 Je 25 '22 780w

Outlook 131:76 My 10 '22 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:294 Je '22

St Louis 20:251 O '22

"A good example of a biography of a famous woman by a member of her own sex, written with sympathetic insight and understanding."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a My 28 '22 260w

BLOCH, LOUIS. Coal miners' insecurity. 50p
50c Russell Sage foundation
331.8 Coal miners 22-12016

The purpose of this pamphlet is to bring together dependable data drawn mainly from publications issued by state and federal bureaus which show some of the economic facts behind the unrest of the miners in the bituminous or soft coal industry. This unrest is shown to be due chiefly to irregular production and consequent irregular employment, the number of days of operation of bituminous mines having averaged, for the last thirty-two years, only 214 a year. The miner must of necessity seek a rate of pay which will enable him in these 214 working days to earn enough money to maintain himself and his family throughout the year, but what he most wants is a guaranteed minimum of employment. Numerous statistical tables and diagrams show production, days of operation, number and earnings of employes, seasonal fluctuation in the coal mining industry, etc.

J Religion 2:560 S '22 20w

BLUNDEN, EDMUND CHARLES. The shepherd, and other poems of peace and war. 86p
$1.75 Knopf [6s Cobden-Sanderson]

821 22-22190

A few of these poems are of the war. Most of them are pastoral, the prevailing theme being the English countryside. Mr Blunden writes of shepherds and of gleanings, of the poor man's pig and of the mole catcher, of sheet lightning and of the first snow, of a November morning and of a spring night, of the giant puffball and of the May day garland. "He is not a sentimental citizen indulging a taste for bergerie. He could be trusted as the bailiff on any farm, the keeper of any woods, or the editor of any 'Farmers' Almanack.' In point of knowledge of country ways and sights and sounds, Mr. Blunden must be unique among modern poets." (Nation and Ath)

"One takes this book of poems as one takes a landscape. The beauty is all there, sometimes in indiscernable features which resolve themselves into clearness and outline by the alchemy of memory and recollection." W. S. B.
+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 2 '22 1450w

"Pompous iambs which scan for the eye, but not always for the ear; an exact enumeration of the phenomena of nature: a poetry as traditional and as changing as the four seasons."
— Dial 74:105 Ja '23 80w

"Here is poetry unaffectedly sincere and natural, saturated with the beauty of the English countryside, sensitive in its observation of reality, distinguished in its craftsmanship."
Lloyd Morris

+ Int Bk R p89 D '22 70w

"There is no one writing now who can equal Blunden for intimate knowledge and colorful appreciation of the true English countryside and the life of its people." H: Chapin

+ Lit R p4 S 9 '22 840w

"Edmund Blunden's second book from England is not the book 'The Waggoner' was. There are affectations here—loaded lines, Wordsworthian breathings, labored ruralisms. The third volume will be better if Mr. Blunden, a genuinely gifted writer, resists the temptation to become the virtuoso rather than the poet of stream and meadow and homing bird." D. M.

— + Nation 115:sup382 O 11 '22 90w

"Even if all the rest of Mr. Blunden's book were a failure, 'Third Ypres: A Reminiscence' would make it one to treasure. 'Third Ypres' is a magnificent poem, with effects which are simple and shattering. . . . Some of his nature poems are also charming, but the impression made by them as a whole is dissipated and uncertain." J. M. Murry

+ — Nation and Ath 31:264 My 20 '22 1950w

"Mr. Blunden's volume is at once a pleasure and a disappointment. There are charming things in its eight-six pages; but the general level is not quite what he has accustomed us to expect, and a certain number of the poems have an air of having been disinterred and brought to life on second, not better, thoughts." F. L. L.

+ — New Statesman 19:187 My 20 '22 750w

"His method follows nature in detail; and he is very careful not to miss a single detail, with punctilious respect for traditional English metrics. This is praiseworthy enough, and to those readers of poetry who still prefer itemized conclusions, and each hair finely separated from its fellow, I recommend Edmund Blunden. His war poems are mostly the usual muddled hom-bast." Pearl Andelson

+ — Poetry 21:104 N '22 300w

"It is Clare alone, in the whole range of our poetry who can compare with the intimacy and immediacy of Mr. Blunden's knowledge of fields, ponds, birds, flowers, beasts. But the newer poet is a finer artist. He is the master of the exquisite phrase, the incomparable adjective, as Clare, for all his genius was not. Hence, if contemporary prognostication is ever of value, Mr. Blunden must be esteemed assured of immortality, as we would dare to prognosticate it of not more than one or two other poets of our time."

+ Sat R 133:552 My 27 '22 950w

"Mr. Blunden is rather a puzzling poet. He seems suddenly to dangle complete excellence before us and never quite to give it us except in an isolated verse or two. This is his second published volume, but he has not on the whole surpassed his first, The Waggoner, except in the matter of having extended his range. . . . He is a poet whose career all lovers of poetry will watch with interest." A. Williams-Ellis

+ — Spec 128:757 Je 17 '22 700w

"'The Shepherd' more than fulfils the rich promise of 'The Waggoner' and is itself still a book which, great in its accomplishment, is even greater in its promise. Mr. Blunden, as he touches the deeper veins of his experience, develops a clearer and more musical tone. . . . There was little about war in his first volume. There is much more in his second, enough to show that we have in him a man capable of relating the peace of the woods and the desolation of that unending mortal struggle to one paramount vision of reconciling love and beauty."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p305 My 11 '22 2000w

BLUNT, WILFRID SCAWEN. Secret history of the English occupation of Egypt; being a personal narrative of events. 416p $5 Knopf

962 Egypt—History 22-21821

This narrative, written in 1895 and published in England in 1907, is now republished in America with both the preface of 1895 and the preface of 1907. The writer has had a long diplomatic career and was in close touch with the events he describes, tho in an unofficial capacity. He was an interested observer of the situation in the Cabinet, in Parliament and in European diplomacy which brought about the English occupation of Egypt in 1882. An anti-imperialist, he strongly disapproved of this occupation, gave his support to the national party in Egypt and took a prominent part in the defence of Arabi Pasha. His narrative is a record partly in diary form, of events which came to his knowledge relating to the origin of the occupation.

Booklist 19:78 D '22

Boston Transcript p1 N 18 '22 520w

"Like most 'secret' histories, it is not entirely true history; yet it is an intensely interesting book. Mr. Blunt is at least entitled to a hearing, as a distinguished English publicist, who had intimate personal relations with the Egyptian leaders and English officials at the time of the English conquest. Our author was certainly not a dispassionate witness—and no one familiar with his writings or his career could expect him to be coolly accurate—but he was a witness, and his testimony must be weighed."

+ — Cath World 116:409 D '22 1450w

Reviewed by H. B. Fuller

Freeman 6:403 Ja 3 '23 1100w

"Replete with personalities, studded with interesting character impressions, dotted with criticisms of short-sightedness in Downing Street, the book is a vivid personal survey rather than a history. . . The volume is this: a point of view: as such it is of interest to the casual reader and—taken with sufficient care to check the accuracy of some of the facts—it is also, as such, of value to the historian who, in our days, well realizes that history is a record of popular opinion as well as of acts of state." Elbridge Colby

+ — Lit R p415 Ja 27 '23 780w

"This volume is a textbook in imperialism. It is a record of close observation of the forces, human instruments and events which resulted in the stifling of the national aspirations of one people and their subjection to the will of another. Blunt was extraordinarily fitted in person and position to conduct these observations. It may be thought that Blunt's ardent partisanship disqualified him for the function of observer. He writes, however, with eminent restraint and candor. He has no illusions about Arabi and the Egyptian fellahin who followed him. And in regard to his own country his testimony has the force of a witness who is convinced against his will." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 32:310 N 15 '22 1800w

"There have been few books published in modern times so amazing in their exposure of the inner workings of imperial expansion, and for that reason so illuminating to the student of history. Although the work is personal in its form, it is entirely free from the least touch of egotism. It is most simply and unaffectedly, yet most interestingly, written, and it takes its place as an indispensable contribution to history because it is based upon a mass of irrefutable evidence adduced by a witness of unimpeachable character." Austin Hay

+ N Y Times p23 D 24 '22 2800w

Reviewed by Ahmed Abdullah

N Y Tribune p22 D 10 '22 1800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:34 Ja '23

R of Rs 66:559 N '22 110w

BODENHEIM. MAXWELL. Introducing irony; a book of poetic short stories and poems. 101p $2 Boni & Liveright

811

22-9657

"Mr. Bodenheim is practically the solitary example in this country of the sheer cerebral poet. . . Those people who desire pleasant stanzas turned with a melodious intent will undoubtedly regard his work with misunderstanding. They will find but little poetry there, for the poetry they desire and understand, the poetry of passion and melody, is entirely absent. It is to another audience, one that is younger, more free in spirit and not cast from the old moulds, that Mr. Bodenheim writes. Indeed, it is possible that he must, in large measure build up his own audience. And one may infer that it will always be a small audience."—Lit R

Booklist 19:151 F '23

"The poet is in continual danger of being his own parodist. He coddles and croons over his idiom. He enjoys a little too much and somewhat too self-consciously the paradoxical mating of adverbs and adjectives, adjectives and nouns that ordinarily would shrink from each other." L. Intermeyer

+ Bookm 55:635 Ag '22 400w

"There is no consistency in his work; it cannot be catalogued under any of the epithets which he so abuses; there is no place for him in the files. He is good and bad at once; brilliant and boring; awkward and skilful. He has all the insufferability of genius, and a very little of the genius which alone can justify it." Malcolm Cowley

+ — Dial 73:446 O '22 1200w

"Mr. Bodenheim's work lacks several of the characteristics that are necessary to gain large audiences. There is no lovable quality in it. The humor in his work possesses a cold, gray hue. . . It is an unusual and stimulating book that owes practically nothing to the various contemporary movements that swirl about it." H. S. Gorman

+ — Lit R p851 Ag 5 '22 1150w

"Mr. Bodenheim's fancy plays with less abandon in 'Introducing Irony' than in his previous work. His passion for the knife has led him to prune too much; in excising the irrelevant he has also cut into the quick of his imagination and drained it of some of its life-blood. It is a pity that bitterness should have made a murderer of his fancy." E: Sapir

+ — Nation 114:751 Je 21 '22 800w

"This volume should become the gospel of sincere and exasperated futurists. It is sardonic to a degree, is totally unacquainted with the lisp and babblings of marketplace or home, and handles words with the deft remorselessness of a slave-driver. The ten prose pieces at the end of the volume are less authoritative than the verse. It is difficult to see why Mr. Bodenheim should bother to write these semi-narratives." E: Sapir

+ — New Repub 31:341 Ag 16 '22 320w

"In a way, he is a path-finder, a breaker-down of old convictions and stone walls of prejudice. His art is a concentrated one. Its idea is to pack the meanings as closely as possible. This sometimes causes him to lose himself in a wilderness of words, for Mr. Bodenheim loves words mightily. Occasionally a brittle quality creeps into his work because of his gusto, but for the most part he is a sound technician, much sounder than the average reader will presume, and the poetical content of his work is always matter of pertinence to the times about him."

+ N Y Times p17 My 14 '22 900w

"A book in which new territories of the imagination have been surveyed by an intelligence direct, modern and impersonal as a flashlight, unhampered by the superstitious glows and half-shadows of the lanterns with which contemporary poets still seek their desires. It is Bodenheim's unassuming, unrelenting search, straight and ascetic, for outlines that are sweeping in significance because they are not distorted in detail, and are freed from realistic or emotional 'débris,' that has left an effect of technical brilliance in his poems." L: Grudin

Poetry 21:100 N '22 1150w

BOGARDUS, EMORY STEPHEN. History of social thought. 510p $3.50 Univ. of Southern California press

309 Sociology—History

22-3888

Social thought, as here used, is a "synthesis of the observations of individuals about the welfare of other individuals, considered as individuals or as groups." He begins with social thought in its simplest forms as revealed in the social relationships of primitive peoples. Next come the ancient civilizations: Hebrew, Greek, Roman, early Christian to the middle ages. He shows the social thought of different periods as embodied in various utopias; the form it has taken in individualistic and socialistic theories and the gradual assumption of scientific procedure with the formulation of sociological laws. Index.

"Not only has he opened a new road to truth about social life, but he has given us a work for which the mature scholar will be grateful. Only very wide research, clear vision, and trained skill could have produced in brief space so satisfactory an analysis of the social thought of mankind during the entire historical era. In still another way Professor Bogardus has rendered a public service. In the hands of a competent teacher his book is well fitted for use as an efficient guide in a college course." G: E. Howard

+ Am J Soc 28:235 S '22 1050w

BOGARDUS, EMORY S.—Continued

"It aims to present in a popular, readable form to a world of students the best in the world's social thought. Judged by this purpose, it is an interesting effort in a commendable direction." J. H. S. Bossard

+ Ann Am Acad 104:176 N '22 420w

Booklist 19:146 F '23

"Informing and stimulating book." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 3 '22 640w

"Teachers and writers in the field of sociological theory will be interested in this book as a convenient means of testing their own summaries and characterizations of the social teachings of their predecessors. The student will find it a convenient source from which to develop the background for his special sociological studies." G. P. Wyckoff

+ Int J Ethics 33:106 O '22 560w

"There is need for a book of this sort. The volume, in fact, fills a real gap and represents a significant contribution to the literature of sociology. It should find wide use and receive a cordial welcome." F. L. Schwass

+ School R 31:77 Ja '23 700w

"For the purposes of this book [the author's] thought sources are all academic; he knows no such men as Sidney Hillman or Samuel Gompers. He knows nothing of William Howard Taft or Judge Anderson. He does not enter the arena of social thinking. He remains in the realm of social thought." J. K. H.

Survey 49:394 D 15 '22 80w

BOGUE, ROBERT HERMAN. Chemistry and technology of gelatin and glue. (Mellon inst. technochemical ser.) 644p il $6 McGraw

668.3 Gelatin. Glue

22-15982

"A worthy effort to summarize the existing literature. . . The subject is treated . . . mostly from the chemical point of view, and primarily for the student and research worker. . . The book is a most welcome addition to our literature on the subject. A good deal has been written on the more abstruse phases of colloid action, but the work before us is a comprehensive and valuable summary of the special subject. (Henry Leffmann in J Franklin Inst., 1922)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y P L New Tech Books 7:45 O '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:499 N '22

Pratt p19 autumn '22

BOJER, JOHAN. God and woman (Dyrenald); tr. from the Norwegian by A. R. She-lander. 346p $2 Moffat [8s 6d Hodder & S.]

21-21144

"It is a sad story—the marriage and married life of a farmer's daughter (thrown over by a young government official for a wealthier match), who gives herself to a young horse dealer, shrewd, not over honest and given to drink. He raises her socially and wins material success, but the tragedy of her life is that no son comes to succeed to their wealth; and their adoption of a young nephew brings them but little satisfaction."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 18:189 Mr '22

Dial 72:323 Mr '22 100w

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield

Lit R p315 D 31 '21 750w

"Touched at times with irony, but in its essence deeply pathetic. . . His pictures of the life which is close to the soil are far less grim than those of many another writer. He indulges neither in the gruesome nor in the hysterical."

+ N Y Times p14 Ja 29 '22 1150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:320 J1 '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p405 Je 23 '21 150w

BOLLMAN, GLADYS, and BOLLMAN, HENRY. Motion pictures for community needs. 298p il $2 Holt

778 Moving pictures

22-5088

The authors, who are specialists in the field covered by the book, provide a practical manual of information and suggestion for the use of motion pictures in educational, religious and social work. Part one deals with the development of the educational motion picture, sources of production, government films, exchanges (with lists of distributors), publications and bibliography. Part two covers the exhibitor's problems of financing, selection and booking, and presentation. Part three provides one hundred suggested programs. Part four covers the mechanical and legal sides—equipment and installation, operation, safety regulations, handling and care of films. A classified list, with prices, of projectors, booths, screens and other equipment is given.

Booklist 18:226 Ap '22

"There is nothing trivial about the work in substance or in style. It is not destined to arouse interest in the subject, but for those already seriously interested it offers a wealth of valuable material."

+ Cath World 115:696 Ag '22 300w

"It in no wise detracts from the sound worth of the volume that Mr. and Mrs. Bollman have used as the medium of expressing a viewpoint essentially cultured the brief, lively, direct English of modern business."

+ Lit R p628 Ap 29 '22 250w

"Here is a life-line for floundering motion picture committees. Although the book is designed for those in the non-theatrical field, it will prove of solid value to any individual or group interested in the theatrical exhibition of dramatic motion pictures for entertainment only."

+ N Y Times p24 Je 4 '22 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:361 J1 '22

Pratt p11 summer '22

St Louis p125 Je '22

Springfd Republican p10 J1 12 '22 210w

Survey 48:56 Ap 8 '22 120w

Wis Lib Bul 18:100 Ap '22

BOLTON, REGINALD PELHAM. Indian paths in the great metropolis. (Indian notes and monographs) 280p il $4.75 Museum of the Am. Indian

917.47 Indian trails. New York (city)—Streets

22-19522

The narrow trails which the Indians used three centuries ago indicated to the white men the natural and most convenient routes for their wagon roads, developed into their post-roads and finally into the most important modern highways. These paths ran not only between the several stations of a single tribe of Indians but served to connect one tribe with another on their various errands. This little book traces the course of these old Indian trails in the modern highways which have succeeded them, on the island of Manhattan, in the Bronx, in Brooklyn, Long Island, Staten Island and in nearby New Jersey. There is a bibliography, an index of Indian stations and a general index. There are also eleven maps and twenty-eight plates.

BOLTON, THEODORE. Early American portrait painters in miniature. 190p il $7.50 Sherman, F. F.

757 Painting, American. Miniature painting

21-20929

"Mr. Bolton has ranged his material into the convenient form of a dictionary, and gives brief biographical notices of each artist where any details are available. Of a good many there is little or no definite information, apart from their works. For the most part the facts as set forth by the author may be taken to be all that are at present known, and the book is exhaustive up to 1850."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"A scholarly and useful work."

+ Spec 128:58 Ja 14 '22 150w

Springf'd Republican p6 D 19 '21 400w

"A most useful and interesting volume on a very difficult subject, and material of which is scattered over a wide area. He has added to its value by reproducing some scores of illustrations."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p26 Ja 12 '22 1000w

BOLWELL, ROBERT GEORGE WHITNEY.

Life and works of John Heywood. (Columbia univ. studies in English and comparative literature) 188p $2.50 Columbia univ. press [10s 6d Milford]

B or 92 Heywood, John 21-22336

The volume is about equally divided between biography and criticism. Heywood's career is sketched as court musician and entertainer, favorite of Queen Mary, court poet and playwright. Then follows an examination of his plays and of his non-dramatic works. Bibliography. Index.

"Careful and restrained. He is overgenerous, perhaps, in attributing several of the anonymous plays of the period to his author, but in general he is careful to give the facts on which he bases his reasoning. The work is also provided with appendices, which give the documents. It is a pleasure to record the appearance of a work so carefully done."

+ Lit R p386 Ja 13 '23 480w

"Professor Bolwell is wisely moderate in estimating Heywood's work."

+ Spec 129:sup532 O 21 '22 650w

"Heywood persists in being of great historical interest; and naturally it is to his historical interest that Dr. Bolwell devotes his attention in this well-informed, well-balanced, clearly written book. He has dug among the sources and authorities; and, having greater space to move in, is able to supplement and expand the studies of Sir A. W. Ward, Dr. Boas, and others; especially in the story of Heywood's life."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p543 Ag 24 '22 2000w

BONE, DAVID WILLIAM. "Broken-stowage." 288p $2 Dutton

22-13604

The title, taken from the seaman's term for the odds and ends of freight which are used to fill up corners and hold the cargo tight, describes the contents of this miscellaneous collection of sea tales and sketches. Contents: Setting out; Errors of judgment; A deep-water critic; Unclaimed rewards; The scribe; Stockholm tar; The 'real' Cashmiri shawl; Dropping the pilot; Old Paoli; Jeems Sahib; Off St. Michael's isle; At bazaar; The harvest of the north; La cantinière; Suliman Dux; Coasting days; The merchants' cup; Behind the May; Findlay's South Pacific; The 'bootle bull'; The 'Shanghaied' runners; Chôta Eursât; A sailor's view; The oddman; The 'arts afloat'; Sailormen on tour; A channel sunrise; Port Said—and 'Jock Ferguson'; The stowaway Jew; The Merry Andrew; An 'ercic voyage; A run in; 'Hi! padd-aay!!'; At old Quay; Suffrage and Betelnut; The turn of the tide; His Majesty's customs; The catalogue; Flood tide and ebb.

Booklist 19:19 O '22

"The tolerance and sympathy with which David W. Bone so carefully observes the sailor in all his adventurous hours, coupled with his richly flavored style, make the odd bits thrown together as 'Broken Stowage' irresistible confections."

+ Bookm 56:103 S '22 80w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '22 600w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"If you like the real sea, as seen by sailor men, you will keep this book handy, close by the tobacco jar. It does one good now and then to get off soundings where the ruination of the sea is not yet complete." Felix Riesenber

+ Lit R p787 Jl 8 '22 480w

"The book is very well written, with many touches of humor and plenty of color in its descriptions. The solitude of the gray-green ocean under a cloudy sky, the stir and movement of the harbor thronged with vessels of all kinds and from every part of the world, are admirably pictured by one who evidently feels their romance and knows their reality."

+ N Y Times p20 Je 4 '22 530w

Outlook 131:465 Je 12 '22 80w

BONNETT, CLARENCE ELMORE. Employers' associations in the United States. 594p $4 Macmillan

331 Employers' associations 22-8061

Ignorance as to the existence of employers' associations, says the author, seems to be more general than on any other subject of equal importance. Far less is known of their nature by the vast majority of our people than is known about labor unions and similar movements. They have come into existence to promote the employers' interests in labor matters and are rival institutions to labor unions and far less uniform in character than the latter. The book distinguishes three types,—the negotiatory, the mediatory and the belligerent—the object of the latter being frankly to combat and curtail the activities of the labor unions. He describes in detail the associations in the iron and steel industries, the building and printing industries, the National association of manufacturers, the National civic federation and others. A list of references is appended to each chapter and there is, in addition to the general index, an index to associations and to publications.

"A very timely contribution, of special interest at this time. It is no fault of the book that it does not give us everything that could be wished in its field. It ought to stimulate new investigations to throw light on the interrelations and interactions of unions and employers' associations." J. P. Jensen

+ Am Econ R 12:652 D '22 850w

Booklist 19:7 O '22

"Much is in print regarding the labor unions, but the story of the employers' associations has been largely left untold. Dr. Bonnett now supplies the need, and supplies it with a fullness of information, a judiciousness of comment and an impartiality of attitude which make his book indispensable to all who interest themselves in the economics of modern industry."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 23 '22 800w

Cleveland p77 S '22

"This book bears evidence of most painstaking and intelligent work in collecting data, and fairness and competence in drawing conclusions therefrom, in a field practically unrepresented on library shelves. It should be of interest to students of economics and sociology, to those especially interested in business organization and management, in industrial relations, trade unionism and revolutionary movements." R. G.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p7 Jl '22 1000w

"Astomishingly little has been written on this subject, in view of the large literature on employees' organizations. Professor Bonnett has the field almost to himself, and he has done his work so well that there would seem to be little justification for any other general survey of the subject for some time to come."

+ Lit R p422 Ja 27 '23 280w

"Believers in the dogma of the class war will read Mr. Bonnett's excellent book with keen joy; the rest of us, it is to be hoped, with sobering reflection. The book is an admirable presentation of the facts of industrial conflict in the United States." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 115:474 N 1 '22 1050w

BONNETT, CLARENCE ELMORE—Continued

"While unquestionably of use, this new volume falls short of being a definitive study. Its material is illuminating—as informative as facts can be which are culled primarily from documentary sources. The more fundamental criticism is that the theme of the book is not clearly seen. The selection of associations to be studied lacks any unifying intention. Moreover, in respect to the many activities reported, the author seems wanting in adequate critical sense. He describes all with equal dispassionateness and a lack of relative emphasis which gives the book an almost naïve quality." Ordway Tead

— + Pol Sci Q 37:710 D '22 550w

St Louis 20:206 S '22

"It is extraordinary that a comparison and analysis such as this, so significant for a knowledge of American industry and its tendencies, has not been attempted before. The book ranks with Hoxie's Trade Unionism in the United States."

Survey 48:531 JI 15 '22 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p414 Je 22 '22 70w

Wis Lib Bul 19:21 Ja '23

BONNEY, LOUISE EMILY, and COLE, CAROLYN PERCY. Handbook for business letter writers. 98p 80c Harcourt

652 Commercial correspondence 22-8968

Two instructors in English in the Washington Irving High School, New York, have written this extremely practical little book intended primarily for the stenographer. The form of the letter is discussed and correct forms of address, salutation and conclusion are given. The main principles of composition, grammar and punctuation are laid down and the various types of letter described, with illustrative examples.

Cleveland p77 S '22

BONSELS, WALDEMAR. Adventures of Maya the bee; tr. by Adele Szold Seltzer; the poems were done into English by Arthur Guiterman. 224p il $3 Seltzer

22-22793

"The adventures of a bee. In the hour of her birth Maya leaves the swarm to have her taste of life. She has the soul of a child, full of curiosity and delight in all Nature's wondrous beauty. From every encounter with various fascinating insects, good and bad, she learns something that helps her to understand what life is really like. Through all her time of youthful idleness and irresponsibility Maya is dimly conscious of a great destiny. How she is captured by the dreaded hornets, imprisoned as a tid-bit for the hornet queen, overhears the conspiracy against her own people, and finally escapes by a clever ruse to give warning of the attack will prove interesting reading, and not merely to children."—Lit R

"Delicate interpretation." C. B. R.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 Ja 21 '23 600w

"It has all the dramatic value of a good story artfully told. A charmingly imaginative book that may well intrigue the adult mind, as it will certainly delight all children. The whimsical illustrations by Homer Boss are uncommonly good." Drake de Kay

+ Lit R p195 N 11 '22 580w

"A different book if ever there was one charming, subtly satiric—but not to the child-mind—the characters human as a child wants animals to be, yet with the insect characteristics featured all the time. Here is another book that is here to stay." M. L. Becker

+ Lit R p308 D 9 '22 40w

"The child reader who has been taught to observe nature will delight in these experiences of the adventurous though sentimental young bee, and will find keen pleasure in the behavior of the various insects and creatures who hop or crawl across the pages. The diction is unmistakably that of translation and clumsy in places." M. H. B. Mussey

+ — Nation 115:sup619 D 6 '22 350w

"A book that will give joy to infancy without being something of a strain upon the patience of the adult who must enunciate it is a treasure indeed—a rare treasure. None of this comedy is labored at length; children, in short, won't notice it. They will be absorbed in the actual adventures of Maya and leave the moral severely alone—as they always do. And yet the overtone is there all through—enough to amuse any adult continuously. The translation is delightfully done, even to the colloquial passages." D. P.

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 19 '22 620w

"An interesting and educational book with excellent illustrations."

+ Sat R 134:802 N 25 '22 50w

"Apart from the too-much mixing of fact with fancy, it is an attractive, delightfully illustrated book."

+ — Spec 129:sup814 D 2 '22 90w

"The natural history is frankly absurd, but the adventures are thrilling and the various characters are made quaint and amusing."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p819 D 7 '22 140w

BOOK, WILLIAM FREDERICK. Intelligence of high school seniors. 371p $2.40 (11s) Macmillan

379.17 Educational surveys. High schools. Mental tests. Education—Indiana 22-2463

"Based upon a state survey of the intelligence of high-school Seniors in Indiana. The survey was conducted by the department of psychology of Indiana University with the co-operation of the Indiana State Board of Education. The basic data for the survey were secured through the use of the Pressy intelligence tests in the case of some six thousand high-school Seniors in May, 1919. A considerable body of supporting information concerning the pupils was secured at the time the tests were given. The major portion of the book is taken up with an extended analysis of the returns from the tests. The latter part of the book consists of general conclusions and interpretations with liberal suggestions as to desirable readjustments and reforms."—School R

Booklist 19:35 N '22

"In spite of technical defects, the information contained in this volume is exceedingly valuable to every student of the problems of secondary education." M. R. Traube

+ — Educ R 64:172 S '22 250w

"As an example of the survey method applied to a specific field, the book is very suggestive. It contains much information which is valuable, and it emphasizes a number of very important educational problems. But, as an example of a report of a major investigation in the field of educational research, it offers many loopholes for the type of criticism which the science of education is particularly anxious to avoid." G. T. Buswell

+ — School R 30:310 Ap '22 800w

BORAAS, JULIUS. Teaching to think. 289p il $1.60 Macmillan

153 Thought and thinking 22-2894

"A book which deals in a comprehensive manner with the problem of developing a superior type of thinking in the schools. Each type of thinking is selected and illustrated from everyday experience. Schoolroom procedure is then examined to see what provision has been made for training in this type of thinking. This is followed by suggestions of practical means of providing the required training in the regular school work. Each chapter closes with a group of thought questions based upon its subject-matter."—El School J

Booklist 19:35 N '22

"Teaching to Think is a distinctive contribution and a worthy companion of the books on Thinking by Dewey, Miller, and Pillsbury. Mr. Boraas succeeds in separating for practical purposes thinking from formal logic. Teachers will find that Mr. Boraas has thought in terms of the daily school situations, and that his suggestions are feasible in schools both large and small." A. L. Hall-Quest

+ Educ R 65:65 Ja '23 650w

"The book is written for teachers with little or no professional training, but will be of value to all teachers who are interested in getting better results from their teaching. It is written from the practical rather than the theoretical point of view, but it touches a surprisingly large part of the material usually found in the professional literature of learning and thinking. The particular merit of the book consists in its attempt to reduce the literature of thinking to schoolroom applications." E. E. Wellmeyer

+ El School J 22:712 My '22 500w

"Mr. Boraas has succeeded in writing a very practical psychology of teaching to think. The freedom from technical terms makes the book readable for the ordinary teacher, and the concrete illustrations of the applications of the psychological principles underlying each type of thinking discussed will serve as a guide to teachers in putting these principles into practice. The numerous exercises render the work a valuable text for classes in educational psychology." H. W. Nutt

+ School R 30:388 My '22 550w

BORDEAUX, HENRY. House that died (La maison morte): tr. by Harold Harper. 259p $1.75 Duffield

22-26735

The scene of the story is a tiny village in the French Alps on the borders of Switzerland. There in an old stone house lived a sturdy peasant family, three generations of Couverts, with their chickens and cattle. The narrator of the story is a lawyer who each year went to Besans for the hunting season, staying with the Couverts and employing one of the sons as his guide. During one of the hunting trips Claude Couvert disappeared. His death passed as accident, but when his body was found there were marks of murderous hands upon it. Suspicion rested on one of the family but this was unsupported by proofs and not brought into the open. Tragedy settled upon the old house. Claude's son, brooding over the crime, became another Hamlet. The head of the house went to a monastery to expiate the family crime, the line became extinct, the old house lost its soul. Today it stands deserted, haunted by a mysterious sadness.

Booklist 19:121 Ja '23

"An interesting novel, of uncommon type, worked through with relentless logic, admirably written and capitally translated." F. A. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 18 '22 550w

"Here and there with an economy of stroke M. Bordeaux presents a pleasingly memorable portrait. There are, too, descriptions of the Savoiard scenery, which have a certain grandeur and response to the picturesque. Yet they never seem to bear that intimate relationship to his characters—the magical and austere beauty of setting fusing with the emotions felt at the moment—which lift so many of Mr. Hardy's landscapes into the realm of great and lasting literature." Alysé Gregory

+ Lit R p395 Ja 20 '23 680w

"The portrayal of life in this Alpine village is all done with exquisite art, with a touch as delicate as that of an etcher's tool and as freshly and fully colored as a water color painting. The story well repays reading in many ways, but especially so because of the simplicity and convincingness with which an absorbing human drama is evolved. Lovers of outdoor life will appreciate its descriptions of mountain scenes and its vivid account of chamois hunting. But most of all it is interesting for its impressive portrayal of a peasant life and people that win the reader's admiration and respect."

+ N Y Times p27 N 19 '22 550w

"This book is admirably translated. There is a deep melancholy underlying the history of this 'dead house' and of the family that occupied it, but the events related are tragical in so human and natural a way that the story seems a true transcript of life."

+ Outlook 133:276 F 7 '23 50w

Wis Lib Bul 19:24 Ja '23

BORDEN, MRS LUCILLE PAPIN. Gates of Olivet. 359p $2 Macmillan

22-18164

Religious mysticism and ecstasy underlie this story of a California girl, Damaris Grey, and her struggle between a spiritual and an earthly love. She has grown up under the shadow of a convent and with a desire to enter it, but when her old playmate, David Kent, returns after an absence, his love makes a stronger appeal than the convent. Out of her happiness she is called away to France to her aviator brother and arrives just in time to see him fall to his death. Complete loss of memory and identity follows the shock. In this state she has visions, but they always stop just short of completeness. David comes to France in search of her and finally traces her to Lourdes. With her returning memory there comes a consciousness that it is her earthly love which has shut her out from the gates of spiritual ecstasy and David is renounced for the "love that is greatest."

"The story is mystic, dramatic and spiritual. The description of the heroine's vision of Mount Olivet and the passion of Christ are impressive."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 8 '22 130w

"The tale of Damaris is a sweet idyl that will appeal to those who believe that life is more than the pursuing of pleasure on an ever-widening circle of vanity. Throughout the book are to be found charming pictures of the streets of Lourdes, vignettes of inns and inviting shops, and best of all, a simple, compelling philosophy of life and love that will comfort the believer, and ask the faithless to pause and think."

+ Cath World 116:417 D '22 350w

"It is probable that Mrs. Borden wrote 'The Gates of Olivet' as an allegory of spiritual emotions rather than as an impartial representation of modern life. With every respect for an author's sincerity, no critic can accept as a novel the avowed exhibition of religious idealism setting forth men and women like impalpable flames of some divine essence."

Lit R p113 O 14 '22 330w

"The scenes at Lourdes, with its religious processions and its miracles, and the descriptions of the young girl's visions are handled so earnestly and reverently as to make it evident that the author is a devout believer who has written not so much to tell a story as to teach a lesson."

+ N Y Times sec7:6 O 1 '22 480w

BORSODI, RALPH. New accounting; bookkeeping without books of original entry by the use of a natural system of double entry bookkeeping. 127p il $7.50 Dodd

657 Bookkeeping. Accounting 22-11007

"The author describes a system of double entry bookkeeping devised by him for the purpose of replacing the complicated processes of present day bookkeeping with a simpler, and more efficient method. The system advocated by Mr. Borsodi can be adapted for use in any business—it does away with all the books of original entry, and furnishes a financial statement at any time with only a few minutes' work. The book is fully illustrated and furnishes detailed instructions and specifications for installing the system in any business."—Publisher's Note

St Louis 20:243 O '22

BOSANQUET, BERNARD. Meeting of extremes in contemporary philosophy. 220p $2.60 (8s 6d) Macmillan

190 Philosophy, Modern

"His main thesis is that the old opposition between realism and idealism is being to a great extent superseded by a new opposition between 'progressism' (the word is his) and absolutism as a basis of classification, and that the deepest division in philosophy is no longer between those who assert the independent reality of the external world and those who emphasize the creative activity of the knowing subject, but between those who find ultimate reality in time and change and those who cling to the eternal unchanging unity of the whole universe. . . . The general conclusion is that 'progressism' and moralism represent an excessive reaction from other-worldliness which is now almost stampeding the philosophic world, but that in the long run absolutism and religion must reassert themselves."—Spec

BOSANQUET, BERNARD—Continued

"Perhaps it may be conceded that there is some tendency to sketchiness in his treatment of great subjects and an occasional elusiveness in his style; but one cannot but wonder at the extent of his knowledge, the comprehensiveness of his surveys, the many-sidedness of his appreciations, and the calm and tolerant spirit with which he regards the widely divergent modes of thought with which he deals." J. S. Mackenzie

+ — Int J Ethics 32:333 Ap '22 950w

"Extraordinarily important and interesting volume. Though his position is by now familiar to all students of philosophy, there is no denying the inexhaustible freshness with which he here reaffirms it. That the very extremes of contemporary thought should meet in opposing his views is to him evidence not of their truth but of their error. No student of philosophy can afford to ignore him, and the future may yet prove him right." R. F. A. Hoernlé

+ Lit R p666 My 20 '22 680w

Nation and Ath 32:163 O 23 '22 1100w

"To disentangle these perplexingly interlaced threads which link opposing schools of thought by hidden affinities, is a marvellous feat of analytic skill on Dr. Bosanquet's part. And the best of it is his optimistic conclusion that in this meeting of extremes, this blurring of ancient boundary-lines, we have a splendid promise of a new philosophical synthesis which, leaving old catch-words and labels behind, will frankly face the universe of our experience in all its concrete diversity and richness." R. F. A. Hoernlé

+ New Repub 30:322 My 10 '22 1550w

New Statesman 18:680 Mr 18 '22 620w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:535 D '22

"A comparatively short but most thought-provoking book to help us to clear our minds and to take fresh bearings just as we were beginning to find our old-fashioned charts somewhat worse than useless. The chief defect in the book as a study of contemporary thought seems to be its complete failure to notice the modern philosophy of personality."

+ — Spec 132:740 D 31 '21 600w

"It is written with a delightful ease and freshness, the argument is continuous, the interest is sustained from start to finish, and it gives the reader the feeling of being actually present at a brilliant dialectical discussion between intellectual champions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p803 D 8 '21 1650w

BOTSFORD, GEORGE WILLIS. Hellenic history. 520p il $4 (18s) Macmillan

938 Greece—History

22-6185

"The work is planned primarily as a text for college courses, and its purpose is to present in brief scope the evolution of Greek civilization with particular emphasis upon those phases of Greek life which have influenced to a marked degree the civilization of today."—Am Pol Sci R

"Those responsible, whoever they may be, have put the author in a disadvantageous position by concealing the long interval that separates the completion of the manuscript and the publication of the book; for Professor Botsford was one of those meticulous scholars who make it their practice to take account in detail of every latest contribution. Such lack of candor is also an injustice to the public. Professor Botsford's Hellenic History is inevitably a textbook, and it is more than that: it is an independent synthesis of Greek history as a whole. In this respect it is, we believe, unique in the American literature of the subject, and invites comparison with the contemporary European histories of Greece." W. S. Ferguson

+ — Am Hist R 23:79 O '22 1150w

Am Pol Sci R 16:525 Ag '22 120w

Booklist 19:78 D '22

"The book also is decidedly livelier than the Bury, an English book, on which the college student has in the main had to rely. It lacks certain student helps which the writer believes Professor Botsford intended to bring out in another form, and there are a number of small mistakes in it, but they are small, and do not hurt the general value of the book. Had the author lived to make a final revision these few mistakes would doubtless have been corrected." R. V. D. Magoffin

+ Educ R 64:365 N '22 200w

"Dr. Botsford exhibits broad intelligence, an extraordinary faculty for correlating literature and life, and the rare technical literary skill which is necessary if one is to cover in five hundred pages the whole field of Greek history, from the prehistoric Minoan age down to the Roman conquest." Herman Simpson

+ Freeman 5:594 Ag 30 '22 3100w

"It presents an account succinct and well-balanced of the evolution of ancient Greece. It is a book that should prove exceedingly valuable to the general reader who desires to have at hand a compact work of reference and to the high school student who must needs have his ancient history comprehensive rather than exhaustive."

+ Lit R p725 Je 10 '22 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:521 N '22

Pratt p30 autumn '22

"As a text-book it may be pronounced meritorious and useful. It represents that kind of 'potted' information for which there is a wide demand in America. Mr. Botsford seems to have done his work well; he had evidently read the recent authorities on the subject, he extracted the results of their inquiries which seemed established, and put them together in the series of categorical statements with which examinees may go securely furnished to meet their ordeal."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p485 Jl 27 '22 800w

BOTTOME, PHYLLIS (MRS FORBES DENNIS). Kingfisher. 347p $2 Doran [7s 6d Collins]

22-9188

Jim Barton leaves the penitentiary where he has served a three years' sentence for killing his father, a drunkard, and works for some time on a Thames barge. He is befriended by Arthur Atkinson the vicar of his parish. He sends Jim to school, which he leaves later under the shadow of a fault not his own. Atkinson, his only friend, is dead but he has left Jim three hundred pounds a year which enables him to go up to Cambridge. He returns to London from the university a champion of the working classes. He takes a job as a dock laborer and by some irony of fate he falls in love with Viola, the daughter of a large ship owner, and in spite of the many social barriers she finally marries Jim.

Booklist 18:364 Jl '22

Cleveland p85 N '22

"It is a sincere and earnestly written piece of work, which makes up in vividness what it lacks in novelty. On the other hand, one misses that deft searching of the feminine mind and heart which has been the author's most valuable contribution in her previous excursions in fiction."

+ — Dial 73:231 Ag '22 80w

"The book as a whole is by no means a success. Miss Bottome has done, and will easily do again, far better work than this."

— Lit R p71 S 30 '22 520w

"Unfortunately she has not got a self-raising style, and an Ancient Mariner determination to get the whole of her story told from start to finish makes this book far inferior to her earlier ones. One suspects that this may be partly due to the fact that she is writing of a life about which she knows very little. The parts of the book which deal with sophisticated people are exceedingly good. But the rest of the book is unconvincing." Rebecca West

— + New Statesman 18:734 Ap 1 '22 650w

"A novel of some power and executed with the finish that is peculiar to the narratives of this particular writer. There is a tender perception of emotional values in this story."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 4 '22 140w

Outlook 131:387 Je 28 '22 60w

"Miss Phyllis Bottomome is full of ideas, has a gift (which she overworks) for the phrase, and is genuinely in love with beauty, external and spiritual; but we regret her choice of a subject, partly because of its inherent drabness, and partly because it leads her, through her wholly admirable sympathies, into a prejudiced, and so misleading, presentation of life."

— + Sat R 133:267 Mr 11 '22 350w

"There is an extraordinary verisimilitude about Barton's whole career up to the point [when he comes back to London from Cambridge], but when he becomes a Labour leader and falls in love with his employer's daughter, Viola Egerton, the book is not quite so convincing. It is still, however, extremely entertaining, and the social world in which Viola lives is described with much quiet irony."

+ — Spec 128:309 Mr 11 '22 390w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p110 F 16 '22 50w

"Miss Bottomome has a crisp way in dealing with character and a summary way of dealing with events. Both are sometimes effective, but more often they are not. Her crisp character-drawing succeeds with Jim's clergyman. It succeeds with Jim's sister, who is a thief. It fails with her two chief women characters, who seem gradually to disentangle themselves from her first elaborate and confusing attempts to describe them."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p123 F 23 '22 430w

Wis Lib Bul 18:216 O '22

BOTTOMLEY, GORDON. Gruach and Britain's daughter. 130p $3 Small [15s Constable]

822 (Eng ed 22-8081)

"The first of the two plays in this new book of Mr. Gordon Bottomley is, like his King Lear's Wife, an attempt to reconstruct the past of one of Shakespeare's characters. This time it is Lady Macbeth. She is a girl who is to be married to the oafish but good-natured Thane of Fortingall. It is the eve of her wedding to this bridegroom, whose state and character she views with equal contempt. The scene opens with the wedding preparations. The family are just going to bed when the King's envoy, on his way to Inverness, knocks and demands stable and lodging. It is the young Macbeth. The envoy and to-morrow's bride fall immediately in love with one another, and in another sleep-walking scene this love is declared. He carries her off with him, and her last act is to make him swear that one day he will come back and burn the home that has sheltered her, in revenge for the fact that here her will was nearly bent to that of others. In Britain's Daughter Mr. Bottomley partly retells the story of the Trojan women, except that here the moral is not quite so plain as in Euripides."—Spec

Booklist 19:74 D '22
Cleveland p66 S '22

"The verse is vigorous and imaginative."
W: R. Benet

+ Lit R p432 F 3 '23 1050w

"Possessed of important beauty and strength. It is significant that Mr. Bottomley likes the far past and the night cold, for the world he creates is not a warmly breathing world. It is literary, poetical, not to be read for the life in it so much as for the art—for the calm, the care with which its bloodless beauty has been laid upon the page. If Mr. Bottomley is not a great poet he is an excellent one, and he ought to be better known."

+ Nation 114:779 Je 28 '22 200w

"The dynamic and controlled force of his two plays, especially 'Gruach,' with its remarkable unity of atmosphere, cumulative intensity, and mastery of a tight-woven dramatic structure, compels us again and again to say: 'Reading won't do. This wants seeing.' It has all the virtues of simple actability—swiftness, fire, economy of effect, suspense, torrential vigor held back like a noble, high-mettled horse by the reins, finality, and a clean sweep of all superfluous poetic ornament. 'Britain's Daughter' is more spectacular and crowded and less purely dramatic, but it possesses the same solidity of imagination and power of intense evocation"

+ Nation and Ath 30:730 F 11 '22 350w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:364 Jl '22

"In 'Gruach' there is no subsidiary character whom the poet does not vitalize, make beautiful and distinct. Mr. Bottomley has not allowed the strong emotion which has gone into the fashioning of this play to blunt his mind to its intellectual possibilities. Always he is aware of the Macbeth and the Lady Macbeth later to be presented to us, but with extraordinary skill he has throughout rendered them as characters potentially the creation of Shakespeare, yet at all points deliberately to be withheld from repeating Shakespeare's actual consummation. Mr. Bottomley's Macbeth is more swiftly a poet."

+ Sat R 133:40 Ja 14 '22 950w

Reviewed by A. Williams Ellis
Spec 127:675 N 19 '21 1050w

"'Britain's Daughter' is dramatically less urgent and inevitable than 'Gruach.' In its external rigidity and internal movement it approaches a classical model, though its colouring is deeply Romantic. These plays are both pure poetry and pure drama; like all great art they combine the static and the dynamic, but their dynamic quality cannot be fully realized in reading, because Mr. Bottomley's stagecraft is so certain. In every detail of construction they are written for great and sustained acting—for actors who can speak beautiful words beautifully and respond to the deepest passions of the soul in gesture and movement."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p812 D 8 '21 1650w

"Distinguished plays, with a strong personal quality, definitely superior to almost all of that mass of contemporary material being added to our stage literature, so much so that it is a temptation to speak extravagantly of them."

+ Theatre Arts M 6:347 O '22 260w

"If Mr. Bottomley hardly gets beyond the threshold of drama, few things of our day are better worth while than the impressiveness of his dusky figure as it halts in the gloom of the doorway." O. W. Firkins

+ — Yale R n s 12:194 O '22 150w

BOUVIER, LOUIS EUGENE. Psychic life of insects; tr. by L. O. Howard. 377p $2 Century

595.7 Insects—Habits and behavior 22-4217

The purpose of this strictly scientific treatise is to emphasize the contrast between the world of the articulate and our own, however near their activities at times appear to come to the human. "We have a feeling that the psychic evolution of these animals is not less original than their structure, and that they are never so widely separated from us as when they appear to resemble us the most. . . . We no longer attempt to explain insects by man; we rather try to grasp the mechanism that allows these animals to evolve mentally and to acquire activities which seem human." (Intro.) Among the various manifestations of the psychic life of insects which the author discusses are phototropism, organic memory

BOUVIER, L. E.—Continued
rhythms, the evolution of instincts, the faculty of orientation, the division of sexes, and the social life of articulates.

Booklist 18:315 Je '22

"Is gratifyingly accurate and absorbingly interesting. Even those who are not naturalists will like it."

+ Bookm 55:312 My '22 70w

Boston Transcript p6 My 17 '22 800w

Cleveland p63 Ag '22

Reviewed by Beverly Kunkel

Lit R p789 J1 8 '22 1450w

"A fascinating study of insect behavior which is written in a less anthropomorphic language than may be guessed from the title."

+ Nation 114:473 Ap 19 '22 20w

"This is, we think, the most reasonable book that has been written on insect behaviour as a whole. It is scholarly and critical; it avoids extremes; and it leaves open questions open."

+ Nature 110:402 S '23 '22 950w

"The book, so rich in information, so exact and cautious in reasoning, and so delightful as a literary performance, is surely from the moment of its appearance a classic. While it will command the careful consideration of fellow investigators in the same field it must also attract the general reader."

+ N Y Times p11 Je 11 '22 4000w

"It is a fascinating subject handled in a stimulating and entertaining way."

+ R of Rs 65:558 My '22 60w

St Louis 21:8 Ja '23

"It is almost inevitable that one should compare a new book dealing with insects with the work of the great Fabre, and it is almost as inevitable that, from the literary and human point of view, it should be unequal to the comparison. But M. Bouvier's book, if it has not the fascination of Fabre's work, is a very interesting production."

+ Spec 129:211 Ag 12 '22 860w

Springfd Republican p7a S 17 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:180 J1 '22

BOWEN, WILLIAM ALVIN. Solario the tailor; his tales of the magic doublet. 232p il $2 Macmillan

22-18664

"The Old Man in the Spangled Coat was rescued from an enchantment through the bravery of young Bojohn and Bodkin. His real name was Solario, and he was a magical tailor, and he lived on at the forest castle of the King who was so fond of checkers. Naturally the boys wanted to know all about his strange and exciting past. So they begged him for stories. His tales were so wonderful that the whole court went up to his tower room to listen."—Publisher's note

Booklist 19:90 D '22

"The book lacks the high distinction of E. Nesbit's best fairy stories, but it never falls below the level of an agreeable diversity."

+ Lit R p158 O 28 '22 170w

Reviewed by M. H. B. Mussey

Nation 115:sup618 D 6 '22 110w

"Written in a humorous prose that quite distinguishes them from the usual run of fairy stories huddled together into a loose framework. The incidents are unusual, and Mr. Bowen's imagination is, to say the least, extraordinary."

+ N Y Times p10 N 19 '22 60w

"They are oriental stories filled with mystery and magic, and better worth a child's attention than those of the Arabian nights. They are vivid in their description, and have that air of reality that a child expects even from the most impossible conditions."

+ Springfd Republican p7a D 3 '22 130w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (BERTHA MUZZY SINCLAIR). Trail of the white mule. 278p $1.75 Little

22-17220

This is another Casey Ryan story in which Ryan has grown tired to death of leisure, quiet marriage and city life, the luxuries of an apartment and traffic cops, and takes once more to the trail and the desert. He falls in with some bootleggers in the mountains, is forced, at the point of a gun, to drink a bottle of whiskey and while under the influence of it is arrested with the gang and brought into the city. Once more he falls victim to crooks and bootleggers, is left high and dry in the desert, robbed of every cent, a stolen Ford on his hands and with the suspicion of being a bootlegger himself. It is then that he becomes a booze-hunter in good earnest and as a government official brings the offenders to justice.

"Casey is a typical Irishman and he tumbles in and out of trouble in the thoroughly amusing way."

+ Daily News Rec p17 S 26 '22 400w

"As a story it is somewhat improbable, reasonably amusing, and entirely innocuous. And that is all that can be said for or against it."

Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 O 22 '22 580w

"Compared with the Casey of the former book he is, perhaps, a little less spontaneous, a little more inclined to follow his own pattern, a little more likely to touch up the high lights when they don't need it. But he is a constant delight, a Peter Pan of the mountains and deserts, recklessly and genially irresponsible, kicking like a mule at any hint of restraint of his individuality, unconsciously making known wherever he goes his highly colored personality."

+ N Y Times p18 S 17 '22 580w

"She has never professed to be anything but a spinner of yarns to divert an idle hour, but there has always been an authenticity about them, a genuine smell of sagebrush and saddle leather, which many of her more pretentious rivals lack. Her humor, too, is native and unforged and fingers in the mind."

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 19 '22 180w

Wis Lib Bul 18:218 O '22

BOWERS, CLAUDE GERNADE. Party battles of the Jackson period. 506p il $6 Houghton 973.56 Jackson, Andrew. United States—History—1815-1861. United States—Politics and government 22-23559

The period of eight years covered by this history was one of the most stormy in American political history. These years saw the rising to power of the masses, the beginnings of party government and the passing of the control of government machinery into the hands of the people. Mr Bowers sketches the background for his history by describing social Washington of the thirties at the time of Jackson's election "looking forward to the reign of the barbarians with mingled feelings of mirth and abhorrence." While Jackson is the center of the scene the book is not his biography but a history of the period and of the conflicting personalities and forces which were fighting for mastery. The figures which chiefly stand out are Jackson's opponents, Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, and his upholders, Van Buren, Livingston, Tancy, Cass and the advisers who made up his "kitchen cabinet." Tho the author's sympathies are with Jackson in the public and private hatreds which centered around him, he holds the scales even and he makes his history humanly interesting.

Booklist 19:154 F '23

"With keen-sighted scholarship and in facile style he has achieved a volume of admirable historical quality, worthy to rank with the finest modern presentations of men and events, and falling into the class of Charnwood's Lincoln, Beveridge's Marshall, and Whitlock's Belgium because of its monumental study and progressive psychology."—W. G. McAdoo

+ Int Bk R p23 Ja '23 2600w

"A volume that is extremely clever and interesting throughout, that has many brilliant pages and much of the time is no less than fascinating. As part of this portrait of a period and furnishing many of its important lines, there are brief, intimate, unconventional sketches of the great men of the time without their halos. . . . The sense of humor which hovers about his narrative most of the time doubtless has aided him greatly in keeping his estimate of men and affairs so just, so temperate and so understanding."

+ N Y Times p2 D 10 '22 2500w

"This is history as it should be written. It is dramatic and it is vivid. The measures, instead of being separated from the men and dealt with coldly, are identified with them. The men themselves, instead of being taken out of their setting and made into mere artificial mouthpieces, are shown as they appeared to their contemporaries, human and fallible, moved by hatreds of selfishness, meanness or patriotism. . . . The author makes a generous attempt to be fair to all. His errors should be forgiven him if for no other reason than that he has produced one of the most interesting and readable historical studies that have recently been published in this country." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Tribune p22 D 3 '22 1100w

R of Rs 67:110 Ja '23 150w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 8 '22 850w

BOWIE, JAMES A. Sharing profits with employees. (Pitman's industrial administration ser.) 222p $4 (10s 6d) Pitman

331.24 Profit sharing. Copartnership (Eng ed 22-5479)

The book is a critical study of profit sharing methods in the light of present conditions. The author includes under profit sharing all those schemes where extra earnings that would otherwise accrue to capital are handed to labor. The test he employs to justify any industrial innovation is that it must either improve social relationships or promote the efficiency of production. His conclusion is that cash profit sharing does neither and that contributory copartnership furnishes the most immediately practical method. There are lists of references and an index.

Lit R p340 D 23 '22 250w

"Mr. Bowie surveys the field of profit-sharing in Great Britain with thoroughness and acumen. When you lay the book down you may not altogether agree with its conclusions, but you have learned something." Stuart Chase

+ New Repub 33:101 D 20 '22 800w

Pratt p11 autumn '22

"The book is lucid and well written."

+ Spec 129:186 Ag 5 '22 110w

Survey 48:629 Ag 15 '22 50w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p174 Mr 16 '22 60w

"A lucid and careful examination."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p293 My 4 '22 70w

BOWLEY, ARTHUR LYON. Prices and wages in the United Kingdom, 1914-1920. (Carnegie endowment for international peace. Division of economics and history. Economic and social history of the world war: British ser.) 228p $3 Oxford [10s 6d Milford]

338.5 Prices. Wages 21-17906

"By the use of 78 tables and ten diagrams Mr. Bowley shows the regular rise of prices from the beginning of the war up to the end of 1917, when wholesale prices had more than doubled. By the summer of 1920 they averaged more than three times those of 1914. Wage rates generally lagged behind prices, but earnings, in consequence of increased employment, probably outran prices from the outbreak of the war up to the armistice; during the next two years it was nip and tuck. Some sections of the working classes, particularly the worst paid, were probably better off in 1920 than before the war, and other sections worse off, concludes Mr. Bowley."—Nation

Am Pol Sci R 16:159 F '22 180w

Booklist 18:213 Ap '22

"Professor Bowley's admirable book is a veritable mine of information on the course of wages and prices in the United Kingdom, and gives a statistical basis for important comparisons with similar conditions in the United States and other countries, especially in relation to questions of money, credit, exchange, and foreign trade." J. E. Le Rossignol

+ Lit R p672 My 20 '22 880w

"The book deals with results, not causes. Solid raw material for the economic historian of the future, it is dry pabulum for the general reader of to-day." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 114:346 Mr 22 '22 270w

"The reader will find a skilful handling of a vast mass of material, with much acute analysis and criticism and some definite conclusions. He will also find some discrepancies in the statistics and some conflict of views regarding the inferences to be drawn from them. He will, in a word, when he has finished his reading, be a wiser but not a certain man."

+ New Statesman 19:132 My 6 '22 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:269 Je '22

Pol Sci Q 37:725 D '22 500w

"Dr. Bowley treats his subject in a manner worthy of his great reputation. He sets out the facts, gleaned with infinite care and labour and leaves them to tell their own story. The book, of course, is for the student and the historian. Invaluable to them it is 'caviare to the general.'"

+ Sat R 132:sup31 N 5 '21 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p539 Ag 25 '21 820w

BOYD, WOODWARD. Love legend. 329p $1.75 Scribner

22-19298

"The Love Legend' is about a family of four daughters, their widowed mother and the friends and lovers of the young people. They live in a suburb of Chicago, and the scene is staged in and about that city. The four daughters are Ward, Anita, Sari and Dizzy, and each of them is taken through the experience of falling in love. In addition to their several reactions to the mating fever, each one is shown in contrast with the others, in her attitude toward life, in her daily experiences of many sorts, in her relations with her friends and her feeling toward her mother. The author's purpose appears to be to exhibit in them four examples of as many different phases of the young woman of today."

—N Y Times

"There are qualities in her style which make us ashamed of being critical, because vitality and youth cannot be curbed, and this writer has both in excellent measure. It is a crude story overweighted with characters. Its chief merit lies in its contribution to the psychology of feminism. That is why it is so very interesting; but, it is abominably written."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 4 '22 360w

"This is not a perfect first novel—but it is honest, well written, if ragged, and thoroughly alive. The characters in the 'Love Legend' are real in conception, and where the author fails to get her effects it is because of inexperience and uncertainty rather than because of dishonesty or 'faking.'" F. S. Fitzgerald

+ Lit R p143 O 28 '22 660w

"A cleverly written tale, and one which shows much promise."

+ N Y Times p7 O 22 '22 680w

Reviewed by Burton Rascoe

N Y Tribune p9 N 26 '22 80w

"It is a fascinating story; she tells it with ease and grace; it scarcely ever sags, and most of all, it is disconcertingly objective and penetrating." Bernadine Szold

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 26 '22 900w

BOYLE, CONSTANCE ANTONINA. What became of Mr Desmond. 310p $1.75 Seltzer [7s 6d Allen & U.]

22-21207

Mr Desmond, fond of domestic carpentry and lacking nails, steps out of his house in shirt-sleeves and apron, to a shop at the end of the lane, to buy his nails. He is never heard of more until, after a lapse of fifteen years, on the anniversary of his disappearance and just as the family is sitting down to lunch, he walks in upon them, takes his place at the head of the table and proceeds to carve the joint. The unravelling of the mystery, in which two families are involved, discloses a story of violence and crime and vicious scheming on the part of a woman, descendant of an otherwise respectable family of the British gentry.

"Miss Boyle's treatment has freshness, novelty, and surprise. On the whole, she is a promising candidate for the succession as prime sensation monger."

+ Lit R p906 Ag 26 '22 190w

"Shows no small degree of cleverness. Much of it is well and amusingly written and some of the characterization is very good."

+ N Y Times p19 Ag 27 '22 300w

"There is more than plot in this tale—there is some very neat character drawing. It has always been a poser to the moralists why vice should be more exciting to hear about than virtue, but the fact remains, and [the author] takes full advantage of it." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 13 '22 420w

"To rouse high hopes and subsequently disappoint them is to court resentment. Here, a reader will think while reading the first half of Miss Nina Boyle's novel, is one of the best mystery stories that has been published for long. . . After six chapters of stimulating reality, we find ourselves suddenly plunged into melodrama. This is not fair. All the latter part of the volume is good enough fun, in the manner of a 'film serial'; but it is not nearly good enough for the excellent opening. If the book had been worse throughout, we should have enjoyed it more; as it is we have an uneasy sense of having been 'sold.'"

— + Sat R 133:69 Ja 21 '22 240w

"Outrages all the laws of probability and, incidentally, many of those of art."

— Spec 128:119 Ja 28 '22 50w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 24 '22 150w

"A real success in sensationalism."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p30 Ja 12 '22 100w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL. American portraits, 1875-1900. 249p il $3.50 Houghton 920 United States—Biography 22-4659

Gamaliel Bradford adds another to his volumes of "Portraits," the present volume being the first of a promised series in which he hopes to cover American history and to include representative figures in all the various lines of life. These American portraits appeared originally in the Atlantic and the North American Review. Contents: Mark Twain; Henry Adams; Sidney Lanier; James McNeill Whistler; James Gillespie Blaine; Grover Cleveland; Henry James; Joseph Jefferson; Index.

"Mr. Bradford has the gift of penetrating to the centre of the nature he is analyzing; he is both sympathetic and critical; and his style, although marred by some 'modern' carelessness and smartness, is vigorous and vivid and always readable. Each sketch leaves with the reader a distinct picture of a real and interesting personality. The narrow limits forbid full portraiture, and in focusing for unity and sharpness of outline, the biographer necessarily sacrifices something of the modifying effect of minor details; but, on the whole, breadth of view and truth of perspective are fairly well preserved." W. C. Bronson

+ — Am Hist R 28:167 O '22 500w

Am Pol Sci R 16:731 N '22 60w

Booklist 18:233 Ap '22

Bookm 55:315 My '22 60w

"Among biographical analysts he has no superior writing today; all his sketches are delicate, carefully wrought and exquisitely readable; he is honest and discriminating. If we would be ever slightly harsh in our judgment of 'American portraits' we can only compare him with himself. Without 'Confederate Portraits' and 'Portraits of Women' these sketches might stand at the very head of books of their class. As it is, they will be cherished by every lover of discriminating biography into whose possession they may come." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Mr 25 '22 1500w

Cleveland p51 Ag '22

Freeman 5:47 Mr 22 '22 980w

"When one takes the sketches for what they are, that is as critical estimates of striking individuals and not at all as history, they become immediately and intensely interesting. They are uneven in quality, but their very weaknesses are interesting." G. W. J.

+ — Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p7 Ap 23 '22 1000w

"I like these Bradford books. They make dead men seem real to me—and often surprisingly likable. But I have a fear that Bradford is spoiling his show by setting up too many rings. It is a pity that he plans to cover three whole centuries and fifty or sixty different men. Some of them will waste his time; the crowd together will wear him out." H. L. Mencken

+ — Lit R p562 Ap 8 '22 1450w

"Mr. Bradford's portraits are unsatisfying. The artist's personality that appears in the portraits is more insistent than impressive. Mr. Bradford is an impressionist who turns his hand to Flemish painting; but he has not the patience to study his subjects. And how can he have it with the prospect of fifty commissions ahead of him?" P. H. Boynton

— New Repub 31:53 Je 7 '22 650w

"Mr. Bradford is keensighted enough to see both the little faults and the great virtues, and he is skillful in making us see them in due proportion. . . Although he does nothing extenuate nor ought set down in malice, his criticism is searching; and never is his scalpel sharper than in its dissection of Henry Adams. None the less have I read Mr. Bradford's volume with infrequent dissent and in fact with almost unflinching pleasure. It was to me a curious delight to gaze on these portraits of men most of whom I had met, done so skillfully and so appreciatively by one who had apparently never seen any of his subjects alive and in the flesh." Brander Matthews

+ — N Y Times p2 My 14 '22 1650w

"One does not need to agree with all of Mr. Bradford's interpretations to welcome his volume as a luminous and courageous interpretation of eight of America's great, though not greatest, men." Lyman Abbott

+ — Outlook 131:216 My 31 '22 370w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:368 Ji '22

Pratt p32 autumn '22

"Mr. Bradford's portraits are in the highest degree analytical of the inner motives and characters of his subjects. He has a veritable passion for distilling the final essence of the writer or artist or statesman."

+ R of Rs 65:446 Ap '22 180w

St Louis 20:225 S '22

"More interesting than fiction, and already more talked about than the average novel. . . Mr. Bradford is master of a clear and distinguished style, and his dry humor holds the reader's attention, without obscuring the high critical quality of his work."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Mr 16 '22 550w

Springf'd Republican p6 O 2 '22 620w

Wis Lib Bul 18:155 Je '22

BRADLEY, ALICE. Cooking for profit: a correspondence course on professional cooking. 285p il $3 Am. school of home economics

641.57 Cookery. Caterers and catering
22-9945

"The text, prepared as a correspondence course, has been revised and supplemented with plates and bibliographies. The author is the principal of Miss Farmer's school of cookery, Boston. The book covers the field of cooking from special catering, tea room management, to school, industrial and community food service with a special chapter on the cafeteria. Suggestive also for the home. More useful for the amateur than Richards and Treat."—Booklist

Booklist 18:350 Jl '22

"From the lunch cart to the tea room and from the home to the hotel the people who cook have a valuable hook in Miss Bradley's 'Cooking for Profit.' From the simple service to the elaborate, Miss Bradley has provided suggestions and helps that every housekeeper ought appreciate. . . It is the kind of book that ought to be in the hands of every housekeeper in the country, and one that people who cook for profit cannot afford to be without."

+ Boston Transcript p1 Je 11 '22 260w
Pratt p20 autumn '22

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM STANLEY BEAUMONT, ed. Anthology of magazine verse for 1921, and year book of American poetry. 294p $2.25 Small

811.08 American poetry—Collections

"The annual anthology includes an index of poets and poems published in American magazines, August, 1920—July, 1921, articles and reviews of poets and poetry published during 1920—1921, volumes of poems published during 1920—1921 and a select list of books about poets and poetry."—Booklist

Booklist 18:147 F '22

"No one who is intellectually honest in the matter can deny the integrity of his effort, but unfortunately it is also true that the effect of his over-catholic enthusiasm for all American writers of verse is to make it increasingly difficult for the best and most significant poetry to achieve recognition out of the jungle of bad verse which he has distinguished by critical encouragement and republication in this series and elsewhere." E. J. O.

— + Boston Transcript p7 D 14 '21 1200w

Dial 72:537 My '22 150w

"If anything, the poetry in the current anthology is a bit inferior to the collections that have preceded it."

— N Y Times p11 Ja 29 '22 150w

"His anthologies have shown a steady improvement year by year. In the present volume he has perhaps reached a point beyond which, with the natural limitations upon his time and resources, he will be unable to go."

+ Outlook 130:606 Ap 12 '22 300w

Reviewed by E. M. Jewett

Springfd Republican p11a Mr 19 '22 1350w

Wis Lib Bul 18:101 Ap '22

BRASOL, BORIS LEO. Balance sheet of sovietism. 272p $2 Duffield

947 Russia—Economic conditions Soviet government. Bolshevism—Russia 22-20927

The author's attitude towards the present régime in Russia is hostile thruout. In considering the various factors that have contributed to the country's sufferings and distressful condition he finds that the Allied blockade, the drought and failure of crops are negligible in the face of the Bolshevik government. To the latter he attributes all the horrors that have transpired in Russia since the revolution, and the ruin of its agricultural system and its industries. He sees in it a deadly menace to the rest of the world.

"We can recognize the value of his work, but in all honesty it must be said that his book requires to be read with the utmost caution." N. H. Dole

— + N Y Times p7 Ja 7 '23 950w

"A calm analysis of the economic and social effects of Bolshevik rule after a five years' trial."

R of Rs 66:671 D '22 50w

BRAWLEY, BENJAMIN GRIFFITH. Social history of the American negro. 420p $4 Macmillan

326 Negroes—History. Liberia. United States—Race question 21-15578

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

"An honest, painstaking and exhaustive study of the political and social aspects of the problem. . . Mr. Brawley is a careful and painstaking searcher after truth and the amount of information which he has gathered is amazing but his style is lacking in interest and the book at times is rather dull reading. So vital and deeply interesting are the situations which he portrays however, [that] Mr. Brawley can be forgiven for his faults as a writer. We know of no book on this question which contains nearly so much of value and interest." W. F. W.

+ — Boston Transcript p9 Ja 21 '22 1100w

"Mr. Brawley is an indefatigable student and has gathered and documented an immense amount of new material. It is perhaps unfortunate that the author's style is not a very readable one. Yet the facts which he gives are so striking that they suffer little from a lack of art in presentation. The book is a mine of information. It may be questioned whether Mr. Brawley was wise in devoting nearly three-fourths of his work to the pre-Civil War period." W. F. White

+ — Nation 114:101 Ja 25 '22 430w

"Rev Benjamin Brawley has the gift of clear, condensed historical summary as well as eloquence in presenting the wrongs and misfortunes of his race."

+ Springfd Republican p13a Mr 12 '22 1850w

"Mr. Brawley's history is comprehensive, scholarly and readable."

+ Survey 47:366 Mr 18 '22 200w

BREWER, DANIEL CHAUNCEY. Peril of the republic: are we facing revolution in the United States? 354p $1.75 Putnam

325.7 Immigrants in the United States. United States—Social conditions 22-14044

The author finds in the alien invasion of the United States the chief cause of our peril and of the drift toward political revolution. He examines the changes in the country due to the immense influx of aliens, our failure to deal with the foreigner, our unwise methods of Americanization and naturalization and the conditions we allow to exist which make the immigrant discontented and ready for revolution. He then goes on to discuss the concrete program for revolution which is being proposed by some of our aliens.

"This is a strong well-reasoned and challenging book. Many of us know in a general way the facts that Mr. Brewer states with great particularity, but this trenchant marshalling of them makes us hold our breath. Mr. Brewer's may be a voice crying out in the wilderness. But if his book can only become popular, if it is permitted to carry its message where it should be carried, it may turn out to be one of the most important books published in this country in many years. Whether it is cherished or forgotten, may have far-reaching consequences." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 5 '22 650w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p547 Ag 24 '22 60w

"This book, while of undoubted value, cannot be accepted as a complete account of American conditions. Many facts could be presented which would lead to a much more favourable outlook on the future of American democracy."

BREWER, DANIEL C.—Continued

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p590 S 21 '22 1100w

BREWSTER, A. B. Hill tribes of Fiji. 308p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

919.61 Fiji islands

"A record of forty years' intimate connection with the tribes of the mountainous interior of Fiji with a description of their habits in war and peace, methods of living, characteristics mental and physical, from the days of cannibalism to the present time." (Subtitle) These reminiscences of a resident commissioner give a very intimate picture of the life of the Fijians and are interspersed with numerous anecdotes and accounts of personal experiences. Maps. Index.

"His description of this primitive but not wholly uncultured people's habits in war and peace, mode of life, and mental and physical characteristics, is a contribution of real value to anthropological research." W. B. W.

+ New Statesman 20:20 O 7 '22 680w

New Statesman 20:supxvi D 2 '22 40w

"The reader will find in Mr. Brewster's pages many picturesque stories that have been handed down from generation to generation, and which the natives repeat with a dramatic effect that is carried even into the cold type of a printed book. If one wishes to understand, as never before, the true psychology of a rapidly changing race, he must read this volume."

+ N Y Times p5 D 10 '22 1300w

"In this most readable book he paints a broad and comprehensive picture of the native life, alike as it was in the old cannibal days and as it is now under British rule."

+ Sat R 134:548 O 14 '22 390w

Spec 130:21 Ja 6 '23 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p606 S 28 '22 850w

BREWSTER, HAROLD SIDNEY. Simple gospel. 201p $1.50 Macmillan

226.2 Sermon on the mount. Jesus Christ —Teaching 22-6649

"The present volume is an earnest endeavor to go to the heart of the Simple Gospel. It proposes to search the Sermon on the Mount for its essential truths, and it intends to set forth only such principles as are necessarily inferred from that discourse. It seeks to interpret literally what the New Testament says is the teaching of Jesus." (Introd.)

Booklist 19:143 F '23

"Perhaps no reader will agree with every challenging suggestion in the book. To interpret Jesus honestly in modern terms is an unsuspectedly hard job, as any one who has tried it has already discovered. But such an attempt as this can only promote a more nearly Christian point of view in the reader."

Lit R p812 JI 15 '22 410w

"Without being particularly brilliant or profound, the book deserves a reading for its quiet, simple, straightforward grasp on the incompatibility of Jesus's teaching with the basic principles and practices of our society."

+ — Nation 115:22 JI 5 '22 90w

Springf'd Republican p7a JI 23 '22 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p826 D 7 '22 30w

BRIDGE, JOHN SEARGEANT CYPRIAN. History of France from the death of Louis XI; v 1, Reign of Charles VIII. Regency of Anne of Beaujeu, 1483-93. 296p $7.20 Oxford [16s Milford]

944 France—History—House of Valois, 1328-1589 (Eng ed 22-10717)

A history of France during the regency of Anne of Beaujeu. "Great care has been taken to investigate each point, to weigh evidence, and to estimate values. A list of sources and secondary authorities is given, followed by tables to illustrate the French monetary system and several useful genealogies."—Eng Hist R

"A tendency to over-emphasis would seem to be Mr. Bridge's chief weakness. This is doubtless part of that dramatic sense which makes his book so readable." R: A. Newhall

+ — Am Hist R 27:816 JI '22 600w

"Mr. Bridge has done a great service to English readers. The period from 1483 to 1493, the regency of Anne of Beaujeu, has never before been treated in detail by an English writer. The work now before us supplies therefore a real need, and it supplies this need very adequately. Above all, the whole is written with a vigour and freshness of style which make the book an attractive literary work, as well as a valuable contribution to knowledge." E. C. Lodge

+ Eng Hist R 37:582 O '22 1350w

"It is rarely that a reviewer can say of a volume of history that it fulfils every demand of historical criticism—scrupulous accuracy, and easy mastery of the sources, faultless construction, breadth of view, and an irresistible literary charm. Yet Mr. Bridge's intensive study of the decade following the death of the crafty, cynical monarch of Plessis-les-Tours has all these qualities. It is the most instructive, convincing, and fascinating study of an epoch of French history that we have ever seen." D: S. Muzzey

+ Lit R p901 Ag 26 '22 1000w

Reviewed by E. F. Humphrey
Nation 115:75 JI 19 '22 50w

"No criticism must obscure the fact that Mr. Bridge has made a very promising start on a great project. To anyone who reads carefully his learned and vivacious narrative it must be obvious that he only needs to develop a little more self-confidence, to handle a little more boldly his wide knowledge, to become a little less hesitant and a little more definite. Mr. Bridge gives every indication of becoming that very rare thing, a historian who can write."

+ New Statesman 19:72 Ap 22 '22 1000w

"Anne of Beaujeu was a great woman and on the whole a good ruler, and it is pleasant to have so excellent an account in English of her famous regency."

+ Spec 128:274 Mr 4 '22 1300w

"What Mr. Bridge has accomplished is to take these ten years and people their scenes with living men and women. His reading, which must have been considerable, he carries lightly, and as a weapon in his hand, not as a load upon his shoulders. . . He has produced a volume which no writer on England in the fifteenth century is likely to leave unread. And not the least part of our pleasure in his book is due to him for having proved that, after all, modern history can still be literature."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p51 Ja 26 '22 2100w

BRIDGES, ROY. Rogues' haven. 285p $1.75 Appleton [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

22-14994

"For mere crime Mr. Bridges gives us picturesque rascality: for the criminal-in-chief a cultivated scoundrel of fine manners and appearance, witty, sarcastic, and treacherous: for police and detectives an acute old family solicitor supported by Bow-street runners: and as the central figure in a maze of greed, treachery, and violence, a magnificent old scoundrel, once a pirate. He is still surrounded and waited upon by faded old men, who have formerly sailed and fought with him and now remain with him in the hope of rifling his hidden hoard as soon as death shall have released them from the terror in which he holds them."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 19:121 Ja '23

"A very good story, indeed, for people who like that kind of a tale."

+ N Y Times p22 JI 30 '22 500w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson
N Y Tribune p21 D 31 '22 90w
Pratt p35 autumn '22

"His tale is full of picturesque and highly coloured properties, of impenetrable and guilty secrets, and of gleams from marvellous heaps of hidden jewels."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p462 J1
 13 '22 140w

BRIDGES, VICTOR. Greensea Island: a mystery of the Essex coast. 386p $1.90
Putnam [7s 6d, Mills & B.]

22-6163

"Regret inform you your uncle Richard Jan-naway died 17th inst. As next of kin, you inherit. Please call 117, Bedford-row as soon as you reach England—Wilnot and Drayton, solicitors." This telegram altered the life of John Dryden, who had done good work in the war, and was now second officer on board a merchant ship. What he inherited was a bank balance and a house on Greensea Island, where Uncle Richard had lived in solitude guarded by a prize-fighter and an enormous savage dog. Evidently he had a past and lived in fear of his life. The reader will grow as fond of John Dryden as of the girl who forms part of the mystery.—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 18:329 Je '22

"Mr. Bridges has a story to tell and he tells it well. Its mystery is faintly adumbrated in the first chapter, but, mercifully for us, is solved before the last one. The story is altogether too long, but as its interest does not flag, it succeeds in its obvious purpose of furnishing entertainment without ulterior object."

+ Lit R p609 Ap 22 '22 130w

"It is the manner in which the author tells his story, the little twists in the solution of the mystery and the lovable character traits in Christine and John which make the reader follow the story to the end, and when finished not stop to criticise the plot, but have a pleasant sensation—the sensation which comes after finishing a story in which you liked immensely both the hero and the heroine."

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 26 '22 280w

"A capital tale."

+ Outlook 130:656 Ap 19 '22 40w

"A gaily-written exciting story full of adventure, with some good minor characters, and ending happily. What more could anyone want for a cosy evening by the fire?"

+ Sat R 133:69 Ja 21 '22 260w

Spec 128:119 Ja 28 '22 40w

"The anticipations which the situation arouses are well fulfilled. The story is full of excitements."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p14 Ja 5 '22 100w

BRIGHOUSE, HAROLD. Hepplestaill's. 320p $2
McBride [7s 6d Chapman & D.]

"Hepplestaill's are the great mills founded in Straithley, Lancashire, in the days when steam was a new discovery, by Reuben, the first Hepplestaill of note. And with the founding of the mills a terrible hate was established between the Hepplestaills and the Bradshaws, a hate that was to smolder, and rankle, and grow through several generations. The book is divided into two parts, the first dealing with the days of the Prince Regent and the growth of Hepplestaill's, the second with our own times, post-war England and Hepplestaill's as an important and established service. The factory as a Thing is the greatest influence in the lives of each successive generation of Hepplestaill's. It is the main motif of their existence."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:19 O '22

"Without any question this novel shows rare ability, and intense seriousness of purpose." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 3 '22 490w

Cath World 115:844 S '22 80w

"A good deal of ingenuity has gone into the making of 'Hepplestaill's.' In style, Mr. Brighouse has not attained ease, although in this instance one suspects that the recalcitrant elements of the story are chiefly accountable for the lack of smoothness, in phrase and sentence." L. B.

+ Freeman 5:382 Je 28 '22 130w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Ind 108:492 My 27 '22 360w

"The theme renders it inevitable that the novel should be lacking in unity; that it should proceed mainly by means of a series of more or less disconnected episodes; yet one feels that the author might have gained by making the book slightly more coherent, particularly in the latter part. . . None the less, the story is not only interesting from start to finish, but distinctly to be commended for the careful study it makes of the changes attendant upon the introduction of steam into manufacturing."

+ Lit R p746 Je 17 '22 230w

"As solid and vigorous a piece of workmanship as we could wish for. Mr. Brighouse is to be congratulated on making a novel about business such a pleasure and a pleasant romance so businesslike."

+ Nation and Ath 31:314 My 27 '22 160w

"This is an exceedingly good piece of writing, with a Foreword that is an altogether delightful little bit of whimsy. Don't, if you are the kind of person that usually skips prologues and such, skip this one. The book is interesting throughout, but the latter half is much the more interesting."

+ N Y Times p16 My 14 '22 330w

"It is the finest Lancashire novel we have read, because it touches the character of Lancashire, its interests, its personalities, at so many points and touches them always so convincingly. . . Mr. Brighouse is most convincing in his treatment of those periods which are remotest from us. A generation or two hence his contemporary episodes may read as convincingly. To us it seems that Mr. Brighouse goes wrong when his epic of a great factory deteriorates into the love-story of an improbable young man."

+ Sat R 133:554 My 27 '22 440w

"The narrative is natural, plain and unfevered, a quiet, understanding interpretation of industrialism as it first was and as it might be (perhaps is) at the beginning of this post-war period. Nor is there so much theme in it as to keep it from being fiction."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Je 18 '22 280w

Survey 48:220 My 6 '22 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p246 Ap 13 '22 50w

BRILL, ABRAHAM ARDEN. Fundamental conceptions of psychoanalysis. 344p $2.50 Har-court

130 Psychoanalysis

22-695

The book is a statement of the theory of psychoanalysis as promulgated by Freud. It is based on a course of lectures on pedagogics delivered by the author and is intended for those interested in problems of education and psychology. Beginning with a description of the cathartic method employed by Freud and Breuer in their practice the author reviews the entire field of psychoanalysis along Freudian lines citing a great many cases by way of illustration. Index.

Booklist 18:177 Mr '22

Reviewed by Ruth Hale

Bookm 55:302 My '22 250w

"A well-written, untechnical and broadly 'popular' account. The whole trend of this book brings psychoanalysis within the purview of the general reader to a degree which has probably not been attempted in any previous interpretation." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 29 '22 500w

Cleveland p52 Ag '22

BRILL, ABRAHAM ARDEN—Continued

"A book without technicalities, entertainingly but not too profusely illustrated from a long and successful practice, clear and orthodox. . . One closes Dr. Brill's book with a profound feeling of gratitude that we are still unadjusted to our world, that because of man's rebellious inability to accept things just as he finds them, he can alter the conditions under his hand. One wiser than Dr. Brill must advise us when to adapt ourselves to things as they are, when to ease for ourselves the strains of conformity, and above all, when to refuse any compromise with the inner forces that hurt us and impel us to re-create our environment." G. B. King

— + Freeman 5:524 Ag 9 '22 1500w

"Among recent books on psychoanalysis that of Dr. Brill is the most comprehensive and representative. Dr. Brill presents the orthodox Freudian views in a breezy, chatty series of talks intended rather for the parent and teacher than for the physician. . . Dr. Brill is not your judicious, cautious writer. He shoots off assertions right and left." R. S. Woodworth

+ — Lit R p289 D 9 '22 780w

"The voluminous literature of psychoanalysis has been increased but not enriched by this new book from the pen of Dr. A. A. Brill. It signifies a crystallization and clarification of his own mind rather than an extension of the psychoanalytic survey of the minds of others. One may note it as such and pass on." H. M. Kallen

— New Repub 31:338 Ag 16 '22 1750w

New Statesman 19:493 Ag 5 '22 680w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:201 My '22

"Though the book is purposely elementary and therefore may not contain much that is new to those already experienced in the subject, it summarizes in a clear and memorable form a mass of useful information, and for readers not deeply versed in the subject who seek to understand themselves and others, or are concerned with the treatment and education of children, it is a book to be strongly recommended."

+ Spec 129:273 Ag 26 '22 1300w

Springf'd Republican p9a F 26 '22 180w

"Will be a distinct disappointment to the lay reader who is looking for a clear exposition of the fundamental tenets of psychoanalysis. It is unsystematic in its arrangement and contains such a preponderance of case material that the reader who is uninitiated is quite apt to lose the thread of the argument. The material for the book was originally gathered for lectures, and it has all the disadvantages of the lecture form."

— Survey 49:397 D 15 '22 70w

Wis Lib Bul 18:98 Ap '22

BRINCKMEYER, HERMAN. Hugo Stinnes; tr. from the German by Alfred B. Kuttner. 149p $1.50 Huebsch

B or 92 Stinnes, Hugo. Germany—Economic conditions 22-26203

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:233 Ap '22

Boston Transcript p6 F 21 '22 450w

Cleveland p95 D '22

"It is rather unfortunate that the first seemingly authoritative brochure on Stinnes should resolve itself into an apology and defense of the vertical trust, and not concern itself more with the man and his theories. Interesting as is the story of Stinnes's growth to power and his formation of vast combines, the outside world would have liked a much more independent analysis of the personality of the Rhineland magnate and of his political and economic views." F. W. Wilson

— Lit R p413 F 11 '22 1250w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey
Nation 115:282 S 20 '22 90w

Reviewed by A. C. Freeman
N Y Call p10 Ap 16 '22 210w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:367 Ji '22
Spec 128:533 Ap 23 '22 130w

"His portrait is admirably drawn in the biographical chapters of this book, and what has seemed from afar a sinister, even demoniacal figure becomes a human personality which one can understand. The operations by which this Rhinish mine owner has obtained control over his own related industries becomes clear." B. L.

+ Survey 48:280 My 20 '22 370w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Ap 20 '22 250w

BRINK, ROSCOE W. Down the river. 171p $1.90 Holt

811

22-16922

A story of married life told in free verse. A young pair goes from the country to make their home in the city down the river. The girl, at least, is glad to get away and goes with high hopes. Then the city begins to close in on her even as the country, her children come too fast, she sees her husband's soul shrink. She is filled with discontent at first, but amid the city's squalor she keeps something of her girlish dreams of beauty, she learns to be tolerant of her husband and the people about her and one day she realizes herself a part of her city, loving people and needing them.

"A remarkable experiment and a thrilling and a very beautiful achievement." Sidney Howard

+ Bookm 56:349 N '22 750w

"Each small scene is packed with human incident, throbbing with emotion, pulsing with reality. It is a most unusual book which Roscoe Brink has written. It would have been unusual in prose. Yet we know it would have lost much had it been written in prose. The medium he has chosen is splendidly fitted to the warm human quality of what he has written." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 20 '22 780w

"It is interesting chiefly because of its novel form, and because of the many homely truths which have crept into its pages."

+ Cath World 116:718 F '23 150w

"A novel in free verse that deserves consideration only because of its form. It is a pity that Mr. Brink is not a more gifted novelist, that he is so mediocre a writer of verse, for his experiment is in itself interesting."

— + Dial 73:682 D '22 220w

"There is much beauty and emotion in this book, whether or not one feels that its form is as admirable as one would like it to be." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 109:241 O 28 '22 740w

"Poetically the book is highly creditable; it is firmly rooted in American life and its expression has the accent and cadence of our speech." Lloyd Morris

+ Int Bk R p89 D '22 160w

"Mr. Brink has left the safe ground of the poet, who distills his story into lyrics. He is struggling, sometimes feebly, sometimes vigorously, towards a more direct method of transmuting into poetry the rough stuff of life. We applaud his effort as significant of what many are to try after him, while remaining doubtful of his success. But one thing is certain, he has made an interesting book, and what he sees in human nature is well worth his search for a means to express it." H. S. Canby

+ — Lit R p3 S 9 '22 1300w

"The reality of the poem suffers from the 'poetry'; the poetry suffers from its mixture with a diluted and prosaic realism. All that aside, however, 'Down the River' is a highly creditable experiment, and the rendering of the woman's pathetic mind is only a little short of triumphant. She is not an individual, increasingly alive like Esther Waters; but she thinks and speaks for millions of her kind. It is to be hoped that Mr. Brink will try somebody like her again." D. M.

+ — Nation 115:sup382 O 11 '22 140w

"It is interminably wearisome and affected. The story, if it is a good story, and it has decided elements of observation and of intuition, ought to be able to bear being written without the assistance of a chopping machine." Hildegarde Hawthorne

— + N Y Times p6 N 5 '22 530w
Survey 49:sup206 N 1 '22 90w
Wis Lib Bul 18:272 D '22

BRISSENDEN, PAUL FREDERICK, and
FRANKEL, EMIL. Labor turnover in industry. 215p $3.50 Macmillan

331.8 Labor turnover 22-23081

A statistical analysis, based on figures collected for the United States Bureau of labor statistics, of the shifting of labor in American industries, of the factors that are likely to increase or diminish the inward and outward flow of workers, and of methods which may be used to reduce this instability.

"Presents in the covers of one volume a critical analysis of the whole subject of labor turnover. . . . The book is unique in its field. No other work has been published which treats the subject in so complete a manner nor have there been any articles which presented so much data from which to draw conclusions." Bryce Haynes

+ Administration 5:233 F '23 1000w

BROADUS, EDMUND KEMPER. Laureateship. 240p $5.65 Oxford [15s Milford]

821 Poets laureate (Eng ed 22-15336)

"A study of the office of poet laureate in England, with some account of the poets. It begins with 'the king's poet' in early Anglo-Saxon days, and Anglo-Saxon attitudes, traces the development of the idea of a laurel-crowned poet, dwells upon such great figures as John Dryden, touches upon such others as Nahum Tate, and closes its study with a review of the work of the present laureate Dr. Bridges."—Ind

Reviewed by R. E. N. Dodge

Am Hist R 27:814 J1 '22 450w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:283 Mr 18 '22 300w

Reviewed by C. L. Moore

Lit R p786 J1 8 '22 750w

"Though it is an anomaly, it is an interesting one, and Professor Broadus has done well in exploring this bypath of literary history." J. M. Murry

+ Nation and Ath 30:694 F 4 '22 2100w

"The laureateship has oftener been the subject of satire than of serious literary history, but Professor Broadus approaches it always as a scholar. He concludes with a discussion of Tennyson and his two successors which contains some of the best critical work of the volume. His appraisal of Tennyson as a laureate is illuminating and sound." Royall Snow

+ New Repub 30:350 My 17 '22 750w

"Professor Broadus's book is of interest, not only as an excellent and quotational history of the good and bad Poets Laureate since Dryden, but as a study of the origins of the Laureateship from the coming of the Normans, and even earlier. His book is an extremely interesting survey of an extremely uninteresting group of writers—an important history of a far from important job." Robert Lynd

+ New Statesman 18:650 Mr 11 '22 1050w

"He has been most painstaking in his researches and has elucidated all the points about which there was any doubt, so that the book should finally dispose of the various misconceptions that have prevailed for centuries and take its place as the authoritative work on the subject."

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 16 '22 1450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:508 N '22

"His book supersedes all that has been written on the subject before. It is not less entertaining than learned."

Sat R 133:16 Ja 7 '22 740w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p49 Ja 26 '22 3300w

BROOKS, BENJAMIN TALBOTT. Chemistry of the non-benzenoid hydrocarbons and their simple derivatives. 612p $7 Chemical catalog co.

547.2 Hydrocarbons

"Contains bibliographical foot-notes. 'Chiefly a compilation of detailed information regarding a wide range of hydrocarbons and derivatives not included in what is usually referred to as the benzene series.' (J Ind & Engin Chem)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:15 Ja '23

BROOKS, CHARLES STEPHEN. Frightful plays! 214p il $2.50 Harcourt

812 22-19817

The author carefully explains how he came to write the first play, "Wappin' wharf" and how he chose the title. The play is a burlesque on pirates, as children love to imagine them. It has a happy ending, for Red Joe, the pirate without the pig-tail, when he is about to be stabbed to death for having frustrated a plot to wreck a ship, turns out to be the Prince of Wales, just come into the kingdom, and little Betsy, the dish washer, who loves him, to be the daughter of the Duke of Cornwall. The second play "At the sign of the Greedy Pig" is a grotesque satire on society. The illustrations, by Julia McCune Flory, are as funny as the text.

Booklist 19:74 D '22

"Highly to be commended as book-making in the best of taste."

+ Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 20w

Reviewed by Parkhurst Whitney

Lit R p196 N 11 '22 780w

N Y Times p13 D 17 '22 160w

"In spite of an occasional bright antic 'Wappin' Wharf' is sorry stuff. 'At the Sign of the Greedy Pig' is happy enough to restimulate interest; certainly the title, augmented by a delightful Flory picture, goes far in establishing lost enthusiasm. When his material is of the right sort Mr. Brooks is capable of delightful fantasy."

+ N Y Tribune p10 O 8 '22 850w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:592 D '22

Springf'd Republican p6 N 6 '22 420w

Wis Lib Bul 18:252 N '22

BROOKS, CYRUS HARRY. Practice of autosuggestion by the method of Emile Coué. 119p $1.25 Dodd [3s 6d Allen & U.]

615.851 Mental healing. Coué, Emile 22-10711

To this simple and comprehensive statement of the principles and practice of autosuggestion, as taught by Emile Coué at Nancy, M. Coué himself writes a foreword. The author has studied the method on the spot and gives a full description of the Nancy clinic. He shows how the method is rooted in the new discoveries of psychology, and how its success depends on the impressions the individual is able to make on his unconscious mind. He also gives full instruction for its application and includes many letters setting forth the details of cures effected.

Booklist 19:34 N '22

Reviewed by Morris Fishbein

Bookm 56:502 D '22 700w

Boston Transcript p6 My 24 '22 450w

Cleveland p75 S '22

Reviewed by H. S. Howe, M.D.

Lit R p145 O 28 '22 1050w

Reviewed by Van Buren Thorne, M.D.

N Y Times p11 Ag 6 '22 2050w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:6 Ja '23

Pratt p16 autumn '22

St Louis 20:264 N '22

BROOKS, CYRUS HARRY—Continued

"At this moment when M. Coué's system, the essence of which is absence of struggle and effort, is not only the subject of violent controversy, but is actually a fashionable fad, it is a comfort to take up Mr. C. H. Brooks's book. Its pages contain not only a treatise on the Nancy method, but also two chapters in which the author attempts to reconcile Autosuggestion with reason and to give support by an appeal to that faculty for the exercise of faith which is necessary to obtain success in carrying out M. Coué's suggestions."

+ Spec 128:431 Ap 8 '22 1450w

Wis Lib Bul 18:214 O '22

BROSTER, DOROTHY KATHLEEN. Yellow poppy. 439p $2 McBride

22-26480

This story of the last days of the French revolution, during the directorate, centers about the Chateau Mirabel, an estate near Paris confiscated by the government and turned into a museum, and about its former inmates, the Duc de Trélan and his wife. De Trélan, under an assumed name, is commanding an army of royalists when he accidentally hears of a treasure hidden under the ground at Mirabel for generations, the possession of which will alone enable him to carry out his projects. During the adventures undertaken for the removal of the treasure, the Duchesse de Trélan, supposed to have been killed in the revolution, is found to be miraculously living and as Mme Vidal, the concierge at Mirabel. The recovery of the treasure, the happy reunion of de Trélan and his wife, the tragic failure of his campaign ending with his execution at Mirabel, make a truly old-time romance.

Booklist 18:364 Jl '22

"The story, stirring on every page, is well conceived and carefully wrought out. It is pure romance. Swift moving and full of pathos and fine impulse, its chief men and women are actuated by motives of honor, love and sacrifice. This is the basis of a genuinely romantic novel and despite the fatal ending the reader puts it by a little bettered by the high faith that is in it."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '22 370w

Cath World 115:697 Ag '22 140w
Cleveland p80 S '22

"Written with all the enthusiasm that is naturally provoked by stirring times (and the consciousness of an excellent plot), it becomes a story of unusual attractiveness. And if there is a sentimental strain in it, it is the sort of sentiment that one need not be ashamed to enjoy."

+ Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 350w

"Mr. Broster exhibits more than the usual amount of knowledge of the great days in which he sets his action. 'The Yellow Poppy' deserves to be successful."

+ N Y Times p18 My 14 '22 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:320 Jl '22

Springf'd Republican p7a S 24 '22 180w

BROWN, HEYWOOD CAMPBELL. The boy grew older. 291p $1.75 Putnam

22-20171

Peter Neale, journalist and sports writer, met Maria Alvarez, dancer and singer, married her and was deserted by her two weeks after their boy was born. A nurse cared for little Pat during the week but on her Sundays off Peter was in sole charge and he had much to learn about the care and feeding of infants. The boy grew, but "it was slow work." The story follows the growing and shows the tender relationship between a father and son. Peter designed Pat for a newspaper man, but he reckoned without Maria's blood in him. When Pat was seventeen and at Harvard Peter encountered Maria in Paris and showed her Pat's picture. "It is my nose," said Maria. "It says singer, singer, singer. It says great singer." So Peter brought Pat to meet his mother and Pat had to choose between singer mother and journalist father.

"For a first novel, this is extraordinarily skilful. Brown never overplays. With a simple, flowing style and a deep understanding, Mr. Brown has told his stories and his anecdotes in a fashion that makes 'The Boy Grew Older' quite the most delightful evening's reading I can recommend this fall." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:339 N '22 270w

"There is humour in its pages and pathos, tragedy and comedy all mixed up, and accepted, as we usually accept them in everyday life, given to us with a reticence of words that is the sign of genius—or of a good newspaper man." L. H. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 8 '22 1100w

"The plot of the book is admirably simple and clear. But the author has dodged the constructive difficulties of his task." E. C. Adams.

+ Detroit News p13 N 19 '22 570w

Reviewed by Gilbert Seldes

Dial 74:100 Ja '23 560w

"A rarer mingling of pathos and of delicious humor would be hard to find. Remarkably well done story, but the strongest impression left by the book is the taste 'sweet and yet bitter in the mouth' left by a style of simplicity, of perfection, and of ineffable charm, such as is hard to find now save in Anatole France." S. S. A.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 25 '22 600w

"Often very readable and amusing; often pretty thin; often clever and epigrammatic; often painfully straining to be both of these things." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:274 N 11 '22 130w

"Mr. Brown's humor is charmingly his own: fecund, most risible and cathartic. He is courageously honest toward deep matters, prompt and lucid in narrative, tender and understanding in genuine sentiment. A book at once so enlightened in spirit and so unspoiled by sophistication is a remarkable achievement." Christopher Morley

+ Int Bk R p15 D '22 1300w

"'The Boy Grew Older' is something else besides a novel, and it is perhaps more interesting and important as the other thing. It belongs with those books which are spiritual if not factual autobiographies. Here is a book which is probably as transparent a presentation of himself as ever a man made. The quality about it which most takes you is its fragrant breath of incorrigible humility and simplicity."

"The characters in the book are very lightly touched in, though with admirable deftness. The whole story swings in an airy atmosphere. If it somewhat lacks body, it certainly has bouquet." R. C. Holliday

+ Lit R p123 O 21 '22 230w

"It is agreeable and easy reading with touches of the breezy humor familiar to all readers of Mr. Brown's 'column' but it is not memorable. The book is good and bad in the way in which rather direct transcripts from life are likely to be. Its actuality and sincerity are engaging and fresh but it is never lifted into that high general significance which no reporting can attain." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 116:47 Ja 10 '23 250w

"One feels he hasn't dared its full significance. His women are hard, and his men—including himself the hero—are too proud to be anything but amusing. Well, that's delightful in a newspaper, but it makes a novel miss fire. However, one cannot but be glad whenever there is a little more of a good thing, and Heywood Brown is as present in his book as in his column. His humor, his fecundity, his genial enthusiasms and his wide appeal put him beyond the reach of 'the higher criticism.'" Ruth Pickering

+ New Repub 32:313 N 15 '22 800w

"There is no heaviness about his style of writing. On the contrary, he possesses the ability to skim lightly over certain phases of life, where some of his more heavy-footed brethren of the pen are prone to break through and stir up all manner of unpleasantness. He has a fine sense of humor, but, unlike many who possess that gift, he does not permit it to work overtime."

+ N Y Times p4 O 22 '22 650w

"This fresh evidence of Heywood Broun's is more or less autobiographical. . . It is one of those books that cannot be laid aside—a touching, human document written by a man who has dug into life and found it good, for all its sorrow." C: H. Towne

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 1 '22 1200w

"The latter half is unconvincing; it is unreal, unconvincing and illogical. The first part of the book has undeniable charm. It is certainly not a well-knit, successfully motivated novel, compact and inescapable in form. It is merely a 'good book,' made up of words rather smoothly and clearly joined together." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 15 '22 1700w

"Cleverly written. It has considerable realism in its reproduction of newspaper men's talk but joined with a spirit of human kindness and friendly feeling that saves the talk from the kind of realism that makes 'Babbitt' in its essence pessimistic." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 132:532 N 22 '22 280w

"The first thing that strikes us about the book is the sharp, clean proficiency of its execution. The writer knows what he wants to say and, being an efficient person, he says it with precision and vigour. There is no waste of words or effects. Nor is this efficiency merely superficial. The characterization and the psychology are equally right. . . The chief virtue of the book is that it is alive. The characters are alive and engage our sympathies, and the story has a human pathos entirely free from sentimentality."

+ Spec 130:107 Ja 20 '23 950w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 12 '22 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p845 D

14 '22 70w

Wis Lib Bul 19:25 Ja '23

BROUN, HEYWOOD CAMPBELL. Pieces of hate, and other enthusiasms. 227p $2 Doran

814

22-15696

Some of these articles have already appeared in periodicals or in Mr Broun's newspaper column. The topics are various—books, sport, the theater, children, politics. Partial contents: The not impossible Sheikh: John Roach Straton; Ruth vs. Roth; Mr. Dempsey's five-foot shelf; Sport for art's sake; Judge Krink; The well made revue; An adjective a day; The unknown soldier; I'd die for dear old Rutgers; Volstead and conversation; Life, the copy cat; Art for argument's sake; How to win money at the races; Danger signals for readers; Adventure made painless; Professor George Pierce Baker; What Shakespeare missed; Censoring the censor.

Booklist 19:44 N '22

"If Broun lacks the erudition of some other critics, he compensates for it by making his literary contributions easily absorbed. He smiles to himself all through the book and, what is more important, the reader does too."

+ Bookm 56:104 S '22 130w

"Mr. Broun has callously (or do we mean carelessly) deceived us. He doesn't hate anything very much. If there is a fault with the book it lies in the fact that most things which deserve the inconsequently good-natured treatment which Mr. Broun uses, and which thrive up under it, are the things least worth criticising. In fact, most of the definite subjects are more ephemeral than the paragraphs that discuss them. But there is much good sense, much keen analysis hid under Mr Broun's smiling exterior." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 8 '22 950w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:22 J1 22 '22 180w

"The merit of the book is that it has all the good humor of the younger English essayists with much more substance." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:78 Ag 19 '22 200w

Reviewed by Carl Van Doren

Nation 115:sup377 O 11 '22 150w

"There are just three essays in this book, 'Judge Krink,' 'I'd Die for Old Rutgers,' and 'Sport for Art's Sake' which have the qualities that make for permanence. The rest is only so much journalism. These three essays, for the felicity of their expression, the validity of the ideas they contain, and the relation they bear to life show us what Mr. Broun is capable of doing." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p5 J1 2 '22 480w

"Broun's comment has its source in Broun and not in any literary movement or in any literary breakdown. He might honestly claim that he has retained his amateur standing and has never become a professional liker or disliker. . . But there is something in Broun much better than criticism. It is a gift for taking almost any topic, it does not seem to matter which, any topic of the most passing interest, and of lifting it right out of the chatter of the city into the company of permanent things. In all of his best work there are cracks and sometimes windows through which you can look toward a background of the ultimate decencies and happiness of mankind." Walter Lippmann

+ N Y World p13 Je 29 '22 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:590 D '22

St Louis 20:272 N '22

"His pieces are not blurbs; there is a thought behind most. You may not agree, but you must smile. Of course, some of the selections are a little below par, but to expect a man to write uniformly good essays at the rate of at least one a day is asking a little too much. Some are rather weak, but none are borseous."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 J1 7 '22 220w

BROWER, HARRIETTE MOORE. Story-lives of master musicians. 371p il $2.50 Stokes

927.8 Musicians

22-24808

The author has gathered her facts for these life stories of great musicians from biography, letters, journals and musical history, and has endeavored to make her stories simple enough to interest young people. There are sketches of Palestrina, Bach, Handel, Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin, Berlioz, Liszt, Verdi, Wagner, Franck, Brahms, Grieg, Tchaikowsky, MacDowell and Debussy, each with a portrait.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:611 D '22

"As human interest stories some of these chapters take high rank. There is encouragement in many of these careers to young people of today who may be tempted to discouragement by obstacles. They will hardly find the going any rougher than some musicians who reached the summit."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 14 '23 250w

"Could be used with music students and would interest the general reader."

Wis Lib Bul 19:22 Ja '23

BROWN, ALICE. Old Crow. 534p $2 Macmillan

22-19052

The story is thruout a study of powerful character influences unseen but ceaselessly at work. John Raven's life seemed to have been selected for their battleground. He had reached middle life but never attained his freedom, for as unwilling recipient of Anne Hamilton's love and favors, he had been for years under the compulsion of her spirit and his own sense of decent gratitude. Her death brought no release, for she left him her wealth to administer for a cause in which he did not believe. He took himself off to his New Hampshire farm to think things out, to get away from his complications, to cure what his family believed shell-shock from the war, but which he knew was his disillusion and his loss of God. Here he encountered other and no less powerful influences,—the spirit of his hermit uncle, Old Crow, which inhabited the place, and the tragedy of the beautiful Tira under a fate more terrible than his own and into which he was inevitably drawn. To Tira John Raven came to be her personification of God and thru her faith in him and the sun and health of young Nan's love, Raven found his own lost faith.

BROWN, ALICE—Continued.

Booklist 19:84 D '22

"The story is a finished study of an interesting group of people, suffering or enjoying emotions that each of us has known; or feelings distinctly individual but into all of which we can enter." L. H. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 1 '22 800w

"A tragic, poignant and touching book, a real work of art that lays an unerring finger upon the human soul." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p70 D '22 40w

"The record that Miss Brown has written is a vivid record of genuine, if incomplete, religious experience. So much of the book as this occupies—and it is fully nine-tenths—is work of tremendous force and deep insight into the world mood. It is full of divinations about human nature and human relationship that make one shudder or exclaim triumphantly. The novel, in fact, has so many of the qualities of greatness that one grieves over the infirmities of its conclusion. It is such a pity that the living water that the author conducts so freely and majestically through the tragic horror of her story should finally vanish in the dreary aridity of absentee welfare work." E: T. Booth

— + Lit R p239 N 25 '22 1150w

"Miss Brown has written an immature book. It is immature in its laborious reproduction of New England dialect and psychology, and in a curious forgetfulness of the scene, the absence of which lends a certain unreality to the story. It is immature by reason of the presence of the author, who cannot leave her characters alone but is forever caressing or chiding them, and who insists on her having her say about the war—and says it with a scream. If we had to find a single word for this book it would be virginal."

— New Repub 33:154 Ja 3 '23 80w

"Certainly the finest of Miss Alice Brown's novels. It is a curiously subtle book which, although contriving an effect of extreme simplicity, is none the less deeply rooted in a complicated pattern of human nature at odds with itself and its environment. . . . Miss Brown gives a picture of life satisfying in its depth of insight and in its respect for the dignity of human experience."

+ N Y Times p18 O 15 '22 1000w

"With all respect to Miss Brown's deep seriousness and always admirable competency of style, it must be confessed that Old Crow is too impeccable in prophecy, too often quoted and down from the driver's seat to start the clogged engine, a veritable bogey resolving the grotesque alternatives of life into a luminous pattern of final ecstasy. No one wants to impeach Miss consulted, a deus ex machina always getting Brown's conscientious workmanship, her all too careful exposition of human motives, the ordered technique of her deliberate prose. We beg leave to protest that 'Old Crow' is altogether too very much of a muchness." A. D. Douglas

— + N Y Tribune p12 N 19 '22 950w

"As a study of New England traits and ways 'Old Crow' goes beneath dialect and into the fiber of character. It is profound and intense in its presentment of the clash between what is spiritual and what is base in life, and of native purity faced with hostile heredity and environment. It has emotion but not emotionalism. It is human tragedy flecked with the rays of cheerfulness, sympathy, and devotion." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 132:532 N 22 '22 250w

+ Springf'd Republican p6a D 3 '22 600w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Art of preaching. (Lyman Beecher lectures on preaching in Yale university) 250p $1.75 Macmillan

251 Preaching

22-22071

The dean of the Yale divinity school deals in an intimate way with the making of a sermon, bringing together simple and practical suggestions drawn from more than thirty years' preaching experience. Contents: The significance of the sermon; The basis of the sermon; The content of the sermon; The measure of the sermon; The lighter elements of the sermon; The delivery of the sermon; The setting of the sermon; The soul of the sermon.

"The present volume is in Dean Brown's best style, lively with flashes of humor, rich in scripture phraseology and allusion, earnest in emphasizing the prime motive of preaching. This book is the recipe for a vivid sermon or any number of them."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 26 '22 330w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Honor of the church. 97p $1 Pilgrim press

261 Church, The

22-8847

Believing that we have had about enough of the wholesale abuse of the church, the dean of the Divinity school of Yale university makes this simple, popular statement of what the church is and of its place in the world today. Other organizations have attacked the evil of the world piecemeal, have undertaken single pieces of human betterment, but "the church is the one institution on earth which has had courage enough to stand up and accept the social ideal in its entirety. . . . It is able to hold to that course because it makes character its supreme interest."

Cleveland p72 S '22

"A timely protest and forceful argument. This is the book to give to men who are easily persuaded that the church is on the toboggan and who are thrown into a panic when they hear someone cry 'Wolf!'"

+ J Religion 2:660 N '22 40w

"Strong suggestions from a wise and respected leader on what a church may do in the changed environment in which it finds itself. They are not technical formulas, but inspiring and stimulating utterances, and they are written in the author's pungent style."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 24 '22 260w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Lincoln, the greatest man of the nineteenth century. 77p $1 (5s) Macmillan

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham

22-3091

This appreciation of Lincoln, originally given as an after-dinner speech, gradually shaped itself and expanded into the address here contained. The author, dean of the Yale divinity school, bases the claim of this title on a valid principle of selection, measuring Lincoln's greatness by the significance of the period he influenced, the value of the interests involved and the permanence of the work accomplished. Dr. Brown analyzes clearly and definitely the elements of Lincoln's greatness and in closing draws a parallel between his life and the life of Christ.

Am Pol Sci R 16:731 N '22 50w

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 1 '22 220w

"His study is a characteristically topical address, gracefully phrased and quite adequate for a public occasion. It adds nothing to history or biography, but it supplies a sketch of Lincoln that by its sincerity and warmth of administration should rouse the desire of its readers to follow in greater detail the career that it so glowingly eulogizes."

+ Lit R p826 Jl 22 '22 140w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:291 Je '22

St Louis 20:224 S '22

Spec 128:727 Je 10 '22 500w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 21 '22 280w

"It is a brief appreciation which lacks nothing in the way of eulogy, and, among other things, institutes a close comparison between Lincoln and Christ."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p293 My 4 '22 100w

BROWN, EDNA ADELAIDE. Chinese kitten. 230p il $1.50 Lothrop

22-17559

A story for quite young children which continues the adventures of Lucy and Dora Merrill, begun in "The silver bear." (Book Review Digest, 1921) On a trip to the beach Dora loses Arcturus, the little silver bear charm, her most prized possession. Being an unselfish little person she tries not to show her grief, and later has sent her a little blue kitten of carved ivory, which she prizes very much. But when a few months later Arcturus is found, her joy is complete.

Booklist 19:90 D '22

"Well-written and conscious of the tastes of small people."

+ N Y Times p18 N 12 '22 30w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:612 D '22

Springf'd Republican p12 D 22 '22 50w

BROWN, IRVING. Nights and days on the gypsy trail; through Andalusia and on other Mediterranean shores, with an account of the Romany race, & an introd. by George E. Woodberry. 267p il $3 Harper

914.6 Gipsies. Spain—Description and travel

22-19309

Spain is the background for the trail of the gypsies whose windings the author follows all over the peninsula, in country and city, in the Pyrenees and in Barcelona, in Cadiz and Jerez, in Cordova and Gibraltar, across the strait to Tangier, in Malaga, Granada, Guadix and Seville. He got at the heart of gypsy life, watched them in the dance and in song, in the bull ring and at fairs and festivals. The opening chapter tells something of their origin and language.

Booklist 19:79 D '22

"This is a book to put beside Romany Rye and Borrow's other gypsy chronicles, for it is an astonishing account."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 6 '22 320w

"Mr. Brown commands a pleasant style, somewhat poetic without lapsing into wordy consciousness; now and again the scenes and people recall to his mind the melodies of universal poetry, but there is a certain staleness in the quotations. . . One's best comment on the present narrative is that one gladly looks forward to its successor." I. G.

+ Freeman 6:502 Ja 31 '23 300w

"In this book Mr. Brown has produced a good piece of work. Beyond doubt he has genuine feeling for beauty and some of the fire which must be within the man of letters." C. P. Pearson

+ Lit R p380 Ja 13 '23 950w

"No small part of the charm of this book is the intimate manner in which the author takes you by the hand and leads you behind the age-old screen into Gypsyland. He strikes deep, far beneath the skin, and unerringly finds the sound humanity, the calm philosophy of a race which has often been maligned but rarely understood."

+ N Y Times p9 D 17 '22 1400w

"If Mr. Irving Brown has discovered little of high importance in the gypsies, he has nevertheless discovered Mr. Irving Brown—artist, adventurer, and at moments very like a poet. Quite without intending it, he has pictured himself, at full length in his book, and a most endearing portrait he gives us." R. L. Hartt

N Y Tribune p10 N 5 '22 1250w

"The pages are full of color, incident, and insight into the character and life of these strange people."

+ Outlook 132:391 N 1 '22 90w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:551 D '22

R of Rs 66:672 D '22 30w

Wis Lib Bul 19:23 Ja '23

BROWN, WILLIAM ADAMS. Church in America. 378p $3 (14s) Macmillan

260 United States—Church history. Church, The. Protestants in the United States

22-16154

In this survey of the present condition and future prospects of the church in America, the author makes large use of studies made within the last three years by the Committee on the war and the religious outlook, of which he was chairman. Among the subjects considered are the relation of youth to religion; the social, industrial and international problems which the church has to face; the successes and failures of the church during the war; the ideals toward which the church should strive; the community church and church unity movements; religious education and the responsibility of the church in forming public opinion and inducing cooperative thinking.

Booklist 19:67 D '22

"It is an apologetic in the exact sense of that term for the American church, characterized by great sympathy and motivated by a great faith. It will find at once a place in the working library of every well-read minister on the strength of the descriptive and historical matter which it contains, quite apart from the viewpoint which it presents."

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p1 O 28 '22 400w

"Grateful as one may be for the ample material and generally competent observation in this book, it must be admitted that to most readers it will appear somewhat inchoate and inconclusive." B. I. Bell

+ Freeman 6:260 N 22 '22 900w

"An exceptionally valuable study of our present religious situation, based on facts gathered from various surveys and utterances. It furnishes the indispensable knowledge for real leadership, and points the way to a better future."

+ J Religion 2:658 N '22 30w

"Dr. Brown is unusually well qualified to deal with his chosen subject by the depth of his interest in it, the intimacy of his connection with ecclesiastical affairs, and the honesty of his desire to report fact correctly. The result is a book which ought to broaden the horizon of many churchmen and give them new insight into their problems at the same time that it confutes superficial critics of the churches who see in them only institutions to be pitied, ridiculed, or ignored." Norman Thomas

+ Nation 115:585 N 29 '22 700w

St Louis 21:4 Ja '23

Reviewed by Graham Taylor

Survey 49:393 D 15 '22 330w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p767 N 23 '22 140w

BRUERE, ROBERT W. Coming of coal. 123p $1 Assn. press

338.2 Coal industry

22-11773

Beginning with a brief geological story of coal this history of the coal industry describes the industrial revolution which made coal such an important factor, the impulse which coal, in turn, gave to men's inventive faculties and its function in the development of human society. Turning to the history of the industry in America, the author describes the awakening of the miners, their struggle for organization, the slow growth of signs of more democratic government in the coal industry, and the forces at work toward a technical revolution which shall integrate all our sources of fuel and power and convert their energy into electricity. The book was prepared for the Educational committee of the commission on the church and social service of the Federal council of the churches of Christ in America. There is a select bibliography and an index.

Booklist 19:36 N '22

BRUERE, ROBERT W.—Continued

"It is a scientific treatment, comprehensive yet brief. Mr. Bruere has taken the whole commonplace subject of black coal and mechanical mining processes and drab mining towns and spiritualized it. He has put poetry and romance into it and has built it all into a drama whose theme is the progressive liberation of the human spirit through the conquest of the acquisitive instinct by the 'consciousness of kind.'" F. E. J.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p9
My '22 280w

"It is a shame that Mr. Bruere should have allowed an unctuous sentimentality appropriate only to a moralizing Sunday school story to mar his account of the place of coal in our modern life. . . Many of the facts about coal which are presented are both interesting and important."

+ Lit R p422 Ja 27 '23 280w

"Rather heavily charged with God and cosmic energy, but honest and useful propaganda, full of orderly information."

+ -- Nation 115:443 O 25 '22 40w

"It is popular, plain, readable. It is even poetic. If Christian laymen will only read it. But if they do not, if only those of us read it who are perpetually lean and hungry for straight facts about any major industry from the point of view of the Great Society, then, I am afraid, the Coming of Coal will prove a little disappointing. We shall prefer more facts and less sweetness and light." Stuart Chase

+ -- New Repub 32:231 N 1 '22 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:11 Ja '23

R of Rs 66:448 O '22 30w

Wis Lib Bul 18:250 N '22

BRUNET, RENE. New German constitution; tr. by Joseph Gollomb. 339p $3.50 Knopf

342.43 Germany—Constitution. Germany—Politics and government 22-8967

In his introduction to this translation Charles A. Beard says of the book that it combines the scientific spirit with an intimate first-hand knowledge of the forces and materials which are described and is the best treatise on the German constitution which exists. In it "we have a plain and simple account of the German revolution and the conflict of forces which ended in the establishment of the republic. The balance of parties is examined. The results of the elections to the national assembly are summarized. Then follows a systematic analysis of the new plan of government, illuminated by continual reference to the concrete historical circumstances in which the makers of the German constitution had to operate." A translation in full of the German constitution is given in the appendix.

Reviewed by A. N. Holcombe

Am Pol Sci R 16:700 N '22 700w

Booklist 19:36 N '22

"Discusses clearly, exhaustively, and impartially the constitution and the forces that made it."

+ Bookm 56:105 S '22 130w

Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '22 850w

Reviewed by R. J. Davis

Lit R p106 O 14 '22 800w

"A genuinely valuable work."

+ Nation 115:312 S 27 '22 30w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:334 Jl '22

"Professor Beard calls it the best treatise on the subject in any language; it is the first complete analysis so far published in America."

+ Survey 49:119 O 15 '22 70w

BRUNNER, MRS EMMA BEATRICE (KAUFMAN). Personal touch. 312p $1.90 Brentano's 22-7924

"The 'Justifables' of this tale are a band of criminals, swindlers, and thieves who are pretending to operate on the exact lines of any other business corporation, with a board of directors, agents, etc., and even capital stock for sale to outsiders. They consider their proceedings justifiable because all big business—the banks, insurance, railroads, and so on—are, they believe, run upon equally dishonest lines. The plot itself is concerned with the exploits and education of a young emissary of this 'trust' who goes into high society for the purpose of theft, but who is led to reform by the discovery that not all successful business folks are dishonest. There is, of course, also a thread of a love story running through an intricate series of adventures. The story leaves the reformed young hero about to begin a career of honest work, thereby pointing its moral."—Lit R

"Although incident is sometimes overstrained, the interest of this 'mystery and adventure' story is well sustained upon the whole."

+ -- Boston Transcript p7 Ap 29 '22 650w

"The reader will get many a laugh out of the story, and perhaps some serious thought, as well as a large amount of straight entertainment."

+ Lit D p59 Ag 19 '22 680w

"Mrs. Brunner has achieved novelty both in the conception of this story and in its manner. It is a solemnly presented fantasia, an extravaganza that not only considers itself plausible, but makes the reader believe in it and accept it as something more than a very up-to-date fairy tale."

+ Lit R p745 Je 17 '22 390w

"A well-told story, written in an easy, pleasant style, and having that lightness of touch so necessary for this kind of fiction. It is entertaining, and holds the reader's interest."

+ N Y Times p14 Ap 30 '22 470w

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 23 '22 200w

BRUNTON, DAVID WILLIAM, and DAVIS, JOHN ALLEN. Modern tunneling: new chapters on railroad tunneling by J. Vipond Davies. 2d ed rev and enl 612p $6.50 Wiley 22-4265

"The first part of the book deals with mine and water-supply tunnels, and the second with large tunnels. Besides chapters on materials, apparatus, and methods used, there are several on the history of tunneling and on costs."

—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:18 Ap '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:348 Jl '22

BRUUN, LAURIDS VALDEMAR. Promised isle; tr. from the Danish by David Pritchard. 243p $2 Knopf 22-15475

This story follows "Van Zanten's Happy Days." The author has again taken the papers of his friend and pieced together a story of the South Seas. Daniel Hooch, an author, and two friends, a musician and a painter, decide to lead a life unfettered by convention, so they sail to a remote island in the South Seas. Desiring absolute solitude, they choose separate parts of the island, but their plans are greatly disturbed by the untiring energy of Pieter Goy, a waiter from an Amsterdam café, whom they had persuaded to accompany them, and when Peter discovers a solitary native girl things are indeed disrupted. They all become homesick; the author writes verses about Holland; the painter paints a picture of his native land, and the musician arranges a symphony of Dutch airs. They finally set sail for home in a boat constructed by Pieter and when they reach Holland, each one receives great praise for his respective work and Pieter is set up in another café by his grateful friends.

"This is delicate, highly amusing satire which we can enjoy from beginning to end with very little effort on our part." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '22 1000w

"It seeks to recapture the adroit ironic flavour of Van Zanten's Happy Days, but its success is only approximate. Characters called Jakob Beer and Daniel Hooch may be good vaudeville, but they become flat the moment they are uncorked."

— Dial 73:681 D '22 80w

"The fertile soil of satire which Laurids Bruun turned up in 'Van Zanten's Happy Days' does not yield so lavishly in 'The Promised Isle.' The author has attempted to duplicate his humper crop, but the rust of the obvious has blighted the green shoots of fancy, and the field is scarcely worth harvesting." L. B.

+ Freeman 6:238 N 15 '22 130w

"A rollicking story and shows Van Zanten's satirical powers. It does not contain his personal experience and therefore places him as a writer of imagination, just as 'Happy Days' establishes him as an autobiographical writer of unusual descriptive ability. It is to be hoped that Laurids Bruun will see fit to publish more of his manuscripts." M. R. Werner

+ Lit R p504 Mr 18 '22 360w

"It is often bizarre but not without humor. It goes well with a demitasse and a cigarette—one more smoke ring tossed into the air by an expert." Edith Rickert

+ New Repub 33:206 Ja 17 '23 280w

"The author's art and skill conjure up a very real vision of the island, authentic in substance and in atmosphere, and prick the iridescent bubbles that have been blown from so many South Sea pipes. It is all written with realism and sincerity. The translation is so well done that it deserves a special word of commendation."

+ N Y Times p19 J1 30 '22 620w

"An amusing extravaganza."

+ Sat R 132:241 Ag 20 '21 60w

"The adventures cannot, if the truth be confessed, be said to promote much either in the way of humour or excitement."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p325 My 19 '21 150w

BRUUN, LAURIDS VALDEMAR. Van Zanten's happy days: a love story from Pelli Island; tr. from the Danish by David Pritchard. 215p $2 Knopf [7s 6d Gyldendal]

22-5373

Van Zanten was a Dutchman who went to the South Sea islands many years ago before they had become a literary discovery and when they were mostly unknown to the white man. He lived for five years on the island of Yap and for two years on Pelli Island, one of the Pelew group. Years later he met the Danish author Laurids Bruun in Paris and gave him long and interesting accounts of his experiences which Bruun urged him strongly to write out. This he never did in finished form but when he died he left Bruun all his diaries and manuscripts with authority to use them as he liked. His "happy days" were his two or more years of residence on Pelli Island among the people he loved and especially his life with the native girl Ali, which makes a love story of unusual and romantic quality.

"The book is not a literary masterpiece. Properly speaking it is not literature at all. But its bald statements of fact (or what we assume to be such) have a value of their own."

— + Ath p523 O 15 '20 80w

Freeman 5:526 Ag 9 '22 250w

"It is highly successful in picturing the fascination of native life before missionaries, traders, and writers made all the native races of faraway lands self-conscious. Van Zanten is an excellent writer. He possesses a sense of humor and a charm which make his selection of incident entertaining and appropriate. His terse descriptions satisfy fully the curiosity of the reader concerning just how strange peoples spend their days and nights. 'Van Zanten's Happy Days' has pathos, humor and vividness, which make it easily the South Sea classic, a position to which it is entitled in point of time, for Van Zanten wrote when the South Seas were still unspoiled for literature." M. R. Werner

+ Lit R p503 Mr 18 '22 500w

"The story is nothing much but the setting, and, above all, the naïve description of the daily life of the childlike islanders is everything in a book of extraordinary charm and literary beauty."

+ N Y Times p16 My 28 '22 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p621 S 23 '20 80w

BRYAN, WILLIAM JENNINGS. In His image. 266p $1.75 Revell

215 Evolution. Religion and science 22-5227

"In His Image,' the 1921 lectures on the James Sprunt foundation of Union Theological seminary, Virginia, is bound to attract attention and receive a wide reading, both on account of the prominence of the author and his vigorous attack on the higher criticism and the theory of evolution. The lectures are a part of the tendency toward so-called 'fundamentalism' that is one of the reactions of the war."—Spring'd Republican

"Is it any wonder, after doses of the pious exhortations, to be found in this book, that those who did listen or those who must read should want to break all the commandments, and join the ranks of the unbelievers?"

— Boston Transcript p6 Ap 5 '22 230w

"The lectures are in Mr. Bryan's well-known rhetorical style, and are racy reading, whatever may be thought of the critical validity of his position."

+ J Religion 2:331 My '22 60w

Reviewed by Austin Hay

N Y Times p5 Mr 5 '22 1850w

Outlook 131:118 My 17 '22 290w

"The style is that of the extemporaneous speaker, and has the faults that are inherent to it; but perhaps this is best, since it jolts one out of the ordinary class-room form and scintillates with emotion and life. His interpretations of some of the grand truths of the gospel are impelling and worthily handled."

+ Spring'd Republican p13a Ap 9 '22 520w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p651 O 12 '22 80w

BRYANT, MRS LORINDA (MUNSON). French pictures and their painters. 311p il $5 Dodd

759.4 Painting, French 22-23283

The author treats French painting in connection with the history of France. Events and people are studied as portrayed by French painters and the work of the artist is considered as reflecting the life of his time or influencing events. The period covered is from Queen Matilda and the pictures of the Bayeux tapestries to contemporary painting. There are 219 illustrations. Index.

Booklist 19:113 Ja '23

"In 'French Pictures and Their Painters' we find the same charm of discrimination that was so apparent in Mrs. Bryant's 'American Pictures and Their Painters' and 'What Pictures to See in Europe.' She seems almost intuitively to see the weaknesses of many of the pictures she selects the while she never loses sight of the great virtues in them. To anyone interested in French paintings, French artists, Mrs. Bryant has indeed presented a book deserving of gratitude."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 13 '22 400w

BRYANT, MARGUERITE (MRS PHILIP MUNN). Richard. 310p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

22-17066

"At a dinner party Mr. Justice Garven meets a man named Hood, whom he recognizes as his son Richard. Long ago it was given out that Richard was dead. The judge insists on Hood's accompanying him to his home. There he tells him that he knows him to be Saunders, the notorious swindler, who escaped after serving two years of a seven-year sentence. Several alternatives are suggested to Richard, giving himself up to the authorities or placing his future in his father's hands. Choosing the latter he begins a five-year term of voluntary imprisonment at the home of a Mr. Dunster in Somerset. When Mr. Dunster's daughter, Joan, comes home the end can be readily guessed."—N Y Tribune

BRYANT, MARGUERITE—Continued

— Booklist 19:52 N '22

"The author makes a success of all this largely because she avoids so nicely and completely the pitfall of sentimentality."

+ Lit R p131 O 21 '22 500w

"Marguerite Bryant has hit upon a most unusual plot for this novel of crime and punishment."

+ N Y Times p12 O 8 '22 350w

"The book is absorbing—and unconvincing." Kathleen Field

+ — N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 200w

"Excellent writing and holds the interest perfectly. But the reader cannot quite accept some incidents and situations, and, what is worse, the lovable character of the young criminal is radically inconsistent with his acts and his companionship with low criminals." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 132:533 N 22 '22 130w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 150w

"The psychology is questionable and the writing mediocre, but it is a readable book. Although it is not free from the worst commonplaces of phraseology, it is free from the worst commonplaces of sentiment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p546 Ag 24 '22 210w

Wis Lib Bul 19:25 Ja '23

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount. International relations. (Institute of politics publications, Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 275p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

341 International law and relations. War 22-3768

The eight lectures which make up this volume were given before the Institute of politics held at Williams college in August, 1921, a few months before Viscount Bryce's death. Printed almost exactly as they were delivered, the lectures treat the subject in its broader aspects and with a distinctly practical aim—to show how the world of international politics has come to be what it is and what can be done to avert the dangers that are threatening the peace of mankind. Particular interest, in view of the weight and authority of the author, attaches to his last lecture in which he declares his belief that "the plan for combined action recently created by the Versailles Covenant will . . . ultimately succeed, and we mean to persevere in supporting it."

Reviewed by G. G. Willson

Am Hist R 27:766 Jl '22 800w

"A large number of major questions which go to the foundation of human organization and collective action are here helped toward solution as sketched with summary completeness and excellent proportion by a master's hand. The book shows no dimming of the mental eye or failure of effective literary expression." A. H. Lybyer

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:697 N '22 700w

Booklist 18:347 Jl '22

Bookm 55:312 My '22 70w

Cleveland p53 Ag '22

Reviewed by W. W. Pierson, Jr.

Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 Jl 23 '22 850w

Reviewed by R. J. Davis

Lit R p686 My 27 '22 440w

"Luminous and variously informed survey." J. A. Hobson

+ Nation 115:sup380 O 11 '22 700w

"There is no fact stated in these pages which could not be supported by very good evidence and no opinion which could not be supported by very good arguments. Yet its effect can only be given adequately in a parable. It is late December; you go up into the apple loft, thinking of those superb apples which you picked in the mellow days of the end of September. How rich and ripe they will be now, how juicy and how fragrant. In the dim light you pick out a superb Cox's Orange Pippin, the most distinguished of all apples, only to find that it has become wrinkled and dry."

+ New Statesman 19:644 S 16 '22 170w

"Luminous addresses. . . By the time the last page is reached the reader is familiar with the political philosophy of one of the acutest minds of nearly one hundred years."

+ N Y Times p22 Mr 12 '22 1150w

"This book must be read because it is a most profound and interesting contribution to a subject now of the foremost importance. [It] is worthy, by its breadth of view, its scope of subject and its freedom from cant, to take a commanding place in the literature of its subject." Robert Cresswell

+ N Y Tribune p4 Jl 23 '22 880w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:330 Jl '22

"The point of view is conservative, but open-minded; there is no hint of the reactionary, but, on the other hand, there is no suggestion of the original thinker. Lord Bryce was pre-eminently an observer. His vast accumulation of knowledge has rarely been equalled, and in these lectures, as in his other books, he presents facts, arranging and connecting them in a manner which, while not superficial and not mechanical, hesitates, nevertheless, to interpret, to criticize, or to prophesy. The style rarely scintillates, but it is never slipshod."

+ Pol Sci Q 37:715 D '22 300w

Pratt p9 Ap '22

R of Rs 65:670 Je '22 210w

"The book abounds in practical wisdom."

+ Spec 129:277 Ag 26 '22 370w

Springf'd Republican p6 My 22 '22 760w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p315 My 18 '22 1550w

Wis Lib Bul 18:178 Jl '22

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount. Study of American history. 118p $1.50 Macmillan [3s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

973 United States—History 22-3083

The book consists of the inaugural lecture by Viscount Bryce at the founding of the Sir George Watson chair of American history, literature and institutions, together with a prefatory note by the secretary of the Anglo-American society, and an appendix giving the history of the Sir George Watson foundation with the preliminary correspondence. In his lecture Viscount Bryce considers various aspects of American history: the influences that have made the American people different from their English stock; what might have happened if the colonies had not separated from England; how the political development has been overshadowed by the industrial and commercial growth; the unpredictable change in the character of the people that a vast and still unassimilated immigrant population may bring about; the strong and weak points in the American government; and lastly the ever present bond of a common language between England and America. Index.

Am Hist R 27:826 Jl '22 230w

"A brilliant synopsis of American history and of Anglo-American relations from the end of the seventeenth century."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:339 My '22 200w

Booklist 18:231 Ap '22

Bookm 55:314 My '22 60w

Cath World 115:836 S '22 160w

Reviewed by Lindsay Rogers

Educ R 65:134 F '23 350w

"It would conduce far more to the good understanding for which Lord Bryce pleads if American history were made to appear to Englishmen not as a variant of their own, but as something quite apart and alien. They might then understand why we are often bumptious, touchy, and mercurial. Apart from this motif, this inaugural address is wholly admirable." Allen Johnson

+ — Lit R p838 J1 29 '22 950w

"Blandness and benevolence—these are hardly enough with which to venture into such a discussion. There are, however, some penetrating remarks upon the functioning of the English and the American governments in international affairs, and a grave nobility in the language of the discourse, which make one forgive much that is trite and obvious." Carl Van Doren

— + Nation 114:497 Ap 26 '22 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:372 J1 '22

R of Rs 65:446 Ap '22 100w

"Lord Bryce contrived, as usual, in a brief discourse to open several fruitful lines of thought."

+ Spec 127:899 D 31 '21 350w

+ Spring'd Republican p13a Ap 16 '22 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p862 D 22 '21 90w

Wis Lib Bul 18:183 J1 '22

BUCHAN, JOHN. History of the great war; with introd. by J. G. Harbord. 4v 552:578;603; 536p $20 Houghton

940.3 European war, 1914-1919 22-22783

From 1916 to the end of the war John Buchan held the position of Director of information in the British foreign office and was thus at the centre of information gathered by agents in all parts of the world and now in the British archives. During the time he wrote a series of twenty-four historical monographs on the different phases of the war and of this series the present four volumes are a revision. The history embraces every phase of the war on every front, at sea, on land, and at home in the different countries, the contents being arranged consecutively by date. Mr Buchan has avoided the formlessness of a mere compilation and put into his story considerable color and movement. Writing primarily for English readers, he has treated Britain's part in the war more fully than that of the other belligerents. He emphasizes the point that he has betrayed no confidences and included no matter which is not public property. The work contains seventy-eight large folding maps, an index of military and naval units, and a general index.

"Many characteristics of permanent work it certainly has—a beautiful lucidity of language, a clarity in the untangling of complexities, comprehension, sense of proportion, a dignified but rapid style; while in the high qualities of imagination, feeling, and the sensitive appreciation of the grandeur of the times they chronicle, his solid volumes merit—we would except only Mr. Masfield's austere story of Gallipoli—the topmost place among the chronicles of the Great War." Ellery Sedgwick

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf F '23 400w

Booklist 19:116 Ja '23

Boston Transcript p9 D 6 '22 3300w

"The history is primarily one of military and naval operations, and is probably the most complete and convincing account from the British point of view that we are likely to have for some years. It is clear, well balanced, adequately equipped with maps, and admirably free from the racial prejudices and hatreds which flourish in time of war. The style is vivid and attractive. Scholarly allusions abound. There is a constant appreciation of historic backgrounds." G. B. H.

+ Eng Hist R 37:172 J1 '22 220w (Review of v 1-2)

"A narrative which is throughout finely tempered and written with much literary skill." G. B. H.

+ Eng Hist R 38:152 Ja '23 180w (Review of v 3)

"The author is a generous historian who never denies praise to the genuine instances of German gallantry and fortitude. His denunciation of German perfidy and inhumanity is sober and restrained. A great work; by all means to be owned by every public library." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:346 D 9 '22 330w

"Later historians will have a good deal to add to Col. Buchan's narrative, but they will be wise if they borrow freely from him and keep constantly in mind the contemporary perspective he has preserved. This contemporary quality—the intensity and vividness of the participant's viewpoint—is the outstanding merit of the book." T. H. Thomas

+ Lit R p113 Ja 27 '23 1500w

"If he has a fault, it is that he writes from under the shadow of the British official legend." P. G.

+ — New Statesman 19:171 J1 29 '22 550w (Review of v 3)

"Mr. Buchan has run a long course, and he has run it uncommonly well. The history of recent events always raises delicate problems of perspective. Any narrative of so portentous a tangle as the last war involves a writer in the most anxious questions of arrangement, of the mere mechanics of history. And it is precisely at these two danger-points, in his perspective and his arrangement, that Mr. Buchan most conspicuously surpasses his competitors." P. G.

+ New Statesman 20:182 N 11 '22 800w (Review of v 4)

"No front from Mesopotamia to Flanders is neglected in this careful narrative. It is a human and instructive book, a monument of industry."

+ N Y Times p3 D 10 '22 3300w

"His pages contain few adjectives and very few superlatives. . . . Everywhere there is the mark of that restraint which is possible only to the truly strong. And this applies not only to the verbal expression, but equally, and even more notably and admirably to the judgment expressed. There are many other histories of the war and of parts and phases of it. There will be many more. There may some day be one superior to this, but that day is not yet. Down to this present moment Colonel Buchan's is distinctively and without challenge 'The History of the Great War.'" W. F. Johnson

+ Outlook 133:231 Ja 31 '23 3000w

"In vividness of style and narrative movement, Colonel Buchan's history is all that could be desired."

+ R of Rs 67:220 F '23 350w

"The volumes are marked by vigour, discrimination and general accuracy. The maps are excellent. Mr. Buchan's history of the war is far in advance of any that has yet been published in any country. Mr. Buchan's naval chapters are the least satisfactory in an otherwise excellent book."

+ Sat R 133:580 Je 3 '22 1250w (Review of v 2-3)

"Naturally his present history can only be provisional, and many of its verdicts may ultimately have to be revised. But it is a stepping stone to the completer and fuller history which may satisfy the next generation. His defects in this volume, as in its predecessors, are that, despite his industry, he has not been able to keep up with the mass of new works that are constantly appearing on the war; that his attitude is rather too much the official one, which glosses over the disagreeable and condones inefficiency; and that he is too pronounced an enthusiast for Lord Haig's methods and strategy to be quite dispassionate."

+ — Sat R 134:515 O 14 '22 1450w (Review of v 4)

"Mr. Buchan has the invaluable art of disentangling what matters from a wilderness of facts, names and figures. His English also is always pure and lively. From nearly every point of view this history is a remarkable achievement."

BUCHAN, JOHN—Continued

+ Spec 129:434 S 30 '22 1750w (Review of v 4)

"The movement and characteristic emotions of various periods are reproduced in the vivid and vibrant style which Mr. Buchan so skillfully employs. But, after all, a contemporary history of the war, written when political motives were to be served, has small permanent value save as a portrayal of what the nation thought and felt; and even this, for the permanent record, had better be set beside the full and sober story of what was actually going on."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 N 27 '22 900w

"Such a compilation, until the official archives are available, must naturally lack accuracy and authority; for the basis, apart from the dispatches, must be mainly 'war stories' told by participants, newspapers, and the books written either by or on behalf of unsuccessful generals, Allied and enemy. These last can hardly be accepted as containing the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p576 S 14 '22 1150w

BUCHANAN, ANGUS. Exploration of Afr: out of the world north of Nigeria. 258p il $6 Dutton [16s Murray]

916.6 Ashen. Africa, Central

The object of the expedition, undertaken by the author on camel-back with none but native escort, was to link up the chain of zoological geography across that portion of Central Africa which lies between Algeria in northern Africa and Nigeria in West Africa. The land was almost unexplored. Beside much ethnological observation the expedition yielded a great number of new species and sub-species of mammals, birds and lepidoptera, a list of which is given in the appendix. The route of travel was from Lagos over Kano, Hansa Zinder, Agades in Afr and back to Lagos, a distance of 1,400 miles. Index.

"Mr. Buchanan's style is vivid and his narrative racy; he touches but lightly on the hardships he had to endure in this arid section of the African continent. He is at his best when he describes the vicissitudes of tracking down some much coveted specimen. His accounts of the natives with whom he came into contact, although not sufficiently detailed to be of much value to the ethnologist, will give the general reader a very good idea of the character of these peoples."

+ Nature 110:35 J1 8 '22 160w

Outlook 132:254 O 11 '22 40w

"It is illustrated with excellent photographs. We commend it especially to the sportsman, the geographer, and the lover of nature."

+ Sat R 132:594 N 19 '21 120w

Science Progress p679 Ap '22 3/4col

Spec 128:86 Ja 21 '22 120w

"The graphic record of his travel and adventures will interest a public far larger than the purely scientific one anxious to learn of new discoveries."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p755 N 17 '21 70w

BUCHHOLTZ, JOHANNES. Egholm and his God; tr. from the Danish by W. W. Worster. 298p $2.50 Knopf [8s 6d Gyldeald] (Eng ed 22-26181)

This translation from one of the modern Danish novelists is a character study of the poor fanatical Egholm whose devotion to his God kept his family in misery. We see him first as an ardent follower of the queer sect of the Brotherhood, giving tithes to the Lord tho he thereby robbed his children of their bread, settling up at night his strange accounts with his God, and then his wonderful discovery in the Bible which he thought pointed to the abolishment of the tithe. Cruelty to his family he did not find inconsistent with his fanatical religion and things went from bad to worse with his poor wife and children. At the close of the book he is shown making a burnt offering and sacrifice to the Lord of a long worked over invention which the Lord had not seen fit should come out right.

Booklist 18:364 J1 '22

"There are passages of quaintness and humor, but as a whole Egholm's story repels rather than attracts us." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 5 '22 800w
Cleveland p50 Ag '22

"Egholm and His God is bizarre without being fascinating; vivid, but not real; a curious, but not a compelling work of fiction."

+ Dial 73:233 Ag '22 70w

"Opens like a moving picture, and the movie-technique is never quite dropped. In consequence, one has a succession of impressions, clear enough but not cumulative in interest, and with no ultimate unity. The whole effect is inevitably vague and somewhat fantastic—the result of a method which wavers between realism and fantasy without definitely accepting either."

L. B. — Freeman 5:550 Ag 16 '22 150w

"[Has] real humor and wholesome sarcasm."

+ Lit R p795 J1 8 '22 340w

+ New Repub 31:194 J1 12 '22 250w

"The twenty-five speaking characters associated with Egholm are as diverting a lot as have been created since the days of Dickens. Their humor is abundant, always rollicking and sometimes raw. What they do may be pathetic; what they say is sure to be fetching, whether foul or fair. Egholm's God is a unique contribution to theology. Buchholtz's Egholm is an equally rare accession to the human family."

+ N Y Times p15 Je 11 '22 580w

BUCHHOLTZ, JOHANNES. Miracles of Clara Van Haag; tr. from the Danish by W. W. Worster. 303p $2.50 Knopf [8s 6d Gyldeald] 22-26894

"Kasper Egholm unsuccessful inventor and religious crank, has been more fully portrayed in an earlier book, 'Egholm and his God.' The present volume shows him sullenly carrying on a photographer's business in the seaport town of Knarreby—a queer, futile, often repulsive figure. His daughter Hedwig is a servant in the house of Customs officer van Haag—the husband of Egholm's early love, Clara Steen. The couple are scarcely on speaking terms. She is on the point of leaving again; then decides to stay on in Knarreby with the express object of conferring benefits on Egholm and his family. There is certainly room for improvement in the shoddy little household, where Egholm's ill-used wife acts as buffer between him and his half-witted but lively son. Clara's efforts, however, do not meet with lasting success except with Hedwig—a well-drawn character, whose love affair with Johan Fors, is the most normal and convincing episode in the book."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 19:52 N '22

"A lively romance, indigenous and racy, the flavour of which has been well caught in Mr. W. W. Worster's translation. Aside from its narrative interest, the novel has considerable value as a picture of Danish life, seen with an informal and sympathetic eye."

+ Dial 73:580 N '22 190w

"It is a sugar-coated story of a fairy god-mother to a village; but it is made interesting by some good character-drawing and a naturalistic picture of a Danish 'small town.' This picture should reveal to those Americans that the spirit of Gopher Prairie is to be found in Europe as well as in America. The book may be sentimental, but it is also graphic." J. L. T.

+ Freeman 6:190 N 1 '22 350w

"This Danish novel, unreal, often fantastic as it is, has yet a curious appeal of its own which it is difficult to define with any approach to exactness. Perhaps it is because underneath all the extravagances there lies a recognition of some of the deeper workings of the human spirit." L. M. Field

+ — N Y Times p28 Ag 20 '22 750w

"The social relations of a little Danish town are described with a humour which amongst other elements carries an odd reminiscence of Ibsen. The thread of the story is rather difficult to pick up."

+ — Sat R 133:209 F 25 '22 300w

"The book as a whole seems curiously detached from reality; but it has picturesqueness, humour, charm."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 9 '22 350w

BUCKROSE, J. E., pseud. (MRS ANNIE EDITH [FOSTER] JAMESON). Knight among ladies. 307p $1.75 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

The knight errant of the story is a retired East Indian official who comes to the drowsy little village of Wyntonpe seeking solitude and leisure to write a book on Indian dialects. Instead of the peace and quiet he had sought this eligible bachelor is embarrassed by the attentions of the ladies and all the accompanying small-town gossip. Sim Dummeris, a jobbing gardener who divides his time between Sir Francis and his charming neighbor, Mrs Vernon, supplies the comedy and the "nat'ral history" of the story. Sim's interest lies in keeping Sir Francis and the widow apart, since he works three days a week for each, and if they were married there would be but one garden to care for. But in spite of Sim's opposition and that of all the ladies of the village save one, Sir Francis in the end wins the lady of his choice.

Booklist 19:123 Ja '23

"This delicious little comedy is one to give an evening's quiet amusement. There is a 'problem.' That must be admitted. But it is as wholesomely amusing as are the activities and ideals of the drowsy English village which witnesses its development and happy solution. And what other modern English teller of pleasant tales knows or can more sympathetically visualize an English village and its kindly if gossipy dwellers?"

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 27 '22 350w
Cleveland p91 D '22

"A pleasant, placid tale, which moves briskly and whose interest is sustained. The characters are well drawn."

+ Lit R p133 O 21 '22 250w

"The various situations in this book, none of them very thrilling but all of them amusing and sustained, are set down with a rare sense of comedy values. The book as a piece of literature is not particularly important, but as a factor for the production of amusement it is to be commended."

+ N Y Times p26 S 17 '22 210w

"J. E. Buckrose is not Miss Austen; she was unique. But the antique formula evidently possesses a certain intrinsic merit, a placid charm of its own. It soothes; and need one always be agitated? Only English authors seem to possess that agreeable soporific quality, to be able to write pleasingly about nothing much."

+ — N Y Tribune p6 S 24 '22 270w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p397 Je 15 '22 150w

BUCKROSE, J. E., pseud. (MRS ANNIE EDITH [FOSTER] JAMESON). Privet hedge. 303p $1.75 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

22-7755

In the safe enclosure of their privet hedge Miss Ethel and her widowed sister feel secure against a changing world. But with the passing of their trusted, long-time servant, and the refusal of her niece Caroline, to take her place, change begins to invade the cottage, Miss Ethel's life-long abode. When even the hedge is removed, the spinster's roots are torn up and she dies. Caroline, the new order incarnate, in turning her back upon her family tradition of domestic service, falls in love with a man above her station and engaged to be married to a sweet woman of wealth and culture. How Caroline and Laura Temple meet their problem of a changing world is what transpires beyond the privet hedge.

"There is nothing exactly new in the substance of this book, but there is a quiet comedy which does more than any amount of startling detail to make us remember the story. There is charm as well, an unobtrusive but insistent charm which we scarcely realize but which remains with us—together with some of those shrewdly amusing observations upon people which are so characteristic a part of the book." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p7 My 6 '22 1050w

"Here then is no problem, at least no very cogent problem, but told in terms of irresistible gaiety, cheerful optimism and with just a touch of whimsy to relieve it all." R. T.

+ Detroit News p11 Ag 13 '22 450w

"It is not as good as some of her best work, but it has more food for thought in it than most of her stories, and the people—they are numerous—who look forward with pleasure to reading her new books as they appear will not be disappointed in it."

+ — Lit R p602 Ap 22 '22 550w

"The story is saved from over-sentimentality by the shrewdness and sagacity of its outlook upon a changing society."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p614 S 22 '21 170w

Wis Lib Bul 18:216 O '22

BUELL, RAYMOND LESLIE. Washington conference. 461p $3 Appleton

341.1 Conference on the limitation of armaments, Washington, 1921-22. Eastern question (Far East) 22-12638

Altho the immediate purpose of the Washington conference was to limit armaments, the fundamental purpose was to clarify the Far Eastern situation. The object of the book is to describe the ominous forces that made the conference a necessity, to analyze the delicate problems with which it was confronted, and to determine the extent of its successes as well as its failures. Accordingly the book is divided into two parts; the forces in the background and the conference itself. Index, and insert map of the Far East.

"Mr. Buell's book is not entirely pessimistic; rather it is a healthy though disagreeable corrective diet for those benevolent gourmands who banqueted too joyously at the official table of the American delegation. Senator Lodge won't like Mr. Buell's book. On the other hand Mr. Buell's survey also lacks at times an intimate touch with some of the important factors which were involved in the work of the Conference." A. L. F. D.

+ — Am Hist R 28:342 Ja '23 420w

"The volume is well written, a wide range of excellent source material has been used, especially of recent foreign newspapers, and the footnotes are extensive. On the other hand, too sweeping, and occasionally quite unjustified, statements are sometimes made." G. H. Blakeslee

+ — Am Pol Sci R 16:699 N '22 520w

Booklist 19:7 O '22

Boston Transcript p4 J1 8 '22 660w

New Statesman 20:118 O 28 '22 280w

"On the whole, a highly informative book, though sharing the weakness of most informative books in that it is rather serious and looks more serious than it is."

+ — N Y Times p6 Je 25 '22 2350w

BUELL, RAYMOND LESLIE—Continued

"His outline of what is really going on around the China Sea is fascinating, and deserves attention without the rather dull chronicle of the disarmament parley which he thought it advisable to bring in." P. I. Prentice

+ — N Y Tribune p6 S 3 '22 420w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:478 N '22

R of Rs 66:223 p6 S 2 '22 230w

St Louis 20:233 O '22

"An accurate and thorough study of the background and accomplishments of the conference in a readable and convenient form."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Ag 9 '22 330w

"Mr. Buell has given us an earnest and sincere book, and has spared no labour in accumulating, marshalling, verifying his facts, whether relating to the Conference itself or to its historical setting and import. Yet, while recognizing all this, the reader cannot help feeling that the perspective of the picture is distorted. The malignant figure of Imperialist Japan towers so big that it dwarfs all else on the canvas."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p574 S 14 '22 900w

BULL, ALBERT E. Buying goods; the commercial buyer and his work. (Pitman's popular business books) 96p 85c Pitman

658 Purchasing

"There are men who buy sugar, neckties, battleships and poems, so that to write any advice covering buying as a whole must surely leave many branches uncovered. In this book the man mainly considered is the commercial buyer who, in the retail, wholesale, manufacturing, import or export business, is constantly beset with the problems of his task." (Preface) Contents: The buyer and the firm; Knowing one's subject; How to treat a salesman; The speculative buyer; Small stocks and the middle man; The buyer's correspondence: Where turnover is controlled by buying; Department store buying; Factory buying; Buying perishable goods; The agent buyer; Collective buying; Card, book, and other buying systems; Index.

"Practical little book."

+ Daily News Rec p14 Je 26 '22 240w

BURBANK, EMILY. Be your own decorator. 2 331p il $3 Dodd

747 House decoration 22-22637

Some general advice about the main points to be considered in house furnishing is followed by chapters on the treatment of the different rooms of the house and on such details as lamp shades, window curtains, mirrors, selection of chintzes and cretonnes, and pewter in decoration. A long chapter is devoted to periods in furniture and another to don'ts in decorating.

"The writer has made her book excellent, even fascinating reading, as well as suggestive and instructive. The professional interior decorator, as well as the young intending housekeeper, will doubtless draw inspiration from these suggestive pages."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 23 '22 390w

BURCH, HENRY REED, and PATTERSON, SAMUEL HOWARD. Problems of American democracy; political, economic, social. 601p il $1.72 Macmillan

342.73 United States—Politics and government. United States—Economic conditions. United States—Social conditions. Social problems 22-8966

"A book in which the authors have treated each problem from all of its angles. As stated by the authors, the book has as its aim 'to provide the student with typical material for a general introductory course in problems of democracy, which not only stresses certain fundamental characteristics of our own civilization, but preserves at the same time a proper balance between the political, the economic, and the social factors in American life.' Most of the early chapters of the book deal with problems which are essentially political, the middle chapters with those which are economic, and the concluding chapters with such social problems as are related to standards of living, poverty, charity, crime, the family, etc. The topical outline preceding each chapter and the references following each chapter should prove excellent helps for both teacher and students."—Educ R

"The authors are to be commended for their organization, treatment, and interesting presentation of material as well as for not 'writing down' to some imaginary high school level." L. K. Manley

+ Educ R 64:358 N '22 550w

"The problem of selecting materials from an abundant field has been excellently solved as regards topics chosen; and the treatment of these topics is well-balanced, concrete, and sure to awaken interest. The language is brisk and clear; sentences short and to the point. The illustrations are unusually apt and interest-compelling." O. A. Tingelstad

+ School R 30:554 S '22 520w

BUREAU OF EDUCATIONAL EXPERIMENTS, NEW YORK. Health education and the nutrition class; a report: descriptive and educational sections, by Jean Lee Hunt; studies of height and weight and mental measurements, by Buford J. Johnson; report on physical examinations 1919-1920, by Edith M. Lincoln. 281p $3.50 Dutton

371.7 School children—Food. Children—Nutrition. School hygiene 22-332

The experiment here reported was undertaken in order to discover the possibilities of the nutrition class in a public school, to determine how far a school can employ the procedure of a nutrition class and to what extent such a class can be expected to aid the school's general program of health education. The classes in the New York public school where the experiment was tried constitute a pioneer attempt to remedy malnutrition among school children by employing within the school the methods of the hospital nutrition clinic or class. The report supplies an interpretation of the experiment and its results. A chapter on growth in height and weight and one on mental measurements of first grade children are included. There are numerous charts and tables.

Reviewed by J. H. S. Bossard

Ann Am Acad 103:144 S '22 500w

"This book affords us considerable valuable data upon which we should be able to rear a more enduring structure of health education." R. A. Bolt, M.D.

+ J Home Econ 14:451 S '22 430w

"Over-emphasis of the psychological viewpoint appears early in the work and vitiates the results throughout. . . . It is unfortunate that a book which will be used chiefly for reference purposes has not been supplied with an index."

— Lit R p602 Ap 22 '22 440w

Reviewed by Agnes de Lima
New Repub 31:163 Jl 5 '22 210w

Reviewed by A. L. De Planter
Survey 48:84 Ap 15 '22 400w

BUREAU OF VOCATIONAL INFORMATION. Women in chemistry: a study of professional opportunities. (Studies in occupations) 272p $1.60 The bureau

540.7 Women as chemists. Chemistry 22-15705

"This very valuable and interesting publication gives information as to the numbers and kinds of positions in chemistry occupied by women, actual and desirable training, salaries, rewards and limitations in the profession—a fairly complete survey of the position of the woman chemist of today. It also contains much material that is really a study of opportunities in chemistry regardless of sex. (J Am Chem Soc)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 19:40 N '22

"This book is a careful survey. It covers many positions which hitherto have been filled by men, and so will be of interest to all students of chemistry."

+ Lit R p342 D 23 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:555 D '22

BURGIN, GEORGE BROWN. Memoirs of a clubman. 287p il $5 Dutton [16s Hutchinson] B or 92 (Eng ed 22-16927)

The book is a literary man's humorously chatty account of his career as a writer from the first dawnings of his ambition to become one, his editorial experiences on a small town paper in Canada and, after his wanderings in Asia Minor in a secretarial position, his gradual gaining of a foothold in the London literary world. "The main object of this book," the author says at the end, "is to show something of the difficulties of literary aspirants and the formative process they must undergo at the hands of the world before they become able either to amuse or to instruct it."

"As a permanent record, Mr. Burgin's volume makes no especial claim, but as an intimate chronicle and portrait gallery of its writer's time it is inimitable." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 8 '22 1350w

"Highly digestible reminiscences." R. L. Duffus

+ Freeman 6:212 N 8 '22 340w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:78 Ag 19 '22 120w

"Mr. Burgin has made an altogether delectable book in this mixture of autobiography, anecdote, and comment upon life. It is a dapper book; always valiantly neat in its manner, carefully and skillfully polished to a high degree of glitter. By far the greater part of this wealth of anecdote is now printed for the first time."

+ Lit R p826 J1 22 '22 500w

Reviewed by J. D. Anderson

N Y Times p16 J1 30 '22 2400w

Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 40w

St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

BURGIN, GEORGE BROWN. More memoirs (and some travels). 335p $5 Dutton [16s Hutchinson]

B or 92

A second book of reminiscences by this journalist, novelist and clubman. The chapters of travel relate to Canada, to Turkey, where the author spent some time as secretary to General Valentine Baker, and to Asia Minor. For the rest he gossips about authors, editors and publishers he has known, about rejected manuscripts, the handwriting of authors, how well-known authors began to write, etc., the whole interspersed with anecdotes, of which he has an apparently inexhaustible store. A chapter on London clubs known to the author is included.

Boston Transcript p1 N 4 '22 230w

Cleveland p88 N '22

Freeman 6:212 N 8 '22 340w

"A pleasant, humorous, informal book."

+ Ind 109:215 O 14 '22 90w

"Mr. G. B. Burgin, a minor novelist but a major clubman, must have been waiting for something like half a century, during which time he has fathered sixty-six books. It is difficult to believe that they are all as trivial as this one. More Memoirs and Some Travels is a compendium of anecdotes that might have come from any genial after-dinner speaker with a long memory and loquacious habits."

— New Statesman 19:220 My 27 '22 220w

"Pleasant reading."

+ Spec 128:374 Mr 25 '22 600w

"Consistently refreshing. The travel chapters are equally absorbing and give the same illusion of first-hand acquaintance. Informative as it is, the charm of the book is largely in its steady stream of dignified humor, its consistent friendliness, and its obvious foundation of intelligent observation. Evidently, the book wrote itself."

+ Springfield Republican p10 N 8 '22 270w

BURKE, THOMAS. London spy. 324p $2 Doran [7s 6d T. Butterworth]

914.21 London—Description

22-26967

"Mr. Burke devotes himself once again to a casual appraisal of various phases of London life; he rambles and wanders, mostly at night, and sets down what he finds. He visits a movie studio in Islington, buys pipes at Dunhill's in Duke Street, discovers pubs and eating places in remote corners, investigates Berwick Street Market, listens to Cockney confessions at the Thames Police Court, drinks vermouth in Canning Town, discovers a streetful of beautiful children in White Horse Lane, smokes opium near the Dock Road, and finds out, after all, that 'Bloomshury' was never so bad as it has been painted." Only Westminster and the night clubs are neglected. And even the chimes of Big Ben are duly noted down."—New Repub

Booklist 10:79 D '22

Bookm 56:645 Ja '23 120w

Cleveland p93 D '22

"Charming series of photographs of London itself. They show not one but all of the marvellous shifting lights of that old city, lights that reflect her comedians, her great ones, her poverties, her many surprising flashes of beauty. Burke, knowing his London, cannot well refrain from also giving her the sly digs of an intimate. His book is a mine of character." Laura Benet

+ Lit R p292 D 9 '22 660w

"It may be true that London is big enough to stand nine books about her from one hand. But that hand should be a bigger one than Thomas Burke's." J: Gunther

— New Repub 33:76 D 13 '22 400w

"Burke has given us once again a volume full of pathos and tears as well as humor and sheer fun."

+ N Y Times p23 D 24 '22 700w

"Here is a book for the shelves of the thoughtful reader; and a volume for reformers. A book for entertainment for the lover of cities, for the vitiated in need of stimulation, and—not least important—a book for those who would know the Thomas Burke whose mordant and brooding art has re-created Limehouse." Kenneth Fuesle

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 5 '22 660w

"On the whole he is sentimental rather than observant or detached. His sympathies are wide, but they do not extend very readily to the inhabitants of Mayfair, Belgravia, or Kensington."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p730 N 9 '22 250w

BURNETT, FRANCES (HODGSON) (MRS STEPHEN TOWNSEND). Head of the house of Coombe. 374p $2 Stokes

22-3018

Robin's mother was a feather-brained soulless creature who abandoned her baby to a third-floor nursery at birth. The child until she was six years old was ignorant of the fact that she had a mother. At that time she meets a boy on the playground, her first playmate, the first being to show her any affection and to kiss her. After a few days the boy is suddenly removed—a cataclysmic experience to both children. Robin is a lonely child whose youth is overshadowed by her widowed mother's doubtful social position. It is known that Lord Coombe, for some mysterious reason, is paying for the gay little household. Robin somehow holds him responsible, first for Donald's sudden removal, and later for her social isolation and conceives a dislike for him. She is determined to make her own living and it is Lord Coombe who secures a place for her as companion to the old dowager Duchess of Dartmouth. Here, at her first party, on the eve of the war, she meets Donal again.

BURNETT, FRANCES—Continued

Booklist 18:189 Mr '22

Reviewed by M. K. Ford

Bookm 55:195 Ap '22 300w

"Mrs Burnett has written better stories than 'The Head of the house of Coombe,' but Mrs Burnett not in her best mood is far better than the average story-teller of the day." E. F. Edgett

+ — Boston Transcript p6 F 21 '22 1650w
Cleveland p27 Ap '22

"Take the Cophetua-motive, add the Rochester-motive, mix in a vamp-mother of the latest variety, and let the most frankly old-fashioned standards of female virtue and masculine honor rule unchallenged, and you have 'The Head of the House of Coombe.'" H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 108:332 Ap 1 '22 1000w

"Mrs. Burnett is a real story-teller. She gets life into her pages, even if it be deeply tinged with romance. So many of our stern young critics fail to remember that life can be intensely romantic, and frequently is so."

+ Lit D p68 Ap 15 '22 1050w

"In spite of many defects and limitations, the virtues of this novel are pleasant to record; it is a good story, consistently interesting and often captivating. The mother and daughter are original creations; the infant love affair is full of beauty and dignity, and the growth of the girl towards womanhood is depicted with subtle tenderness." W. L. Phelps

+ Lit R p463 Mr 4 '22 2150w

"In form and spirit it has the characteristics of Mrs Burnett at her best. 'The Head of the house of Coombe' is unmitigated romance. It handles sordid facts. It penetrates without illusions the social realities of modern London. But a feeling for true romance dominates the drama; and one is never in doubt of Mrs Burnett's capacity or intent in holding that domination against all hazards." Alexander Black

+ N Y Times p8 F 12 '22 1700w

"Mrs Burnett's 'Head of the house of Coombe' has a boy and girl who are as irresistibly fascinating as were little Lord Fauntleroy and Sara Crewe. It begins in the Victorian days and has some of the Victorian faults. It is easy to say that the sensibilities are too strongly played on, that these children are too lovable and perfect to be true to nature; but I defy any one not to be charmed by them."

R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 130:350 Mr 1 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:197 My '22

Reviewed by Gerald Gould

Sat R 134:109 Jl 15 '22 50w

"Unmitigated sentimentality."

— Spec 129:342 S 9 '22 70w

"Apart from its interesting narrative, its combination of aristocratic manners and sentimentality the book develops several striking character studies. Mrs. Lawless is a compelling picture of feminine selfishness and immoral behavior: detestable, yet fascinating in her unswerving devotion to her own pleasures. The story, will doubtless increase the number of Mrs. Burnett's admirers who, moreover, will be eager for its continuation."

+ Springfield Republican p11a Mr 19 '22 1200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p443 Jl 6 '22 620w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 Jl '22

BURNETT, FRANCES (HODGSON) (MRS STEPHEN TOWNSEND). Robin. 343p $2
Stokes

22-14719

"It is hard to consider 'Robin' as an individual story, apart from 'The Head of the House of Coombe' to which it is not a sequel but a continuation. Robin, the lonely little girl of 'the slice of a house' in Mayfair, so carefully studied in 'The Head of the House of Coombe,' is about eighteen years old and ethereally lovely in the story that bears her name; while Donal, the child-lover, who was so precipitately separated from her because his loving but somewhat austere mother feared any possible contact with Feather's daughter, comes back to her as a magnificent young creature of twenty, loving her still more hotly and impatiently than before. Their love affair, recommencing in the early days of the war, would have had disastrous ending without the thoughtful watchfulness of the Duchess of Dartmouth, Lord Coombe and Dowie, the nurse—all old friends. Not a single new character is introduced to us. We move in a circle of gentlefolk, of English men and women, of culture and dignity and fine understanding."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 19:19 O '22

"Of the entertaining qualities of 'The Head of the House of Coombe' and 'Robin' there can be no question. It is an old-fashioned tale told in an old-fashioned manner, and in the midst of the ultra modernity of this literary hour it may be and will be cordially welcomed. If an earlier war, the Crimean, for instance, were substituted for the Great War, it could easily pass for a story of the mid-nineteenth century. It is unnecessarily long, and its length is the result not of an excess of incident, but of the insertion of unnecessary material and long and commonplace conversations." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Ag 2 '22 850w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"The apotheosis of Burnettian slush." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 109:108 S 2 '22 310w

"It is young love that is the subject of this volume, love under the terrible shadow of the great war, and never has Mrs. Burnett written with a greater charm, more directly from her heart, more surely."

+ Lit D p62 Ag 19 '22 1000w

"I wish she had not done it. I wish our usually adroit novelist had let well enough alone. . . . The present novel has a Foreword by Hamilton Williamson, who neatly and skillfully condenses into a few pages the plot of 'The Head of the House of Coombe,' so that those who do not own or who have forgotten that, may start this in possession of the necessary facts. So far, so good. As the new story begins, we are plunged almost immediately into a morass of sentiment, in which we flounder helplessly until we emerge not by any natural or probable means, but by a rope flung to us by the author." W. L. Phelps

— Lit R p43 S 23 '22 1050w

"It is an exquisitely tender and touching tale. Mrs Burnett has done nothing better than her picture of these two young lovers, whose ecstasy was all the keener for the dread which never left them." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p19 Jl 23 '22 1050w

Reviewed by F. P. Kayes

N Y Tribune p5 Jl 30 '22 450w

"Lush sentiments flow from her pen with a sweetness that suggest syrup rather than plain ink. Her characters were sufficiently immersed in sentimentality in the first volume, published some months ago; they are submerged now, drowned in a bath of treacle; and the pity of it is that she smothers serious things, too—loss, love, and suffering—with the same material. This is a pity, because once upon a time Mrs. Burnett could write differently; there were at least two short stories years ago which did honour to her name."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p689 O 26 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:217 O '22

BURR, AMELIA JOSEPHINE. Three fires. 260p $1.75 Macmillan

22-18551

"Its drama springs from the marriage of Nila, a Hindu girl, lovely and innocent, with Motu Rayen, foreman of an Englishman's cacao plantation, after Tuan Noor, a bold and handsome Moslem of the Ceylon police force, had won her heart in a chance meeting. Twice she sees him and promises to be his wife before she knows that he is a Moslem and that she, a Hindu, cannot marry him. Then she follows the wish of her father and weds Motu Rayen, a man of finest heart, but crippled body. And Tuan Noor, crossed in his fiery passion and flaming with anger, tells her the horrible things that are surely going to happen to her because she will not marry him. Thenceforth most of his energy and his efforts are expended upon the task of making his sinister prophecies come true. Finally, a woman of certain character but dauntless heart makes a great sacrifice and frees them from the evil that threatens to engulf them."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:158 F '23

Boston Transcript p6 O 7 '22 940w

"A good story of the mysterious East."

+ Lit R p133 O 21 '22 300w

"The story grips both the emotions and the imagination. Its development keeps emotional intensity at high pitch and its local color is rich and strong. A well-written and interesting story, into which the author has woven a large measure of exotic charm of its distant scene."

+ N Y Times p10 O 8 '22 400w

"A theme treated with passionate energy and with consistence as to the local color and personal temperament." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 132:532 N 22 '22 80w

Springf'd Republican p6a D 3 '22 370w

BURROUGHS, JOHN. Last harvest. 295p il $2 Houghton

814 Emerson, Ralph Waldo. Thoreau, Henry David 22-17732

Most of the papers gathered in this last posthumous volume were written after John Burroughs had reached the age of eighty years and are the fruit of a long life of observation and meditation. More than a third of the book is devoted to a study of Emerson and his journals. The next longest chapter is on Thoreau. The last four groups of short papers were written during the closing months of Burroughs's life. The book closes with his thoughts on facing the "great mystery"—the end which he knew could not be far away. Contents: Emerson and his journals; Flies in amber; Another word on Thoreau; A critical glance into Darwin; What makes a poem? Short studies in contrasts; Day by day; Gleanings; Sundown papers; Index.

Booklist 19:44 N '22

Bookm 56:513 D '22 140w

"A peculiarly poignant appeal attaches to the later essays, some of them so brief that they are merely comments. That in some pathetic instance they silently witness the inevitable loosening of 'the silver cord' will but endear them the more to his friends. And every lover of nature and of nature's law is that. The old fire is by no means lacking however. Flaming high is it in his gratefully devastating comments upon modern poetry—particularly Vers Libre—and various other fads and foibles of the day." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 28 '22 650w

"It is a volume to set beside the rest on the Burroughs shelf and to be glad of. The man is so sane, so tolerant and so absolute a lover of truth that he cannot touch anything without turning it to gold, making it valuable and worth treasuring." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p9 D 17 '22 1050w

"Will be a valuable addition to the Burroughs shelf. May be commended with confidence to the many readers of the great naturalist."

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 15 '22 720w

"Less purely speculative or descriptive and more definitive than some of his previous writings. Never did Burroughs better succeed in saying just what he meant, and the minimum worth saying, than here. All through these pages there is an admirable lucidity, a satisfying certainty of judgment, a brilliant clearness of recollection. The impression is one of maturity, not of extreme old age. There is no quivering in the tone, no rambling in the thought—only a greater wisdom, a sounder emphasis."

+ No Am 216:712 N '22 650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:590 D '22

St Louis 20:300 D '22

BURROUGHS, JOHN. My boyhood. 247p il $2.50 Doubleday

B or 92 Burroughs, John 22-7305

The book consists of two parts: Burroughs's recollections of his boyhood, written for his son Julian, and Julian Burroughs's impressions of his father. In the first the author describes his life and work on the farm where he was born, one of ten children, and his early schooling and religious training. Many letters from father to son are reproduced in the second part. The illustrations show Burroughs in various activities in his old age and there are two colored plates.

"In refreshing contrast to the accepted type. Not scurrilous, sensational, nor bombastic. But does not do the subject justice. As an introduction either to John Burroughs or to his work, it serves no purpose. Taken as an aftermath, it yields a delicate and enduring flavor." G: Loomis

+ Bookm 55:524 J1 '22 550w

"He turns with freshness and vigour to the memories of his boyhood, and tells that story with a characteristic simplicity and charm." L. B.

+ Freeman 5:262 My 24 '22 150w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:395 Ap 22 '22 170w

"His account of his boyhood is told in terse, energetic, vivid language, quite remarkable for the time of life at which it was written. He draws a rather unflattering picture of himself as shy, anti-social, almost incapable of conversation; and though his son in his brief appended memoir tries to soften the lines of this sketch, we rather think he deepens them. But there can be no question about the rugged sincerity of Burroughs's nature. He ends his fragment of autobiography on its highest, purest note. 'Fountains of Youth' Burroughs calls the springs of the many watered farm of his boyhood; and we do not know that he ever wrote pages more charming than this ode-like tribute to them."

+ Lit R p600 Ap 22 '22 500w

"The second part of the book entitled My Father smacks of genuineness because the son does not see fit to cover up homely frictions or the traces of them. It is critical because it contains real details of daily life and lets them stand for what they are worth." P. H. Boynton

+ New Repub 31:52 Je 7 '22 550w

N Y Times p13 Ag 13 '22 430w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 130:556 Ap 5 '22 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:293 Je '22

Pratt p32 autumn '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:132 My '22

BURT, KATHARINE (NEWLIN) (MRS MAXWELL STRUTHERS BURT). Q. 312p $2 Houghton

22-8939

Q. T. Kinwydden, the lovable cowboy hero from "all over the West," comes into a fortune and sets out for the East to win Heloise Grinscombe, the cold beauty whom he had met on a hunting trip out West. But, first he must seek an education. Heloise receives him as a friend in spite of his bad grammar and as a first step in his education recommends him to a competent tailor and barber. But it is the quiet little schoolma'am whom he engages "to scare him into learnin'" who accomplishes his education—and something else, for she has an understanding heart. Her name is Grinscombe too, but not until he has learned to love her does he discover that she too is related to the Grinscombes of Grinscombe Manor.

BURT, KATHARINE—Continued

"It is a delightful story in certain ways but we must not press her too hard on the score of reality. In that she has a curious kinship to Pollyanna and her following. If Mrs. Burt could bear to be ruthless with her own work and rob it of its melodramatic tendencies she might write very charming stories." D. L. M.
+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ap 26 '22 750w

"A much overdrawn hero must be conceded, but beyond that, it is hard to find room for criticism of Miss Burt's book. It is charmingly written, full of interesting and well-drawn characters, full of phrases that paint vivid pictures for the reader, full of sharp sarcasm. It is full, too, from cover to cover of the keenest observations on life." M. T. Hamilton
+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 JI 23 '22 600w

"The tale is written in a perfunctory style of sticky sentimentality. It will help the summer reader pass the time agreeably without consuming too much brain power."
Lit R p643 My 6 '22 210w

"A machine-made plot, a die-stamped heroine and a stereotyped hero are the materials from which it is manufactured."
— N Y Times p13 Je 4 '22 310w

BURTON, CHARLES PIERCE. Bob's Hill trails. 268p il $1.75 Holt

22-6521

The further adventures of the Bob's Hill boys, a band of eight vigorous Boy scouts always on the lookout for excitement. Mr Norton, their much loved scoutmaster, is to leave them at the end of summer vacation and the Raven patrol decides to think up some good times before he departs. They do all sorts of scout stunts, even to climbing Mount Greylock, and then someone thought of the clan! And between their scout doings and the secret clan, the Raven patrol spend a thrilling as well as useful summer.

Booklist 18:336 Je '22

Lit R p796 JI 8 '22 80w

Springf'd Republican p12 D 22 '22 30w

BUSCHOR, ERNST. Greek vase-painting. 180p il $10 Dutton [25s Chatto & W.]

738 Vase painting. Pottery, Greek

A22-1222

The book is translated by G. C. Richards and supplied with a preface by Percy Gardner who points out that vase paintings are almost all that is left to us of early Greek painting. Invaluable information is given about the principles of grouping and perspective, the extreme beauty of the figure drawing and the choice of subjects from Greek mythology and poetry. The book is the first general history of Greek vases in all their periods. Dr Buschor's "examples are carefully chosen; his text shows full mastery of the subject; and it is unlikely that his treatment will be superseded for a long time to come. It is, however, a book not adapted for a mere cursory reading, but for careful consideration and study." (Preface) Contents: The stone and bronze ages; The geometric style; The seventh century; The black-figured style; The red-figured style in the archaic period; The style of Polygnotos and Phidias; Late off-shoots. There are one hundred sixty full-page illustrations, an index of illustrations, and index of names.

Booklist 18:354 JI '22

"Thoroughly up to date and fairly comprehensive. It suffers, however, from a lack of reference-notes and a bibliography, both of which are really indispensable in a subject possessing so vast a literature as does Greek vase-painting. The book, undoubtedly, is the best of its kind available for the translator. The rendering is done with an almost painful degree of literalness which not infrequently gives rise to difficult reading and even obscurity."

A. D. Fraser

+ — Class J 17:415 Ap '22 350w

Cleveland p61 Ag '22

"The author's discussions of movements are made much more intelligible by the excellent and copious reproductions of vases."

+ Dial 73:236 Ag '22 80w

Freeman 5:238 My 17 '22 420w

"Here is a book which most satisfactorily fills a long-felt want. It is the very first attempt to write a general history of Greek vase painting from beginning to end, covering a period of about 2,000 years. This herculean task has been undertaken by Dr. Buschor, one of Germany's most trustworthy authorities, who shows full mastery of the subject. Mr. Richard's translation is remarkably accurate and almost literal." P. V. C. Baur
+ Lit R p740 Je 17 '22 1050w

Spec 128:404 Ap 1 '22 110w

"Dr Buschor is a safe guide, even though he lacks the highest gifts of the art critic. He is endowed with a sense of proportion which enables him to give in a compact form a sketch of the history of vase-painting which does justice to all its phases, especially the earlier fabrics. This means, of course, that the reader's attention is directed rather to the technical aspect of the vases than to the fascinating problems raised by the subjects treated, especially in their relation to literature."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p26 Ja 12 '22 400w

"Dr. Buschor is one of the most competent of critics in the field of Greek vases, thoroughly conversant with all the varied aspects of the subject, and his knowledge is everywhere apparent; the book is attractively written, without the learned apparatus of footnotes and appendices by which the specialist too often frightens or bores the general reader." G. H. Chase
+ Yale R n s 12:424 Ja '23 650w

BUSHNELL, SARAH T. Truth about Henry Ford. 222p il $1.25 Reilly & Lee

B or 92 Ford, Henry

22-5001

"The twelve chapters of this biography rehearse Mr. Ford's life from childhood to 1922. We see the child taking watches apart and putting them together, the boy experimenting with the teakettle, the youth working in the engine factory, and the man turning out automobiles at the rate of one in twenty-nine seconds, winning a libel suit against a great American daily, defeated by unconventional means in a notorious Senatorial election, reading Tolstoy and Maeterlinck, outwitting Wall Street, showing America's most renowned naturalist how to cook a steak, and living in one of the most sumptuous homes between Canada and Mexico."—Lit R

"This book, in contrast with its title, is a distinct disappointment. One might with reason expect, if not an extended biography, at least a fairly complete study of him. But neither of these hopes or expectations are realized. The book is unusually interesting, and while utterly uncritical in character is marked by evident sincerity. Accurate, doubtless. It is too, so far as it goes, but it is essentially sketchy in character and journalistic in style." J. G. de R. H.

+ — Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p10 Ap 2 '22 940w

"Whether ex parte or not, it is good reading. If all true, the disclosures it makes reveal the fact that Henry Ford's cardinal weakness is his inability to make others see him as he is."

+ Lit R p532 Mr 26 '22 250w

St Louis 20:96 My '22

"Sketches divertingly the career of our well-known but little-understood inventor-manufacturer."

Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 170w

BYRNE, DONN (BRIAN OSWALD DONN-BYRNE. Wind bloweth. 393p il $2 Century 22-19042

The story of an Irish sailor's life from youth to old age told in a series of seven episodes and in a style as romantic and fanciful as that of "Messer Marco Polo." Shane Campbell is fourteen when the story opens, wandering the hills of Antrim in search of adventure, his heart already set on going to sea. In each of the episodes that follow a woman is at the center: first the hard young Moyra whom he married and who died after one short year of chilling disappointment; then Claire-Anne of Marseilles whom he loved and lost; then the little Syrian whom he loved without knowing it; and finally the Irish woman who brought peace and meaning to his life. Shane had many adventures in many ports, and prospered. He lived in America for a while, but in the end his beloved Antrim called him back. Thru-out the narrative the poetical note is maintained.

Booklist 19:84 D '22

Reviewed by J. V. A. Weaver
Bookm 56:493 D '22 160w

"A story which touches all the chords of life but is never brutal or sordid, and is often 'magically beautiful.'"

+ Cleveland p90 D '22

Int Bk R p57 D '22 450w

"A tale as fine and keen and supple as Toledo steel, magnificently scabbarded in words that are Spanish leather and gems and gold thread." S. V. Benet

+ Lit R p144 O 23 '22 840w

"This new story by the author of 'Messer Marco Polo' is not powerful. Indeed, there are times when the invention is feeble. But whenever Mr. Byrne draws from the poetic soul of his race he covers everything with a misty charm derived from old deep-rooted things. The nearer he is to the soil the better is his work, and hence it is in the first part, the story of a boyhood, that he is at his best." J. W. Krutch

+ — Nation 115:503 N 8 '22 480w

"It seems an ungracious and is certainly a most unpleasant task to point out the flaws in a book so conscientiously and often so beautifully done as this one, but honesty compels the admission that its style is sometimes rather monotonous, and that the narrative does not always hold one's interest. That the characters, with the single exception of old Mrs. Dolan, lack reality, is scarcely a reproach, for the novel is essentially a dream book, a thing of elusiveness and mysticism and glamour; very often, and especially in its descriptive passages, a thing of beauty."

+ — N Y Times p22 O 1 '22 820w

"Mr. Byrne's hand is very dexterous, and apart from the mechanics of the thing there is his liquid style, enriched with poetic feeling. True there are times when you could wish that style more varied, since 'The Wind Bloweth' is a fairly long story. Nevertheless, Mr. Byrne's style is a thing of rare beauty." Hunter Stagg

+ — N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 820w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend
Outlook 133:186 Ja 24 '22 110w

"The character-drawing throughout is good; though not inspired, never slovenly; the atmosphere, whether it be that of South America, Ulster or Algiers, detailed, convincing and interesting; the plot handled with sureness, and sincere, as well as being sentimental, in its development. In short, it is difficult to tell exactly what lack in the book prevents it from being a very good novel indeed."

+ — Spec 130:67 Ja 13 '22 880w

"A fairy spell with words, but the reader is aware of the weaving. It is in lyrical descriptions that Mr. Byrne excels rather than in plot or characterization; for these colorful bits the book is notable."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7a N 5 '22 550w

"The story is an entertaining series of incidents, and contains some good studies in characterization and scenic pictures. English readers can only wish that the book were free from irritating blemishes. Mr. Byrne is one of the best known of American short-story writers. The whole book, with its short chapters, curtailed sentences, and its transitions of incident, gives the impression of staccato writing which, whatever its place in short stories, strikes a false note in a full-length novel."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p729 N 9 '22 220w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

BYRON, GEORGE GORDON NOEL BYRON, 6th baron. Lord Byron's correspondence; ed. by John Murray. 2v 308;326p il $3.50 Scribner [per set 25s Murray]

B or 92 Byron, George Gordon Noel Byron, 6th baron A22-1221

"These hundreds of letters fall roughly into three different classes representing three different phases of Byron's life. There are, first, the letters written during his first visit to the East, between 1808 and 1811, addressed chiefly to Hobhouse. A second phase follows. Byron returns to England and almost immediately begins his meteoric course of five years (1811-1816) in English society. The letters of this period are addressed for the most part to Lady Melbourne, the mother-in-law of Lady Caroline Lamb and aunt of Miss Milbanke, Byron's future wife. A change comes over the letters when we pass to the third phase. This portion of the book contains a considerable number of hitherto unpublished letters from Shelley. In these there is the same evidence of the fascination which Byron exerted over his fellow-poet as is to be found in other letters and remarks by Shelley."—Nation

Booklist 18:361 J1 '22

Bookm 55:298 My '22 420w

"Interlarded with letters from various correspondents, by far the most interesting of whom is Shelley, these long and jealously guarded manuscripts flutter down to earth as the last tattered shreds of tinsel from some gay-starred rocket. Few of these letters seem to justify the long-lived mystery with which Lady Dorchester enveloped them." Stewart Mitchell

— Dial 73:453 O '22 1400w

Reviewed by H. M. Jones

Freeman 5:306 Je 7 '22 1650w

Reviewed by W. R. Benet

Lit R p801 J1 15 '22 3300w

"The second volume of this collection is as delightful as the first is dreary and repulsive. In Italy Byron becomes a great man and a great genius. Many of the letters now for the first time published are quite the equal of those for so many years familiar to everybody. The mere amorist fades into the background; the poet and man of letters reaches complete self-expression." S. C. Chew

+ Nation 114:sup442 Ap 12 '22 800w

"They are the informal utterances of a devil, or, it might be fairer to say, of a man possessed by a devil. But in the letters, as in the legend of his death and in his poems there are hints of that greater Byron whom Shelley tried to summon into being—a Byron who would have been Byron with a touch of Shelley—a nobler being a little more remote from the flames of Hell, a candidate for Paradise."

+ — Nation and Ath 30:796 F 25 '22 1250w

Reviewed by Stark Young

New Repub 32:sup12 S 27 '22 1350w

"His letters to Lady Melbourne are full of his fun, his wit, his angry gloom, his impatient cynicism. They are marked by that smiting directness of speech which makes him so attractive and makes us want to forgive him everything. In spite of his posturing, occasionally vulgar, and his lack of self-knowledge, occasionally despicable, he was twenty times more natural than other people."

+ — New Statesman 18:593 F 25 '22 1000w

BYRON, G. G. N. B.—Continued

"John Murray has fulfilled his task in a capable manner and a word must be said for the important notes which are scattered throughout the two volumes and which, when they are not the work of Mr. Murray, are the result of the erudition of Lord Ernle and Richard Edgcumbe. They make all the more illuminating an absorbing series of letters that we could not well do without."

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 2 '22 2550w

Reviewed by Edmund Wilson, jr.

N Y Tribune p4 Jl 2 '22 1550w

Outlook 131:533 Jl 26 '22 2150w

"The reading public cannot fail to be delighted with Mr. Murray's two volumes of new Byron letters. In the first place, they are a real contribution to our literature, for Byron was an astonishingly good letter writer. Next, they throw light upon Byron's character at a time when he was most interesting. . . . All the part of the letters devoted to Lady Caroline is, indeed, very tedious. Fortunately, however, it is only a part. The rest is excellent reading."

+ Spec 128:239 F 25 '22 1600w

"Mr. Murray has done well to publish these Melbourne letters in full. He has not attempted, nor allowed others to attempt, to draw conclusions from them. He has allowed them to speak for themselves. In general, he is to be thanked for faithful and self-effacing editing of the whole collection. We have noticed a few unimportant slips and misprints."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p97 F 16 '22 2450w

C

CADE, COULSON T. Cornish penny. 311p $1.90
Stokes [7s 6d G. Richards]

22-4086

With much literary distinction and many digressions into the realms of literature and art, this leisurely story tells how the founding Robin Trevarthon is brought up in a sleepy Cornish town, by Anthony and Cynthia Trevarthon and in his sheltered existence grows into a scholarly dreamer. When this life becomes intolerable he succeeds in gaining Aunt Cynthia's reluctant permission to visit London for a month and here he acquires some first-hand knowledge of the world. He meets a stranger on the train and is taken to his home as a guest. The stranger is a sybarite of esthetic tastes and his house is a marvel of exotic art and luxury. He gives Robin the happiest month of his life, which ends with some startling disclosures. Robin learns the secret of his birth and Dion Aylmer, the stranger, while toying with the poison draught that is to end his life, confesses to Robin that, altho the world has known him as a connoisseur and an author, he has been maintaining his luxurious existence as a gentleman robber, a sort of modern Robin Hood, relieving the vulgarly rich of their jewelry.

"Although the rhetorician may find cavil with the technique on the score of faulty emphasis, and the rational man on that of impossible characters, the reader who still finds delight in all fairy-tales will dream through the pages of this book with Robin, rubbing his eyes with wonder and surprise and regret when he is finished." W. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 25 '22 580w

"The plot is slender and the chief interest is given by the spirited conversation, the well defined characterizations and the descriptions of Cornish scenery."

+ Detroit News p7 Jl 16 '22 100w

"The work has style; words flow along smoothly, harmonious and colorful; the nature descriptions are particularly nice. Even the dialogue smacks of a quaint, piquant flavor. It is a pleasant book for leisurely reading."

+ Lit R p494 Mr 11 '22 220w

"A tale with a certain delicate charm of its own, with touches of whimsicality and a feeling for words which results in some very grateful writing. A little too mannered, a little too consciously clever, it has a leisurely, minuetlike grace, a distinction not without a certain 'preciousness,' a self-consciousness reminiscent of the beau tossing back a lace ruffle as he daintily takes a pinch of snuff."

+ N Y Times p11 Ap 9 '22 350w

"A chuckle-provoking story which has no other end than to delight."

+ N Y Tribune p6 My 7 '22 40w

"An irresponsible piece of story writing, rambling and plotless; but yet a tale with charming bits of description and romantic incident. In short, it is much better written than it is planned."

+ Outlook 130:558 Ap 5 '22 30w

"On the whole the unreality is greatly more conspicuous than the loveliness. It is a pity that a book which opens so promisingly should have so cheap an ending."

— + Sat R 133:445 Ap 29 '22 550w

Spring'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 320w

"It is some thirty years behind the literary fashions of modern England. It is compact of all the lilies and languors of the nineties; and the interminable musings of Robin Trevarthon, interspersed with minute catalogues of furniture, produce a sense of exasperation in the reader which is hard to exorcise."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p259 Ap 20 '22 500w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 Jl '22

CAINE, WILLIAM. Mendoza and a little lady.
342p $1.75 (6s) Putnam

22-5895

The chief personages in this romance among artists are Funchester, the "righteous man," connoisseur and publisher, who has it in his power to make an artist after first thoroughly exploiting him; Mendoza the famous caricaturist; who falls in love with little Otilie Wigmore when he discovers her brave heart; that little lady herself, who has a wonderful gift for pen and ink sketches, courage that is heroic and a remarkable head for business; finally Raymond Adkin, the genius with the child mind who cannot be trusted to take care of himself and must be adopted by Mendoza and Otilie. The two have no end of trouble with their charge, but succeed at last in steering him into fame and a safe harbor—marriage to Otilie. The noble renunciation of Mendoza, who ardently loves Otilie, is the high light of the story.

"The charm is all in the telling. Mr. Caine manages to draw a little magic circle in which his people move and have their being. They work a little and play a little and love a little, all within the circle. While Mr. Caine's story makes no pretense of being a great story, he has a delicate, graceful, whimsical touch which makes very pleasant reading."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '22 380w

"It is as bright and as fragile as a soap bubble. We suspect that the author had a good time writing it."

+ Lit R p551 Ap 1 '22 120w

"By no possible means can the reader conceive any character in the book as real. But he (or she) will enjoy it, for it is the type."

— + N Y Times p16 My 28 '22 50w

"What there is of Bohemia in this story of artists and art critics does not accord with the stereotyped conception of that region. It is much more like the real thing, and as such affords an illuminating background for a love-story which is at once charming and pathetic."

+ Spec 127:830 D 17 '21 50w

Spring'd Republican p7a D 24 '22 330w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p718 N 3 '21 150w

CALDERON, GEORGE (TIHOTI, pseud.). Tahiti. 260p il $6 Harcourt [25s G. Richards] 919.6 Tahiti (Eng ed 21-14794)

The book is a posthumous volume completed from diaries and notes and illustrated profusely with pencil sketches made by the author during a four years' sojourn on the island. The descriptions are vivid and humorous and full of the poetry of a happy, beautiful and kindly people in an earthly paradise, where there is no winter, and flowers and fruit are always in season. There is a bibliography and a glossary of words showing the common origin of the Tahitian and the Melanesian, Malayan and Melagasian languages.

Booklist 18:231 Ap '22

"Quaint, unassuming, lazy, the book carries one through a delightful series of experiences in a land where the quiet routine of hoary antiquity reigns supreme. And, entirely apart from the merits of the subject matter, the volume is one of the most attractively artistic bits of the publisher's craft we have seen in a long time."

+ Bookm 55:427 Je '22 90w

"The only fault we have to find with Mr. Calderon is that he has told us so little about the picturesque remnant of the Pitcairn Islanders in Tahiti. But he tells us enough about other people and scenes on the island to make it one of the most interesting and valuable books about the South Seas." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '22 1300w

Dial 73:115 J1 '22 120w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Ind 108:201 F 25 '22 140w

"A book to read slowly, to keep about one. It is a tree of rare perfume." F. O'Brien

+ N Y Times p7 Mr 5 '22 4800w

Sat R 132:sup8 O 22 '21 1100w

"George Calderon is among the few writers who have described the South Seas in true perspective."

+ Spec 127:467 O 8 '21 1800w

"It is the description of a writer—one of few—who has left the South Seas unintoxicated. Calderon continued to know good from evil; Tahiti went to his guarded heart not to his head."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p513 Ag 11 '21 2050w

CALKINS, EARNEST ELMO. Advertising man. (Vocational ser.) 205p $1.25 Scribner 659 Advertising 22-5902

The head of a leading New York advertising firm writes in this little volume of a business which has no well-defined method of preparation, and so, more often than some other professions, calls out the question: How shall I get in? After some definitions and a glance at the part advertising is playing in the world today, the author considers the three jobs which advertising offers—advertising solicitor, advertising manager and advertising agency work. He looks at some men now engaged in advertising and the means by which they prepared for their work and gives some suggestive ways of training for it. Finally he considers what sort of man should take up advertising and the rewards and opportunities it offers. A bibliography is added.

"This is a very intelligent treatise on the subject, which does not seek to lead anyone into accepting quackery. His book is rather one of experience and example." D. C. Seitz

+ Administration 4:619 N '22 500w

Booklist 19:9 O '22

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 19 '22 190w

Cleveland p59 Ag '22

"Gives much valuable information for anyone contemplating making advertising his or her profession."

+ Daily News Rec p33 S 12 '22 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:351 J1 '22

R of Rs 67:224 F '23 40w

St Louis 20:215 S '22

Springf'd Republican p6 D 18 '22 30w

CALTHROP, DION CLAYTON. Tremendous adventures. 317p $1.90 Stokes [7s 6d Hodder & S.] 22-14576

"The narrative starts with an old man for the hero, but does not let him live beyond more than a few pages. He is a quaint old man, picturesque, sharp-tongued, harboring close the idea of founding a horticultural college in commemoration of the girl he had loved in his youth. He leaves the carrying out of his plans, together with all of his money and property, to his head clerk. Then the clerk becomes the hero, marries, and eventually sees the foundation of his married life give way because of the intrusion of the third hero, a vagabond, a believer in free love. The triangular love affair fills the last third of the book."—Lit R

Booklist 19:121 Ja '23

Cleveland p84 N '22

"Here is light reading of romantic calibre, with scarcely any plot, but instead a strain of dainty imagery. It might well be likened to an old fashioned light opera. The story is not in any sense a novel. It is a compilation of fragments, some of them enlivening, some poignantly vivid, some very dull."

+ — Lit R p160 O 28 '22 220w

"There is an elusive charm about this book that is difficult to describe. . . There is humor in it, and pathos, too; there is tender sentiment and elemental passion, and all are skillfully blended together to make an exquisite prose poem."

+ N Y Times p14 O 1 '22 270w

"People too pleasant to be real, though not too much so to be readable." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p8 S 24 '22 90w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 17 '22 150w

CALVE, EMMA. My life; tr. by Rosamond Gilder. 280p il $4 (15s) Appleton

B or 32

22-20645

Madame Calvé's story records an artistic career which carried her to all the great opera houses of the world from Mexico to India. Her narrative is full of anecdotes and allusions to the great singers with whom she has been associated, tho she does little more than mention them. Most of the book is filled with her own lively personality and her own triumphs.

Booklist 19:150 F '23

"It is frankly a little too much in the Pollyanna vein. From reading it one would believe that Mme. Calvé had always lived in the best of all possible worlds and that sorrow or suffering never left their marks upon her. I feel that by giving this impression she has been unjust to herself. But this does not mean that there is not much interesting matter in the volume. Many of the anecdotes are most engaging."

Orville Harrold

+ Bookm 56:637 Ja '23 320w

"With a light and charming emphasis anecdote falls fast on the heels of anecdote. Her references to her fellow-workers, among them Marcella Sembrich, Chaliapin, Caruso, Jean de Reszke, Melba, Plançon, are always generous; her perceptions are often acute, her humor arch, though without irony or depth. Yet, it is a romantic, fleeting world she depicts, a world that vanishes with the word." Alyse Gregory

+ — Freeman 6:357 D 20 '22 750w

"An autobiography not to be missed by music-lovers, life-lovers, lovers of spirit and fancy and adventure. A great tale told by a great Diva with the same originality and individuality with which she sings and acts. No pausing for tiresome explanations, just the thing itself." Hildagarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R 1:35 D '22 70w

Reviewed by H. T. Finck

Int Bk R p20 F '23 1950w

CALVE, EMMA—Continued

"Madame Calvé's 'Life' is little more than a list of the various roles she sang and the nature of the ovations that followed, interspersed with the usual threadbare anecdotes of the ateliers and dressing-rooms, and the professional jargon of a teacher of the voice. We have a right to expect something more than this from a popular diva with the gipsy tradition in her blood." H. I. Young

— Nation 115:692 D 20 '22 600w

"She writes with a delightful simplicity and joyousness, and in generous appreciation of her contemporaries."

+ New Statesman 20:436 Ja 13 '23 250w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:28 Ja '23

"A triumphant refutation of the supposition that the memoirs of singers are always dull. The book, with its lively and picturesque detail, holds one's attention whether the author tells us of her childish escapades in Spain or of the patriarchal arrangements of her aunt's farm."

+ Spec 129:1009 D 30 '22 980w

"Doubtless it is easy to expect too much in such a life, but the feeling remains at the end of the book that Calvé might have told us so much more of her associates and acquaintances, even if she had had to sacrifice a little about herself."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p718 N 16 '22 210w

Wis Lib Bul 18:273 D '22

CALVERT, ALBERT FREDERICK. Spanish royal tapestries. (Spanish ser.) il $4 Dodd [15s Lane]

746 Tapestry (Eng ed 22-7011)

The book is the first attempt that has been made to present in English a record of the most valuable and interesting examples in the Spanish royal collection. There are 277 illustrations and the text consists of five essays: History of the art of tapestry weaving; The foundation of the Spanish royal collection; The Gothic tapestries—sacred pieces; Tapestries of the Gothic-renaissance transition; Renaissance tapestries.

Boston Transcript p9 Ap 29 '22 500w

"4×5-inch cuts of great weavings containing twenty and more figures could not be other than unsatisfactory. Less and better illustrations and a complete inventory of the 800 pieces which make up the Madrid collection would have been more useful both to amateur and student." M. G. Byne

— Lit R p914 S 2 '22 500w

"Of the score of volumes comprising 'The Spanish Series' this book, in point of scope and general interest, is the least considerable. But to art connoisseurs it may seem the most considerable."

— + Outlook 130:558 Ap 5 '22 60w

"Its value is not a little impaired by the fact that the illustrations, although on the whole well executed, are unhappily in most cases too small to serve as more than a mere index of subject and design. The text of the book, moreover, like so many of its predecessors, suffers from carelessness and want of scholarly method; and its information is uncertain."

— + Sat R 132:516 O 29 '21 200w

CAMBRIDGE HISTORY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE. Short history of American literature based upon the Cambridge history of American literature, ed. by William Paterfield Trent, John Erskine Stuart P. Sherman, and Carl Van Doren. 428p $3.75 Putnam

810.9 American literature—History and criticism 22-12115

A one-volume history based on the four-volume Cambridge history and planned on the same principle, with separate chapters on individual authors contributed by different authors and grouped by topics instead of being arranged in strict chronological order.

Among the contributors are Paul Elmer More, Stuart P. Sherman, George Haven Putnam, Carl Van Doren, Killis Campbell, John Erskine, W. P. Trent, Brander Matthews, Ruth Putnam, Samuel Lee Wolff, Morris R. Cohen and Harry M. Ayres.

"The Short History lacks the perspective and the lights and shadows which a real history of literature, even on a small scale, may and should have. The volume is, in brief, a collection of essays, most of them excellent, upon individual authors, and will doubtless be welcomed by the general reader who does not care to read the larger work or to make his own selections from it." W. C. Bronson

+ — Am Hist R 28:162 O '22 210w

Booklist 18:358 J1 '22

"It is exceedingly informative, and instructive to the last degree but, willy nilly, it isn't a history. However, this volume will prove of immense collateral reading value for a study of the history of American literature inasmuch as the essays are authoritative and sufficiently broad in scope to include most things that need to be known about the lives and works of our great writers."

+ — Bookm 56:228 O '22 160w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:524 Je 10 '22 110w

"This very convenient book is to be welcomed. Students and teachers who did not feel able to buy the complete history will here find their need served."

+ Lit R p744 Je 17 '22 110w

Reviewed by P. H. Boynton

New Repub 32:sup18 S 27 '22 950w

R of Rs 66:110 J1 22 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:215 O '22

CAMBRIDGE medieval history; planned by J. B. Bury; ed. by H. M. Gwatkin and others; Sv v 3. Germany and the western empire. 700p il $7 Macmillan [50s Cambridge univ. press]

940.1 Middle ages—History

The first and second volumes of this history were published in 1911 and 1913 respectively. "This volume takes the reader down to the end of the really Dark Ages; to the Norman Conquest in English History, to the fall of the Moslem Caliphate in Spain, to the Emperor Henry III., and Pope Sylvester II. William the Conqueror and Hildebrand are casting their shadows before them, but the Middle Ages can scarcely be said to have begun."—(New Statesman)

"One looks in vain for large view, for constructive interpretation, cogent and compact summary. There is no consecutive and sustained treatment of the really important movements of the time anywhere in these futile pages upon feudal Germany. British scholarship has never distinguished itself in the field of medieval German history." J. W. Thompson

— Am Hist R 28:93 O '22 2350w

Am Pol Sci R 16:729 N '22 80w

Booklist 19:47 N '22

"Especially notable are the chapters on Feudalism by Sir Paul Vinogradoff and on Learning and Literature by Montague Rhodes James. The chapters by Mr. James are by no means mere synopses or outlines; they are the kind to which a specialist likes to direct the real student of history for study and research." E. F. Humphrey

+ Nation 115:75 J1 19 '22 430w

"In some respects the editors have profited by past experience. Footnotes are rather more frequent, and afford more possibility of checking important statements. The index is greatly improved; the whole volume reeks of blood and treason; we welter amid a chaos of names which leave little personal impression. We cannot see the wood for the trees; our main feeling is of kaleidoscopic and capricious change; the one thing constant is the inconstancy of human affairs."

+ — Nation and Ath 31:541 J1 15 '22 1000w

New Statesman 19:270 Je 10 '22 1250w

"The task they have on the whole admirably performed, and the volume is a testimonial to the qualities of the younger school of historians in France and in England, while it gives equal evidence of the unsurpassed knowledge of such older scholars as Dr. James, Mr. Lethaby, and Sir Paul Vinogradoff."

+ Sat R 133:340 Ap 1 '22 740w

Spec 128:498 Ap 22 '22 1050w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p331 My 25 '22 1800w

CAMP, CHARLES WADSWORTH. Hidden road. 334p $1.75 Doubleday

22-10546

"This is a love story dealing with a man who faces the choice of practically selling himself to the heiress to whom he has become engaged or of adventuring out along the 'hidden road' to happiness with the stenographer for whom he has conceived a sudden and deep passion. As one might judge from the nature of the choice, and also from the nature of novels in general, it is the stenographer that ultimately wins out after those numerous hindrances and delays necessary to create suspense and to maintain the reader's interest for the requisite 300 pages."—Lit R

"The present volume needs cutting and it needs weeding. There is a good deal of extraneous matter which does not bring out anything new. There is a good deal of cold repetition. Its very rambling style, even so, gives a feeling of naturalness, which a crisper might destroy. But there is such a thing, as the French say, as being too natural." L. W. L.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '22 530w

"While the theme is by no means a novel one, the story is written entertainingly, convincingly, and with a narrative skill considerably above the average."

+ — Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 110w

"A confusing mixture of excellence and mediocrity. There is some good writing and some very bad."

+ — N Y Times p16 My 28 '22 70w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 J1 '22

CAMPBELL, DUGALD. In the heart of Bantuland. 313p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

916.7 Africa—Description and travel. Bantus 22-26398

"This is a record of twenty-nine years' pioneering in Central Africa, among the Bantu peoples. Mr. Campbell has journeyed three times from one side of the continent to the other. He discusses native laws, customs, witch doctors, totemism, exogamy and taboo, secret societies, guilds, the Bantu language, and a store of other subjects he has studied. He shows the native as a respecter of law and authority, and as a humorist."—Nation and Ath

Booklist 18:326 Je '22

"Mr. Campbell has provided a rich magazine for the anthropologist, and an interesting narrative for everyone who cares for travel books."

+ Nation and Ath 30:902 Mr 28 '22 310w

"Many of the peoples with whom he deals are but little known, and his careful description of their culture is a useful addition to our knowledge."

+ Nature 110:246 Ag 19 '22 80w

New Statesman 19:104 Ap 29 '22 430w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

N Y Times p16 J1 9 '22 200w

"We congratulate Mr. Campbell on his fascinating, scholarly, and finely-illustrated book. We found the beginning a little difficult;

we are sorry now that it is done. The author records what he has seen and learned, and while his reach exceeds his grasp in regard to questions like totemism he has much to disclose that is new and is all his own. On many questions he speaks with the wisdom of experience, and his advice, which is never obtruded, is always shrewd."

+ — Sat R 133:523 My 20 '22 1100w

"Mr. Dugald Campbell's book must be ranked as one of the few records indispensable to a proper understanding of the Bantu people of Central Africa. The book is well illustrated but we should have been thankful for a more useful map."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p100 F 16 '22 1050w

CAMPBELL, MRS. PATRICK (BEATRICE STELLA CORNWALLIS-WEST). My life and some letters. 451p il $5 Dodd [24s Hutchinson]

B or 92

22-22417

The book is hardly an orderly or complete autobiography of this English actress and her twenty-five or more years of success on the stage. It is rather a collection of her letters, criticisms of the parts she has played, notes of appreciation from her friends, and other memories, with many portraits of her in her leading rôles. A whole chapter is devoted to her friendship with George Bernard Shaw, who wrote his "Pygmalion" for her and some of whose characteristic letters to her are reproduced. Another friendship to which she gives a whole chapter is Sir James Barrie's.

Booklist 19:119 Ja '23

"Her book is the revelation of a woman whose spirit is both large and high, whose history has been amusing, stirring, tragic, and rounded. You will be sure to like her." Ruth Hale

+ Bookm 56:760 F '23 200w

"A brilliant book" E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:810 N 25 '22 50w

"Written in a whimsical and entertaining prose, and it undeniably holds the reader, except in those passages where Mrs. Campbell attempts to moralize and her book descends into a series of paragraphs. No person is in the book except as that person comes more or less intimately into the author's life. This is wise, for it is a personal book, at best, shaped to amuse and not to narrate the stage history of the past thirty years."

+ — Int Bk R p46 F '23 1500w

"An exceedingly interesting, clever, and suggestive book, widely different from and in many respects greatly superior to the ordinary volume of theatrical autobiography; candid in its utterances and self-revelatory in an uncommon degree, but yet leaving the impression that much remains untold. There is a studied reticence, whether artful or wholly charitable it would be presumptuous to guess, with regard to details which in the circumstances can scarcely be considered trivial or irrelevant." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p320 D 16 '22 1900w

New Statesman 20:47 O 14 '22 1800w

N Y Times p1 N 19 '22 1700w

"It is a complete refutation of all literary dicta. It is ill-written in every sense of the word, short of being illiterate—though Bernard Shaw accused its author even of that. And yet it is extremely interesting, quite as much for its omissions as for what it contains; for its manifest imperfections as much as for its merits. The manner of its composition resembles a turning out of old trinket boxes and hold-alls forgotten in the attic, from which tumbles a disarray of useless but significant trifles." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p9 N 12 '22 950w

"The subtlety, the power, the persuasiveness, the tension of mind, that we know were hers? Mrs. Campbell has not the facility in writing to set these before us. Even from the letters that notable men have written to her we gather little of her personality. Most of them are to much occupied in paying her sincere, merited, and vague compliments. Only in the clean,

CAMPBELL, MRS PATRICK—Continued
clear, magnificently posturing honesty of Mr. Bernard Shaw do we find a real and adorable Mrs. Patrick Campbell. Twenty-five pages of his letters are given: they are an overwhelming evidence of the genius of both."

+ — Spec 129:641 N 4 '22 420w

"She has written the right sort of book: a theatrical autobiography that must stand on our shelves not among the rows of dull stuff of that kind which are kept only for reference, but next to Miss Ellen Terry's book, among the Lives that are real books. It is a brave and open narrative."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p628 O 5 '22 1550w

Wis Lib Bul 19:24 Ja '23

CAMPBELL, THOMAS JOSEPH. Jesuits, 1534-1921: a history of the Society of Jesus from its foundation to the present time. 337p $5 (18s) Encyclopedia press

271.5 Jesuits—History 22-1391

"This bulky work sets forth the history of the Jesuits, as the Jesuits see it or wish the world to see it."—Spec

"A readable, attractive, and at times fascinating, account of the society during the past four hundred years of its existence." P. Guilday

+ Am Hist R 28:304 Ja '23 850w

"His 930 pages are done with great thoroughness and unflinching competence: every page, as a piece of writing, can be read with pleasure. Despite his theme, which is largely controversial, and to many of us distasteful, his tone and atmosphere are modern and notably American: little of the hieratic, the unctuous; occasional welcome touches of briskness and informality." H: B. Fuller

+ Freeman 5:139 Ap 19 '22 1450w

"Father Campbell's book cannot be regarded as thoroughly satisfactory. With a disarming superficial candor, it is, nevertheless, deeply biased. It makes no attempt to be fair to anyone outside the Catholic church, nor does it really expose or set forth any of the important weaknesses of the order or the serious charges against them. His defense of casuistry and of Jesuit moral theology is thoroughly unreliable in its statement of the facts." Preserved Smith

+ Nation 114:21 JI 5 '22 1100w

"As a history, this book can only commend itself to Jesuits. It may be the work of much conscientious research among the archives of the Society, but it is not the work of an unbiased mind."

— New Statesman 19:48 Ap 15 '22 420w

"The first tolerably complete and authoritative history of the Society that has been written in English or in any other language for ninety years past—by a Jesuit."

+ Spec 128:273 Mr 4 '22 1100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p127 F 23 '22 30w

"Father Campbell is to be heartily congratulated upon so coherent an account of the history not only of his Order but also of the numerous controversies in which it has been involved."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p268 Ap 27 '22 1700w

CANBY, HENRY SEIDEL. Definitions. 303p $2 Harcourt

814 Literature. Criticism 22-16901

Essays in contemporary literary criticism by the editor of the Literary Review. They include a group in which the author analyzes the qualities that make for popularity in fiction, another in which he discusses the American tradition in literature and one concerning the literature of revolt which the younger generation is providing. The fourth group of these essays is devoted to the reviewing of books and includes two of the author's recent book reviews. The last group consists of studies of such literary personalities as Joseph Conrad, Herman Melville, Thomas Hardy, Henry James and Samuel Butler.

Booklist 19:45 N '22

"Dr. Canby's great virtue as an editor and as a critic is that he successfully steers a middle course. He does not ally himself with the radicals or with the reactionaries, the jejune or the hard shelled. He is temperate and fair minded: he is interested in ideas whatever their color. He is an umpire of literature rather than a coach or a player. This deprives him of a certain gusto, but it also keeps him out of critical hot water. . . . He defines, and definitions at this time are useful, directive, and valuable." Burton Rascoe

+ Bookm 56:224 O '22 180w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Ind 109:136 S 16 '22 180w

"Mr. Canby [has] rare critical ability. He brings to the appreciation of fiction, it is true, the scholarly training of a specialist. The value of Mr. Canby's book lies in its specific illustration as well as in its theoretic justification of the principle that in literary criticism, as in other arts and crafts, you must define your terms of procedure." Bliss Perry

+ Lit R p45 S 23 '22 1500w

"Definitions' is well named because it definitely clarifies a number of important issues and it is certainly one of the best expressions that have been given of the conception of literature as a function of society. Moreover it is no small additional advantage that Mr. Canby writes with exceeding ease. He has the simple flowing style of the best light essayist with, fortunately, many times more to say. He is surely one of the least pontifical of serious American critics." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 115:339 O 4 '22 850w

"He is far more interested in understanding the literature with which he deals than in passing sentence upon it; he is still more interested in explaining that literature in the light of the experience which lies behind it." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p7 D 31 '22 400w

Reviewed by Burton Rascoe
N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 20w
No Am 216:715 N '22 650w

"The views put forth are tolerant as well as acute."

+ Outlook 132:254 O 11 '22 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:590 D '22

St Louis 21:12 Ja '23

"Scholarly without being heavy. The general, or casual, reader, will enjoy Prof Canby's style as well as his interpretations, which are refreshing and well-balanced."

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 11 '22 950w

Wis Lib Bul 18:214 O '22

CANDLER, EDMUND. Abdication. 280p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Constable]

22-21952

"The author, unmistakably English, revealed [in an earlier book] unusual knowledge of the young Indian revolutionary type in pre-war and pre-Gandhi days. Mr. Candler's second story is no less emphatically a document of the later phase of revolutionary India. The story, which has a minimum of incident, presents a young Englishman who, after a gallant career in Mesopotamia, is editing an English daily in Upper India. In a perfectly outspoken fashion he stands for that significant view of the crisis which, as all the evidence shows, is spreading fast among the European community in India, namely, that the British Government is virtually in process of abdication, and that the one thing to do is to confront the issue without any illusions. Mr. Candler's 'young Riley' says simply: 'Trust the Indians completely, or give up all talk of self government.' Over against him we have, at one end the group of official Anglo-Indians at the station club, and at the other end, several contrasted specimens of the revolutionary party. The picture is vividly done, and it includes a brilliant description of Gandhi and his command of the multitude."—New Statesman

"Mr. Candler's honesty and self-restraint are beyond all praise; he shirks nothing, and takes no refuge in comfortable generalization. His book should be read both by those who think England should hold India at all costs, and by those who think that it is as easy to resign an Empire as to retire from a party where the hostess looks a little tired. And yet the book disappoints, not because of a literary weakness, but because of a defect lying nearer to its aim. For all its fairness and chivalry, it does not succeed in being sympathetic about the Indian."

+ — Nation and Ath 31:126 Ap 22 '22 750w
"Mr. Candler writes from direct observation and with acute understanding."

+ — New Statesman 19:520 Ag 12 '22 210w
"There is a great deal of excellent material in the book, and a few well-done comments. But it is badly arranged and put together, and though in the beginning it seems as if it were going to get somewhere, it ends without getting anywhere."

+ — N Y Times p19 Ag 20 '22 350w
"Even India has not magic enough to throw any glamour over 'Abdication.'" Isabel Paterson
— N Y Tribune p5 Ag 13 '22 100w

"The tale and the moral are imperfectly related. Yet it is for the most part a good tale, and the descriptions of the official capital, neighbored by the unchanged Indian city, are done with the knowledge and picturesqueness we expect from Mr. Candler. Also there is one study of character Banarsi Das, the irresolute young seditionist, a tragi-comic figure, hardly to be over-praised."

+ — Sat R 133:424 Ap 22 '22 390w
Spec 128:756 Je 17 '22 520w

CANFIELD, MRS FLAVIA A. (CAMP). Hop pickers. 255p il $1.50 Harcourt 22-17614

A story for girls with the hop fields of Wisconsin for a background. The time is in the sixties of the last century and there are glimpses of the life of those days and of the quaint styles. A group of girls decide to spend their vacation picking hops on a farm about forty miles from their home village. They are all from good families and are dismayed to find that the other pickers are ragged and dirty and generally vindictive. But under the wise guidance of one of the older girls in their group, the village girls spend a profitable and enjoyable summer, and in the end win over the "low downs" to friendship.

"True to the social conditions of the times."
Wis Lib Bul 18:255 N '22

CAPES, WILLIAM PARR. Modern city and its government. 269p $5 Dutton 22-5529
352 Municipal government

Good city government depends on three essentials: an enlightened and alert citizenship, official capacity and an effective charter providing a simplified plan of organization. Of these the first is the most important. The book attempts to summarize the various viewpoints of the critic of municipal government, of the student without practical experience in public office and of the city official. It endeavors to simplify the study of fundamental urban problems by giving a constructive analysis of the existing situation and by pointing the general way to progress in the future as indicated by experience of the past and present. It contains inset charts of the plan of organization of a number of city governments, a selective bibliography and an index.

Am Pol Sci R 16:530 Ag '22 190w
"Perhaps the best practical discussion of municipal organization which has appeared in more than a decade." L. W. Lancaster
+ Ann Am Acad 101:301 My '22 410w

"A thoroughly well informed student of city affairs here presents the latest results of his investigations in the science of municipal government. A valuable book for all thoughtful citizens and all progressive officials."

+ Outlook 130:606 Ap 12 '22 70w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:330 Jl '22

Pratt p12 autumn '22
R of Rs 66:111 Jl '22 130w
Survey 47:966 Mr 18 '22 70w
Wis Lib Bul 18:153 Je '22

CAPPER, ARTHUR. Agricultural bloc; with an introd. by Kenyon L. Butterfield. (Farmer's bookshelf) 171p $1.25 Harcourt

630 Agriculture—Economic aspects

The agricultural bloc is the name given to a group of congressmen who have realized the needs of the farmer and who represent the protest against the general apathy of the industrial and commercial interests toward the nation's foundation industry. The purpose of the book is to review the history of the bloc thru the conditions that have given rise to it and to formulate the problems that it has set itself to solve, i.e. farm financing, marketing, cooperation, transportation, advanced methods in agriculture, etc.

"Senator Capper writes not with fury—senatorial fury—but with moderation."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 20 '23 370w

"Mr. Capper has given a calm and dispassionate review of the reasons [for the farm bloc] impressing the reader by his sincerity." C. M. Harger

+ Ind 109:390 D 23 '22 800w
"Senator Capper is the farmers' attorney, and he presents his case clearly, temperately, and on the whole justly. His book is essentially timely—it deals with conditions which may be entirely changed in two or three years, and may be altogether out of date by that time, but it does make clear how farmers feel and why they feel so just at the present time." E. E. Miller
+ Nation 115:sup636 D 6 '22 400w

"One thing this book does excellently. It gives an accurate picture of the things which irritated the farmer and made him dissatisfied. . . In a way it is a service to American political life to have written a book like this, for it may goad someone into collecting the facts and interpreting them for us without prejudice." D: Friday

+ New Repub 33:229 Ja 24 '23 1950w
"The volume depicts very graphically the causes operating to produce the tragic situation in which American farmers find themselves today." J. M. Gillette

+ Survey 49:395 D 15 '22 300w

CARDOZO, BENJAMIN NATHAN. Nature of the judicial process. 180p $1.75 Yale univ. press [7s 6d Milford]

340 Law 22-3302

"Mr. Cardozo delivered the Storrs lectures before the law school of Yale University in 1921, and they are here published. They deal respectively with the methods by which legal principles are applied in the giving of judicial decisions. 'Every judgment has a generative power.' If the principle latent in a decision is extracted, how shall it be applied? 'The directive force of a principle may be exerted along the line of logical progression; this I will call the rule of analogy or the method of philosophy; along the line of historical development; this I will call the method of evolution; along the line of the customs of the community; this I will call the method of tradition; along the lines of justice, morals, and social welfare, the mores of the day; and this I will call the method of sociology.' These methods are considered and analysed at length, and the discussions are very fruitful." —The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Seldom in a similar space will a student of legal institutions find so much of interest as in these lectures of Judge Cardozo." W. F. Dodd
+ Am Pol Sci R 16:710 N '22 600w

"There is little trace of the court-room or the lecture-hall in these papers, which are written with much beauty of style; so that the book is a contribution not simply to jurisprudence but to general literature as well." M. S. C.

CARDOZO, BENJAMIN NATHAN—Continued

+ Freeman 5:94 Ap 5 '22 220w

"The illustrations from the law are stripped of technical raiment and will little strain and much enlighten the understanding of lesser breeds without the Law. Dwellers in darkness who shun enlightenment but love good English will do well to avoid exposure to Judge Cardozo's charm. For those who fear not wisdom there is great delight in store." T. R. Powell

+ Nation 114:347 Mr 22 '22 1850w

"It is a careful, and, at times, eloquent discussion of the forces which go to the making of a judicial decision. It is greatly to be hoped that Judge Cardozo's volume will be widely read on the English bench. It will tend both to elevation and to enlightenment."

+ Nation and Ath 31:744 S 2 '22 430w

"One who values consistency above all may perhaps object that the admitted judicial power to mitigate wrongs and hardships cannot be restricted merely to filling gaps in the existing law. However, Judge Cardozo's engaging modesty and his earnest warning against what modern progressives are so apt to overlook—the dangers of judicial impressionism which would sacrifice permanent interests of humanity to the interests of the moment—are likely to add to the respectful attention which will be accorded to his main contention." M. R. Cohen

+ New Repub 33:sup5 N 29 '22 260w

Pratt p12 autumn '22

"So clear and altogether charming that none who reads can but delight in the graceful quality of his style as in the vivid portrayal of the actual working of a judge's mind." Phillips Bradley

+ Spring'd Republican p7a O 1 '22 1200w

"The account of the growth of law from precedent to precedent is excellent and stimulating."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p510 Ag 3 '22 200w

CARLETON, WILLIAM, pseud. See Bartlett. F: O.

CARLYLE, ANTHONY. Fugitive millionaire. 289p $2 Houghton

22-16744

The situation in the story is that of a helpless, penniless young girl driven by circumstances into marrying a decrepit old millionaire while she is in love with a stranger about whom she has learned that he is a fugitive from justice after five years of imprisonment for murder. Such power has the stranger over her that she is impelled to meet him off and on in a gamekeeper's hut in the woods, while playing the rôle of dutiful daughter to her husband. When the climax is reached and the mists clear, senile husband and young stranger turn out to be one and the same person and innocent of murder.

— Boston Transcript p3 N 11 '22 700w

"The story is compact of romance and sentiment of the time-honored variety, rose-colored and tinselled and marshmallowy sweet. Written with a good deal of vivacity, some sense of humor and in the true romantic style that has little use for the realities of life."

— N Y Times p14 S 10 '22 370w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 110w

CARPENTER, ALFRED FRANCIS BLAKEY. Blocking of Zeebrugge; with an introd. by Admiral Earl Beatty and appreciations by Marshal Foch, Rear Admiral Sims and Count Visart. 276p il $3.50 Houghton [5s H. Jenkins]

940.45 European war—Naval operations. Zeebrugge—Ostend raids, 1918 22-8386

The book describes the most brilliant and difficult naval exploit during the Great war, undertaken to bottle up the German submarines in their bases. The first part deals with the situation, the object, the general plan for its attainment, the preparatory work involved, and the various occurrences up to the eve of the attack. Part second describes the events which occurred during the operation itself, and includes some consideration of both the material and moral results of the enterprise and the lessons to be drawn therefrom. The appendix gives a list of the vessels and craft which took part in the simultaneous blocking operations at Zeebrugge and Ostend. Contains maps and plans. Index.

Booklist 19:14 O '22

Boston Transcript p7 My 31 '22 450w

"A book of the greatest interest. . . Unique in all the literature of the war." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 108:456 My 13 '22 250w

Reviewed by W. O. Stevens

Lit R p108 O 14 '22 740w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:374 Jl '22

Pratt p30 autumn '22

"It is a brave story modestly told. But with all praise to the gallant author it is not a well written or well constructed book. Detailed as it is, it nevertheless lacks entirely certain details which one would have most confidently expected. One can readily find these important facts in naval registers, but their omission from the present volume is strange."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Je 19 '22 500w

CARPENTER, FRANK GEORGE. Holy Land and Syria. (Carpenter's world travels) 297p il $3 Doubleday

915.69 Palestine—Description and travel.

Syria—Description and travel 22-24097

Entering Palestine at Jaffa, the author travelled back and forth across the Holy Land from Dan to Beersheba, staying longest in Jerusalem, Jericho, Bethlehem, Nazareth, Damascus and Baalbek. There is a chapter on American education in the Near East, on the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, on Armenia and on the new rulers of Palestine and Syria. There are ninety-six illustrations and two maps. Bibliography. Index.

Booklist 19:154 F '23

"An interesting account of a country as little known to the Average American as though it were situated on another planet." S. A. C.

N Y Tribune p21 Ja 7 '23 230w

"A fine specimen of bookmaking, heavy paper, clear type, profusely illustrated, gorgeously bound. Merely as a shelf ornament it would lend beauty and dignity to a home. But the contents are also worth while."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ja 9 '23 400w

CARPENTER, NILES. Guild socialism; an historical and critical analysis. 350p $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton

335 Guild socialism 22-18930

The writer believes in the fundamental guild idea of democratic industrial self-government with the correlative functional principle of responsibility to the community. He also holds that guild socialism, as at present formulated, presents grave weaknesses, economic, political, ethical and psychological which however do not detract from the essential soundness of the guild idea. He proposes an alliance between the guild and the cooperative movement and declares himself a guild cooperator. In consequence of his attitude toward guild socialism the book falls into three parts: Historical; Descriptive; Critical. Appendix, bibliography and index.

Booklist 19:68 D '22

"For any one who would reach an understanding of the fundamentals of guild socialism Dr. Carpenter's book will prove more than adequate; it examines keenly and impartially the principles of the guild socialists, rejects some of their proposals and sponsors others, and presents an intelligent and scholarly point of view toward them all." S. A. C.

+ N Y Tribune p9 N 19 '22 250w

"Very courageous and thoughtful is his critical section in which, more particularly, he shows the weakness of the Douglas credit scheme which has been embraced by many guildsmen with almost fanatic enthusiasm. Though the book might be criticized as leaning too heavily on theories advanced without going sufficiently into the history of actual guild experiments, this is probably unavoidable because none of the experiments have as yet assumed dimensions in which either their relation to existing economic organization (or lack of organization) or their promise for the future could be seriously evaluated."

+ — Survey 49:sup210 N 1 '22 270w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p731 N 9 '22 110w

CARPENTER, RHYS. Esthetic basis of Greek art of the fifth and fourth centuries B.C. (Bryn Mawr notes and monographs) 263p $1.50 (5s) Longmans

709.38 Esthetics. Art, Greek 21-21370

"An attempt to answer the question: 'What importance has Greek art as art?' His illustrations are taken from a wide range of Greek artistic expression. But it is chiefly sculpture and architecture that [the author] takes up in detail."—Springf'd Republican

"A book which often stimulates but sometimes bewilders, and which on the whole does not live up to the promise of its title. . . . An inexperienced reader would be often puzzled, sometimes misled; but one who is able to control and estimate its statements will find it eminently stimulating and suggestive, even where it compels dissent." E. M. Whitmore

+ — Class J 17:413 Ap '22 1000w

"One may criticise some of the phrasing as a bit mannered; and the multiple-lined margins in both form and content are certainly ill-considered. But much could be forgiven a book which contains so much clarity and compression of reasoning, illuminating application of material, and unswerving consideration of Greek art as art." Walter Agard

+ — Dial 74:94 Ja '23 1500w

"The book is that rarest of things, a real contribution to esthetics." W. T. Bush

+ J Philos 20:21 Ja 4 '23 3100w

"This little volume is compact with instruction." Irwin Edman

+ Nation 115:sup390 O 11 '22 1400w

"Its 271 pages contain more compact and original thinking, more terse expression, than one will find in a dozen more ambitious books on esthetics. It will open the eyes of those who read it." W. R. Agard

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 31 '22 1250w

CARR-SAUNDERS, A. M. Population problem; a study in human evolution. 516p $7 Oxford [21s Milford]

312 Population SG22-139

"Mr. Carr-Saunders has tackled the problem of Malthus anew from the standpoint of the twentieth century. He points out that the question brought forward by Malthus has to be restated in the terms of modern life: 'To Malthus the problem was one of the relative increase of population and of food; with us it is one of the density of population and of the productiveness of industry.' . . . Mr. Carr-Saunders discusses this question of the optimum population and of the various means, deliberate or unconscious, which various societies have adopted for approaching it, with great candour and learning. His book is a treasure-house of facts bearing on the theory of human fertility and fecundity. The author's very wide reading in anthropology and travel—the list of authors quoted alone occupies an appendix of twenty pages and includes nearly a thousand titles—enables him to give an exceptionally full account of the various methods adopted by both primitive and civilized societies for the regulation of numbers. He insists on the fact, too often imperfectly realized, that the essential problem of population is twofold: not only quantity, but quality must be taken into consideration."—Sat R

"This is a scholarly piece of work of much interest to those who would understand the historical development of our present-day population problems, but I cannot agree with the assumption, tacitly made throughout, that the only population problems are those of quantity and quality." W. S. Thompson

+ — Am J Soc 28:498 Ja '23 350w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '22 650w

"A notable book. It is the best discussion yet written of the population problem in the ordinary sense. Based on an enormous mass of thoroughly digested information drawn from all the leading biological, anthropological, historical, and economic authorities, and written in the best tradition of British scholarship, the book represents the type of synthetic work that is perhaps the chief need of science, scholarship, and education today. It is another cheering indication that there is gradually coming into being a real sociology, a genuine science of society." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 115:310 S 27 '22 1350w

"It is refreshing, and would have been more so if Mr. Carr-Saunders were a better writer. He writes, indeed, simply and quietly and honestly, but sometimes rather vaguely. There is often a feeling of limpness; the sentences are not always well jointed; sometimes the writer has not said what he intended to say. These defects are correlated with admirable qualities of calmness and sobriety." Havelock Ellis

+ — Nation and Ath 31:378 Je 10 '22 4150w

"The work of Mr. Carr-Saunders unquestionably takes rank as one of the foremost English contributions for a century. In scope, comprehensiveness and scholarly treatment, it is in a class with Malthus's famous Essay." E: A. Ross

+ New Repub 33:sup14 N 29 '22 1150w

"This is too rigidly 'scientific' a treatment of a burning question to be welcomed by partisans on either side. But the wide range of facts, the easy grasp of all the factors, the impressive marshalling of evidence, make this weighty treatise indispensable to any serious student of the subject."

New Statesman 19:302 Je 17 '22 500w

"It is indeed difficult to cover so much ground in a single volume of this size, but the author modestly suggests that if he has done no more than to draw attention to the existing need of such a work he will feel that he has not wholly failed of his purpose. So far as we are aware, this is the first modern attempt to make such a presentation in English."

R of Rs 66:447 O '22 90w

"Very clear, thoughtful and learned work. The wealth of illustration, based on wide reading makes the book very entertaining, even to a casual reader, and its conclusions are equally scientific in method and wise in outlook. No one can expect in future to be listened to as an expert in problems affecting population, unless he can claim that he has given some at least of his days and nights to the careful study of Mr. Carr-Saunders's monumental work."

+ Sat R 134:385 S 9 '22 640w

"It is a work of monumental proportions, profound in scholarship, and balanced in judgment. To the reader it brings again that sense of calm space, of panoramic vision, which he experiences when, leaving the arena of politics and the irreducible questions of the day, he turns to the pages of Gibbon, Robertson, or Thucydides. Certainly this book has that breadth of the classical historians. If it lacks something of their pictorial method, it more than repays by its scientific cure."

+ Spec 129:731 N 13 '22 1300w

"This book is one of the most comprehensive and satisfactory treatments of this great problem to be published in many years. For those who are not interested in population problems, the book is greatly worth while for its fine treatment of the evolution of history."

CARR-SAUNDERS, A. M.—Continued

J. K. Hart

+ Survey 49:sup192 N 1 '22 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p773 N 30 '22 1450w

CARRERE, JEAN. Degeneration in the great French masters (Les mauvais maîtres); tr. by Joseph McCabe. 252p $4 Brentano's [15s F. Unwin]

840.1 French literature—History and criticism (Eng ed 23-1550)

"The bad masters are Rousseau, Chateaubriand, Balzac, Stendhal, George Sand, Musset, Baudelaire, Flaubert, Verlaine, Zola. The author thinks these authors are unwholesome: Rousseau is the father of Romanticism, Chateaubriand is vain and full of evil melancholy, Balzac throws a glamour over vulgar ambition, Stendhal is a misanthropist, George Sand exalts passion, Flaubert is pessimistic, Musset sings of amorous despair, Baudelaire encourages morbid dreaming, Verlaine makes moral decadence attractive."—New Statesman

"While the reviewer was objecting almost constantly to the conclusions of the French critic, he could not but admire and loiter over the manner of composition. It is important comment and well built English. For this latter, Joseph McCabe, the translator, should be given much credit."

+ Bookm 56:643 Ja '23 160w

Boston Transcript p4 N 4 '22 450w

"M. Carrère has done more than write a volume of searching criticism; he has called his generation back again to the standards of moral sanity in literature."

+ Cath World 116:560 Ja '23 450w

Freeman 6:526 F 7 '23 2200w

"The bald truth is that M. Carrère, a journalist by profession and an uncompromising champion of classicism in literature, for which he has taste and intimacy, is obsessed, and the obsession now and then displays itself in his conduct. He has intoxicated himself on classicism, and he has what is known as a 'hangover.'" Joseph Collins

— Int Bk R p16 Ja '23 2600w

"Any one of his 'bad masters' would have been bad enough, on his own showing, to ruin France long ago. Yet, it survives—a fact which in itself demonstrates that this alarmist work is nothing more than a work of super-erogation." Ernest Boyd

— Lit R p198 N 11 '22 1400w

"M. Carrère is the sort of critic who would keep his countrymen on a diet of Corneille, if he could. His book is the kind to make stupid readers arrogantly stupid and intelligent ones impatient."

— New Statesman 19:563 Ag 26 '22 320w

"We see no reason why this volume should have occupied the time of an English translator or have been issued by an English publisher. Those who nourish an inherent dislike to French literature may welcome the rhetoric of Mr. Carrère, which will strengthen them in their prejudice. But outside this limited circle the book can only be received with impatience and disgust."

— Sat R 134:384 S 9 '22 720w

CARRICK, ALICE VAN LEER. Next-to-nothing house. 252p il $2.50 Atlantic monthly

749 House decoration. Furniture. Collectors and collecting 22-19885

The house is a low eighteenth century cottage, which owes its reputation to the fact that Daniel Webster occupied the little south chamber when he was a sophomore at Dartmouth, and its charm to the zeal and success of its present owner, Mrs Carrick, as a collector of antiques. She tells with enthusiasm of the old-fashioned furnishings she has collected, often at bargain prices, and fitted into the setting of her home. She holds out encouragement to would-be collectors to go and do likewise. Over sixty interior views of the house are shown in illustration.

Booklist 19:72 D '22

"To one beginning the pleasant task of fitting up a house or a room with antique furniture, her book forms an excellent starting point. There are so many helpful suggestions, so many hints which will lead to greater things, that the beginner can do no better than take the Next-to-Nothing House as a pattern to be kept in mind. Anyway, the book is mighty good reading, and the style carries one along so easily that the reader is bound to catch something of the authors' enthusiasm and whether a collector or not, he will find in this account an interesting narrative of one collector's luck." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 6 '23 1100w

"There is a wealth of information in this simple, amusing book." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R 1:38 D '22 60w

"Friendly and companionable little volume."

+ Lit R p166 O 28 '22 330w

N Y Times p20 F 4 '23 550

St Louis 20:299 D '22

CARSWELL, CATHERINE. The camomile; an invention. 319p $1.90 Harcourt [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

22-9660

"The daily round of a young music-teacher, her drab home-life, her literary ambition, her reflections and brief memories, her betrothal and its rupture, form the material of this story, for which has been chosen the sober setting of Glasgow. Briefly the story is that of a girl who has inherited from her mother, an unsuccessful and worthless author, a tormenting desire to express herself in writing; a craving which no discouragement, whether of circumstances or persons, can eradicate. It is, in fact, 'the camomile' which, says Falstaff, 'the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows.' Narrow means and the even narrower minds of her circle retard its flowering; music and passion distract her for a while; but it is stronger than any of these things, and in the end she pushes aside all that stands between her and her goal, and sets out for it alone, whether to reach it or not neither she nor her reader knows."—Sat R

Booklist 18:364 J1 '22

"There is always the charm of informality and of intimacy in a novel written in letter form, but there is a self-detachment and true Scotch humor in 'The Camomile' that make it decidedly above the average book of fiction that is thrust at us today by aspirants for literary notoriety. There is no scintillating dialogue, no masterly description, but there is thoughtful characterization, with no rough edges of details. We find, not the set types of melodrama, but real personages that we remember with a pleasant feeling of comradeship."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '22 300w

"A story of maidenly revolt, which doesn't exactly send one into transports of enthusiasm, particularly since the revolt is only a milk-and-water affair at best. The camomile survives the rubber heel of oppression almost too well, expending itself in schoolgirl rapture."

— Dial 73:681 D '22 80w

"This book is much better than the ordinary example of its type, for it reveals with a fresh fidelity the queer little kinks of a girl's mind and gives a really piquant summing up of all the characters that pass in review before her. The reader of this book will find it pleasant summer reading and at the same time a reflective work of real merit."

+ Lit R p779 J1 1 '22 220w

"An excellently compact book. While it is not as fine a literary achievement as Miss Carswell's earlier novel, 'Open the Door,' it yet is a distinct addition to the worthwhile books of the season."

+ N Y Times p16 My 28 '22 180w

"The Camomile' is from first to last absorbing, even in its most commonplace particulars. The simplicity of the narrative form in the opening chapters is so skillfully preserved that it is difficult to remember that this is a fictitious and not a real diary. The trivialities in this novel, carelessly as they seem to be thrown to us, have been selected with cunning discretion, and none is without significance. Mrs. Carswell has accomplished what she set out to do with extreme distinction."

Sat R 133:445 Ap 29 '22 700w

Spec 128:598 My 13 '22 40w

Springfd Republican p7a Jl 23 '22 130w

"There are very clever touches of character and description in her diary, although on the whole it is a disappointing book after 'Open the Door.' The setting of 'The Camomile' is the same as in Mrs. Carswell's first book, but the pictures are scrappier."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p259 Ap 20 '22 660w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 Jl '22

CASSEL, GUSTAV. Money and foreign exchange after 1914. 287p $2.25 Macmillan [10s 6d Constable]

332.4 Money. Foreign exchange

(Eng ed 22-18539)

The book is an attempt to present a coherent account of the fortunes of the world's monetary system from the outbreak of the war up to the present time. It explains at some length how, with the outbreak of the war, the gold standard was virtually abandoned in all countries, how this caused the inflation of currency, which in turn caused the rise in prices. It also shows how inflation gave rise to a gold-exclusion policy and the fluctuations in the exchange rates. It points out the weaknesses of various reform programs and insists on stability, not only of the internal currency of a country but of exchange rates, as the essential factor in restoration. It maintains that without insisting on a prewar gold standard, the gold dollar could be made the basis of an exchange parity.

New Statesman 20:148 N 4 '22 1000w

Reviewed by E. A. Bradford

N Y Times p16 D 17 '22 1750w

"While many points of controversy might be cited, they would not alter the fact that all who wish to read one of the most masterly expositions of the effects of the War and the post-war period upon the Foreign exchanges and upon monetary conditions throughout the world will find no better opportunity than is afforded by Money and Foreign Exchange after 1914." A. W. K.

+ — Spec 129:768 N 25 '22 520w

"If we regard the book as an introduction to the study of 'one of the most important chapters in monetary history' it has considerable merits. It contains useful warnings as to the pitfalls which beset the student of money and exchange, and though some of his opinions and doctrines will be disputed by other economists, in the main his views are sound, and he expresses himself clearly and concisely."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p688 O 26 '22 170w

CATHER, WILLA SIBERT. One of ours. 459p $2.50 Knopf

22-26887

Claude Wheeler was "one of ours" who left his Nebraska farm to fight and die in the Great war. He was an eager, sensitive youth, to whose inarticulate longings life had brought no answer. In the world which seemed so satisfying to all around him he had never felt at home. Except with his mother and faithful old Maibailey, all his relationships had been disappointing and even between himself and his mother her narrow religious beliefs had made a barrier. His marriage proved the crowning disappointment of all. He lived on his prosperous acres in the midst of material plenty, hungry for he knew not what, longing to do something with his life. Miss Cather makes the war a means of release to his baffled soul. He went gladly, never questioning that the call was clear, the cause glorious. He found in France the youth he had never had, companionship, a meaning to life, and died before the disillusionment which he could never have borne.

"The sense of mystery and the sense of beauty make the charm of this latest book of Miss Cather's, as they made the charm of the lovely April Twilights twenty years ago. But the mystery has perhaps deepened and darkened under the strain of life; and the feeling of beauty, if no less intense, is somewhat less permeating." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '22 420w

Booklist 19:52 N '22

"While Claude sticks to his own western lands, the thing is above reproach. All of him, all of his family and associates and locale is perfect because Miss Cather has written them as only she can write of such matters. Then, about the middle, she undertakes a large offensive, packs her hero in her wardrobe trunk, and carries him bodily to the war in France. The book is done for. The pity is that Miss Cather did not know war for the big bowwow stuff that it is and stick to her own farms and farmer folk." Sidney Howard

— + Bookm 56:217 O '22 880w

"As a whole, the story is better than might be expected from its extravagant advance praise. But it is not great, and is merely one of many excellent novels that traverse a well-worn pathway of fiction. If Miss Cather ever expects to achieve greatness, she should first pray to be delivered from the clutches of indiscriminating publicity experts." E. F. E.

— + Boston Transcript p4 S 13 '22 980w

Cleveland p84 N '22

"Despairing, possibly, of the novel afflicted with too protrusive a point of view, she has managed to write one with none at all; she has recorded without creating; she has described without evocation. The second half of the book is a real tour de faiblesse: the war built up out of any number of immutable facts and probable incidents, brightly and brilliantly ineffective. . . . The trouble is not that the war cuts off the solution of Claude's problem in marriage; it is that the second half of the book is about the war, and cuts off the solution of the aesthetic problem as well." Gilbert Seldes

+ Dial 73:438 O '22 1500w

"It is a thing apart. It is a creation of artistry, for beyond and behind the story presented in the book itself looms the vast drama of a nation's life."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 O 8 '22 1250w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Ind 109:279 N 11 '22 700w

"A fine achievement. The first portion dealing with farm life in Nebraska could not be matched by any one else now writing. The second part, in France and at the war, is more removed, but has its poignant beauty." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p70 D '22 50w

"Exceptionally well written, yet by no means a great novel. It is an essentially tragic novel; tragic, not because Claude is killed, but because its point of view is that in this world there is no place for the idealist, that just because Claude was fine and sensitive, clean-souled and aspiring, the best that could possibly be wished for him was death." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p58 Ja '23 550w

Lit R p21 S 16 '22 420w

"There is ground for fearing that, despite many excellences, it is inferior to others of her novels. It is indeed a book which, had it come from an experimenting youngster, would stir the most stimulating hope. And in any case it is one of the books of the year which one must recommend, which must be read. Yet from Miss Cather it is disappointing." Sinclair Lewis

CATHER, WILLA SIBERT—Continued

+ — Lit R p23 S 16 '22 1700w

"Miss Cather's story, so nobly epic in mood, so rich in life, so full of the tang of her native earth, so clear in its minor intellectual perceptions, yet shares the common fault of the quite vulgar story, novel, or play. It proposes and lets catastrophe dispose. Claude Wheeler might, in any one of a thousand senses, have saved or lost his soul. Instead a deus ex machina—it is, of course, the Great War—destroys the road and carries Claude to an alien earth and end where his fate could fulfill itself in no fashion. For that earth and end had no relation to his life and fate. We are still waiting, we shall always be waiting, for the end of his story which catastrophe cut short but could not complete." L. L.

+ — Nation 115:sup388 O 11 '22 800w

"The first half of the book consists of material with which Miss Cather is thoroughly familiar and which she uses admirably; the second half involves experience and characters which she controls less perfectly. . . The character of Claude Wheeler unifies the story. The war to him was not a conversion, or an escape, or a redemption. It was a fulfillment. He carried into it the personality which he had built up in his Nebraska home, with the difference that under the compulsion of a manifest duty his doubts vanished into singlemindedness, and under authority he gained freedom to be fully himself. His companions in the regiment were like him. . . It may be that One of Ours will have only a temporary and an immediate appeal to those who knew those boys, but to us that appeal is beyond words." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 32:177 O 11 '22 370w

"It is an amazingly rich book, rich as no other living American could write, many-peopled, complicated as life itself is complicated, but composed with a harmony and unity which only art can have. All its rich complication of varying backgrounds, all its characters, periods, events, have one unvarying purpose, to tell the story of Claude, whom we know as we know one of our very own." Dorothy Canfield

+ N Y Times p14 S 10 '22 1700w

"The best sustained and most powerful novel Miss Cather has written. She has told it with an epical dignity, simplicity and impressiveness. It is the high-water mark of her achievement as a literary artist—not so well rounded a story as 'My Antonia' perhaps, but a harder one to write, a more ambitious theme, handled with distinction and genius." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p6 S 10 '22 1350w

"Our personal tragedy is not only that we do not like 'One of Ours' as well as 'My Antonia' but that we do not like it at all. There are not more than fifty pages out of the four hundred and fifty-nine which established any spell. . . We didn't like it even before we discovered to our horror that Miss Cather was going to take what seems to us a sentimental attitude toward the war. Briefly and crudely restated, the theme of 'One of Ours' is that life in America may be so fearfully circumscribed by national character and conditions that the only escape for the individual lies in a great war. It seems to Miss Cather that the war was not without purpose, since it gave a significance to the life of farm boys in Nebraska. The hero of the book loses his life and finds his soul. We happen to believe that there is such a thing as setting too high a price even upon souls, and war is too high a price." Heywood Brown

+ — N Y World p13 S 13 '22 1500w

"'One of Ours' would be a great novel even if it were only a study of a young man's temperament and drifted to an ending by simply stopping and leaving its hero in the fog of his future. But nothing has been written on this side of the Atlantic since we have been a Nation that can approach in value, both as art and history, this version of America's performance in the great war." Zoe Akins

+ N Y World p11 S 14 '22 900w

"It is disappointing that Claude's problems, so well set forth, should not be worked out to any conclusion. The war scenes are vivid; Claude's experiences are in some respects singular and evidently based on authentic war knowledge, and the inevitable tragic end is moving. The two parts of the book are painfully disjointed." R. D. Townsend

+ — Outlook 132:253 O 11 '22 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:532 D '22

"One cannot say that Miss Cather has entirely realized the possibilities of the scheme, but her new work, though without marked individuality of style, represents a high degree of artistic creation, as well as a strong achievement of emotional story-telling. The book fails in design just because the war is used to solve its basic problems."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 700w

Reviewed by Florence Fleisher

Survey 49:sup192 N 1 '22 200w

Wis Lib Bul 18:217 O '22

CAULLERY, MAURICE JULES GASTON CORNEILLE. Universities and scientific life in the United States; tr. by James Haughton Woods and Emmet Russell. 269p $2.50 Harvard univ. press [10s 6d Milford]

378.73 Learned institutions and societies. Colleges and universities—United States

22-5194

"In 1916 Dr. Caullery, professor of zoölogy at the Sorbonne, lectured at Harvard as exchange professor and visited other universities, using his powers of observation to good effect. The author gets at the essentials of our system of higher education in chapters devoted to historical development, externals, administration, the professorial career, student life, co-education, State and private control, graduate and professional schools, the rôle of the alumni. A large part of the book is devoted to a discussion of scientific research, which the author considers to be the supreme aim of the university. Special chapters are given to independent institutes of research, such as the Carnegie Institution of Washington, to the great museums, the scientific bureaus of the Federal Government, and the learned societies. Throughout the book, and especially in the concluding chapter, the author holds up the French universities for comparison."—Lit R

Booklist 19:36 N '22

"Although it is intended primarily for the French reader who cares more for general impressions than he does for intimate details it is a book that may be read with profit by many Americans. Professor Caullery, plainly, is thrilled by the greatness of our universities, by their huge enrollments as well as by their huge endowments. Like other visitors to our shores he notes as a strange phenomenon the loyalty which alumni generally show toward the institutions from which they were graduated."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 1 '22 310w

"A work which must interest every civilized reader. . . a remarkably accurate and comprehensive account of our institutions of higher learning. With the clarity, conciseness, and appreciation of spiritual values characteristic of the French, the author gets at the essentials of our system of higher education. Nothing could be more admirable, more scientific, than the spirit in which this traveller's impressions are recorded." H. M. Parsley

+ Lit R p835 Jl 29 '22 700w

"A remarkably lucid and sympathetic interpretation of impressions."

+ Nature 110:72 Jl 15 '22 1500w

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:34 Jl '22

"Thoughtful and instructive book."

+ Spec 128:696 Je 3 '22 270w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p309 My 11 '22 80w

CAVEN, STEWART. Pair of idols. 280p $2
Dutton

22-11446

Ireland is the setting. Stephen Pegwynn, an American, while riding in his Panhard is attracted by Gracie Bresnin who nearly comes to grief in the rickety Bronco car driven by Jock whose previous experience of motion had been the unexpected antics of his father's mule. There are humorous passages thruout the book and quaint characters, but the whole is a very simple story of the love of Stephen for Gracie Bresnin.

"A romance dealing with stock types and consciously different situations, written in a bungling and labored manner. Despite the assault upon the dictionary for new and little used expressions, the story would be satisfactory but for the fact that it is hindered from being actually exciting by the author's lack of dramatic sense or of narrative skill."

— Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '22 240w
Cleveland p91 D '22

"The plot of the tale is near to the farcical, but never too much so. It is all very good comedy, played out by an unusual cast. It holds one's interest merely as a plot and has some delightfully absurd comic situations. Altogether an unusually pleasant book."

+ Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 310w

"The exploits of Gracie make diverting reading, but the author himself unfortunately cramps her style by the effulgence of his own."

— + N Y Times p7 My 28 '22 290w

CAZENOVE, THEOPHILE. Cazenove journal, 1794; a record of the journey through New Jersey and Pennsylvania; (tr. from the French); ed. by Rayner Wickersham Kelsey. (Haverford college studies) 103p il $1.80 Pennsylvania history press, Haverford, Penn.

917.48 New Jersey—Description and travel.
Pennsylvania—Description and travel

22-6533

Theophile Cazenove, 1740-1811, came to America from Amsterdam in 1790, staying here for nine years, during which time he acted as general agent of the Holland land company. In the interest of the speculations of this company he made the journey through New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania recorded in this journal. Starting from New York he passed thru Newark, Morristown, Easton, Nazareth, Bethlehem, Allentown, Reading, Lebanon, Harrisburg, Carlisle, Chambersburg, York and Lancaster, ending his journey at Philadelphia. The chief value of his journal consists in its minute notes on social and economic conditions in the towns visited,—prices of land and agricultural products, wages, crops produced, industries, schools, churches, inns, etc. The city of Cazenovia, New York, is named from this traveler.

"Cazenove was observant. His Journal is interesting for its portrayal of town and country life of the section and period covered. But the chief value of this record lies in the information it gives of economic conditions of the time.

Unusual care has been taken with the editing of the Journal. The preface makes acknowledgment to no less than twenty-three persons and institutions from whom assistance was obtained." L. F. S.

+ Am Hist R 27:829 Jl '22 430w

"It is a rather bare, hastily written itinerary, filling only ninety pages of large print, but it offers some vivid sidelights upon rural economy in the Middle States just after the Revolution. A highly commendable, though almost painful, amount of erudition and research has been expended by the editor upon the explanatory notes."

Lit R p860 Ag 5 '22 300w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. Rack-house. 302p $1.90 Harper

22-20278

The story introduces Capt. Roderic Norris, "darling of society and the gods, scion of an honored family, clubman, polo player, contented loafer, embryonic financier and . . . bankrupt." In the course of the plot he goes thru a number of sensational metamorphoses. For a week, in his old army uniform, a black mask, faking the loss of an arm, he turns a hurdy-gurdy and with the help of a monkey rakes in pennies to the amount of $6000. In partnership with a runaway college professor he becomes the king of bootleggers, breaking the law to the tune of a million dollars a year and with adventures that harden his physical and moral fibre out of all recognition. Then, presto, as a millionaire he changes back to the smiling, debonair Roddy Norris, beloved by his friends in prosperity.

Lit R p204 N 11 '22 110w

"A lively and entertaining tale."

+ N Y Times p20 O 29 '22 430w

CHAMBERLIN, FREDERICK CARLETON. Private character of Queen Elizabeth. 334p il $5 Dodd [18s Lane]

B or 92 Elizabeth, queen of England

22-11751

"Mr. Chamberlin, who, by the way, is an American, has pushed aside the mass of prejudiced and controversial 'history' that has arisen around the figure of Elizabeth, and, reaching back to original sources, has given us a work as authoritative as it is surprising. When he embarked on his life of the Queen, he tells us, there were two points so agreed upon by historians that he considered them taken for granted: that Elizabeth enjoyed perfect health; and that, despite her proud title of the Virgin Queen, she had been the mistress of Leicester, of Essex, of Raleigh, and of Hatton. An all-inclusive examination of the sources, however, produced evidence that overthrows both these beliefs, and this evidence Mr. Chamberlin lays before his reader in its entirety."—N Y Times

"Interesting reading as it is sound history. With sympathy and understanding he explains the difficulties which beset the young queen, and contrasts them with the genius for ruling that she showed on every occasion. Various charges against her are satisfactorily answered and she is revealed as a strong and courageous woman as well as a powerful sovereign."

+ Bookm 55:536 Jl '22 150w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 107:352 D 31 '21 220w

"No pains have been spared to make the work complete. All the available historical evidence has been carefully sifted and examined. A jury of the foremost medical experts has been impelled, and their conclusions are marshalled in imposing array. There can be no possible doubt that Mr. Chamberlin has proved his case. The only question is whether it was in any need of such an overwhelming avalanche of proof. His book is really, in large measure, an act of supererogation. He uses a sledge-hammer to drive in a tack." R. B. Merriman

+ — Lit R p580 Ap 15 '22 470w

Nation 115:131 Ag 2 '22 130w

Reviewed by A. W. Vernon

New Repub 33:49 D 6 '22 680w

"Except for those strange minds who willfully reject all evidence unconforming to their prejudices, Mr. Chamberlin has triumphantly proved his case. His book is a model of sound scholarship, careful judgment and clear writing." Robert Hillyer

+ N Y Times p5 F 5 '22 2000w

"Although Mr. Chamberlin has written a book, which regarded as a piece of historical research, is indisputably an admirable piece of work; he is somewhat over zealous in his efforts to disapprove the attacks that have been made upon Elizabeth's morals." Esther Murphy

+ — N Y Tribune p4 Jl 23 '22 1000w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:365 Jl '22

"Mr. Chamberlin has produced a book which is of positive, though of limited value. Moreover, it is open to the charge of special plead-

CHAMBERLIN, F. C.—Continued
ing and in not a few places of obvious exaggeration. We consider the importance of the enquiry to reside almost entirely in its investigation of the health of Elizabetheth."

+ — Sat R 132:618 N 26 '21 500w

"Mr. Chamberlin has, in our opinion, cleared the character of Queen Elizabetheth."

+ Spec 127:633 N 12 '21 1200w

Springf'd Republican p8 My 20 '22 50w

"Mr. Chamberlin has written a fascinating book, and even the minutiae of research and the tenuous cobwebs of conjecture are all presented with the fascination of high romance."

J. J. Reilly

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 9 '22 1000w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p700 O 27 '21 110w

"He has given us an important historical work, and he is fitted to produce a still better book if he can be persuaded to refrain from pressing weak arguments, pursuing fanciful conjectures, and overstating his case."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p710 N 31 '21 1550w

CHAMBERS, HENRY EDWARD. Mississippi valley beginnings; an outline of the early history of the earlier West. 389p il $4.50 Putnam 977 West—History. Mississippi valley

22-24029

The book is a history of the Mississippi valley as a whole, of the earlier West as distinguished from the later and far West. Beginning with a description of the surface features of the Valley and the early means of transportation, the author outlines the work of the early explorers, and follows the successive dominations of the Valley till it became American. Then follows an account of the pioneer movement, of the commercial development of the Mississippi, the growth of the slavery issue, the extension of the frontier and the tide of foreign immigration.

"The historian makes the background of each scene vividly clear, yet with the least possible detail. Throughout his analyses of the developments of the Mississippi Valley, geographical, agricultural, industrial and commercial, Mr. Chambers makes their racial and political motives, and the characters of the men who personified them extraordinarily clear and convincing." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 9 '22 1000w

"The account of the Battle of New Orleans is remarkably vivid, and is evidently based upon a close study of the topography and ample sources of information. Another striking picture is that of life on the early steamboats which plied up and down the Mississippi."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 14 '23 1900w

"The early history of the Mississippi Valley is told in this well-printed book in a pleasant narrative style that makes easy reading."

+ Outlook 132:674 D 13 '22 40w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Flaming Jewel. 273p $1.75 Doran

22-15214

Mike Clinch's camp in the backwoods of the Adirondacks is the meeting place for the dregs of humanity. Clinch, a disreputable villain, had stolen while in Paris during the war the flaming jewel from one Quintana who had in his turn stolen it from the grand duchess of Esthonia. James Darragh, a secret service agent, arrives at Clinch's on the trail of the stolen jewel and in the disguise of a poacher enjoys his hospitality. Clinch's step-daughter Eve is the one touch of refinement in this motley crowd and it is because her step-father loves her and is determined to make a lady of her that he has stolen the jewel. Quintana and his band of ruffians arrive from Europe and track down Clinch. There are desperate doings in which the jewel is stolen and re-stolen and thru Darragh's efforts Eve finally restores it to its rightful owner. Eve's love story and that of the grand duchess are woven into the sensational background.

"There is too much of the mire of low standards in this novel, too little of Mr. Chambers' own silvery splendor. He can do better." L. H. G.

— Boston Transcript p6 J1 12 '22 580w

"It's a corking good story of its kind, replete with thrills." D. K. L.

+ Detroit News p11 Ag 13 '22 280w

Lit R p827 J1 22 '22 190w

"Each new novel [by Chambers] has departed a little farther from any connection with real life and real people, and has become a little more lurid and sensational and impossible and a little more mechanical in its structure and development. This new one is compounded of just such ingredients as are beloved by the readers who have gathered about him and with whose tastes he seems to have made himself familiar."

— N Y Times p21 J1 2 '22 500w

CHAMBRUN, CLARA (LONGWORTH) com-tesse de. Playing with souls. 369p $1.75 Scribner

22-18096

Without any intellectual inclinations, Matthew Dale had the Midas touch and had amassed a fortune very early in life. Absorbed in business he neglected his wife, a silly creature, who divorced him and went with their three year old son to live in Paris. She thoroughly spoiled young Mat who became something of a rake and a devotee of the turf. Matthew Dale, on his part, took council with himself, changed his mode of life, became a reader, a philosopher and traveller, with a view to fitting himself to guide his son wisely when the latter came of age. The opportunity came unexpectedly before that time. The father entered the son's life unbeknown to him and under an assumed name. The two led each other a dance and young Mat, after many escapades and a stormy marriage, was chastened by adversity.

"In many a less admirable novel is actually felt the personal charm of its heroine, in spite of the barrier of the printed words. It is not so in this case. The same might be said of the novel as a whole, although it has indisputably many sterling qualities, is carefully conceived and logically developed. But it is overweighed at times somewhat by its very excellences."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 11 '22 520w

"It is to be regretted this novel was not put in the form of a treatise or written as a short novelette. It is very possible that the author could and will some day write a novel of the most realistic sort. She is capable of dropping the stiff eighteenth century style of narrative and plunging into her material without self-consciousness. She knows, so infinitely much better than she writes, fiction."

— Lit R p160 O 28 '22 330w

"The plot of 'Playing with Souls' is an ingenious one, but the characters are so vaguely drawn that they are not at all convincing. The author has not been able to get under their skins, and the result is that the reader does not learn to know them well enough to be interested in their doings."

+ N Y Times p27 S 24 '22 450w

"All the characters in the book, except the heroine, are entirely poisonous; and she is colorless." Isabel Paterson

— N Y Tribune p8 S 24 '22 500w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 26 '22 200w

CHAMPION, JESSIE. Ella keeps house. 304p $1.75 Dodd [8s 6d Lane]

(Eng ed 21-20541)

Staking all her savings on the venture, Ella Danesford takes a place in the country, hoping thereby to restore to her mother the health, interest in life, and sense of social importance which she had lost thru her husband's death and her consequent fallen fortunes. The vicarage at Midlington is picturesque and satisfying to Mrs Danesford's pride, but expenses are high and to help in meeting them Ella takes in a misfit collection of paying guests. When disaster seems imminent the situation is saved by a faithful lover who had previously refrained from declaring himself because of a morbid fear that he had inherited a taint of insanity. The interest of the story is not in the plot but in the character sketches of the human oddities which the friendly Ella gathered about her.

"Miss Champion does not labor with intensities. For that, as well as for many better reasons, we have delighted in this novel. A talented writer, and a very satisfactory book. Miss Champion deserves an American public. She will certainly find appreciative readers among our cultivated few, even if she is not quite understood by our uncultivated many."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 22 '22 500w

"The best things to be said about this particular piece of blending are that it is lighted once in so many pages by sparks of personality, that it is always amiable, and that it maintains a nearly uniform plane. Whether you will like it or not depends upon whether it happens to be your plane."

+ — Lit R p514 Mr 18 '22 110w

"A sprightly little story this, and one which those people who have what is called 'an occasional idle hour' will find a mild but amusing bit of froth with which to fill it. The book is not one that anybody would wish to remember beyond the last minute spent on its pages, but it is cheerful and gay and sometimes amusingly and good-naturedly clever—the kind of story that is good for people who want to be entertained without having to make much demand upon their mental faculties."

+ — N Y Times p11 Ap 2 '22 450w

"A perfect example of the domestic anodyne, the story may be recommended for a rest cure or the seaside."

+ — Sat R 132:212 Ag 13 '21 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 Jl '22

CHANCELLOR, EDWIN BERESFORD. Memorials of St James's street; together with the annals of Almack's. 292p il $1.50 Brentano's [15s G. Richards]

914.21 London—Description. London—Clubs (Eng ed 22-23808)

"Among the scenes of London clubdom St. James's street holds leading place. Its short length does not house as many clubs as are to be found in either Piccadilly or Pall Mall, but it takes precedence of them in age and in historic and social interest. Of the ten important clubs in St. James's street, two are on the east side and eight on the west side, and they range in date of establishment from White's, which was founded in 1697, to The Royal Societies of 1894. To these clubs and to its other topographical features Mr. Chancellor devotes his book. In his successive chapters a survey of King Street, Jermyn Street, Arlington Street, Bury Street, and the entire district is made by Mr. Chancellor. A quarter of his volume is given to an account of Almack's, the fashionable dancing and gambling place which dates back to 1763, and in later days became better known as Brooks's."

—Boston Transcript

Bookm 56:517 D '22 100w

Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 1300w

"Mr. Chancellor, thanks to careful study in the rate-books and a large store of social and historical knowledge, has succeeded in making his book very interesting to the intelligent Londoner, and he has widened his range so as to include tributary streets and byways."

+ New Statesman 19:667 S 23 '22 1200w

N Y Times p7 D 17 '22 1200w

"Mr. Chancellor, has produced a book of unequal merit so far as comment and illumination go, but one packed with facts and much to be commended to those who feel their knowledge of our social past to be imperfect."

+ — Sat R 134:180 Jl 29 '22 1400w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey
Spec 129:306 S 2 '22 2000w

"Mr. Chancellor is a practised ghost-raiser, and compiles the kind of book which is helpful to others of his kind. He has chosen for his present theme so completely gleaned a harvest-ground that his contribution has been one of handy arrangement rather than of discovery. He has been diligent, however, in his study of the early rate-books, which enables him to give some interesting particulars of the beginnings of the historic neighbourhood."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p472 Jl 20 '22 920w

CHANDLER, GEORGE FLETCHER. Policemen's art as taught in the New York state school for police; introd. by Augustus S. Downing. 212p $1.50 Funk

352.2 Police. Criminal procedure 22-20729

The author, who is superintendent of the Department of state police, New York, has made this compilation of the most important subjects taught at the New York state school for police and the book has been authorized for use in school. Part one includes a history and outline of police, rules for first aid, the use of firearms, riots and riot duty, traffic and parking, horsemanship, etc., the various subjects being covered by officers of the New York state troopers. Part two covers such information about the law and statutes, especially the criminal and penal violations, as the policeman should possess.

CHAPIN, HENRY DWIGHT. Heredity and child culture; with a foreword by Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn. 219p $2.50 Dutton

136.7 Heredity. Children—Care and hygiene 22-18296

The author, a pediatricist of long experience, discusses the influence of inheritance and selective breeding, the care of the child during the pre-natal and developing period and thru adolescence. The mental and moral aspects of child training are considered and the proper nutrition of children. He includes a chapter on the care of dependent children and another on the adoption of abandoned children.

"In general, the book is sound and in accord with modern ideas of pedagogy. There are a few points, however, where the discussion does not agree with carefully made studies in education, as, for example, in the description of the characteristics of superior children on page 109. The style of the book is more or less dogmatic, which may be justifiable since it is directed to the general reader. The book furnishes wholesome reading for the beginning student of education and for the teacher in the elementary school."

G. T. B.

+ — El School J 23:233 N '22 300w

"There is nothing very new in this little book, but the brief chapters summarize excellently the modern attitude of the health worker to the child. The book is valuable as a record of the interests of a man who has played a large part in developing our modern attitude to the child."

+ Lit R p422 Ja 27 '23 110w

"The book is very clearly and admirably written. While it contains little that is new to persons who are conversant with the literature of modern psychology and sociology, it presents in an authoritative way the results of a broad experience in promoting the welfare of children."

W. C. Heavis

+ School R 30:796 D '22 200w

Wis Lib Bul 18:271 D '22

CHAPIN, MRS MAUD LOUISE (HUDNUT). Stone in the path. 251p $1.75 Duffield

22-18400

"Sixteenth century Florence is the scene of the tragic love story of a Dominican monk, portrait painter by profession, and the beautiful daughter of one of his sitters."—Cleveland

CHAPLIN, MAUDE LOUISE—Continued

"Miss Chaplin tells this variant of one of the oldest of stories simply, delicately, with many a picturesque glimpse of old Firenze."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 8 '22 500w

"Has literary charm and conveys the atmosphere of the times."

+ Cleveland p85 N '22

"It is a delicate, sincerely conceived story, told to good effect. Though the whole thing remains somewhat artificial, it leaves a pleasant impression."

+ — Lit R p163 O 28 '22 180w

N Y Times p8 D 3 '22 350w

CHAPLIN, CHARLES SPENCER. My trip abroad (Eng title My wonderful visit). 155p il $1 Harper [2s 6d Hurst & B.]

B or 92 Europe—Description and travel. 22-5086

Mr Chaplin's narrative of his trip abroad unrolls itself with the inevitable consecutiveness and breathlessness of a moving picture, even his reflections taking the form of happenings. Everywhere he is spotted, fêted and lionized and always his honors sit lightly on him like a garment underneath which lives a modest, child-like individual who, in the act of calling on Bernard Shaw, can turn away from the door, feeling suddenly "self-conscious and silly."

Booklist 18:233 Ap '22

"My Trip Abroad" will be a crushing blow to those who believe the comedian to be mentally ambidextrous. Charlie can act the clown superbly, but when he writes a book, although in all seriousness, he's still clownish but doesn't know it."

— Bookm 55:428 Je '22 110w

Lit R p497 Mr 11 '22 160w

"The book is fascinating. Charlie Chaplin is still on good terms with his ideals. He is young, eager, generous, vivid." Francis Hackett

+ New Repub 30:57 Mr 8 '22 1650w

"Anybody who expects to find in Charlie Chaplin's account of his journey to England and the Continent a narrative similar in language to his comic antics on the film will be disappointed, but will see revealed instead another Charlie. They will find a young man eager to see things of consequence and to meet people who count in the world, who has his own ideas about the world's problems and who wants, above all things, to get at the heart of life and see and touch its inmost springs."

+ N Y Times p18 Ap 30 '22 1550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:297 Je '22

"Like all men conceded to be extremely funny, Charlie prefers to adopt a serious tone when writing out of character. There is not a little good, honest sincere pathos in the musings of this man, showing that he has a great deal of human sympathy bound up in the little frame that has been known chiefly as a ludicrous, big-footed, mirth-provoking medium for clowning. Anyone who desires to see Europe through the eyes of a conquering hero, not of arms, but of boisterous, wholesome laughter, will enjoy an odd treat in this unique little volume."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 5 '22 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Ap '22 300w

Wis Lib Bul 18:132 My '22

CHAPLIN, RALPH. Bars and shadows; with an introd. by Scott Nearing. 48p $1 Edith Chaplin, 7 E. 15th st., N.Y. [2s 6d Allen & U.] 811 22-8072

These are prison poems written by a man who is serving a twenty-year sentence in Leavenworth penitentiary for his expressed opposition to the war in 1917.

"The art of Ralph Chaplin, is strange, grim, and beautiful. His has written much verse that was devoted to the struggle of his fellow workers in the I. W. W., bitter and terrible songs of the strike and the free speech fights of the past. But on many pages of 'Bars and Shadows,' he gives way to himself in poems that are true expressions of himself as an individual."

+ Detroit News p16 My 14 '22 600w

Reviewed by Carl Van Doren

Nation 114:622 My 24 '22 150w

"One feels the essential humanity of the man, but one cannot be greatly moved by verse written in moments when passion has deteriorated into mere anger. Commanding an adequate technique and the quality of descriptive terseness, possessed of fine feeling, Chaplin at his infrequent best seems just barely to suggest a capability for writing that poetry in which truth is whirled into a poignant flame through the lyrical ecstasy of the brooding intensity of a highly sensitive spirit." G. B. S.

+ New Repub 33:128 D 27 '22 350w

"Mr. Chaplin, whose doctrines of a new order of things have naturally induced him in his bondage to write several bitter tirades, moves us much more by the quietness of other poems that he has written."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p731 N 9 '22 130w

CHAPMAN, CHARLES EDWARD. History of California: the Spanish period. 527p il $4 Macmillan

979.4 California—History 21-20059

"The product of thirteen years of investigation of Spanish Californian history, involving the use of thousands of hitherto unknown manuscripts, as well as important printed materials not previously digested or assimilated." (Preface) The author aims to show the history of California in relation to that of the whole United States rather than treating it as of purely local interest as previous works have done. A popular history covering the period from the beginning to the end of the Mexican war. Chapter bibliographies."—Booklist

"The volume proves that [the author] has mastered the difficult art of historical synthesis, and his literary style, while not distinguished, is sound, perspicuous, and reasonably engaging. The book should be welcomed as a conspicuous example of the new academic historiography which aims at a combination of sound methodology, broad, liberal, and exact scholarship, and at least respectable literary proficiency. It is a highly satisfying book to read. It promises to be one of the notable enterprises in the writing of state histories now in full swing in so many of the western and mid-western states." Joseph Schafer

+ Am Hist R 27:804 Jl '22 680w

Booklist 18:184 Mr '22

"A thoroughly readable and at the same time authoritative and scholarly contribution. Mr. Chapman shows the real historian's selective instinct in his use of those original materials and he has brought together a large amount of interesting and important matter, a great deal of which has not heretofore been available for American readers."

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 20 '22 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:372 Jl '22

Pratt p31 summer '22

CHAPMAN, JOHN JAY. Glance toward Shakespeare. 116p $1.25 Atlantic monthly

822.33 Shakespeare, William 22-7768

In this group of short papers which the author has modestly called a "glance" toward the light shed by Shakespeare, he discusses the plays as poetry, their performance on the stage, Shakespeare's types, the comedies, the sonnets and several of the individual plays. The appendix contains a note on enunciation and one on American speech.

"Mr. Chapman seems like a man who has walked into a movie show round the corner and seen the whole vast Shakespearean pageant and come away and tried to condense his impression into a few brief pages. This movie sense, if one may call it so, this show sense, this keen swift suggestion of an immediate contact, thrills and sparkles everywhere in Mr. Chapman's book. Conventions are shattered. Prejudices are laughed at. Tradition and reverence are tossed and tousled with the gay carelessness of Shakespeare himself. The august Shakespearean characters are batted about with an impudent and exquisite audacity." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '22 600w

Booklist 19:11 O '22

"Its interest and importance is not to be measured by its size. From chapter to chapter it displays an astonishing amount of that sort of sanity and wisdom with which few Shakespearean commentators, of this or any other century, have proved themselves to be equipped. ... With the exception of Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch's lectures on Shakespeare, no sounder and at the same time more inspiring book about Shakespeare has been written in recent years." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 19 '22 920w

"This book is of the nature of table-talk, rich in epigram and personal reminiscence, very easy to read and to quote. There is no book, I suppose, which quite deserves to be bracketed with Hazlitt's 'Characters of Shakespeare's Plays,' but there is much in Mr. Chapman's method and point of view, in his laconic wisdom and piquancy of epigram, which not unworthily recalls that classic." Tucker Brooke

+ Lit R p740 Je 17 '22 310w

"To Mr. Chapman Shakespeare is a brimming source of joy. His object is to help us to revisit the source, to let us see Shakespeare face to face. ... Something is always happening in Shakespeare that stirs Mr. Chapman, and, whenever he is stirred, his prose rises in a short wave to a crest and then breaks in metaphor and beauty." F. L.

+ New Repub 30:229 Ap 19 '22 1100w

"The book is somewhat more than an analysis. More than most other critics the author is successful in teaching one how to 'take' Shakespeare—and this without imposing his personal tastes upon his readers. In so doing he seems to enlarge one's mind, or rather to help Shakespeare to do so. So clear and persuasive are his ideas that, unless they encounter some sort of prepared opposition, they are likely to slip at once into one's own thought system and immediately begin functioning."

No Am 216:138 Jl '22 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:364 Jl '22

St Louis 20:220 S '22

"A sparkling little book."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Je 18 '22 780w

CHAPMAN, LAWRENCE B. Marine power
2 plant. 320p il $4 McGraw

621.12 Marine engines 22-16225

"Text-book, reviewing thermodynamics and combustion, discussing and comparing the prime movers used in ship propulsion, and explaining the auxiliary machinery."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:19 Ja '23

CHAPPELL, GEORGE SHEPARD (WALTER E. TRAPROCK, pseud.). My northern exposure; the Kawa at the Pole. 215p il $2.50 Putnam

817 Humor 22-19943

The Kawa has been made over into a flexible ship, the better to cope with the ice floes, and with an emergency sledge-runner attachment. The account of the cruise to the North pole, the discovery of the Pole, the sensation of standing in the exact center of the aurora borealis, and the doings on board ship are a hilarious farce accompanied by appropriate illustrations.

Booklist 19:84 D '22

"A sufficiently funny sequel. The jacket and the end-papers of the book, by Rockwell Kent, are truly magnificent. The twenty-one full page illustrations, while not quite as ingenious as their predecessors, are solemnly and perfectly ridiculous, made even more so by the accompanying text." W. R. Benet

+ Lit R p27 S 16 '22 900w

"In the first reading of the 'Exposure' my chief quest was for something funny. Possibly my difficulty in laughing was due in part to an overanxiety to find something to laugh at. One should read a 'funny' book with a purely receptive mind rather than under the compulsion of a passionate quest. Probably the book, therefore, is much funnier than I was able to discover." Vilhjalmur Stefansson

— N Y Times p5 O 1 '22 4600w

"His new success is deserved. In our judgment 'My Northern Exposure' carries forward the sportive episode of the Kawa with entertainment, with amusement, with satisfaction. It is an excellent stunt, excellently achieved." J. S. M.

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 920w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:590 D '22

St Louis 20:273 N '22

CHAPPELL, GEORGE SHEPARD (WALTER E. TRAPROCK, pseud.). Rollo in society; a guide for youth. 178p il $1.50 Putnam

817 Humor

22-18288

This burlesque on the famous Rollo books brings Rollo up to date, transfers him to a present-day New York apartment, introduces him into ultra modern society and shows him as an apt pupil in ways of the world. His old-time quaintness in this milieu makes an amusing satire on both the past and the present. The illustrations by Hogarth, Jr. add to the grotesqueness of the story.

Bookm 56:516 D '22 110w

"The author has done two things; he has written a very successful parody and he has injected into it some keen social satire." C. M. Baker

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 Ja 21 '23 750w

"Its humor increases continuously in momentum. ... The travesty, as a whole, is crisply and amusingly done."

+ Lit R p14 S 9 '22 330w

"Part of the charm of the book lies in its unforced humor. The author is assuredly ridiculous enough and his farce is broad farce, but it never descends to that type of low comedy which defeats its own ends through a too strenuous application of impossible lines and situations. Not a small part of the charm of the volume rests in the eighteen woodcuts, the work of Hogarth Jr., who has parodied the old-time style of drawing in a gleeful manner."

+ N Y Times p4 S 10 '22 420w

N Y Tribune p7 S 17 '22 240w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p846 D 14 '22 40w

CHARTERS, WERRETT WALLACE. How to sell at retail. 326p $3 Houghton

658 Retail trade. Salesmanship 22-12742

Of the two angles from which a book on salesmanship can be treated, giving the principles of salesmanship with practical illustrations, or finding out the practical difficulties encountered by salesmen and collecting the methods used by experts to meet them—the second method is used in this book. For this purpose sixty difficulties encountered by retail salespeople were listed; twenty-five people were trained for interviewing and the methods used by from thirty to one hundred and ten experts in handling each difficulty were gathered and

CHARTERS, WERRETT WALLACE—Continued organized into the form in which they appear in the text. Thought questions are given at the end of each chapter. Index.

Am Econ R 12:508 S '22 90w
Booklist 19:9 O '22
Cleveland p77 S '22
Daily News Rec p9 Jl 5 '22 460w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:498 N '22
St Louis 20:215 S '22

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. Cook's wedding and other stories; tr. from the Russian by Constance Garnett. 308p $2 Macmillan [3s 6d Chatto & W.]

22-5609

This further group of Chekhov's tales comprises twenty-five short stories and is issued as volume twelve of his collected works. These tales show the novelist in a new light, for they are mostly pictures of Russian child life, usually plotless, hardly more than incidents, but intensely real. One of the longer ones, "Kash-tanka," is a story of a dog, and the last, "The Swedish match," is one of the grimly humorous tales typical of Chekhov.

Booklist 18:334 Je '22

"Chekhov is known for his tales of tragedy and gloom but this collection shows his versatility and sensitive reaction to the lighter and droller sides of life as well as to its pathos. All of the stories have the true Chekhov flavor—bits of perfect realism that throw vivid flash-lights on the strange Russian character."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 29 '22 300w

"The truth and subtlety with which the psychology of the children is realized are admirable—are sometimes marvellous. The tales of animals are less distinguished, though they are all successful and readable."

+ Lit R p810 Jl 15 '22 400w

Nation 114:625 My 24 '22 30w

"The most characteristic stories of Tchekov are not in any familiar sense stories at all. They are glimpses of the stream of life. . . . He is faithful to life like no other writer; therefore his stories are not gay, they are full of frustrated hopes and wasted destinies. Yet even those who, looking only upon the surface, regard him as depressing, feel a fascination for which they can discover no cause. The only means of knowing everything, as Tchekov seemed to know everything, even to the soul of a baby (Grisha) and a dog (Kashtanka), is to love everything. And this almost ecstatic delight in the uniqueness of life is the prime condition of magic style." J. M. Murry

+ New Repub 30:114 Mr 22 '22 2300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:260 Je '22

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 4 '22 350w

CHENERY, WILLIAM L. Industry and human welfare; with an introd. by Edward T. Devine. 169p $1.75 (8s) Macmillan

331.8 Labor and laboring classes—United States. Industry—History. 22-2431

This is the fourth book of the Social welfare library and its aim is to state the major effects of the rise of the factory system upon the welfare of the American people. Beginning with a description of conditions when factories were but prophecies, it makes a historical survey of the various factors that affect the welfare of the workers, sketching developments up to the present day, when the ever growing size of industrial organizations gives promise of a lifting of the level of living for those who bear the burden of production, and of a more equitable distribution of wealth in the future. Contents: The pioneer nation; The rise of industry; The worker's family;

Wages in industry; Hours; Regularity of unemployment; The hazards of industry; The status of workers.

Booklist 18:309 Je '22

"It is a convenient compilation of facts well known to students, with an occasional mildly optimistic historical conclusion of the type common to 'welfare' writers." H: R. Mussey
+ Nation 114:692 Je 7 '22 50w

"A fine achievement in compression and suggestion." Nathaniel Peffer

+ New Repub 32:201 O 18 '22 1450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:207 My '22

Pratt p10 summer '22

"An excellent brief account of the rise of the factory system in America. Mr. Chenery has told the story in a terse and readable fashion."

+ R of Rs 65:448 Ap '22 130w

"The book is a most useful aid in furnishing a historical background and the most salient facts for all persons interested in labor legislation." J: R. Commons

+ Survey 48:121 Ap 22 '22 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p159 My 9 '22 70w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Man who knew too much. 365p il $2 Harper [7s 6d Cassell]

22-23171

"There are nine stories of crime in Mr. Chesterton's book, and not a single arrest. The tales, however, have nothing to do with the New York City Police Department. They concern the adventures of an idle Englishman whose detective ability is so great that he has knowledge of all facts and impulses leading up to each crime, yet each time, for moral, social or political reasons, lets the criminal go free." (N Y Tribune) Contents: The man who knew too much; The face in the target; The vanishing prince; The soul of the schoolboy; The bottomless well; The fad of the fisherman; The hole in the wall; The temple of silence; The vengeance of the statue; The trees of pride; The tale of the peacock trees; The wager of Squire Vane; The mystery of the well; The chase after the truth.

Boston Transcript p4 D 20 '22 700w

Int Bk R p60 F '23 420w

"You can, of course, count on Mr. Chesterton's narrative style. As of old it glows with the divine fire and glitters as of old with the tinsel sheath of paradox. Yet even here skepticism intrudes and lays her heavy head in mortuary slumber. The World War has been too much with Mr. Chesterton. Like the rest of us, he is tired." A. D. Douglas

+ Lit R p335 D 23 '22 950w

"Plenty of wit; even more poetry than tales of mystery require: extravagantly ingenious stories."

+ New Statesman 20:supxii D 2 '22 20w

"Mr. Chesterton has written an absorbing book this time. It is solid, too, though its full weight is lifted so easily by his ballooning fancy, that it may not be felt at first."

+ New Statesman 20:358 D 30 '22 1300w

"In adopting the formula for the tales that the criminal shall never pay the penalty for his crime Mr. Chesterton has given himself a somewhat heavy handicap. It is not the easiest of tasks to invent a murder mystery which shall be ingenious, plausible, perplexing and also possess some credible reason why the wrongdoer shall be permitted to escape. . . . But Mr. Chesterton is always clever; he has the gift of being almost invariably entertaining, and very uneven in merit as these stories are, nevertheless they all have in them something that is worth while, and the best are very good indeed." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p10 D 10 '22 820w

"They are fine, gripping stories. Mr. Chesterton seems to lift detective literature out of the Sunday supplement puzzle slough into which it has dropped of late, and to elevate it again to the heights of Poe and the other founders. . . Mr. Chesterton's book is, like all his work, cluttered up with paradoxes and contradictions. They serve a real purpose by keeping you from following the exciting trail of his story so rapidly that you skip." F: F. Van de Water

+ — N Y Tribune p20 D 10 '22 500w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson
N Y Tribune p23 Ja 28 '23 950w
Spec 130:151 Ja 27 '23 90w

"'You are pretty paradoxical to-day,' is the comment made by one of Mr. G. K. Chesterton's characters at the end of this collection of detective stories; and it may stand as a summary of the book itself. The paradoxes are to be found in so many mouths that they may be ascribed without unfairness to the author who put them there; and this personal intervention of his deflects the attention to moral issues and distracts it from the serious business of detection. Many, however, will leave Mr. Chesterton's corpses lying about in wells and elsewhere and be well content to follow these false trails."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p726 N 9 '22 650w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. What I saw in America. 297p $3 Dodd [12s 6d Hodder & S.]

917.3 National characteristics. American. United States—Description and travel
22-18641

Impressions of America gained during the author's recent lecture tour in this country. There is little of surface description. He looks deeper, thinks about and interprets what he sees, with keenness and humor. He meditates on Broadway, on New York hotels, and on the American business man, discusses presidents, prohibition, fads and public opinion, Anglo-American friendships, the difference between the English and the American spirit, and in his final chapter has something to say of the future of democracy.

Booklist 19:48 N '22

"Undoubtedly the best of its kind. It is packed with paradox, and not lacking in a fine sense of balance, as the old phrase goes." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:490 D '22 300w

"To say that Mr. Chesterton's book on America is brilliant would be presumptuous. Yet we cannot but wonder at the delicate mingling of amazing appreciation of half-formulated American ideals, keen humor, reactionary pessimism, and giggly wit. All and sundry of our odd problems he discusses, with an almost diabolical eye for our weak points. From Presidents all the way to prohibition he wanders. His idea of our transitoriness may be correct—or it may not. In case it is, however, we had better make haste to read his work." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 28 '22 950w

Cath World 116:706 F '23 480w

Dial 73:683 D '22 80w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins

Ind 110:26 Ja 6 '23 1100w

"Illuminating much to our own eyes, kindly, full of that special Chesterton flavor whose tang is utterly individual. Paradox, of course, but serious thought, too, nobility and faith will you find in this book, much to agree with, some things with which you will disagree." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ — Int Bk R p37 D '22 130w

"It is a vastly entertaining book, for Mr. Chesterton is always provocative and always entertaining. One may think he is mistaken in his viewpoint, that his premises are false and his argument specious. But in almost every sentence there will be some stimulating challenge to thought or some amusing turn of phrase, quip or conceit, or some prod to make one examine anew one's long-settled convictions."

+ N Y Times p4 O 1 '22 2250w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p9 O 22 '22 1300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:601 D '22

R of Rs 66:560 N '22 60w

St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

"A certain excessive loquacity is growing upon Mr. Chesterton. He is more and more at the mercy of a habit of trivial association which will lead him pages away from the arguments he starts upon and necessitate the expense of prodigies of ingenuity in the task of getting back."

— Sat R 134:445 S 23 '22 660w

"Mr. Chesterton's book is equally valuable for what he saw and so capably describes and what he has thought about it. The variety of aspects he discusses and the penetration, sympathy, and wit with which he discusses them, make up a book which, we think, will be enjoyed equally by Englishmen and Americans."

+ Spec 129:sup522 O 21 '22 1600w

"He does very little actual criticizing, preferring merely to draw comparisons and state good and bad points on either side in a rather clever, highly paradoxical and never too serious manner. Altogether the book is engaging, amusing and most emphatically Chestertonian!"

+ Spring'd Republican p12 O 20 '22 750w

"Mr. Chesterton is no more afraid than was Dickens to poke fun at America; but his fun has no venom in it, and he did not find only amusement there. On the contrary, he found many of the things to which he is most passionately attached. The reader at the end of these entertaining impressions may be inclined to wish that Mr. Chesterton, as an observer, had acted more in the spirit of this perception. His mind seems to run in European grooves; the New World, meanwhile, may be making something new."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p567 S

7 '22 1200w

Wis Lib Bul 18:253 N '22

CHEW, SAMUEL CLAGGETT. Thomas Hardy, poet and novelist. (Bryn Mawr notes and monographs) 257p $1.50 Longmans

B or 92 Hardy, Thomas 21-16958

In his study of Hardy's work Professor Chew considers him as a poet first, and brings out the fact that the enthusiasm aroused by the Wessex novels retarded for many years his recognition as a poet.

Booklist 18:327 Je '22

Reviewed by Llewelyn Powys

Freeman 5:42 Mr 22 '22 1500w

"It is an attractively printed little volume, and the author is to be congratulated upon a work marked by modesty, by good sense, knowledge, and sympathy." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 108:146 F 11 '22 40w

"It is undoubtedly convenient to have such a digest of pertinent information, and to have it so compactly presented as in this eminently portable little volume. But it is difficult to cover so wide a range of topics and give any one of them that precise and authoritative treatment which we look for in academic studies." J. W. Beach

+ — New Repub 31:366 Ag 23 '22 780w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:289 Je '22

Pratt p27 summer '22

CHEYNEY, EDWARD GHEEN. Scott Burton and the timber thieves. 276p il $1.75 (7s) Appleton

22-4523

"A vast cypress swamp in Florida is the scene for Professor Cheyney's latest Scott Burton story. Timber thieves have puzzled the Forestry Department for two years. The keen-witted Burton is finally called in to assist in solving the problem of how and where large quantities of lumber are disappearing. How he penetrates the swamp in a tricky bateau, locates the robbers, and is captured by them, makes entertaining reading. Of course he outwits them, and in company with a forest

CHEYNEY, EDWARD GHEEN—Continued
ranger goes through a series of exciting adventures in bringing them to justice."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 18:336 Je '22

"A comparatively new background for an adventure tale heightens the effect of the mystery. The story carries throughout a good outdoor atmosphere with not too much improbability in its situations."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 26 '22 170w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p263 Ap 20 '22 110w

CHICAGO COMMISSION ON RACE RELATIONS. Negro in Chicago; a study of race relations and a race riot. 672p il $6 Univ. of Chicago press

326 Chicago—Riot, 1919. Negroes—Moral and social conditions 22-21190

The book is the report of the Commission on race relations, appointed by Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, and composed of distinguished representatives of both races, to investigate the race riots of July, 1919 and to make a thorough and complete survey of the race situation in general. Thru special committees, a series of conferences, and research and field work by a staff of trained investigators, the following subjects received careful attention: racial clashes, housing, industry, crime, racial contacts, and public opinion. The object of the commission was to find means and open up the way for the two races to live together on terms of amity—the only solution of the problem.

Booklist 19:69 D '22

"The publication of this report is a tremendously valuable contribution to the entire question of inter-racial relations and stands as a milestone in the solution of this, the most important problem facing America today." W. F. White

+ Bookm 56:500 D '22 750w

"Reports of this kind are usually dry reading, but here the significance of what was found by the commission is of fundamental importance to the social and economic progress of the country; its value also invades the psychological domain in its effect upon the mental and spiritual concepts of the Constitution."

Boston Transcript p7 N 15 '22 320w

"Marks an epoch in race relations of the United States. The report, with some notable exceptions, is remarkably fair-minded throughout. It is well written in the main though there are several cases of defective reasoning and poor wording." Walter White

+ Nation 115:475 N 1 '22 1450w

CHILD, RICHARD WASHBURN. Hands of Nara. 326p $2 Dutton

22-5073

The purport of the story is to show that cold scientific facts do not cover the whole of life, that something of miraculous power still remains by which the human mind can transcend the apparent workings of cause and effect. Two physicians, father and son, austere devotees to scientific truth as they see it, are reluctantly forced to this admission when they see the healing power emanating from the presence of Nara Alexieff, a spiritually sensitive young Russian. Nara herself comes to realize that the power resides within each individual and that circumstances have merely favored her in being the medium to draw it out. The various steps that lead to these discoveries mark the somewhat stormy progress of the romance between Nara and young Dr Claveloux.

"In other hands this would seem the merest mess of slush and sentiment, but Mr. Child handles his materials well. Mr. Child's portrayal of the two essentially excellent personages, Nara and the hero, is none so deftly done. They remain very impossible people in a very impossible story to the end."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '22 280w

"Too many 'queer people,' too radical and too great a range of locale, too much good writing which does not quite conceal a dearth of definite ideas, effectively spoil the effectiveness of what would otherwise be a brilliant novel. As it stands, it is merely extremely readable." S. E. Brady

+ Lit R p543 Ap 1 '22 520w

N Y Times p23 J1 '22 360w

"Mr. Child tells his story in his usual engaging manner, and balances its various ingredients with skill."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a D 24 '22 250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

CHIMAY, EMILIE LOUISE MARIE FRANCOISE JOSEPHINE (DE PELLAPRA) prin-cesse de. A daughter of Napoleon; memoirs of Emilie de Pellapra, comtesse de Brigode, princess de Chimay; with an introd. by Princess Bibesco; tr. by Katherine Miller. 166p il $2 Scribner

B or 92 Napoleon I, emperor of the French 22-8728

The writer was a daughter of Napoleon by Mme de Pellapra but saw her father only once in her life and barely mentions him in her memoirs. These memoirs contain little material for the historical student but much of human interest. The writer was a beautiful and much loved woman, brought up with the utmost care, proud of the source from which she came, happy in her married life, but knowing many sorrows. Joy of living, however fills some of her pages, which are written with a delightful frankness. Illustrated with portraits and pictures of greatly prized relics of the Emperor given to the writer's mother by Napoleon himself.

Boston Transcript p5 S 2 '22 290w

"As memoirs, it has been long since its equal has appeared. But so far as the text itself is concerned, it is a human document only. The historian need hardly turn to it."

+ Lit R p674 My 20 '22 300w

St Louis 20:224 S '22

"Displays Napoleon worship in a particularly tiresome form. The memoirs themselves are interesting, if slight, and the illustrations, which are charming, incidentally show repeated instances of Napoleon's fine taste in jewellery."

+ Spec 129:734 N 18 '22 200w

"The memoirs are fascinating because so full of human emotion; but provoking because so incomplete as a record of the princess's life. Instead the introduction by Princess Bibesco and the preface by M. Masson are perhaps the more important parts of the book, because they tell a great deal of the story and in a more connected manner. The book is merely another sketch of life in the France of Napoleon, to add to the gallery of literary pictures of those days already in existence."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Je 25 '22 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p71 N 9 '22 780w

CHIPP, ELINOR. Doubting Castle. 278p $2 Boni & Liveright

22-18398

"Gloria Baldwin at the death of her grandfather goes to live with her cousin Richard and Irene his wife. Richard, a prosperous London barrister at the threshold of middle-age, finds his years fall from him in the companionship of Gloria. But soon he is unable to resist the passionate appeal of her youth, and becomes Gloria's lover. When their intimacy becomes the subject of family gossip, Irene finds her hitherto happy life tottering about her, but rallies to regain her husband's love. Gloria then lives by herself in ever-increasing loneliness. Follows a tragic recital of her persistent but futile struggles to hold Richard's affection. Richard suffers keenly at the spectacle of her grief, but his moral sense and his love for his wife force him away from her. Then Arthur Garnier, the gray-haired artist, notorious for his amours, crosses the path of Gloria's despair."—Lit R

"For a first attempt the novel reveals promise, but it lacks color."

— + Lit R p74 S 30 '22 250w

New Repub 32:202 O 18 '22 110w

N Y Times sec7:7 O 1 '22 350w

"If fault there be with the tale it is that the author lacks sustained effort in the telling of it. In her eagerness to get on with a good story she too often lapses into easy similes, such as 'her heart beat like a triphammer.'" Kathleen Field

— N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 390w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 160w

CHIPPERFIELD, ROBERT ORR, pseud. See Ostrander, I. E.

CHRISTIE, AGATHA. Secret adversary. 330p $1.75 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

22-12469

"The Secret Adversary' is a tale of political intrigue and mystery built on the plan that has been so perfected by E. Phillips Oppenheim. The usual great conspiracy is in progress and the usual mysterious super-criminal (this time known as Mr. Brown) is the motivating force behind all the villainous manifestations of the plotters. Added to these themes are the usual missing papers of great value. Two penniless young people, Tommy—just demobbed, and Tuppence, the daughter of a clergyman, are swept into the midst of this international conspiracy, and it is mainly through their efforts and those of a young American that the plot is solved and the super-criminal brought to justice."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:52 N '22

"This is as jaunty in tone as a book for college girls. Good humor, optimism, youthful dare devilry guide the action."

+ Lit R p874 Ag 12 '22 250w

"Many of the situations are a bit moth-eaten from frequent usage by other writers, but at that Miss Christie manages to invest them with a new sense of individuality that renders them rather absorbing."

+ — N Y Times p15 Je 11 '22 400w

"The solution of this story is very skillfully postponed; seldom are the inevitable false clues made so plausible and so misleading. And the climax is pleasingly impossible. The whole thing has the absorbing quality of a puzzle-box." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Ag 13 '22 250w

"An exciting and well-built mystery tale."

+ Outlook 131:534 J1 26 '22 10w

"It is an excellent story of its kind, showing what new use may be made of familiar material."

+ Sat R 133:97 Ja 28 '22 250w

"Miss Christie has not quite succeeded in maintaining the level of her first novel. Though the mystery in this story is extremely involved, the experienced reader will have no difficulty in detecting who is the real criminal long before any of the characters have the slightest inkling of the truth."

+ — Spec 128:213 F 18 '22 70w

"A decidedly breezy and interesting book."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a J1 30 '22 200w

"Tuppence and Tommy, although much given to 'old bean' and 'old thing,' are refreshingly original as criminal investigators, and the identity of the arch-criminal, the elusive 'Mr. Brown,' is cleverly concealed to the very end."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p61 Ja 26 '22 100w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

CHRISTIE, MABEL E. Henry VI. (Kings and queens of England) 420p il $3.50 Houghton [16s Constable]

B or 92 Henry VI, king of England

22-12032

"Miss Christie has had a more difficult task than her fellow-workers in this series, edited by Professor Rait and Mr. Page. Henry II., Henry V., Henry VII. were great men, whose actions for the time being dominated English history. Henry VI. was not a great man, and he was caught up in the swirl of conflicting and perplexing events. On the whole Miss Christie has succeeded in giving Henry prominence in her narrative without losing sight of the larger questions. She has wisely concentrated upon the men and woman with whom Henry came in contact. Her book contains much more interesting biographical detail than one could find in the ordinary histories; and, with the exception of the Duke of Suffolk, her characters do live and act intelligently."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"A vivid picture of one of the most interesting if one of the most pathetic monarchs England ever produced. Because it not only presents a careful character study of Henry, but gives us valuable glimpses of fifteenth century social conditions, the book will appeal to the student of history as well as to the general reader who desires to enlarge his field of information."

+ Bookm 55:646 Ag '22 110w

"We are given an excellent portrait of this calm and gentle character, blameless but suffering for the iron tyranny of his ancestors. The author makes her subject a pathetic figure, as indeed he was, but never a mean figure." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 17 '22 950w

"Such a period and such a subject offer material for striking and picturesque narrative, and this material Miss Christie has used with vigor and success. Only in one field, it may be submitted, is her book a little disappointing. Of all the things for which Henry VI deserves to be remembered, the greatest is his interest in education; and the founder of King's College, Cambridge, and of Eton, it would seem, deserves more than the few pages allotted to his only considerable and enduring work."

+ — Lit R p75 S 30 '22 450w

"Her effort to make the history of Europe converge upon so slight a figure as Henry VI does not carry conviction." E. F. Humphrey

— Nation 115:75 J1 19 '22 50w

"Miss Christie has accomplished a masterly piece of historical research, but she writes a little flatly. Not even Jeanne d'Arc can stimulate her style to a pace above a jog-trot."

+ — New Statesman 18:708 Mr 25 '22 800w

Sat R 133:289 Mr 18 '22 560w

"A pleasant and readable life of the unlucky Henry the Sixth. Miss Christie relates the familiar story intelligently and adds a useful itinerary of the king's movements, to remind us that bygone monarchs had a very unsettled life, travelling incessantly from one place to another, partly in order that the Court might be fed."

+ Spec 129:24 J1 1 '22 220w

"Miss Christie has composed a helpful and interesting piece of biography. But as a contribution to historical literature the book is unsatisfactory. The narrative is uneasy and fails to carry conviction. Miss Christie has read all the obvious sources and has an eye for the picturesque, but her acquaintance with English history, even in the fifteenth century, is conventional and perfunctory."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p183 Mr 23 '22 660w

CHURCH, ARTHUR LATHAM. Training of a secretary. (Lippincott's training ser.) 194p ii $1.75 (7s 6d) Lippincott
658 Secretaries, Private 22-5798

The author, who is secretary of the Baldwin locomotive works, treats his subject historically, beginning with a sketch of the office of secretary in past times. He gives a comprehensive description of the position of secretary and shows it in its varying degrees of dignity and complexity, from a secretary of state to a secretary of a cricket club. In separate chapters he treats the powers of a secretary, the drawing up of by-laws, the taking of minutes, forms, mechanical helps, the work of private, social and other kinds of secretaryship, and financial compensation. A concluding chapter gives an account of some famous secretaries and their careers.

Cleveland p59 Ag '22
Pratt p21 summer '22
St Louis 20:298 D '22

"This book is thoroughly practical."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Mr 4 '22 50w

CHURCHILL, ALLEN LEON, and WICKENDEN, LEONARD. House-owner's book; a manual for the helpful guidance of those who are interested in the building or conduct of homes. 338p ii $2 Funk

690 Building. Architecture, Domestic 22-12172

A book written by house-owners for house-owners and covering all the practical details of building, equipment and repair of houses. Beginning with the financing of the house building project, the book treats the different building materials and their cost, the elements of carpentry, heating and ventilation, lighting, painting, water supply and plumbing. There is a chapter on the garage and the book closes with some useful household recipes and directions for safety in the household.

Boston Transcript p8 D 13 '22 450w

"The house-owner who objects to the high cost of repairs in these days may learn many money-saving tricks from this book. And even if economy is not his first thought, there are many things about the house that are explained so simply and thoroughly that the puzzled reader will be happy in the possession of the book."

+ Outlook 131:500 Ji 19 '22 50w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:491 N '22
St Louis 20:216 S '22

CHURCHWARD, ALBERT. Origin and evolution of the human race. 511p ii $12.50 Macmillan [45s Allen & U.]

573.2 Man—Origin (Eng ed 22-2595)

"A tireless investigator into human origin and development, with three previous books on the subject to his credit, here formulates a comparatively new theory regarding the origin of man, buttressed in a mass of carefully collected evidence in the fields of anthropology, ethnology, myth, social custom and religious worship. The thesis he maintains, with the aid of many illustrations, diagrams and tables, is that 'homo' first appeared, not in any European or Oriental country, but in the territory which constitutes the Nile Valley and surrounds the lakes at the head of that classic river. Evolved from an anthropoid ape, he entered the human state as a pigmy, and from Africa spread all over the world, north, east, south and west, until not only Africa but Europe, Asia, North and South America and Oceania were populated with his kind."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 5 '22 850w

"If the self-assurance of an author were proof of the correctness of his views, no future investigation of the problems which he treats would be necessary. Dr. Churchward corrects with equal ease the fundamental views of physicists and those of anthropologists. The true solution of the problem of the history of mankind must be looked for in studies of this kind, not in a fanciful treatment like that presented by Mr. Churchward." Franz Boas

— Lit R p581 Ap 15 '22 900w

"It is to be regretted that the author did not take greater care, or call in a more skilled literary craftsman, to put the book into better shape. The large amount of information which has been brought together and the interesting theories put forward deserve to have received clearer and more intelligible treatment." Austin Hay

— + N Y Times p5 Mr 5 '22 820w

CLAPHAM, RICHARD. Trout-fishing for the beginner. 100p $1.25 Stokes [3s 6d Chatto & W.]

799 Trout fishing A22-1300

The book is for the novice in the art of trout-fishing and supplies full information on the subject of outfit, on the ground that an ill-balanced and unsuitable tackle leads to a slovenly method of fishing, and that a fair start is everything. Contents: The trout; Artificial fly-fishing; Angler's outfit; Artificial flies; Wet and dry fly fishing; Worm and minnow fishing; Mayfly and lake fishing; Night fishing. Illustrated with diagrams by the author.

Booklist 19:11 O '22

Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '22 180w

"This is a very pleasant and instructive little book. It has a larger proportion of concrete advice to anecdote than books of its kind, and is therefore compact, direct, and inexpensive."

+ Lit R p796 Ji 8 '22 70w

"Mr. Clapham, as a 'Lakelander' of wide north country experience is, in our opinion, so much the better qualified to instruct the young idea in all-round methods of circumventing trout. He does not paralysise the tyro with exhaustive disquisitions on insect life and the complex science of precise imitation, nor, naturally enough, does he write with ill-disguised condescension of the varied methods not practised by that infinitesimal fraction of the great trout-fishing fraternity, the dry-fly purists. This little book is eminently practical."

+ Sat R 133:235 Mr 4 '22 540w

"It would be unjust in the circumstances to expect much originality in his subject-matter, nor is there anything very striking in his method of presentation. Since the book is intended for beginners some notes on the trout flies recommended (more than forty) should have been given. In its present shape the list would be useless to any novice."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p79 F 2 '22 90w

CLARIDGE, G. CYRIL. Wild bush tribes of tropical Africa. 314p ii $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

916.7 Africa, West. Africa—Native races 22-26399

"Mr. Claridge gives us the result of his observations among the Ba-Congo people of Northern Angola. It is a varied tale of travel, sport, and adventure; but it concentrates on the cult of the fetish, and of its strange horrors and its extraordinary developments he gives a detailed picture, drawn from an intimate knowledge and laying bare such inner secrets of it as that of the Nkamba system, from which the men are rigorously excluded."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 18:326 Je '22

"He writes of the native with sympathy, but, for the most part, despises his customs; he rarely fails to stigmatise them as 'degrading,' 'disgusting,' or worse when he has an opportunity. Notwithstanding this drawback, as it must seem to those who wish to study native custom impartially, the author has given a full and careful account of Ba-Congo culture, and his collection of folk-lore is both interesting and useful."

+ — Nature 110:340 S 9 '22 150w

"Mr. Claridge has written a very original and readable account of the rites and customs of the natives of the Congo regions. The book is vividly written, and is a contribution of definite importance to the better understanding of Central Africa."

+ New Statesman 18:684 Mr 18 '22 220w
N Y Times p25 Je 25 '22 190w

"Here is a sympathetic study of the natives of West Central Africa, keen in its insight, detailed in its description, and frank in its statements."

+ Outlook 130:656 Ap 19 '22 70w
St Louis 20:223 S '22

"Mr. Claridge gives us in this work a clear and vivid account of the life and customs of the natives of Northern Angola which cannot fail to interest and impress both the general reader and the expert by its wealth of knowledge and its candour."

+ Sat R 133:149 F 11 '22 540w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p48 Ja 19 '22 70w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER, comp. Representative one-act plays by British and Irish authors; selected, with biographical notes. 477p $3 Little

822 English drama—Collections 21-18127

Contents: The widow of Wasdale Head, by Sir Arthur Pinero; The goal, by H. A. Jones; Salome, by Oscar Wilde; The man in the stalls, by Alfred Sutro; Op-o'-Me-Thumb, by Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce; The impertinence of the creature, by Cosmo Gordon-Lennox; The stepmother, by Arnold Bennett; Rocco, by Granville Barker; James and John, by Gilbert Cannan; The snow man, by Laurence Housman; Fancy free, by Stanley Haughton; Lonesome-like, by Harold Brighouse; Miss Tassey, by Elizabeth Baker; Makeshifts, by Gertrude Robins; The maker of dreams, by Oliphant Downs; The land of heart's desire, by W. B. Yeats; Riders to the sea, by J. M. Synge; Spreading the news, by Lady Gregory; The magnanimous lover, by St J. G. Ervine; The golden doom, by Lord Dunsany.

"Mr. Clark has given us a splendid assortment of modern one-act plays. Among the twenty are a great proportion that are not to be found in any other miscellaneous selection."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 22 '22 420w

"A hopeful revelation. The level is high, indicating an unusual level of public taste. The printed play is holding its own with other forms of literature." M. J. Moses

+ Outlook 132:620 D 6 '22 80w

Springf'd Republican p13a Ap 2 '22 420w
Theatre Arts M 7:86 Ja '23 170w

CLARK, CHARLES UPSON. Greater Roumania. 477p il $4 Dodd

914.98 Rumania 22-2483

The book is based on personal observation and study of the country in 1919. It sketches its geography and history, the part it played in the Balkan wars and the World war, its peasantry, language, literature and art, the activities of the American Red cross and Y. M. C. A. during the war, and the opportunities it offers to the American manufacturer and capitalist. It contains maps and illustrations, a bibliography and an index.

"As good a book as the conditions of its production permit it to be. It is no more than a sketch, a handbook. The geographical section is illuminating, while the historical chapters, compact as baled hay, serve up the main facts of Rumanian development, though with little regard either for charm or for digestibility. The worst aspect of the author's uncritical procedure is that it does Rumania an ill turn. The gifted Rumanian people with their heroic past and their extraordinary present promise deserve to be sympathetically and truthfully known. Let us hope that they will presently find a disinterested scholar prepared to present them and their story without fear or favor." Ferdinand Schevill

+ — Am Hist R 27:823 Jl '22 400w

"The author is an ardent advocate of Roumania and is anxious to give all the information possible. Sometimes this leads him into giving too many statistics at a dose or too long a list of authors with naught to remember them by, but in general the book shows the good lecturer that the author is, and certainly attains its purpose of interesting the reader in Roumania."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 16:720 N '22 80w

Booklist 18:231 Ap '22

"Dr. Clark has written a 'reference' book of this unfortunate country, and has been indefatigable in collecting facts, presumably trustworthy, for few can dispute him. Future bibliographies on Roumania will cite him; future writers will quote him. What higher praise is necessary?" R. D. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 11 '22 550w

"An informative post-war book on Rumania."

+ N Y Times p22 Jl 23 '22 2100w

"It is, we believe, the only up-to-date work of reference in English for that country. The extremely informative text is interestingly illustrated."

+ Outlook 130:558 Ap 5 '22 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:240 My '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:184 Jl '22

CLARK, FRED EMERSON. Principles of marketing. 570p $3 Macmillan

338 Marketing 22-18411

The method of presenting this view of market structure and problems is an outgrowth of several years' experience in teaching marketing. An introduction on marketing functions is followed by chapters on the marketing of farm products, raw materials, manufactured products, retailing, and cooperative distribution. Discussion of specific problems, like market finance, market risk, prices, price maintenance and the relation of the state to marketing makes up the rest of the book, which is fully indexed.

Boston Transcript p3 N 4 '22 260w

New Repub 33:49 D 6 '22 380w

CLARK, GLENN. Manual of the short story art. 252p $1.75 Macmillan

803.3 Short story 22-10627

The book conceives of the student as a creature who loves to use his eyes and ears and who takes delight in playing the amateur detective and in ravelling and unravelling plots. It assumes that he is overflowing with warm, living interests and desires. The author warns him that the book cannot give him the background of a wide and deep experience of life but can furnish only the smallest part of the requirements of a writer—the technique and formula of one specific mode of writing. This last the book does concisely in three parts: Part one, Studies in short story writing, giving the essential requirements and types of the short story; Part two, Creative criticism of four short stories, printing in full four widely differing types of story—of character, of complication, of atmosphere and a thematic story—and analyzing their composition; Part three, Some suggestions for meeting the chief problems in rhetoric, style and plot building.

"For the serious student, the simplicity of statement, and straightforwardness of presentation, and the value of information contained in this little volume will have a direct appeal."

+ Bookm 56:229 O '22 180w

Detroit News p7 Jl 16 '22 150w

"Mr. Clark has followed the beaten trail, and permitted himself little informality and no by-paths. His manual is carried out in the dead-ening manner of painstaking dissection; a process which can leave the most interesting short story woefully mutilated, but not one whit more understood." L. B.

CLARK, GLENN—Continued
 — Freeman 5:550 Ag 16 '22 40w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
 Ind 108:488 My 27 '22 60w

"On the whole, his book dissects the various problems of creative writing with informed enthusiasm, real understanding, and a fine critical sympathy with the fledgling author. In his suggestions for class-room study he is always the teacher and never the pedant; and, best of all, his interpretation shines free from blind alleys of interminable ceremonials. The only serious fault in the book lies in the illustrations, drawn almost wholly from American magazines."

+ — Lit R p778 Jl 1 '22 310w

Reviewed by Brander Matthews
 N Y Times p2 S 17 '22 150w
 St Louis 20:247 O '22

"Can be recommended as helpful to apprentice writers without at all intimating that it is superior to well established treatises or indeed as thorough as some in basic discussion."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a S 24 '22 130w
 The Times [London] Lit Sup p618 S 28 '22 90w

Wis Lib Bul 19:23 Ja '23

CLARK, WALLACE. Gantt chart; a working tool of management; with appendices by Walter N. Polakov and Frank W. Trabold. 157p $2.50 Ronald

658.7 Factory management. Progress records. Efficiency, Industrial. Graphic methods 22-9947

The progress charts devised by Mr Gantt were used by the Ordnance department and in other government work during the war and have been employed successfully by management engineers in installing production methods. The principle of the charts is to show work planned and work done in the same space in their relation to each other and in relation to time. Collectively the charts show the load of work planned and a comparison of performance with schedule. In this book the technique of drawing the charts is explained, their application to various classes of work outlined, and the possibility of much broader application suggested.

Booklist 19:9 O '22
 Cleveland p77 S '22

"The Gantt chart' is an excellent book for the factory library and can be read with profit by executives, engineers and all others who are in any way interested in the science of production. Department store managers, school superintendents, school principals and traffic managers will also find much that is helpful in the volume, for the charts can be applied wherever there is need for graphic record."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 2 '22 270w

CLARK, WILLIAM IRVING. Health service in industry. 168p il $2 Macmillan

613.6 Labor and laboring classes—Medical care. Occupations—Diseases and hygiene 22-8606

"Based on a course given at the Harvard medical school and intended for physicians and superintendents of factories. Describes the equipment of the medical department in a factory, factory sanitation, the work of the industrial physician and nurse and other questions of industrial hygiene."—Booklist

"Readable and practical volume. Its simplicity and concreteness commend the book to the industrial executive." C. L. S.

+ Am Econ R 12:667 D '22 70w

"There is a lot of sound sense and experience in this little volume. He makes very specific and helpful suggestions concerning the ways by which the management of small shops may obtain adequate but economical health service, which in the past they usually have failed to get." J. H. Willits

+ Ann Am Acad 103:150 S '22 560w

Booklist 19:9 O '22

Boston Transcript p7 My 31 '22 230w

"The subject matter is very unevenly treated; the author goes into great detail in some matters and leaves many important points that will have to be rounded out. As a primer and beginner's guide in factory sanitation the book is to be recommended."

+ — Lit R p780 Jl 1 '22 70w

"He has written out of a wealth of practical knowledge, and a most workmanly and useful volume is the result." Ordway Tead

+ Pol Sci Q 37:711 D '22 40w

"The book, though small in compass, is extraordinarily clear, comprehensive and practical and should prove of great value to employers who plan to install medical work or to improve medical services already in operation."

+ Survey 48:629 Ag 15 '22 200w

CLARKE, JOHN JOSEPH. Social administration including the poor laws. 364p $3 (7s 6d) Pitman

360 Social work. Poor laws L22-331

The author, who is on the staff of Liverpool university and lecturer for the Liverpool education authorities, devotes about half his book to the history and administration of the poor laws. The rest of the book is taken up with special problems—the organization of social service, child welfare, juvenile delinquency, unemployment, labor exchanges, public health, pensions, and post-war unemployment. Bibliography. Index.

"Anybody who wants to understand how our poor law institutions have grown up, or by what stages we have developed a service of public health, will find in these pages a clear and concise history of a very complicated subject."

+ Nation and Ath 31:774 S 9 '22 330w

"A very useful guide and reference book. Mr. Clarke as a rule confines himself to the facts, and only rarely obtrudes criticisms or conclusions of his own."

+ New Statesman 20:152 N 4 '22 210w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p547 Ag 24 '22 100w

CLELAND, ROBERT GLASS. History of California; the American period. 512p il $4 Macmillan

979.4 California—History 22-18225

The book is a complement to Dr. Charles E. Chapman's "History of California; the Spanish period." both books having been conceived and planned as a whole. The author has been a resident of California since 1889, knew the state in its semi-pioneer stage and travelled over its entire length and breadth of railroad, by automobile and with saddle horse and pack train. He stresses the national and international aspects of its history as more significant than any local interests and devotes the greater part of the volume to the years preceding and immediately following the acquisition of statehood. Bibliographical notes at the end of each chapter, maps and illustrations, appendices and index.

"This book is a worthy second in the series in which Chapman's Spanish Period was the first. The two together give us the history of the great commonwealth on the Pacific in a form at once dignified, scholarly, and readable." Joseph Schafer

+ Am Hist R 28:334 Ja '23 950w

Booklist 19:78 D '22

"Read as an historical record. Dr. Cleland's book on California in the American period is informing and illuminating, packed with facts, certificated by frequent references to authorities many of which are comparatively unknown, and abounding also in the deductive generalizations of an investigator who has given more than a decade to the study of his subject. Read as a narrative of picturesque adventure and thrilling incident, the work is fascinating and entertaining." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 N 4 '22 650w

"Offers a fascinating field for study, and the author of this book has made excellent use of the abundant material at hand. His dignified and well-considered chapters are characterized not only by careful research but by a fitting sense of proportion and by spirited treatment of many of the romantic and stirring incidents that filled California's early annals."

+ Outlook 132:390 N 1 '22 100w

R of Rs 65:559 N '22 140w

CLEVELAND FOUNDATION. Criminal justice in Cleveland; reports of the Cleveland foundation survey of the administration of criminal justice in Cleveland, Ohio; directed and ed. by Roscoe Pound and Felix Frankfurter. 729p $3.75 The foundation

351.9 Criminal procedure. Crime and criminals. Cleveland—Social conditions 22-11924

"The survey embraced, and the present volume includes, an investigation and report on 'Police Administration,' by Raymond L. Fosdick; 'Prosecutions,' by Alfred Bettman, a former city solicitor of Cincinnati; 'The Criminal Courts,' by Reginald Heber Smith; 'Correctional and Penal Treatment,' by Burdette G. Lewis, Commissioner of Institutions and Agencies of New Jersey; 'Medical Science and Criminal Justice,' by Dr. Herman M. Adler, State criminologist for Illinois; 'Legal Education in Cleveland,' by Albert M. Kales, a Chicago lawyer, and 'Newspapers and Criminal Justice,' by M. K. Wischart, a newspaper man. These reports are presented separately and in full, together with illustrations, facsimiles, and charts, and there is—and it is the best thing of all—a summary by Dean Pound, together with diversions on criminal justice in general."—Lit R

Booklist 19:7 O '22

"In many ways this is a remarkable book." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '22 850w

Reviewed by J. C. Rose

Ind 109:312 N 25 '22 2100w

"The survey is bound to have a temporary effect on bettering conditions in Cleveland. The book, however, will not have much interest outside Ohio, except, perhaps, to encourage similar surveys in other cities." H. A. Little-dale

Lit R p46 S 23 '22 1000w

"There are two classes of readers to whom this volume may be especially commended. In the first place, students of the working of American institutions will be keenly interested in its picture of the administration of the criminal law in a great city which may fairly be taken as a type of other populous centres in the United States. But it will be of scarcely less value to readers who are concerned about the enactment and administration of law in any part of the world."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p483 J1 27 '22 1100w

CLIFFORD, PHILIP GREELY. Nathan Clifford, democrat (1893-1881). 356p $3.50 Putnam

B or 92 Clifford, Nathan 22-23561

Biography of an American jurist and northern democrat who thrust his life held loyally to his party. He entered politics at the age of twenty-seven as member of the State legislature of Maine, served in the United States congress from 1839 to 1843 and was attorney-general in President Polk's cabinet. At the close of the Mexican war he went as special United States envoy to Mexico. By President Buchanan's appointment he became in 1858, a justice of the United States Supreme court and in 1877 was president of the Electoral commission which decided the Hayes-Tilden election controversy.

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 6 '23 2000w

N Y Times p24 D 17 '22 1500w

CLOW, WILLIAM MACCALLUM. Quest of industrial peace. 300p $1.75 Doran [6s Hodder & S.]

331 Industrial relations. Socialism. Labor and capital (Eng ed 22-10726)

Fourteen lectures by a British theologian on the nature of industrial strife, on the crimes of capitalism and on some socialist and cooperative movements, written from the Christian viewpoint. Contents: The elements of the industrial strife; The economic justification of capitalism; The moral values of capitalism; The indictment against capitalism; The crimes of the capitalist—and of other men; Utopian communism; The co-operative movement; Marxian socialism; Anarchism, Syndicalism and guild socialism; The nationalisation of industry; The gateway of peace; An industrial covenant.

Boston Transcript p2 D 2 '22 750w

"The book is a disappointment in that it throws very little light upon the present situation. The remedies suggested are inadequate, indefinite, and merely conventional." S. Z. B.

— Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p3 S 30 '22 810w

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR. Shakespeare's Hamlet. 125p $2 Dutton [15s Methuen]

822.33 Shakespeare, William—Criticism and interpretation (Eng ed 22-16722)

The purpose of this little book is to explain why Hamlet delayed so long to kill the king. The critic's belief is that Hamlet's encounter with his father's ghost gave him a nervous shock which affected his behavior thruout the play. This shock and the horror of his mother's remarriage to the murderer made a wound in Hamlet's mind and his irresolution was the result of this, and not of any weakness of character.

Booklist 19:74 D '22

"A bright and challenging addition to the scores of volumes on Shakespearean subjects. A gift for deft, rapier-like thrusts and brittle irony renders Clutton-Brock quite as enjoyable to the lay reader as he must assuredly be to the academician."

+ Bookm 56:231 O '22 120w

"Mr. Clutton-Brock seems to this reviewer to have so much of value to contribute to the whole 'Hamlet' question that his minor carelessness, some of which is deliberate, has no important bearing on the soundness of his critical appreciation."

+ — Lit R p5 S 9 '22 950w

Reviewed by S. C. Chew

Nation 116:152 F 7 '23 250w

"Beyond doubt the most revealing study of Shakespeare since Coleridge and Bradley, a piece of work whose subtlety and precision of thought, combined with the most delicate æsthetic sensibility, make it a delight to read." H. J. M.

+ Nation and Ath 31:309 My 27 '22 1050w

New Statesman 19:188 My 20 '22 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:592 D '22

"We have no more agreeable causeur on matters of literature than Mr. Clutton-Brock, whose elegance and suavity are only equalled by his transparent candour. He has the art of writing little studies which are rather more than essays and rather less than books."

+ — Sat R 133:608 Je 10 '22 550w

"All who like reading about Shakespeare, as well as reading Shakespeare, as in my opinion they ought, will be delighted to see the sympathetic ingenuous and often very penetrating things which are said. Indeed, there is not a

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR—Continued
page of this little book on which there is not something stimulating and delightful. Perhaps, however, though on the whole he is quite fair to Ophelia, many of us will feel rather sorry that he has not been a little more chivalrously sympathetic." J. St L. Strachey

+ — Spec 129:242 Ag 19 '22 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p313 My 18 '22 4000w

COBB, ANN. Kinfolks; Kentucky mountain rhymes. 82p $1.50 Houghton

811 22-9966

The writer of these poems, a number of which have already been published in the Outlook, has lived among and taught the Cumberland mountaineers for fifteen years, and loving them, has found poetry in the simplicity of their lives.

Booklist 18:322 Je '22

"As homely as a patchwork quilt, and as genuine as the Cumberland mountains themselves. The quaint old English words bring out, very simply and poignantly, the bits of happiness and tragedy, the love of their hills, and the pride and courage of these most individual of the American pioneers."

+ Bookm 55:534 JI '22 120w

"Interesting flashes upon a restricted manner of living give fresh outlook to the reader, whether or not he is familiar with the material Miss Cobb offers." R. D. W.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 19 '22 360w

"Ann Cobb is skilful in transcribing emotions and the shades of character which go to make the mountaineer at once unique and universal. The language, as well as the happy picturesqueness and humanity of the verses, is that of a homespun Chaucer of the hills."

+ Dial 73:113 JI '22 80w

Ind 109:54 Ag 5 '22 90w

"The language, the style, the thought, the morals, the customs, the standards, are racy of the soil, as full of the tang of the mountains as ginseng or sorghum; these verses ring like the clatter of horse-hoofs on strong trails or the distant reports of 'shooting up the creek.'"

+ Lit R p764 Je 21 '22 300w

"We know of no writer of dialect poems who has a deeper understanding of the hearts and minds of the people portrayed than Miss Cobb. Her volume is a very real and human contribution to American poetry."

+ Outlook 132:80 S 13 '22 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:510 N '22

"Written in dialect with a simplicity and directness that make them very vivid. There is nothing commonplace or sentimental about these poems."

+ Survey 48:124 Ap 22 '22 30w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. J. Poindexter, colored. 270p $1.75 Doran

22-26758

Jeff Poindexter, who had worked for Judge Priest of Paducah, Kentucky, for sixteen years, was out of a job when the Eighteenth amendment drove the old judge from the United States. Jeff was lent for a while to young Dallas Fullam, who took him as his body-servant on a visit to New York. Jeff tells of his adventures there and how, when his young master fell among sharpers and vamps, Jeff was able, by superior gifts of lying and invention, to rescue him from their toils.

Booklist 19:20 O '22

"We wonder if Mr. Cobb is not spreading himself out a little thinly in these days when his work is in such great demand. We wish he might lay down his pen for three months and then bring Judge Priest 'back home.'"

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '22 300w

Cleveland p91 D '22

"Mr. Cobb's first venture into the field of novel writing is not an entirely happy one. 'J. Poindexter, Colored,' is in reality little more than a padded short story, stretched into novel length for serial purposes. . . It needs to be said that the book is not unamusing. It is only when one thinks of what Mr. Cobb could do, judged by the best of his many good short stories, that severe criticism of its meretriciousness seems deserved."

+ Lit R p923 S 2 '22 400w

"Although by no means representative of Mr. Cobb's best work the book is often very entertaining, and will no doubt be warmly welcomed by its author's many admirers."

+ — N Y Times p19 JI 30 '22 450w

"The humor is pretty flat-footed and heavy-going, and the feeblest jest is obliged to take at least two curtain calls before being allowed to retire from the page. But if you like Irvin Cobb, you will probably find enough of his characteristic flavor in this story to take it down easily."

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 6 '22 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:460 N '22

"The story is one long chuckle, and Jeff will be a popular figure in this year's fiction."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 15 '22 150w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Sundry accounts. 435p $2 Doran

22-8944

"Let those people who think only of Cobb's funny side read the first story in his new volume, 'Darkness.' They will get a new viewpoint, and quite a shock. This is a psychological story, and there is nothing funny in it. It is a grim and perfectly done picture of a human being in the grip of a dreadful fear, crushed under the conviction of sin, who is set free after some forty years by the confession of the real murderer. . . It has been included with four others by the same writer in this year's edition of 'The Best Short Stories.' But there is plenty of fun in the book. 'A short natural history' is funny enough for any one. It is one of the writer's stories of colored folk. . . Some of the stories are busy with the doings of the underworld, one discusses the workings of the insanity laws of New York State, and points to the necessity for their careful revision." (N Y Times) Contents: Darkness; The cater-cornered sex; A short natural history; It could happen again to-morrow; The ravelin' wolf; 'Worth 10,000'; Mr. Lobel's apoplexy; Alas, the poor whiffet! Plentiful valley; A tale of wet days.

Booklist 18:364 JI '22

"It is interesting character work, but amazingly verbose."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 JI 5 '22 500w

Cleveland p92 D '22

"In every respect they are Cobb at his best."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 O 22 '22 200w

"The stories are all in Mr. Cobb's best vein."

+ Lit R p725 Je 10 '22 340w

"Mr. Cobb writes a great deal, writes perhaps too much. Something of the bubbling spirit that was his is missing from his later work, but he is a good and careful worker. He writes wonderful dialogue, and he is skillful at drawing unusual and rococo figures. He also has a strong sense of plot." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p14 My 14 '22 1200w

Outlook 131:387 Je 28 '22 10w

"Mr. Cobb's stories are uniformly interesting and illuminating." R. M. N.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 27 '22 520w

COCKADAY, LAURENCE MARSHAM. Radiotelephony for everyone; the wireless; how to construct and maintain modern transmitting and receiving apparatus. 213p $1.50 Stokes

651.6 Radio telephone 22-12249

The book has been prepared to teach the uninitiated the general electrical theory upon which radio is founded and show them how their sets work, how to build them if necessary, how to care for them and how to make repairs. It deals in detail with the different types of receiving sets, antenna construction, data on crystal and vacuum tube detectors. Besides illustrations it contains the international Morse code and conventional signals, the United States navy time signals, radio call letter, and a list of abbreviations to be used in radio communication.

"If there is any criticism to offer on this book, it is one which applies equally well to all radio books I have seen to date: the fact that authors seem to think no radio book is complete unless all branches of the radio art are covered." Pierre Boucheron

+ — Bookm 55:639 Ag '22 200w

"Very clear and comprehensive little book."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '22 230w
Cleveland p77 S '22

"The author's design has been to compose his book in 'everyman's English,' and there is no questioning the accomplishment of this purpose." Dudley Nichols

+ Lit R p902 Ag 26 '22 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:567 D '22

St Louis 20:213 S '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:181 Jl '22

COFFIN, HENRY SLOANE. What is there in religion? 178p $1.25 Macmillan

240 Religion 22-19075

In these chapters, some of which were delivered upon the Merrick lectureship at Ohio Wesleyan university, the associate professor of practical theology at Union theological seminary presents some simple and practical talks on personal religion. Using the Hudson river thruout as a simile he draws an analogy between a river "the streams whereof make glad the city of God" and the benefits which the stream of the spirit of faith renders to believers. He shows the cleansing, refreshing, fertilizing and sustaining power of religion, its capacity for adventure as well as for serenity, the beauty which it gives to life, its power of change and of permanence.

Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '22 260w

"With charming English and an extraordinary command of literary and biographical references, the author considers religion."

+ J Religion 3:109 Ja '23 60w

St Louis 21:4 Ja '23

"A volume which Protestant and Catholic may alike rejoice to read, and which even those of other faiths might read without prejudice and with direct profit. It is a fascinating presentation of ideal religion making good in the life of man."

+ Springfield Republican p10 D 5 '22 380w

COHEN, HELEN LOUISE, ed. Longer plays by 2 modern authors (American). 357p $2 Harcourt

812 American drama—Collections 22-8426

A companion volume to her earlier collection, "One-act plays by modern authors." (Book Review Digest, 1921) All of the four dramas included are the work of American writers, and three of the four have been written and produced since 1918. Each drama is preceded by a sketch of the author. Contents: Drama in America: an introduction; Beau Brummell, by Clyde Fitch; The copperhead, by Augustus Thomas; Dulcy, by G. S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly; The intimate strangers, by Booth Tarkington; Selected bibliography for the study of drama in America.

Booklist 19:45 N '22

Cleveland p66 S '22

Reviewed by Clarence Stratton

Educ R 65:62 Ja '23 170w

"Not modern; they are the theatrical methods in use for the past fifty years. Agreeable and diverting to read." M. L. Mason

+ — Freeman 6:285 N 29 '22 270w

"Two of the four plays are easily accessible in other editions, and it is safe to say that the other two will not long remain accessible here only. The rambling introduction on 'Drama in America,' the Selected Bibliography, and the fairly informative prefatory notes complete a volume for which it is rather difficult to picture an appropriate picture."

+ — Lit R p355 D 30 '22 160w

"A thoughtful and discriminating commentary upon the American theater, a volume of which should do much to awaken in the American people, a new interest and delight—whenever possible—in theatrical productions which bear the title, 'Made in the U. S. A.'"

+ Springfield Republican p8 S 26 '22 330w

Wis Lib Bul 18:215 O '22

COHEN, HELEN LOUISE, ed. Lyric forms from 2 France: their history and their use, with an anthology of ballades, chants royal, rondels, rondeaus, triolets, villanelles, sestinas in English verse. 527p $1.75 Harcourt

821.08 French poetry. English poetry—Collections 23-26021

In the first one hundred pages is given a history of French verse forms—ballade, chant royal, rondeau, triolet, villanelle and sestina, which have been successfully used by English and American poets. The remaining pages, four-fifths of the book, are an anthology of English poetry illustrating the use of these fixed forms.

Booklist 19:151 F '23

"So complete and so well bound a book is 'Lyric Forms from France' that it will 'grace any library shelf.' Miss Cohen leaves no corner of French versification unexplored." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:753 F '23 250w

"I can not discover after diligent search that Miss Cohen has omitted any ballade or any rondeau in English which deserved to be included, with a single regrettable exception—Frank Dempster Sherman's 'I've seen her picture by Sarony.'" Brander Matthews

+ Int Bk R p34 F '23 1950w

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY. Assorted chocolates. 330p $2 Dodd

22-17937

Another series of farcical stories of negro life. Contents: Noblesse obliged; The evil lie; Bird of prey; The night-blooming serious; Gravey; Off in the silly night; H₂O Boy; Chocolate grudge.

Booklist 19:122 Ja '23

"Genuinely amusing. He has seen the outward characteristics of a certain element of the race about whom he writes. He has penetrated no further. He takes these outward characteristics and uses them to clothe amusing tales which in themselves have no racial basis. Ingenuity and humor are here but lack of depth and honesty of characterization keep these tales from inclusion in the small company of absolutely first-class short stories."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 S 20 '22 320w

"Cleverly constructed and not badly told, although there is enough to quarrel with in the synthetic dialect. A book to be read once, if at all, and sent along to some person who thinks he has a sense of humor; a railway news-stand best seller."

+ — Lit R p73 S 30 '22 120w

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY. Midnight. 281p il $1.75 Dodd [7s 6d E. Nash]

22-2220

Did the woman who on a cold, sleety night drove in a taxi, in which a murdered man but no woman was shortly afterward found, kill the man, and who was she? This was the mystery that private detective David Carroll set himself to solve. In the course of the developments, personal histories, human frailties and affections and the subtle workings of the mind pass before us and two facts stand out prominently: that a detective may follow his

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY—Continued
clue with merciless logic and still be human;
and that a set of circumstances of no criminal intent may produce a gruesome result.

"An intriguing detective story. All [the] characters fit smoothly into the plot and in their turn excite our sympathy, amusement, and distrust, feeding the flame of curiosity to the end."

+ Bookm 55:202 Ap '22 100w
Boston Transcript p8 Mr 4 '22 950w

"The publishers very much to the contrary, this is not more brilliant nor original than the average detective story, but has the merit of being neither cheap nor unwholesome."

+ Cleveland p28 Ap '22

"On the whole, in spite of the complete absence of style and character, portrayal, Mr
Cohen has satisfied his public."

— + N Y Times p17 F 12 '22 400w
Outlook 130:309 F '22 90w

"It is all thoroughly alive, and the interest never flags."

+ Sat R 133:583 Je 3 '22 250w

"Will keep the reader well amused."

+ Spec 129:151 J 29 '22 60w

"Mr Cohen creates a most intriguing situation, and keeps the interest thoroughly stimulated until he is ready to bring forward the guilty person. The story is among the brightest of its type."

+ Springfield Republican p13a F 12 '22
150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p326 My
18 '22 70w

Wis Lib Bul 18:134 My '22

COLCORD, LINCOLN ROSS. Instrument of the gods (Eng title Under sail). 321p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Nash & G.]

22-17615

"In these nine stories of the sea, the author has given us the romance and the pathos of the old days of merchant sailing ships. There is a sincerity in them all, and a love of the sea that comes from the author's heritage of five generations of sea-faring folk, and the fact that his own boyhood was spent on board his father's trading vessel as it was engaged in China trade.
A few salt-water ballads and chanteys are included, but the chief interest is in the fine character drawing, which is especially noteworthy in two of the Chinese characters." (Cleveland) Contents: An instrument of the gods;
Outward bound; The uncharted isle; Servant
and master; Rescue at sea; Good-bye, Cape
Horn! Under sail; Anjer; Moments of destiny;
Cape St Roque; A friend; Ballad of master
mariners.

Booklist 19:122 Ja '23

"It would be hard not to like these stories with their flavor of strange things, their spell of wonder, and their leisurely, absorbing method of story telling. Though they are separate stories, they have a common background and some common characters, notably Captain Nichols, the narrator. The book contains also some of Lincoln Colcord's sea poetry. It is a notable addition to his list of books." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p6 O 18 '22 1100w

"Uniformly well written tales."

+ Cleveland p92 D '22

"Not quite bad enough to be ignored nor quite good enough to be damned. As popular tales of the bounding main, chiefly in the vicinity of China, the adventures which Mr. Colcord relates, however, unquestionably deserve a hearing in the market-places for which they are perhaps deliberately intended. The characterizations are rubber-stamped, but there are frequent dashes of spume and spray which could have been photographed only by a sailor."

+ — Dial 73:682 D '22 80w

"His literary workmanship is not less painstaking and accurate than his seamanship. He is an artist of high competence; but he is not a sorcerer, and his style does not unfold the world of dark splendor and fateful tragedy he tries so honestly to evoke."

+ — Lit R p74 S 30 '22 350w

Outlook 132:304 O 18 '22 20w

Springfld Republican p7a O 29 '22 180w

"Mr. Colcord devises these adventures with neat inventiveness, and with at least as much regard for probability as is essential when the scene and period are both so distant. He is a master of the technical term, and introduces here and there the nautical name of a rope or sail to give that colour to a feat of seamanship otherwise clearly explained, which suggests to the reader that he, too, is one of the initiated."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p686 O 26
'22 550w

COLE, HERBERT. Heraldry and floral forms
as used in decorations. 243p il $4 Dutton
[10s 6d Dent]

740 Heraldry. Design, Decorative. Decoration and ornament

A study of heraldry from the decorative rather than the historical or technical viewpoint. The illustrations are drawn from the heraldry of various countries and cover a wide range, from the beginnings of the art down to the eighteenth century. The text, which includes some account of the heraldic terms most frequently met with,
is for the most part concerned with a critical analysis of the examples illustrated. The second half of the book deals with floral forms as used in decoration.

Boston Transcript p6 D 30 '22 320w

"A rich storehouse of illustration, with intelligent interpretative comment, on heraldry."

+ Outlook 132:533 N 22 '22 50w

"The author has shown a wise catholicity in selecting material for illustration. The examples given are executed from drawings into which the spirit of the original is skillfully translated."

+ Sat R 134:725 N 11 '22 360w

Spec 130:65 Ja 13 '23 400w

"A storehouse of attractive models from which artists engaged in depicting this official blazon-ry may draw inspiration. He produces examples of really effective work from periods usually considered to be inferior in the matter of heraldic style."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p688 O 26
'22 420w

COLE, WILLIAM MORSE, and GEDDES,
ANNE ELIZABETH. Fundamentals of accounting. 434p $3.50 Houghton

657 Accounting 21-18502

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

"The text is artistically displayed and is easy to read. . . The style is pleasing, and the work possesses a literary finish not ordinarily found in a text on accounting." J. H. Jackson

+ Am Econ R 12:134 Mr '22 1200w

Booklist 18:219 Ap '22

"The student or business man who wishes to acquire a knowledge of accounting will find in Professor Cole's book an excellent medium."

+ Lit R p106 O 22 '21 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:284 Je '22

COLEGROVE, KENNETH WALLACE. American citizens and their government. 333p
$1.75 Abingdon press

342.73 United States—Politics and government 22-3630

"The author has addressed himself to the task of sketching, not only briefly but understandingly, the whole field of Government in America. He does not present the historical illustrations of movements good and bad which are typically American and are especially developed under our system. He does, however, address himself to making the reader comprehend the whole structure and working of American Government from its most exalted spheres

to its smallest details; from Senate to town meeting; from Supreme Court to local magistrates."—Boston Transcript

Am Pol Sci R 16:348 My '22 60w

"It is quite a model in its way. A little deeper study of this question would be illuminating and make a good book a better one." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 11 '22 450w

"Those who want information about our government in compact form will find the book very useful. In the earlier chapters the author endeavors to combat various criticisms of our government. Some of these seem a bit extraneous in a book which in the main sets forth the facts with very little comment." I. M. C.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser pt S 30 '22 220w

"While probably intended principally for use in reading circles and women's clubs, it may be used very satisfactorily as a text for high school classes, or even for brief courses in college. It is unfortunate that a number of inaccuracies of statement have crept in, and that the author has allowed himself on a few occasions to make sweeping generalizations which are quite unwarranted. These are not, however, sufficient to impair seriously the real usefulness and merit of the book." W. J. Shepard

+ Educ R 64:90 Je '22 310w

"The book is well written."

+ J Religion 2:222 Mr '22 40w

"As a book giving a broad and general survey of some of the more important factors of American government, it may well be commended. As a book supplying the needs of the 'average' American, it can hardly be said to suffice. It seems that before the needs of the good citizen can be met, the specific qualities and needs of the good citizen should first be more specifically defined." James Vaughn

+ School R 30:316 Ap '22 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p79 F 2 '22 40w

COLEMAN, MCALISTER. See McAlister, F. A., pseud.

COLEMAN, MRS SATIS N. Creative music for children. 220p il $3.50 Putnam

780.7 Music—Instruction and study. Musical instruments 22-9553

The book is a plan of training based on the natural evolution of music, including the making and playing of instruments, dancing, singing, poetry. In the first part the author tells how her idea of teaching music came to her; in the second she relates the story of the experiment itself—how she allowed her pupils to be little savages, dance primitive dances, beat upon rude drums, until they discovered some way of making tone; and in the third she surveys the outcome and reflects on the place creative music takes in education. She finds that it adds to the child's creative power; to his power to think for himself; to his general knowledge; to his power to act for himself; to his skill in controlling action; to his wholesome employment of emotional force; to his appreciation of beauty; and to his adjustment to society. There is a list of the instruments used in the work, most of which can be made by the children at home, and to the many illustrations are added some musical scores of original compositions.

Booklist 9:42 N '22

"I would recommend this book to all teachers. It will help them and stimulate their ideas. And to all parents, for they can learn from it how their children can be started on a musical path at home." C. C. Eglington

+ N Y Tribune pt Je 18 '22 950w

"Even if, at its worst, it should leave the cause of music exactly where it found it, it would still be worth while, because its object is to make not musicians but human beings."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p641 O 12 '22 650w

COLERIDGE, STEPHEN. Glory of English prose. 232p $2.50 Putnam

820.4 English literature—History and criticism 22-17793

In a series of letters to his grandson of sixteen or thereabout, the author writes in appreciation of some masters of English prose, illustrating with many extracts from their writings.

"In modern science, literature, and warfare Mr. Coleridge finds nothing save vulgarity and corruption; and we may therefore doubt whether the way to instruct a schoolboy in the glory of English prose is to stuff him with melancholy reminders of the spacious days that are no more and the glory that is fled."

— Lit R p154 O 28 '22 300w

Reviewed by J. Macy

Nation 115:sup621 D 6 '22 250w

Nation and Ath 31:315 My 27 '22 250w

"Mr. Coleridge is a conservative of conservatives. It is the surge and roll of language that Mr. Coleridge loves, that sonorous instrument that is the glory of England's past. The language of Sir Thomas Browne, John Bunyan and Gibbon enchants him and he would enchant his grandson with the same magic. In the limited field which Mr. Coleridge has traveled he proves quite adequate."

+ N Y Times p18 D 24 '22 400w

"Mr. Coleridge's quotations are well chosen and his personal comments on them are, in the main, helpful. The work is marred, however, by certain narrowness of outlook—only once does the author venture outside the British islands in quest of material—and a spirit of imperialism which crops out from time to time."

Spring'd Republican p12 N 10 '22 360w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p246 Ap 13 '22 70w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Book of wireless telegraph and telephone. 227p $1.50 Appleton

654.1 Radio communication 22-14823

A description of wireless telegraph and telephone sets and how to make and operate them, together with a simple explanation of how wireless works. The book addresses itself especially to the boy enthusiast, encouraging him, by its very simple and detailed descriptions, to set up his own wireless set. It is in three parts: A demonstration wireless outfit; A long distance wireless set; Continuous wave wireless telegraphy and telephony. Appendices, definitions of some words and terms used, illustrations and an index.

"Seems to be addressed to the boy rather than to any other individual. The author has given a lot of information to the one who wishes to tinker and to make his own. He does not go about it very logically, however." Pierre Boucheron

+ Bookm 55:638 Ag '22 220w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Radio amateur's hand book; a complete, authentic and informative work on wireless telegraphy and telephony. 355p il $1.50 Crowell

654.6 Radio communication 22-12572

The book addresses itself to the person interested in wireless telegraphy and telephony, who wishes to install an apparatus in his home and knows nothing at all about it. The introduction gives a brief history of the invention. The information is detailed, with numerous illustrations and an appendix of useful information, glossary and wireless don'ts.

Cleveland p77 S '22

"Breezy, conversational style, unhampered by wide vocabulary." Dudley Nichols

+ Lit R p902 Ag 26 '22 1000w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK—Continued—
 "A valuable contribution to the existing field of radio literature since it presents this rather difficult subject from two angles: the construction and purchase of wireless apparatus and the underlying principles of its operation. Suitable for a supplementary text in the high school and will be of interest to any amateur experimenter in the wireless field." W. L. Beauchamp
 + School R 30:710 N '22 380w

COLLINS, FRANCIS ARNOLD. Sentinels along our coast. 272p il $2 Century
 614.865 Lighthouses 22-18231

A readable story of the United States light-house service which has under its jurisdiction a sea-coast of 48,000 miles in length and in addition the shore-line of the Great Lakes and other inland waters. Beginning with a description of the lighthouses of the ancients, the author goes on to describe America's first lighthouses, and the problem of lighthouse engineering. Chapters follow on developing the light and the mechanism of its control, on various types of light-buoys, on service depots, light-ships and lighthouse tenders, the United States coast-guard and steering by radio compass.

Booklist 19:111 Ja '23

"Popular in presentation, any reader (except one inclined toward seasickness) can find the chapters worth the time thus spent."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 7 '22 140w

Cleveland p96 D '22

"As readable as it is coherent and authentic. In the telling of the romance of the lighthouse Mr. Collins has shown a very admirable skill and industry in the selection and presentation of his material."

+ Lit R p76 S 30 '22 200w

"The recent development of the radio in safeguarding navigation makes this book, with its timely descriptions of the new methods in use in lighthouses and lightships and on ocean carriers, of real interest. The style is entertaining."

+ Outlook 132:344 O 25 '22 40w

R of Rs 66:560 N '22 80w

"It contains some technical errors, but is substantially correct. Mr. Collins's book should increase popular interest in one of the most valuable government departments which combines science and adventure."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 24 '22 1300w

Wis Lib Bul 18:275 D '22

COLUM, PADRAIC, ed. Anthology of Irish verse. 361p $3 Boni & Liveright

821.08 Irish poetry—Collections. English poetry—Irish authors 22-5613

The editor explains in his introduction that the book is an anthology of the poetry of Ireland rather than an anthology of Irish verse, that is to say, he has tried to make his selection representative of the people rather than representative of the individual poets. The poems are grouped according to dominant national themes: poems of the house, the road, the field, the fair, the fireside; street songs and countryside songs; the Celtic world and the fairy world; poems of place and poems of exile; satire and laments; our heritage; personal poems.

Booklist 18:229 Ap '22

"While Mr. Colum's work gives an adequate idea of popular poetry of a more or less political type, it does not fully represent the national consciousness of Ireland, because there is little attempt to show the early Irish attitude, and there is not a single poem inspired by the recent great war." N. J. O'Connor

+ Bookm 55:420 Je '22 400w

"There is not enough that is new in the 'Anthology of Irish Verse' to justify its publication, and the editor has been far too lenient in setting the standard for poetry which he has admitted to his book. However, the gravest defect of the anthology is that, by reason of its political bias, it is more a record of Irish prejudice than a full expression of Irish nationality."

— Boston Transcript p5. My 10 '22 1500w

Cath World 116:416 D '22 280w

"Offers a feast of beauty and a recapitulation of the spiritual history of the Irish people. Wholly individual in its architecture, Mr Colum's anthology is distinguished by an aesthetic purpose so profoundly effective as to seem almost inevitable."

+ Dial 72:537 My '22 220w

"Mr. Colum is himself a poet, and he has done his work with a poet's sensitiveness to values. My only regret is that he has included so many anonymous street-songs, and has left out a few superb expressions of Celtic animism like Amergin's Song beginning, 'I am the wind of the sea.'" J. G. Fletcher

+ Freeman 5:378 Je 28 '22 1200w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Ind 108:332 Ap 1 '22 350w

Reviewed by W: R. Benet

Lit R p820 Jl 22 '22 180w

"A rich and charming volume, collected with taste and enthusiasm from a multitude of sources, and capably edited."

+ Nation 114:626 My 24 '22 20w

"The distinctive contribution of Mr. Colum's excellent anthology is a dual service. For the book is both an uniquely revealing record of the, racial experience of the Irish people, and an eloquently persuasive introduction to the literature in which it has found most subtle expression." L. R. Morris

+ New Repub 31:83 Je 14 '22 1200w

"Here, for the first time, is given an adequate panorama of the Irish people. It is distinctly a nationalistic undertaking, a book that one leaves less with impressions of the excellence of Mr. Yeats or Mr. Stephens than with a vivid idea of the solidity of mental outlook and understanding of the racial integrity of the Irish people. The idea was excellent and it has been excellently carried out." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p13 Ap 2 '22 1500w

"There is a curious suggestion in these poems of the Gaelic way of thought and the color and cadence of Gaelic speech. There is the vivid, unsophisticated imagery, the vigorous delight in adventure, in nature, in physical beauty, which are so characteristic of Gaelic folk poetry. And in them one finds a caressing rhythm, a singing, lyrical magic natively Irish." L. R. Morris

+ Outlook 131:117 My 17 '22 2500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:511 N '22

"For anyone wishing an intelligently selected book of Irish poetry, this one will serve admirably, and Mr Colum has done no small service to the Irish cause as well as to that of poetry in compiling it."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Je 27 '22 270w

Wis Lib Bul 18:155 Je '22

COLUM, PADRAIC. Children who followed the piper. 152p il $1.75 Macmillan

22-18666

After the children who followed the Pied Piper had gone into the hill they came to the Wood of Daylightgone. And here many adventures befell them all, but especially strange were the things which happened to Valentine, the Emperor's son, and his friend John Ball, the Miller's son, and Golden Hood, the lovely maiden. Into the Dark Forest, one by one, they wandered, and many and terrible were their adventures until that day when they returned to the land of the Emperor. And even here all had not been well, but for the faithfulness of John Ball, the friend of Valentine.

Booklist 19:91 D '22

"A beautiful piece of work. Told with the authentic soft voice of the story-teller, the true feeling for the elements of beauty and surprise, and with a great distinction of manner."

+ Dial 73:582 N '22 70w

"The illustrations by Dugald Stewart are most pleasing. His decorative ability is highly original. Padraic Colum has now established himself firmly as one of the best writers for children of our time. He brings the charm of a mature literary style to ingenuous, as well as ingenious, story-telling; his manner of unfolding his narrative proves the respect in which he holds his young auditors. He never insults them by 'writing down' to their understandings. Rather he shares with them, out of spontaneous pleasure, the latest advices he has received from the countries beyond the rainbow, and in translating these exciting messages his fancy is amazingly colorful and fertile."

+ Lit R p175 N 4 '22 540w

"Perhaps the best report we can expect from that world beyond the mountain. We miss the simple directness of some of Mr. Colum's other stories, but his English is as always, exquisite."

M. H. B. Mussey

+ Nation 115:sup618 D 6 '22 170w

"Mr. Padraic Colum has written another entrancing story for children. Very skilfully he has contrived to bring into his dramatic personae many of the little people famed in fairy tale, and some of the intriguing adventures they come upon have long been dear to the hearts of children. But much that happens you have never heard of before, and it is really very exciting, and lots of fun."

+ New Repub 33:182 Ja 10 '23 300w

"A welcome addition to any juvenile library."

+ N Y Times p10 N 19 '22 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:35 Ja '23

"Full to the brim of sheer beauty. The atmosphere of the book is the veritable air breathed in Fairyland."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 11 '22 370w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Dramatic legends and other poems. 100p $1.50 Macmillan

821

22-20674

Contents: Country songs; Creatures and things seen; Reminiscence; Dramatic legends; Swift's pastoral; The bird of Jesus; The laments of Queen Gornlai; The miracle of the corn.

Booklist 19:151 F '23

Reviewed by W. S. Braithwaite

Boston Transcript p3 N 4 '22 1400w

Cath World 116:709 F '23 300w

"If his later poems bring a new note into his art, that note is pity; it is the poignancy of his pity, I am inclined to think, that makes Mr. Colum's recent verse seem more profound in its insight into life, altho no less beautiful, than his earlier." Lloyd Morris

Int Bk R p88 D '22 300w

"Needless to say, the reader will find in the pages the lilt of line, the mingled pathos and humor, the poignant heart appeal which combine in Erin's verse more than in the verse of any other country. Colum's fingers fail, perhaps, to touch Tara's harp with the same vigor as was shown, for instance, by Yeats. But for those who are responsive to the appeal of Irish poetry the volume contains much to delight."

+ N Y Times p2 D 17 '22 250w

"He has gotten away from Ireland. But he has brought with him from his homeland a simplicity of valuation, a naïveté that make beautiful lyrics. Occasionally he returns to Ireland as though he cannot bear to leave that land for long, and digs once more in the 'ould sod.'" Milton Raison

+ N Y Tribune p29 D 3 '22 300w

COMSTOCK, HARRIET THERESA (SMITH) (MRS PHILIP COMSTOCK). At the crossroads. 283p $1.75 Doubleday

22-10863

Brace Northrup, a young writer, after a severe illness seeks recuperation in the wilds.

He comes across a very unusual young woman who, while still almost a child, had been tricked into marrying a man she did not love. The forest, her personality and her strange history, all help him to regain his lost grip on himself and to begin to write a new book. When the crisis comes and their love for each other stands confessed between them, her vision of something higher than love sends him away from her, but not before he has done her the service of banishing her worthless husband from her side. During the war many things happen both in the forest and in the city. After his return from France, Northrup finds to his relief that his shallow fiancée has fallen in love with another man, and, in the yellow house at the crossroads in the forest, Mary-Clare is nursing a dying cripple who had been her husband.

"It is part of the creed of this novel, which really belongs in the category of the 'glad' books, that all the characters—with the sole exception of Maclin—should be vastly improved by their contact with the book. It is part of that heavy veil of sentimentality which never lifts from beginning to end of the tale." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '22 850w

"If this novel has its faults, it also has many good points. Mary Clare is a charming character. The people of King's Forest are quaint and touching and quite worth reading about."

+ Lit R p707 Je 3 '22 230w

+ N Y Times p15 My 14 '22 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p845 D 14 '22 250w

CONKLING, HILDA. Shoes of the wind. 170p $1.60 Stokes

811

22-18803

"She is a child-poet, writing about subjects that a normal child would not be interested in, and saying of them such things as other children would say if they were more articulate and were as sensitive as Hilda is to the appeal of beauty. Nothing could be more natural than her casual and often fragmentary utterances about flowers, sunsets, animals, brooks, fishes, deserted houses and the moon. These are the fugitive thoughts of childhood, almost for the first time set down without affectation, a sense of wonder and delight naturally expressed."

—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 19:74 D '22

Cleveland p96 D '22

"Even if, with maturity, Hilda never writes another phrase, or worse, writes thousands of them in the prescribed manner, she is to-day a definite and original figure in our contemporary poetry." L. Untermeyer

+ Lit R p145 O 28 '22 800w

St Louis 20:300 D '22

"Happily she is for the most part quite without a taint of sophistication or desire to produce an effect, and her vagrant half-thoughts, playing gracefully about among the beautiful playthings that a child never has to go far to find, are to be gathered up gratefully with no wish that they were otherwise." S. A.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 650w

Wis Lib Bul 18:252 N '22

CONNELL, RICHARD. Sin of Monsieur Pettipon, and other humorous tales. 287p $1.75 Doran

22-26482

Twelve humorous short stories, most of which appeared originally in the Saturday Evening Post. Usually it is a little ironical twist which makes them comic. In the title story Alphonse Pettipon steward in the second class of an ocean liner and an artist in his profession, commits his first and only act of carelessness in twenty-two years of service and instead of being, as he feared, an everlasting blot on his honor, it proves to be the means of his advancement. Pottle the barber figures in four of the tales. Contents: The sin of Monsieur Pettipon; Mr Pottle and the South-sea cannibals; Mr Pottle and culture; Mr Pottle and the one man

CONNELL, RICHARD—Continued
dog; Mr Pottle and pageantry; The cage man; Where is the tropic of Capricorn; Mr Braddy's bottle; Gretna greenhorns; Terrible Epps; Honor among sportsmen; The $25,000 jaw.

Booklist 18:364 J1 '22

"Mr. Connell's writing bears rather too many of the earmarks of deliberate popularity; his quaintness is too quaint at times, his spirit too spirited. But they are pleasant tales, amusing and vivid enough, and the bound total of them is downright entertaining." Sidney Howard

+ — Bookm 55:526 J1 '22 160w

"Some of Mr. Connell's delicious tales we have met in magazines like the Century. Most of them are daring and delightfully unique. When we say 'daring' we do not mean sex. We mean jolly things not often met in Boston, like fleas and cannibals and pigs."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '22 340w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"They are Saturday Evening Post philosophy dished up with a jocular garnishing. But they are readable and contain certain delicious ingredients. Mr. Connell undoubtedly possesses faculties that should enable him to continue to amuse us with even more ingenious and mirthful stories. We are thankful for what we have had and hopeful for the future."

+ — Lit R p819 J1 '22 '22 850w

"Preposterous, hilarious, delicious yarns."

+ Nation 115:418 O 18 '22 20w

"Mr. Connell's faults are mechanical, and his characters of necessity are artificial. He makes them fit into his idea willy nilly, but it must be confessed that he does it with great cleverness. He impresses us with the conviction that he knows what he is about; and making allowances for the defects that have been noted, it is undeniable that his stories are laughable and extremely interesting."

+ — N Y Times p13 My 28 '22 220w

"The ingredients are mixed with a trained hand. We find suspense and dénouement; but neither gifts of observation nor art in presentation are revealed." B. R. Redman

+ — N Y Tribune p5 J1 30 '22 250w

"Readers like above all laughs, we imagine, those they cannot help. Mr. Connell's book is full of that kind, both about Pettipon and about Mr. Pottle." E. W. Osborn

+ N Y World p13 Je 21 '22 180w

Wis Lib Bul 19:26 Ja '23

CONNOLLY, JAMES BRENDAN. Tide rips
246p il $1.75 Scribner

22-7410

A collection of simply told sea stories. "What price for fish?" a tale of the Gloucester fishermen, is quite an exciting story. The "Mary Gurley" has many adventures on her fishing trips. Her sturdy captain and his brave crew rescue sixteen men of a tramp steamer, and perform many more of those heroic deeds which go unknown and unsung and by some ironic fate make a hero of the least deserving, as in the case of the "Mary Gurley" and the vessel she helped thru a great storm on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. The book is illustrated by N. C. Wyeth and others.

Booklist 18:365 J1 '22

"Nowhere in the nine tales that comprise the book is there the taint of Freudianism or any of its variations, which, in one form or another, sullies the pages of much of the fiction published today. If in some of the stories, the character drawing lacks the subtle, analytic skill of Conrad and approaches the broad effects of melodrama, few readers will object, since an excellent narrative element and an atmosphere full of the breath of the sea make ample compensation."

+ Cath World 115:693 Ag '22 240w

Cleveland p35 My '22

Lit D p62 S 23 '22 1200w

"One of the nine tales, called 'Not Down in the Log,' impresses one as being a bit unconvincing, delightfully though it is written; but in the other eight Connolly proves again his ability to write a close knit, emphatic story."

+ — Lit R p762 Je 24 '22 370w

"He handles his people gently, lovingly, with an affectionate, tolerant tenderness which in turn imparted to his readers—a rare gift."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 4 '22 80w

"What Price for Fish?" ought to have a special prize as the best tale of Gloucester fishermen since Kipling wrote 'Captains Courageous.' Others of these sea tales are almost as good. Mr. Connolly leads among living American writers about seas, ships, and sailors."

+ Outlook 131:40 My 3 '22 50w

"While all the stories are told with vigor and often picturesquely, Mr. Connolly is at his best when writing of fishing vessels and sailing ships, and the men who work them. The stories will please those fond of the elemental in fiction."

+ Spring'd Republican p13a Ap 16 '22 300w

Wis Lib Bul 18:157 Je '22

CONWAY, SIR MARTIN. Van Eycks and their followers. 529p il $15 Dutton [42s Murray]

759.9 Painting, Dutch (Eng ed 22-6133)

A comprehensive history of early Flemish art. The chapters on the Van Eycks themselves, Hubert and John, and the controversial points connected with their work occupy a comparatively small part of the more than 500 pages, but the book affords much information about the work of all the known artists of the Flemish school, thru Peter Bruegel, who painted during the middle decades of the sixteenth century. The one hundred illustrations are arranged four to a page and tho small, are clear. Works difficult of access and less well known have been chosen for illustration in preference to the well known works of the famous. Beside the general index there is an index of works of art.

"It is the kind of survey that we rarely get save from scholars of Latin race. It is written for the general reader but is clarifying also for the specialist. There is no parade of apparatus of erudition, but the inquiring reader will find the leads to the literature. What is distinctive about this book is its mellowness of style and maturity of judgment. Sir Martin's heart is warm to these masters, but his head is cool towards the theories that have been woven about them; withal he is capable of advancing attractive theories on his own account." F. J. Mather

+ Lit R p836 J1 29 '22 1000w

"It contains no discernible thesis of any sort—neither coherent biography nor aesthetic judgments—it is an impenetrable mass of carefully authenticated historical scraps. The author's love for art is profound, but incommunicable and purposeless; his periphrastic solemnity fills more than five hundred quarto pages, and the result is unreadable archaeology." T. Craven

+ — New Repub 32:sup18 S 27 '22 230w

"A book which is certainly the most comprehensive not only in English but in any language. It must for long remain indispensable to anyone seriously studying the early art of the Netherlands."

+ Sat R 132:668 D 10 '21 800w

"There is only one regret to be felt about this book, which is at once so learned and so free from dullness; it is that the illustrations are not large or numerous enough."

+ — Spec 128:660 My 27 '22 780w

"Sir Martin Conway has performed a notable feat. In a book which does not bore he has collected all the general available information on early Flemish art. His pages, true enough, are a trifle congested, and his material is not always shaped in clean lines. He sometimes fails to extract essential facts and tendencies in lucid order, and to conduct the reader, safe and unbewildered, from a maze into the clear light of simple understanding."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p21 Ja 12 '22 1600w

CONWELL, RUSSELL HERMAN. Why Lincoln laughed. 148p $1.50 (6s) Harper

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham 22-3088

A little book recounting the author's meeting with Lincoln, and emphasizing his humorous side and his belief in the power of laughter. Lincoln's fondness for Artemus Ward is dwelt upon and some of the stories and sayings of Ward which Lincoln especially delighted in are given.

Cleveland p95 D '22

"His book contrives to make the great figure of our national epos even a little more human and homely than it was before, closer, that is, to the understanding of men, and is therefore a welcome addition to Lincoln literature."

+ Lit R p454 F 25 '22 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:366 J1 '22

R of Rs 67:220 F '23 40w

COOKE, DELMAR GROSS. William Dean Howells; a critical study. 279p $3 Dutton

813 Howells, William Dean 22-20940

"It is not the man to whom Mr. Cooke has devoted this study, it is the writer, the literary artist, the adroit craftsman in fiction, the militant critic, the hesitating poet, the engaging fellow-traveler. For his purpose Mr. Cooke's volume is excellently organized. He has devoted his opening chapter to Howells 'the man'; and in successive chapters he deals with Howells's 'Conception of Criticism'; with his 'Ideals of Literature'; with his 'Literary Method'; with his 'Poetry and Travels'; and finally with his fiction under two heads, 'Transcripts of Life' and 'Studies in Ethics.' There is a useful bibliography and an adequate index."—Int BK R

Booklist 19:152 F '23

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '23 880w

Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 20w

"It is not a eulogy; it is a criticism, sympathetic and yet frank, naught extenuating and naught setting down in malice. It is, in fact, the kind of book which Howells himself would have been glad to read—and perhaps even to review. Of course he might not have agreed with all the opinions expressed by his critic; but he would have appreciated the courtesy with which they are here expressed. He could not but recognize that an honest effort to evaluate his work as a whole would not fail to assist in the restoration of his reputation as a novelist to the high position which it had attained thirty years before his death and from which it unaccountably declined in the last years of his life." Brander Matthews

+ Int BK R p33 D '22 2000w

"A work which is not only sound and discriminating but readable. It was originally submitted as a thesis for the degree of doctor of philosophy at the University of Illinois. In spite of this appalling fact, it escapes both dullness and pedantry." H. T. Baker

+ Nation 116:39 Ja 24 '23 650w

"The strength of this study is in the acumen of not a few judgments throughout it. Its weakness is in its lack of detachment and the frequency with which an analytical interest in the art of fiction is outweighed by enthusiasm for Mr. Howells." P. H. Boynton

+ — New Repub 33:256 Ja 31 '23 1300w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

N Y Times p5 Ja 14 '23 3100w

"This is a book about Howells the writer rather than about Howells the man. We must go elsewhere for appreciation of William Dean Howells's warm-hearted, humorous, humanity-loving personality. Even the biographical chapter is largely subjective, and when it isn't is cyclopedic."

+ — Outlook 133:147 Ja 17 '23 200w

R of Rs 67:111 Ja '23 60w

St Louis 21:12 Ja '23

"Mr. Cooke's volume, although it cannot be said to alter materially the ideas, of the well-informed about its subject, is of value in assembling the facts with which these ideas may be defended; and it does hold forth the possibility of informing some of those who need information. It is not brilliant; it is not startling in any way; but it is in general sane and balanced." G. B. Dutton

+ — Springfd Republican p7a F 4 '23 640w

Wis Lib Bul 19:23 Ja '23

COOPER, CLAYTON SEDGWICK. Foreign trade markets and methods. 440p il $3.50 (18s) Appleton

382 United States—Commerce. Foreign trade 22-2746

The object of the book is to explain the possibilities in foreign trade, and to stress the necessity for special training not only along particular lines of trade, but in manners, geography and world politics. After all the requirements for foreign trade—export business, salesmanship, advertising, financing, insurance, publicity, diplomatic and consular service—have been gone into, successive chapters are devoted to the trade conditions of the various countries of both continents. The book is illustrated and indexed.

"The volume is written in popular style and quotations are abundant; but, as a whole, the result is superficial, though interesting." H. K. Tosdal

+ — Am Econ R 12:494 S '22 450w

Booklist 18:348 J1 '22

Boston Transcript p10 Mr 11 '22 1150w

"This book is timely. But it is much more than that: it is full of information and interesting."

+ Daily News Rec p11 Je 30 '22 640w

"To young people, particularly, the book ought to be useful. The approach to the subject is sensible, the treatment is in the main wise, and the material gives the impression of being trustworthy and well digested."

+ Lit R p626 Ap 29 '22 300w

Pratt p13 summer '22

COOPER, COURTNEY RILEY. White desert. 301p $1.75 Little

22-2310

The scene of the story is the Colorado timberland where winter is long and savage, where snow falls almost incessantly, tying up traffic and crushing out life. Thrilling accounts of how human will power and endurance, pitted against these raging elements, can win out against all odds, give the story its distinctive character, while its human interest centers in the person of Barry Houston and his struggle with adversity. Every sort of misfortune, from suspicion of murder, fraud and treachery, and a series of ill-starred accidents, dogs his steps and might have succeeded in undoing him had he not found, in old Baptiste Renaud, a friend to stand by him thru thick and thin and to help him win out.

Booklist 18:236 Ap '22

"Mr. Cooper has the dramatic instinct to a pronounced degree. His the gift of ringing speeches, terse dialogue and well-rounded characters. Only the plot of his latest novel does not bear minute inspection; some absurdities mar it."

+ — Boston Transcript p9 F 25 '22 150w

"It is a tale with a good plot which is well sustained; its action is swift and continuous; it is well written; and it excites interest in the reader to its end."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p10 Ap 2 '22 180w

Lit R p495 Mr 11 '22 70w

COOPER, COURTNEY RILEY—Continued

"The most impressive part of the book, more fascinating than the mystery and its solution, more delightful than the love story, more interesting than Barry's fulfilling of the trusts he accepts, is the snowing under of the town, and of the ten days of struggle to live, then of the trip over the mountain to assist in the opening up of the railroad."

+ N Y Times p2 Mr 5 '22 210w

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 4 '22 120w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 J1 '22

COOPER, FRANCIS L. Captain Pott's minister. 392p il $1.75 Lthrop

22-17453

Old Captain Pott is not much pleased when the church committee decides that the new minister, Mack McGowan, is to live in his house, but the plan proves to be a good one in the long run. Elder Fox, who has a mysterious dislike for the young minister, tries to influence Captain Pott to drive him from the town but the trusty captain will not be persuaded. Instead, he uncovers the true cause of the antagonism to McGowan and the mystery of which he is the unconscious center. Fox, confronted with his Australian past, decides to make amends. The story has its love-interest in the romance of Fox's daughter, Beth, and the young minister and its humor in the affair between the captain and Miss Clemmie Pipkin.

Boston Transcript p2 S 16 '22 250w

"If the reader will be patient with a narrative that is somewhat stilted, particularly in speeches, he will find a rather simple story of some interest in 'Captain Pott's Minister'... A story that moves along in a leisurely yet mildly pleasing manner."

+ — N Y Times p28 S 17 '22 110w

COOPER, JAMES A. Sheila of Big Wreck Cove; a story of Cape Cod. 373p il $1.75 Sully

22-6312

Tunis Latham, captain of the Seamew, goes to Boston charged with an errand for old Cap'n Ira and Aunt Prudence. He is to bring back Ida May Bostwick, a grandniece of the old couple. He finds her and dislikes her intensely and the thought of living at Big Wreck Cove with her sturdy, simple kinsfolk does not appeal to her in the least. Tunis decides to bring Sheila Macklin whom he has seen and liked. Sheila, as Ida May, endears herself to everyone and life goes on happily until one day when the real Ida May turns up. Sheila confesses and goes to live in a cabin on Wreckers Head. She rows to the rescue of the Seamew in a storm and Captain Tunis and Sheila are happy once again and for always.

Booklist 18:329 Je '22

Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '22 390w

"The volume is harmless—and lifeless."

— Lit R p642 My 6 '22 120w

"The author manages to invest his theme with a degree of versimilitude that will be perceptible to any one who has ever passed a Summer on the Cape. The old sea captain is there, and a well-developed character he is."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 30 '22 110w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 J1 '22

COOPER, JAMES FENIMORE. Correspondence of James Fenimore Cooper; ed. by his grandson, James Fenimore Cooper. 2v il $7.50 Yale univ. press [37s 6d Milford]

B or 92

22-21436

"The letters contained in these two volumes cover the whole of the first half of the nineteenth century, for they begin with the childish missives of the future novelist to his parents from school in 1800 and they end with correspondence between Cooper and his friends a few days before his death in 1851. Being the man of wide interests, active life and important connections that he was, the correspondence is valuable and interesting not only for the light it throws on the life, character and work of one of the most famous authors of our literary history, but also and in almost equal measure for the intimate glimpses it gives of the social and political American life of that half century. . . . The correspondence bears witness to Cooper's many charming qualities of heart and mind, to his keen interest in many phases of life—agriculture, literature, art—and to his lifelong and always active attention to public affairs."—N Y Times

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p2 N 18 '22 1500w

"These excellently edited volumes, with comment on American life too rich to be discussed briefly in this review, contain a picture of Cooper that is complete but curiously different from the one we had formed from his novels."

H: S. Canby

+ Lit R p433 F 3 '23 2300w

"The correspondence illuminates the life and character of James Fenimore Cooper more clearly than anything else that has ever been written about him."

+ N Y Times p6 D 2 '22 2400w

"The author of 'The Last of the Mohicans,' was an uninspired writer of letters, both to his wife and to his friends. Except for the frequent references to the sales of his books, he does not here reveal the possession of any outstanding literary ability; the letters have no unusual spontaneity of emotion, they contain no narrative, and they are enlivened by little humour. The perusal of these letters, in fact, is not a literary pleasure, and the only impression they give of Cooper is that of a kindly, domestic man, industrious in his profession and interested in the affairs of his country. . . . One cannot avoid questioning the need for this elaborate publication."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p852 D 21 '22 1400w

COPELAND, ROYAL SAMUEL. Over weight? Guard your health; among adults the overweighted have a greater prospect of early death than have the underweights. 122p $1 Cosmopolitan bk.

613.2 Corpulence. Diet 22-7516

A practical little book by the commissioner of health, New York city, giving advice on how to reduce in weight, with a chart of exercises and suggestive menus for a week for each season of the year. A table of food values is included and a table of average weights and heights for men and women from fifteen to fifty-five years of age.

Booklist 18:351 J1 '22

Cleveland p58 Ag '22

+ Lit R p602 Ap 22 '22 620w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:346 J1 '22

St Louis 20:212 S '22

COPPLESTONE, BENNETT, pseud. See Kitchin, F: H.

CORBIN, JOHN. Return of the middle class. 2 353p $2.50 Scribner

323.3 Social problems. Middle classes

22-23193

The author departs from the now current classification of society into two classes, wage earners and capitalists, and adds a third, a middle class, consisting of professional men and salaried brain workers. These, altho representing the brain, character and backbone of the nation, are the "forgotten folk" who are being ground between the upper and nether millstone of the other two classes. The book is a plea in their behalf, with much critical comment on the condition and suggestions for restoring their prestige and general well-being and for changing our laws and institutions to secure for the country the benefits of their leadership. Biographical notes and index.

Booklist 19:146 F '23

Boston Transcript pt D 23 '22 700w

"A book on the subject should have been written, and it is all to Mr. Corbin's credit that he undertook to write one. It is as much to his credit, too, that he writes with such earnestness and sincerity. The unfortunate thing is that his thought on the subject is incorrigibly superficial; that his book, in short, is so bad."

— Freeman 6:358 D 20 '22 2300w

"In Mr. Corbin's arguments, denunciations, proposals and forecasts there are doubtless many fallacies and errors, but the book contains, as surely, much of incisive criticism and indubitable truth. One can not be utterly just to it without quoting or reading it all—if even then. So read it." R. G. Fuller

+ Int Bk R p54 F '23 1806w

"The facts assembled are obstinate, and the argument is remorseless. The chapters in which Mr. Corbin takes us into the heart of his subject, discovering causes, exhibiting processes and telling us what can and should be done about it all, are nothing less than a brilliant contribution to sociology." F. H. Giddings

+ N Y Times p1 D 31 '22 2000w

"[There is] a certain supercilious estheticism in Mr. Corbin's critical mood. But it is not this that is seriously amiss. What will disturb the reader most is that Mr. Corbin is not always sure that the middle class is worth saving. Mr. Corbin would have done much better if at the beginning he had devoted several chapters to analyzing its different component groups. . . . No less serious than Mr. Corbin's failure to define his middle class is his way of treating all labor as organized labor, whereas it is doubtful whether more than 12 or 15 per cent of the wage-earners of the country belong to trade unions. Mr. Corbin devotes far too much space in his book to sarcasm at the expense of people who work with their hands."

— Springf'd Republican p12 N 17 '22 720w

CORKERY, DANIEL. Hounds of Banba. 222p $1.50 Huebsch

(Eng ed 22-10093)

These short stories, describing incidents and personalities in the great Irish upheaval, teem with the spirit and the tragedy that is Ireland. Contents: The ember; On the heights; Cowards; Seumas; The Aherns; Colonel Mac Gillicuddy goes home; An unfinished symphony; A by-product; The price.

Booklist 19:20 O '22

"Mr. Corkery is one of the rare examples of a romantic and adventurous personality writing a subtle and poetical book. Whether one is interested in Ireland or exclusively in literature, this book is equally thrilling." M. M. Culum

+ Freeman 5:498 Ag 2 '22 700w

New Repub 33:50 D 6 '22 220w

"The sketches are vividly written, and the spare touches of the author make the characters stand out all the more. One reading these sketches cannot but receive a new idea of the determined and almost fanatic devotion of these Hounds of Banba, these Sinn Féin fighters for a free Ireland. The book is a testimonial to the fact that talented writers are still springing up in Ireland."

+ N Y Times p13 My 21 '22 720w

"Most of the stories are in themselves little more than sketches. They have behind the words of them, nevertheless, the power to stir the thought of the reader and to make him see far beyond the printed lines." E. W. Osborn

+ N Y World p13 Je 21 '22 180w

"Despite a finely dispassionate attitude toward political issues, perhaps even because of it, Mr. Corkery has given the noblest interpretation we have yet received of the current of thought and feeling in Ireland to-day."

+ Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:260 Je '22

Springf'd Republican p8 Je 17 '22 110w

Wis Lib Bul 18:219 O '22

CORNELIUS, CHARLES OVER. Furniture masterpieces of Duncan Phyfe: measured detail drawings by Stanley J. Rowland. 86p il $4 Doubleday

743 Furniture. Phyfe, Duncan 22-23282

This book on an early American cabinet-maker is the result of assembling an exhibition of his work at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. Born in Scotland, Duncan Phyfe came to America in 1793, settled in New York city, and began turning out furniture from his workshop, which men of wealth and taste soon found not only of finest workmanship and design but best adapted to the interior architecture of their homes. He soon became recognized as the leading cabinet-maker of his time and a very large group of furniture is attributed to him. Against a background of social New York at the end of its Knickerbocker period, Mr. Cornelius sketches Phyfe's life and the artistic influences of his time and presents all the known types of furniture of his best period and many variations of these types. There are sixty-one half-tone illustrations and five measured detail drawings.

Springf'd Republican p10 N 13 '22 250w

CORNILLIER, PIERRE-EMILE. Survival of the soul and its evolution after death: notes of experiments. 471p il $5 Dutton [10s 6d K. Paul]

134 Psychical research. Spiritualism

These revelations from the other side were obtained through the mediumship of Reine, a young girl employed as a model by the French artist Cornillier and found by him to have mediumistic powers. One hundred and seven seances are recorded extending over a little more than a year. Most of them were taken up with revelations of conditions in the spirit world obtained through the communications of a disembodied spirit who called himself Vettelini.

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 12 '22 620w

Reviewed by Joseph Jastrow
Lit R p197 N 11 '22 740w

"'The Survival of the Soul,' is not calculated to convince the skeptic. Neither does it furnish, like 'At the Moment of Death,' authenticated data for the investigator. It is merely a book for the believer who is willing to accept without question the 'revelations' which it professes to give, and is thus of slight interest to the general reader approaching the subject from an attitude of impartial investigation."

— N Y Times p6 Jl 9 '22 1050w

COSTER, CHARLES THEODORE HENRI DE. Legend of Ulenspiegel and Lamme Goedzak and their adventures heroical, joyous, and glorious in the land of Flanders and elsewhere; tr. by F. M. Atkinson. 2v 321;323p $5 Doubleday

22-9000

"Ulenspiegel (Owlglass) was the name given to an imaginary medieval vagabond and buffoon, whose vagaries, jests, and loud practical jokes had amused German and Flemish folk for a couple of centuries, and were collected in a curious volume that went through many editions. De Coster had the happy inspiration to take this vague, freakish creature, weave his adventures and jests into his history, make him typical, broaden and deepen his character, until he became the absolute spirit of Flanders, gay, impish, tender, gallant, a flame of courage, a champion of the oppressed, and resolute to persevere until deliverance was achieved. De Coster spent ten years preparing 'Ulenspiegel,' studying the sixteenth century, the martyrdom of Flanders under Spanish rule, studying old chronicles, accounts of travel, wandering everywhere through the country."—Publisher's note

Bookm 55:416 Je '22 250w

"It is impossible to give an adequate idea of the overwhelming richness of the work, which abounds in episodes which range from the broadest popular humor to fantastic visions worthy of the imagination of Breughel and G  r  me Bosch. It is a national work, for the spirit of Flanders and Southern Belgium pervades it; but it is also a universal work, because it gives new interpretations to eternal types, heroism, heartiness, tenderness, and brutality." Emile Cammaerts

COSTER, C. T. H. DE—Continued

+ Lit R p194 N 11 '22 1700w

"A book not great for its revelation of the spirit of mankind in old Flanders, but a strongly personal book, rich in associations, which will continue to delight for a long time the few connoisseurs of literary tapestry. I believe that De Coster intended much more than this, but that he groped blindly and failed of it. Failed? It is something of a success to be resurrected and read at all after fifty years of obscurity." Edith Rickert

+ New Repub 32:sup16 O 25 '22 1350w

"The author has sat down hursting with love of country and hatred of the Inquisition, but he has not been able to keep his emotions under proper artistic control, and finally he seems to tire of his own enthusiasm. Yet he is a considerable poet and is capable of sustained passages of individual beauty. Mr. Atkinson has performed a labour of love in translating the whole of this Belgian epic, and he has done his work excellently." F. B.

+ New Statesman 20:80 O 21 '22 1450w

"No aspect of the times is omitted from this remarkable romance, no fantastic circumstance of wayfaring, or quaint detail of custom; and witchcraft, that strangest of all its obsessions, is presented with real imaginative power. Also, the lovely love-story of Ulenspiegel and his Nele, woven like a gold thread throughout, in spite of that vagabond's philanderings comes wonderfully true in the end." R. Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p3 My 21 '22 3000w

"The translation preserves the dramatic and humorous effect of the original and the adventures are truly as described in the title, 'heroical, joyous, and glorious.'"

+ Outlook 131:172 My 24 '22 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:321 Jl '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p658 O 19 '22 2050w

COTTON, HENRY ANDREWS. Defective, delinquent, and insane: the relation of focal infections to their causation, treatment and prevention; with a foreword by Adolf Meyer. (Louis Clark Vanuxem foundation lectures for 1921) 201p il $3 Princeton univ. press

616.8 Insanity. Infection. Focal. Defective and delinquent classes 22-1536

"Since 1880 the increase in the proportion of insane to the population of the country has been fourfold. Dr. Cotton who is medical director of the New Jersey State Hospital at Trenton, lays part of the blame to the theory current among those treating mental diseases that cases which do not show visible changes in the brain tissue are independent of physical changes and hence should be given 'mental treatment.' The brain is indirectly acted upon by all sorts of physical disorders, says Dr. Cotton and he urges that the physical nature of all mental disturbances must be recognized. Circulating toxins whose origin may be in any part of the body, teeth, tonsils, organs, are the most constant factor in mental disease, and this must be taken account of in treatment. The book goes into some detail regarding various infections and gives pertinent case histories as evidence of the author's contentions."—Survey

Booklist 18:219 Ap '22

"Dr. Cotton's book summarizes in simple form his distinctive psychiatric view-point and methods together with such broader aspects of mental sanitation as would have special meaning to the cultivated layman. It is a very timely book." F. L. Wells

+ J Philos 19:412 Ag 3 '22 1200w

"The book retains the direct, simple, illuminative quality of Dr. Cotton's own habit of speech." T. Q. Beesley

+ N Y Times p26 Je 18 '22 2000w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:221 My '22

Pratt p6 autumn '22

"A contribution of most remarkable value to the study of the causes of insanity and of certain forms of delinquency, as affected by physical disorders."

+ R of Rs 65:222 F '22 230w

Survey 48:220 My 6 '22 240w

Reviewed by I. S. Wile, M.D.

Survey 49:257 N 15 '22 820w

"The theme is elaborated and illustrated in a new and interesting way. Dr. Cotton is not dogmatic, and he asks his reader to make no assumptions in advance of the available evidence. But he enriches the store of evidence, and thus presents a contribution to knowledge which is at once considerable and fascinating."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p146 Mr 9 '22 580w

COURNOS, JOHN. Babel. 431p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

22-18399

"How John Gombarov learned the necessity of disguise, of hardening his features into a mask before the world which would betray him if it could read his face—how he hurled himself against the wall that circumstances—the circumstances of poverty, exile and the sad inheritance of Jewish blood—had built across his life—and how he lost himself in Babel, amid the jargon of the world, with its conflicting tongues and its search for a pure language—all this is the theme of Mr. Cournos's three novels, [of which 'Babel' is the last]." (N Y Times)

Here Gombarov's wanderings take him from Philadelphia to Italy, Paris and London, back to America for a visit and again to London where we find him at the outbreak of the war, with sympathies pro-British. Everywhere and at every turn he is thwarted in his creative desires. It is a curse that rests on all the civilized world and for which he makes the machine responsible. The machine has "warped and thwarted human beings by taking the creating out of their hands and made them mere parts, mere cogs of itself." It has produced a hectic, decadent world, full of militancy, anarchic arts, and an urge toward the primitive in both society and the arts. Thruout the story Gombarov's failures and discouragements are punctuated by the ups and downs in his love affair with Winifred Gwynne, in which he is ground between the upper and nether millstones of civilization and primal instincts.

Booklist 19:84 D '22

"The book is an essay, in fictional form, on civilization; but an essay lacking any point of view except that of an excited bewilderment." Floyd Dell

Bookm 56:346 N '22 280w

"A curious book—as curious as life itself. It is only by comparing it with the strange but not unnatural course of a human life that we can account for its construction. 'Babel' is not like any other book. It must be read to be appreciated in its unique character, but it is a very living document." D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p9 O 14 '22 1050w

"An extraordinary book, and one which spoils us for the ordinary kind of fiction."

+ Cath World 116:569 Ja '23 250w

Reviewed by Gilbert Seldes
Dial 74:100 Ja '23 560w

Reviewed by I. Anderson
Int Bk R p52 D '22 800w

"Whatever one thinks, he will have to put 'Babel' among the documents necessary for the study of the age. It is diffuse and sometimes clumsy, but it is passionately human. It presents no pattern but it does present vividly the hero's perplexities. Utterly formless it is, but perhaps formlessness is the only proper form for a story of disintegration." J. W. Krutch

+ Lit R p63 S 30 '22 1250w

"Mr. Cournos has both style and creative vision. 'Eabel' is an immense advance on his previous books; it has uncommon distinction, charm, and force." L. L.
+ Nation 115:340 O 4 '22 680w

"Let no one condemn his achievement as 'uncertain' or 'unfinished,' because so far he has done no more than aim at an ultimate conclusion and an ultimate certainty. Indeed he will give no satisfaction to those who demand the neatly rounded, brightly shining thing, but to those who ask of literature what they ask of life Mr. Cournos is giving what they seek—truth, reality, beauty, adventure, courage." Sheila Kaye-Smith
+ N Y Times p6 S 17 '22 1300w

"An author with an enviable gift for clear and precise expression, for apt and conclusive character drawing and for a refreshingly spontaneous response to impressions." Burton Rascoe
+ N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 210w

Reviewed by Anzia Yezierska

N Y Tribune p9 O 29 '22 1050w

"In its breadth and sweep and somberness there is a quality that has seldom crept into the work of an American."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 22 '22 360w

COWAN, SAMUEL KINKADE. Sergeant York and his people. 292p il $2 Funk

B or 92 York, Alvin C. 22-11521

"A character and biographical sketch of the Tennessee mountain boy who, single handed, captured a battalion of German soldiers in the Argonne forest. Many pictures of his Tennessee home country."—Booklist

Booklist 18:361 J1 '22

"The book, while tame reading in spots, is well worth space on every American library shelf." E. B. Hunter

Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p10 My 21 '22 1350w

Nation 115:22 J1 5 '22 30w

"The story is stretched to undue lengths in parts; it is graphic, faithful and interesting in others. It is good to get on more intimate terms with these flesh and blood men of the Knobs of the Volunteer State. Mr. Cowan has pictured them accurately and his story is quite worth while. Careful restraint in the writing, as if he had promised York not to gush, is one of its charms."

+ — N Y Times p2 J1 16 '22 400w

Pratt p34 autumn '22

"A vivid, authentic biography."

+ Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 1350w

COWARD, NOEL. Terribly intimate portraits. 212p il $2 Boni & Liveright

827 22-26497

From author's note and foreword to the appended glossary and press notices, including the wood-cut illustrations by Lorn Mac-naughtan, and My American diary, the book is burlesque and make-believe. Probably the fun is at the expense of some real characters hidden behind the caricatures. Some of the portraits are: Julie de Poopinac; E. Maxwell Snurge; Bianca di Pianto-Forti; Jabez Puff-water; Fürstin Lieberwurst zu Schweinen-Kalber; Jake D'Annunzio Spout; Ah! Ah!, queen of the Rude Islands.

Booklist 18:355 J1 '22

"The grease paint of burlesque is generally too thickly applied to permit the recognition of the real figures beneath. But his travesties on past and modern methods of biography are genuinely funny."

+ — Bookm 56:105 S '22 90w

"It is thin and dull and well-intentioned and generally awful."

— Dial 73:457 O '22 40w

"Now and then he strikes a shrewd blow, but somehow when he does so he creates the impression that he is pleased—something no parodist can afford. The fact is the wit is heavy and the occasional good crack is lonely as a cloud. The reason is easy to find. A parodist's first duty is to like or, at least, understand his victims. Mr. Coward, on the contrary, has a healthy middle-class contempt for anything to which the adjective exquisite may be attached. But this attitude makes it impossible for Mr. Coward to hunt his prey properly. He mops, he mows, he shoots out the lip, but he has no humor. Only jokes." Leonard Bacon

+ — Lit R p775 J1 1 '22 170w

Nation 115:22 J1 5 '22 30w

N Y Times p22 Je 25 '22 170w

N Y Tribune p5 J1 9 '22 880w

"His fictitious characters catch it hard from him, and it is fortunate for their feelings that they have no real existence. The comic illustrations have an original touch."

Springf'd Republican p10 J1 12 '22 160w

COX, GEORGE CLARKE. Public conscience; social judgments in statute and common law; with an introd. by Richard C. Cabot. 483p $3 Holt

170.7 Ethics—Study and teaching. Law 22-16446

A case book in ethics which draws its illustrations from actual and concrete experiences. Law cases make up the bulk of the book. These are simply and briefly stated, the verdicts given, and sometimes brief comments or interpretations by the author. The introduction treats ethics as a science and an art, and outlines the case method of investigating, thru a study of actual behavior, what the moral principles are upon which men conduct their lives.

"Mr. Cox has gone to the law-reports; he could find no better source. But instead of giving us the facts and the result, he gives what he regards as the court's opinion, together with such a statement of the facts that it is quite impossible to distinguish them from his interlarded judgments about them. He does not know very much law, and his statements are frequently blunders. Law and lawyers are already in evil repute, and deserve at least that their iniquities be accurately described." Max Radin

— Freeman 6:309 D 6 '22 280w

"A careful and interesting study of the final law of the land. In appearance, it is a legal textbook, but it is an extremely interesting book, and a novel treatment of an important subject." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:136 S 16 '22 150w

COX, HARDING EDWARD DE FONBLANQUE. Chasing and racing; some sporting reminiscences. 282p $5 Dutton [12s 6d Lane]

798 Horse-racing. Hunting (Eng ed 22-12212)

"The author is not a professional rider or jockey, but the scion of a wealthy, though untitled family, who inherited, from his father, a fortune sufficient for all his needs. Having imbibed in early school and university days a taste for riding to the hounds, as well as for frequenting the race courses and indulging in other forms of manly sport, Mr. Cox appears to have made these things his specialty in life; and in this well-published handsome volume, printed in England, he tells us all about it."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p4 S 20 '22 1050w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:167 S 30 '22 60w

"When he happens to remember that he is a graduate of Cambridge and a man of letters his diction becomes heavily Johnsonese, ponderously playful. But for the most part he is quite unaffected, as the language of the race track, the kennel, and the betting ring suffices. In a way it is the ancestor of the strange lingo of the modern sporting editor. And it is always racy."

COX, HARDING E. DE F.—Continued

+ — Lit R p54 S 23 '22 430w

"His reminiscences are extremely entertaining, provided that one can get over the fact that he will be humorous. On the whole, Mr. Cox's stories are best when he keeps off his human companions, and confines his attention to the lower animals, his horses and his hounds."

+ — New Statesman 19:24 Ap 8 '22 230w

"Chasing and Racing" is full of lively and amusing anecdotes connected with the author's favorite sports. Those who take a sporting interest in horses and dogs will find the book delightful reading."

+ N Y Times p22 D 3 '22 1050w

"Many famous performers of bygone days and historic events in which they took part are graphically described, and a feature of the book is its wealth of humorous anecdotes, some of which, told at the expense of celebrities of the period, read with no little relish. All considered it is a work likely to win a greater share of appreciation from the sporting community as a whole than would many books which, dealing exclusively with wood-lore or vengery, appeal only to a comparatively limited class."

+ Sat R 133:264 Mr 11 '22 720w

"Stories, some exceedingly amusing and some dull, abound in this book. He has enjoyed life to the full, and if the people who read this book will realize before they start that it is only a book made up out of the experiences of a man of the world of sport, they cannot be disappointed; and he will be pleased, for his book shows that a part of his enjoyment of life has been in giving enjoyment to others."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p135 Mr 2 '22 800w

COXON, MURIEL (HINE) (MRS SIDNEY COXON). Torquill's success. 324p $2 (7s 6d) Lane

21-21942

The facts of his birth made Torquill a social outcast, embittered his college days and made him fiercely ambitious to succeed as a writer. He becomes a popular author, wins a place in society under cover of a pseudonym and mistakes his popularity for achievement. He conceives a deep love for the sympathetic young wife of his publisher and becomes infatuated with an aristocratic beauty who marries him, not from love but to escape worse trouble, and after leading him an unhappy life, leaves him. It is from these two women that the disillusioned man at last receives the advice he needs for true success. The reader leaves him making a new start, writing to express the best that is in him without regard to the world's opinion.

"It is remarkably good in respect to character drawing. Its several backgrounds, of English country life, of British 'good' society, of the amusements of Tarascon and the commonplaces of London restaurant life, sound no false notes. The appreciation of values revealed by the novelist who writes 'Torquill's Success' proves her a brilliant woman whose sense of good art does not war with her sense of good taste." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 19 '22 600w

"This is a novel capably written and easy to read, but without marked force or distinction." H. W. Boynton

+ — Ind 108:376 Ap 15 '22 430w

"The book is all vivid—but hard."

+ — Lit R p494 Mr 11 '22 140w

"The story as a whole is a step forward, and shows interesting advances in Muriel Hine's powers of artistic creation. There are bits of very charming descriptions of rural England and of Southern France, and one's very unconsciousness of the machinery is the greatest tribute to the easy graceful style."

+ — N Y Times p18 Mr 12 '22 200w

"The analysis of poor Torquill's deficiencies is unsympathetic though keen. The minor characters are well done and there are humorous bits and graphic writing."

+ Outlook 130:606 Ap 12 '22 30w

"Miss Hine has made a real success of her hero; but most of the remaining characters are nothing out of the way. The portrait of Torquill, and Miss Hine's picturesque and enthusiastic style, are sufficient to compensate for a good deal of artificiality and burlesque, and leave a solid balance in the author's favour."

+ — Sat R 132:566 N 12 '21 240w

Spec 127:712 N 26 '21 50w

Springf'd Republican p15a My 7 '22 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p717 N 3 '21 220w

CRAIN'S market data book, and directory of class, trade and technical publications. 462p il $5 G. D. Crain, jr., 417 S Dearborn St., Chicago

659 Advertising

21-10316

"Classified list of professions, trades, and industries which offer fertile fields for merchandising. Each topic in the list is accompanied by brief data indicating the extent of the industry, and followed by a list of the journals, and directories with their advertising rates."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:21 Ja '23

CRAM, RALPH ADAMS. Towards the great peace. 264p $2.50 Jones, Marshall

304 Civilization. Social problems 22-5294

The book consists of a series of eight lectures delivered under the auspices of the Dartmouth alumni lectureships on the Guernsey Center Moore foundation for the season of 1921. In these lectures the author reviews the condition of the world since the Peace of Versailles and sets himself the task to suggest some constructive measures that can be employed in laying the foundations for the immediate future. Thruout, in the social, industrial and political organization of society, in education, art and organized religion he finds the same root to all the evils in individual character degeneration and the only hope of recovery in the spiritual regeneration of the individual and a return to the teachings of Christ.

Am Pol Sci R 16:528 Ag '22 40w

Bookm 55:534 Jl '22 150w

"In consideration of the fact that this volume sets out as a solution for the purifying of the nations of earth, and especially of America, that in these days of the Great Disillusionment we may save ourselves before we go down in ruin, it is without question the most amazing, the most courageous and the most interesting book on the subject since the days of St. Thomas Aquinas." I. W. L.

+ — Boston Transcript p9 Ap 8 '22 1600w

"Few contemporary books are more thought-provoking and morally stimulating and healthful. We fear, however, that many would not subscribe to Mr. Cram's estimate of races and race-values except under carefully defined limits."

+ — Cath World 115:685 Ag '22 270w

Reviewed by C. B. Tinker
Lit R p756 Je 24 '22 950w

"While one may disagree with almost every one of the suggestions which Mr. Cram sets forth as possible ways of reforming or helping to reform the world, one cannot help feeling that his general point of view is essentially right. He is surely right when he declares that character is 'the chief end of man and the sole guarantee of decent society.' He is doubtless equally correct in saying that 'however strange and erroneous the actual manifestation, there is no question as to the reality and prevalence of the desire for the recovery of spiritual power through the channels of religion.' Practically every suggestion that he makes and discusses is a vivid illustration of these attitudes—an illustration all the more illuminating because extreme; and in this fact lies the principal value of the book."

+ No Am 215:718 My '22 320w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:328 J1 '22

"May be recommended as a thought-provoking book for those engulfed in pessimism." B. L.

+ Survey 48:731 S 15 '22 410w
Wis Lib Bul 18:213 O '22

CRAWFORD, JACK RANDALL. 1 walked in Arden. 295p $2 Knopf

22-10549

The story, told in the first person in calm narrative style, is a minute account of a love idyl between Edward Jevons, born in America and bred in England, and an American girl, Helen Claybourne. With literary inclinations, Edward at his father's wish takes up chemistry and is sent to America to do chemical research work for the father's factory there. With much humor at the expense of American manners and customs, Edward describes his acclimatization to his native land. Then comes Helen and a rare boy and girl courtship. As his wife, Helen accompanies Edward to England where, after the birth of a daughter and four supremely happy years, a doctor's decree sends them back to America. But even the climate of Los Angeles fails to restore Helen to health.

Booklist 18:365 J1 '22

"In his first novel Mr. Crawford is obviously feeling his way. He writes humanly and simply, with a flowing and colloquial style that shows a fine sense of artistic appreciation. His use of English is admirable, never forced, never pedantic, never labored, never round. He knows how to use his tools and his materials but he lacks architectural ability. He knows how to write. He ought to find something compelling to write about."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '22 620w

"Mr. Crawford writes well but his book is rather colorless and commonplace. His hero is too contented with the ordinary run of things to be true to the characterization that the author has given him. He is too unvital for his temperament." H. W.

+ — Detroit News p8 Je 4 '22 350w

"This book has the charm and freshness of youth combined with the wisdom of maturity. It is so skillfully written, so thoroughly thought out, that I cannot believe it is a first novel. A man does not do such good work as this at the first attempt. There is not a sign of uncertainty, not a serious fault of matter or manner. If Mr. Crawford has not written, or published, much before, he has been thinking for a long time, thinking like an artist, observing like a philosopher." J. Macy

+ + Lit R p667 My 20 '22 1150w

New Repub 32:202 O 18 '22 100w

"It is decidedly an old-fashioned love story with no triangle or tertium quid to worry the reader. His characterizations are well portrayed and clear-cut and human, but just ordinarily human. It has the earmarks of something better."

+ — N Y Times p23 J1 2 '22 350w

"The very variety of its interests and the freshness and originality with which each topic is handled have a tonic effect upon the mind."

+ Spec 129:469 O 7 '22 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p509 Ag 3 '22 140w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

CRESSON, WILLIAM PENN. Holy alliance: the European background of the Monroe doctrine. (Carnegie endowment for international peace. Division of international law. Publications) 147p $1.50 Oxford

940.28 Holy alliance. Monroe doctrine. United States—Foreign relations 22-17543

"This book owes its origin to special researches among documents never before open to students in the archives of the Russian Foreign Office, made by Mr. Cresson, Secretary of the American Embassy at Petrograd, after the Revolution of March, 1917. His researches specially related to the personal dispatches of the Tsar Alexander, against whose Holy Alliance President Monroe's message of 1823 was chiefly directed."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Reviewed by M. F. Egan

N Y Times p4 N 5 '22 2600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p670 O 19 '22 70w

"A good deal of the matter in the earlier chapters is, of course, very familiar to students of the subjects, but the latter part is a useful and timely addition to our previous knowledge."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p770 N 30 '22 750w

CRESSWELL, ERNEST J. J. Sponges; their nature, history, modes of fishing, varieties, cultivation, etc. (Pitman's common commodities and industries) 126p il $1 (3s) Pitman

639 Sponges 22-15723

In this study of a little-known and interesting industry is described the nature, growth and different species of sponges, the sponge trade in ancient times, methods of sponge fishing and diving, the latest inventions in diving apparatus, sponge transplantation and culture. The last chapter takes a glance at some modern books and pamphlets which make allusion to the subject.

Booklist 19:9 O '22

CRITICAL fable; an account of the times, by a poker of fun. 99p $1 Houghton

$17 22-19742

"An anonymous author's attempt to produce a sequel to Lowell's 'Fables for Critics.' This work undertakes to subject certain poets of the hour to an acute though not unappreciative analysis."—Springfield Republican

Reviewed by Gamaliel Bradford

Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 500w

Booklist 19:74 D '22

Bookm 56:353 N '22 210w

"There is no question but that some of the soundest and truest criticisms of our contemporary poets are woven 'twixt the laugh and the pun in these pages. Equally, there is no question but that this fable, so-called, in its apparently inconsequent manner, promises more effectually to put our contemporary poetic revival in the line of great tradition with other great periods. It is a masterly gesture towards harvesting the virtues and vices of the American poets of today." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 16 '22 2750w

"There are good lines, and current notions about our poets are neatly recorded—the 'Fable' is a document—but the impression generally is of mere white paper." D. M.

+ — Nation 115:sup382 O 11 '22 260w

"Will be found to contain much excellent criticism and kindly yet accurate wit. The best way to read it is every now and then, side by side with the poets on whom it passes judgment. Then it will be found a quite valuable and often entertaining commentary." R. Le Gallienne

+ — N Y Times p2 N 5 '22 2500w

Reviewed by B. R. Redman

N Y Tribune p9 O 29 '22 850w

"Wit and fun seldom intrude. Flashes of critical judgment do appear here and there in the labored attempts at rhymed verse, but the commentary, when once we come to it after a tediously prolonged introduction, is too much concerned with the author's personality and too little with his work."

CRITICAL fable—Continued

— + Springf'd Republican p10 S 27 '22 250w

CROCE, BENEDETTO. History; its theory and practice; tr. by Douglas Ainslie (European lib.) 317p $3.75 Harcourt

901 History—Philosophy 21-27478

"Traces the development of the philosophical aspects of history from the Graeco-Roman period to the present. Rather for the student of history and philosophy than for the general reader."—Booklist

"Croce's work is a well-informed and understanding examination of the implications of historiography." F: J. Teggart

+ Am Hist R 28:288 Ja '23 1300w

"This is a thoughtful and a thought-provoking book, the product of an acute mind working at real problems. If Signor Croce's treatment of topics of historical criticism is superficial and shows unfamiliarity with its actual practice, he is strong and penetrating in relation to the more difficult problems of historical synthesis." C: H. Haskins

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ja '22 420w

Booklist 18:113 Ja '22

"Though every once in a while I am troubled by philosophic quirks of the author and outraged by incomprehensible pedantries of the translator, my sympathies in the combat are frankly with Signor Croce. He does his job well." C: J. H. Hayes

+ Freeman 4:521 Mr 15 '22 900w

"The book is intensely instructive, and suggests many a fertile field for investigation. Many a single page might furnish the stimulus for a monograph." H. L. Stewart

+ Ind 109:142 S 16 '22 1400w

"It is a pity that his book is not half as long and twice as clear. Few will even try to read it as it is, and still fewer will be patient enough to grasp its full meaning. While many of his pages are luminous and enlivened with rare wit and satire, many others recall the wearisome involutions of Hegel, to whom the writer appears to owe much. One feels, too, that the translator, while evidently sympathetic and in general competent, has not succeeded as he might have done in somewhat reducing the obscurities. One could imagine a number of the worst passages being broken up into shorter sentences and restated in more commonplace words." J. H. Robinson

— + Lit R p558 Ap 8 '22 1300w

"This book is well worth the painstaking study it requires. If I have here and there questioned its results it is less from the desire to pick flaws in a fine work than in obedience to an injunction of Croce himself. In another work, he compares the reviewer who is content with paraphrasing an author to the German audience which frequently add their vocal efforts to the music of the orchestra." Preserved Smith

+ Nation 114:750 Je 21 '22 2000w

Reviewed by Carl Becker

New Repub 30:174 Ap 5 '22 840w

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield

N Y Times p15 Jl 16 '22 1800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:136 Mr '22

CROCE, BENEDETTO. Poetry of Dante; tr. by Douglas Ainslie. 313p $2 Holt

851 Dante Alighieri 22-5239

An introduction and companion to the poetry of Dante by Italy's foremost living critic. Contents: The young Dante and the Dante of the Comedy; The structure and poetry of the Comedy; The Inferno; The Purgatorio; The Paradiso; The character and unity of Dante's poetry; Historical survey of Dantean criticism; Index.

Booklist 18:355 Ji '22

Bookm 55:430 Je '22 120w

"The work is a remarkably lucid application of Croce's famous aesthetic: all art is lyrical, and technique either does not exist or coincides with art itself."

+ Dial 73:114 Jl '22 100w

"Face to face with Dante's poetry, Benedetto Croce shows himself no less hard-headed and self-sufficing than is his wont. The ideas of other writers are swept aside; and thus the field is left clear for the operation of fitting Dante to the Procrustean bed of the Crocean philosophy. Considerable portions of Dante himself disappear in the process." H: B. Fuller

Freeman 5:282 My 31 '22 1400w

"There are two criticisms which I think may fairly be made of this most rewarding volume. First, the author, although his purpose is to emphasize the distinction between the poetical and the non-poetical elements of the Comedy, fails to give his readers any clear statement of what he considers poetry to be. Again, it is doubtful if the line separating the poetical from the non-poetical in the Comedy runs between structure and poetry." C: A. Dinsmore

+ Lit R p176 N 4 '22 1100w

Reviewed by Hi Simons

N Y Tribune p4 Jl 30 '22 1000w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:25 Ja '23

St Louis 20:219 S '22

"It is a book that everybody can read, not being surcharged with æsthetic philosophy, and it affirms the substantial taste of the ingenious reader who seeks for poetry, the beauty of emotion rendered in the best words, and nothing else."

+ Sat R 134:108 Jl 15 '22 650w

"Croce's detailed criticism of 'The Divine Comedy' is trenchant and clear-sighted. Throughout the study, in spite of his evident reverence for Dante, Croce never does him the disservice to condone his failures. In consequence, we are given an unobscured impression of Dante's essential greatness as a poet."

+ Spec 129:211 Ag 12 '22 1900w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p130 Je 29 '22 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p531 Ag 17 '22 2100w

CROFT, TERRELL WILLIAMS, ed. Steam power plant auxiliaries and accessories. (Power plant ser.) 447p il $3 McGraw

621.18 Steam-boilers 22-10855

"Practical textbook dealing with selection, installation, and maintenance. Well illustrated."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:494 N '22

CROSS, GEORGE. Creative Christianity; a study of the genius of the Christian faith. 164p $1.50 Macmillan

230 Christianity 22-3321

Christianity is constantly in process of change just as the life of humanity is always changing. That which seemed at one time indispensable to the religious life of the people has to be set aside in the interest of that very life and replaced by other more truly representative forms. It is in this creative force of the Christian faith, says the author, that its living power lies. His book is a contribution toward reshaping the inherited forms of the faith so that the coming generation, brought up under the changed ideas current today, may have a form of Christianity better fitted to its needs.

Booklist 19:143 F '23

Boston Transcript p4 Je 11 '22 290w

"Is worked out with great insight and suggestiveness."

+ J Religion 2:332 My '22 70w

"The suggestiveness of Dr. Cross's book is out of all proportion to its modest size. It is a sign of a new constructive era that theologians have passed beyond the Ritschlian attempt to make thecology immune from historical criticism, and are beginning to make positive and constructive use of the social interpretation of history which is so fruitful in other realms of thought." G. E. Smith

+ J Religion 2:553 S '22 1150w

CROWNFIELD, GERTRUDE. Shadow witch. 253p il $2 Dutton

22-17976

"Long ago, in the Land of Shadows, lived the Shadow witch, the one beautiful and loving creature in all that dim and darksome land that lies away from the Land of Fire, and between it and the Chimney Back. Close to her domain is the great Plain of Ash, where the giant, Curling Smoke, rises, where the crafty Ash Goblin lurks, where the boisterous Wind in the Chimney swoops down from out the Chimney Mouth. Near by, also, in his Cave of Darkness, her brother, the Wizard works his enchantments. [This is the story of] how the Shadow Witch came to leave that grim land with its evil fairies, and why it is that she now dances with happiness amid the good fairies of the Fire, in the Land of Glowing Embers."—Preface

"Lengthy and dull, although sometimes prettily told and made more vivid by charming drawings."

— + Lit R p213 N 11 '22 20w

"The story is told with some degree of literary felicity and should please most of its juvenile readers."

N Y Times p10 N 19 '22 70w

CRUMP, IRVING. Og, son of fire. 198p il $2 Dodd

22-18648

In the time of a great volcano, back in prehistoric days, a young boy of the hairy people became separated from his tribe, and lived with two wolf cubs as companions for some months. He found in the hot lava from the volcano cooked horse flesh which seemed to him much better than the raw flesh he was accustomed to, and he set out to learn how to bring about this delicious state in meat. In the end he discovered how to manage fire and named himself Og, in honor thereof. And when after many encounters with wild animals and the unfriendly tree people, he finally found his own tribe he brought to them the knowledge he had gained.

Booklist 19:91 D '22

"A story which while written for boys will appeal to young hearts no matter of what age. A word should be given the cleverly and artistically interpretative illustrations."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 11 '22 360w

CRUTCH, PHINNEAS A., pseud. Queen of Sheba; her life and times. 191p il $2.50 Putnam

817

22-13600

A burlesque biography of the great queen which draws its travesties from Margot Asquith, Lytton Strachey, the "colymists," Hermione, Opal Whiteley, the "Sheik," "Sheban" inscriptions, and other sources.

Bookm 56:232 O '22 50w

Daily News Rec p17 S 26 '22 330w

"When a jest occurs to him the earth trembles. The raucous yell of the third-rate comedian who hopes to put it over by starting the laughter himself was never more painful. But there are a few brilliant pages. Don Marquis and F. P. A. are so well hit off that one fears they did it themselves. The take-off on 'The Sheik,' with which the work closes, is perhaps the best thing in the book." Leonard Bacon

— + Lit R p775 J1 1 '22 280w

"A dry chip off that juicier old block 'The Cruise of the Kawa.'"

— Nation 115:76 J1 19 '22 20w

R of Rs 67:111 Ja '23 40w

St Louis 21:12 Ja '23

"Much that is humorously not so may be learned about the great queen and the mixture of ancient Egyptian with modern slang has the true humorous touch. There are also many clever plays upon old saws."

+ Springfield Republican p10 J1 12 '22 130w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Man in the twilight. 379p $1.90 Putnam [7s 6d C. Palmer]

22-14575

"An immense paper-pulp plant on the coast of Labrador furnishes the material centre of the action and the scene of most of the story's development. This huge property belongs to one man, Leslie Standing, who had got the money with which to create it some years before the story opens by outwitting another man in some Wall Street deal. The other man felt he had been robbed and his vengeance trails Standing's footsteps and waits its chance. The story tells what form his desire for vengeance took, how it was long fought off by Standing and his friends, why conscience finally benumbed in Standing his will to fight and what he tried to do with his life after he had turned the great plant over to two friends and how these two worked to carry out his plans."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:53 N '22

Boston Transcript p6 S 6 '22 200w

"Some of the folk are genuinely picturesque, with individuality a little above that of the usual outdoor hero or bad man. 'The Man in the Twilight' is a good story of its type."

+ Lit R p15 S 9 '22 130w

"Mr. Cullum handles with skill the mechanical structure and development of his story. In so far as that goes, and it is no small thing, his tale is interesting and calculated to hold the attention of readers who enjoy that kind of a novel. But there is not much to be said for his characterization."

+ — N Y Times p19 Ag 27 '22 500w

Reviewed by W: Harris

N Y Tribune p4 Ag 27 '22 180w

Sat R 133:152 F 11 '22 300w

Spec 128:246 F 25 '22 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p78 F 2 '22 70w

CUMMINGS, EDWARD ESTLIN. Enormous room. 271p $2 Boni & Liverlight

940.47 European war—Prisoners and prisons 22-9403

The enormous room is a French prison camp in which the author, a young American of the Norton-Harjes ambulance corps, was confined on an entirely groundless suspicion and without trial. In narrating the horrors and the unsanitary condition of the camp and the needless brutality of the officials and guards, the author veils his bitterness under humorous and somewhat unrestrained language. Much of the book is devoted to skilfully drawn pen-pictures of the officials and guards and the author's fellow-prisoners.

"Though he smiles back at his experiences from almost every page, these flickering evidences of a sense of humor fail to make the unpleasant incidents less terrible. One wishes the book were fiction that its truth might be denied."

Bookm 55:536 J1 '22 60w

"At times there is a rare charm and exquisite finesse in portraiture that runs off again into brutal inchoate raving, that dissolves into a maze of meaningless word sounds. . . It is dynamic and revolting, yet sincere and purposeful, not always tinged with personal bias. With the vehemence of a wrathful god, details that are more suited to the pages of a Social Survey are hurled at the reader; yet there are passages that have almost the suggestion of a lyric note."

Boston Transcript p7 My 17 '22 380w

CUMMINGS, EDWARD ESTLIN—Continued

"We agree that 'The Enormous Room' is a literary achievement, but we believe the author could have succeeded as well in his undertaking without being so gratuitously filthy." D. K. Lamb

+ Detroit News p8 Je 4 '22 850w

"There is about this sort of writing a gusto, an intense sensitiveness to men and women and colours and stench and anger and love that 'annihilates the surrounding tumult without an effort.' When a book like The Enormous Room manages to emerge from the morass of print that we flounder in, it is time to take off your new straw hat and jump on it." J: Dos Passos

+ Dial 73:97 J1 '22 2500w

"You will read the book. You can't put it down. It contains buried in the filth high-lighted bright spots of humanity; sympathetic flashes from the souls of some of the weird rabble in the room. It is such a reaction as probably any artistic temperament would show to like treatment." S. S. A.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 O 22 '22 1000w

Ind 108:455 My 13 '22 330w

"There is no whine in this book. It is not even the story of a grievance. It is simply the story of a nasty experience, brightly and vividly told. . . This is not the sort of book to give your parents, unless you feel that it is time for them to learn about a seamy side of a system to support which they are willing to have us die. But it is the sort of a book that should be read if this world is to be ordered a bit more intelligently. And as such 'The Enormous Room' wins its place in the literature of social revolt." J: F. Carter, Jr.

+ Lit R p667 My 20 '22 750w

"Mr. Cummings has written a terrible book, but it is a profoundly beautiful book; it is among the most beautiful that I have ever read. In 'The Enormous Room' we view the tragedy Man, with man in the victor's role. . . This book is not an indictment of war, or of prisons, or of the French Government, as has been variously suggested. It is at once an indictment and glorification of the incredible animal Man." B. R. Redman

+ Nation 114:691 Je 7 '22 1100w

"A queer, strong, defeated book, all smeared and spattered with genius. I feel [after reading it] as if I had been rooting long, desperate hours in a junk heap, irritably but thoroughly pawing over all sorts of queer, nameless garbage, rotting tin cans, owl's skeletons, the poisonous fragments of human apparatus rusting into morbid greens, yellows, oranges, and yet as if after prodding about among these and other objects best touched only with a stick, I had come away at last with some lumps of curious, discolored but none the less precious metal." Robert Littell

+ New Repub 30:320 My 10 '22 1450w

"The plain fact about the book is that it is written by a sensitive, imaginative boy, undoubtedly touched with genius, who suffered much injustice, and whose mind is tinged by it. Certainly, he should not be condemned for what he has written. It is highly important, however, that he should be understood. Apart from its crudities, its mistaken, disgruntled attitude and its bad writing, the book is quite worth while." P. L. Masson

+ N Y Times p10 My 28 '22 1700w

"A remarkable narrative. As a work of natural and spontaneous realism, it surpasses most, if not all, of the self-conscious realism we have been getting in the novels."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 J1 25 '22 650w

CUNNINGHAM, EUGENE. Gypsying through Central America. 259p il $7 Dutton [21s Unwin] 917.28 Central America—Description and travel

The author and his friend the photographer journeyed, sometimes on foot, sometimes on horseback, and always in a spirit of holiday adventure, from Puntarenas on the Pacific side of Costa Rica thru Nicaragua, Honduras and Guatemala to Puerto Barrios on the Caribbean sea.

Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 20w

Lit R p279 D 2 '22 380w

"It is, precisely like all the average travel narratives, because its descriptions are in disconnected fragments. . . We only see things within the range, so to speak, of physical vision, while the author's ignorance of natural history makes the description of the less settled districts very insipid. 'Gypsying through Central America,' in fact, is a normal book of travel, no better and no worse than its brethren."

— Nation and Ath 31:744 S 2 '22 250w

"Whimsical, entertaining and instructive. The book suggests the sort of observations that might be made by an experienced and brilliant reporter but conveys the idea of dalliance in which reporters are not privileged to indulge."

+ N Y Times p7 D 24 '22 230w

"Is brightly written and contains a quantity of interesting though perhaps superficial information."

+ Sat R 134:482 S 30 '22 60w

"The book is full of agreeable prattle and pleasant photographs, but we are concerned only with the exaggerated tourist pleasures and discomforts, not with the true joys and sorrows of the pioneer."

+ Spec 129:274 Ag 26 '22 390w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p538 Ag 24 '22 900w

CUNNINGHAM, JOSEPH THOMAS. Hormones and heredity; a discussion of the evolution of adaptations and the evolution of species. 246p il $6 Macmillan [24s Constable]

575 Hormones. Heredity SG22-24

"Mr. Cunningham is a well-known English biologist and a prolific contributor to biological and evolutionary discussion. He believes that in some way and at some time there will be found a satisfying mechanism to provide for the carrying on to the germ cells of the influence of modifications of the general body cells acquired during the lifetime of the animal individual, so that heredity may be partly determined by environment; or, in other words, so that there may be an inheritance, in some degree, of acquired characters. And he thinks that the recent discoveries of the profound influence which the hormones (secretions of the ductless glands and other glandular structures) exert on the animal body, both structurally and physiologically, indicate that the time is now and the way is the way of the hormones. Hence his major title: Hormones and Heredity."—Lit R

"With such a title and author, the book in hand ought to be of much profit to the reader, and of intense interest—at least to those at all interested in evolution, heredity, and adaptation. As a matter of fact this profit is hard to obtain because of the too polemic character of the book, which reveals the strong prejudice of the author, while the natural interest of the reader in the general subjects is not enhanced but abated by the fatally dry and unnecessarily technical character of the presentation." Vernon Kellogg

+ Lit R p198 N 11 '22 1400w

"The author often discusses subjects in a way which would lead the reader to suppose that they had not been fully discussed by others, whereas really they have been thoroughly thrashed out elsewhere (for instance, the subject of the rôle of the sex-chromosomes in sex-determination, or the origin of dominant mutations). There are, however, interesting facts in the book, and interesting points of view. It deserves to be read by naturalists who like to see the gleanings of an energetic mind." J. S. Huxley

+ Nation and Ath 30:657 Ja 28 '22 450w

"The facts and views put forward cannot be neglected by investigators of the problems of heredity, and the book as a whole requires careful consideration. It is of particular value in bringing to notice a theory which was previously known to an inadequate degree, and, although modifications will doubtless need to be made, the various facts and theories contained in the book must not be forgotten in the formation of a complete theory of heredity."

W. M. Bayliss

+ Nature 109:35 Ja 12 '22 1600w

"This treatise is by no means easy reading for the uninitiated. But many interesting scientific facts are brought out in the presentation of the writer's argument which in themselves will repay the reader for his perseverance. We feel that Mr. Cunningham has made a very useful contribution to the current conceptions of heredity."

+ Spec 128:531 Ap 29 '22 560w

"Even if readers find the constructive part of his book weak, they will rejoice in the fruits of his clear exposition and acute criticism. 'Hormones and Heredity' is the work of a naturalist of great knowledge and of a candid and ardent mind."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p164 Mr 16 '22 1600w

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, ROBERT GALL-NIGAD BONTINE. Conquest of New Granada; being the life of Gonzalo Jimenez de Quesada. 272p il $4 Houghton [15s Heinemann]

986 Colombia—History. Ximenes de Quesada, Gonzalo 22-17953

"Gonzalo Jimenez de Quesada was as great as were Pizarro or Cortéz, confronted equal perils and endured far greater hardships, conquering an empire just as interesting as was Peru or Mexico, far more remote and inaccessible. . . . No man that is a man can read the history of the Spanish conquest of the New World unmoved. Of all the stirring episodes of the strange epic, there is none stranger than Quesada's life. He and the conquest are so bound up together that to write either of them is to write both. He was the conquest, and the conquest both made and marred him, but still left his name one of the first in all chronicles. As a conquistador he is the equal of Pizarro and Cortéz, and far less blood-thirsty than was either of them." (Preface) Portrait, map, appendices, list of works consulted, index.

"Not wholly satisfactory, as regards either style or subject-matter. There is a noticeable tendency to philosophize about the obvious and to lug in miscellaneous information. There are occasional misstatements and too few definite references to authorities. These, however, are only minor blemishes. His work as a whole is commendable." I: J. Cox

+ Am Hist R 28:364 Ja '23 300w

Booklist 19:155 F '23

"Mr. Graham has done his work admirably. The sources he has consulted have all been written in Spanish, many of them being publications contemporary with the life of his nearly subjects. There is nothing dry or musty in his style. The story of this conquest is as exciting as any novel which tells of those stormy times. All that an able writer can do to bring this figure back upon the stage of history Mr. Graham has done." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 11 '22 850w

Freeman 6:166 O 25 '22 340w

"Mr. Graham's narrative, finely written while he could depict Quesada following a rough Indian trail, falls into a nerveless, shambling English when he has to treat of the misgovernment of New Granada by Alonso de Lugo and Quesada's unhappy old age. He is not a Parkman, who could make the governmental chapters of the Old Régime in Canada as interesting as the explorations of La Salle; but the first half of this volume is as fine as anything he has ever written." Allan Nevins

+ Lit R p178 N 4 '22 1300w

"The only fault to be found with this fascinating volume is the absence of maps. The one sketch map in the beginning of the book is inadequate and should either be supplemented or exchanged for one of greater detail." J. K. A.

+ New Statesman 20:52 O 11 '22 1050w

R of Rs 66:446 O '22 80w

"Fascinating narrative. As a true story of adventure the book is much to be commended."

+ Spec 129:215 Ag 12 '22 500w

"Most readable book. When we say that a book is Mr. Cunningham Graham's, we also say that it has insight, romance in the most honourable sense, and style. He sympathizes with the spirit of his man, he has studied his subject and he knows the land. Moreover, he can make us see what his own eyes have looked on."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p421 Je 29 '22 2100w

CURTIS, WINTERTON CONWAY. Science and human affairs from the viewpoint of biology. 330p il $3.50 Harcourt

509 Science—History. Biology 22-12564

In tracing the influence of science on the development of mankind the author's purpose is to set forth its humanistic and spiritual aspects rather than to dwell on the material transformation and the conquests of physical nature that have resulted in modern civilization. His illustrations are therefore chiefly drawn from biological science for the purpose of pointing out its possibilities in the eugenic advancement of mankind. The three parts of the book are: The history and significance of science; The science of biology; The present importance of science. Index.

Reviewed by L. L. Bernard

Am J Soc 28:341 N '22 500w

His account of ancient and mediæval science is not so novel or interesting as is his explanation of recent researches in his own field, where marvelous progress has been made in understanding the mechanism of heredity, growth, generation, and regeneration. Here the reader will find the perplexing theory of Mendelian inheritance adequately elucidated by description and diagrams."

+ Bookm 56:232 O '22 150w

Reviewed by E. J. Beck

Detroit News p11 Ag 13 '22 260w

Reviewed by Lynn Thorndike

Educ R 65:134 F '23 800w

"It would be ungenerous to emphasize the minor shortcomings which the book exhibits, since the ambitious aim—to bring together in a single readable volume a glimpse of the panorama of scientific development since the dawn of history—disarms criticism. Certainly the reader closes the book with a remarkably clear and true picture, presented in bold strokes, of some of the triumphs of science and their relation to human affairs."

+ Lit R p306 D 9 '22 380w

"A systematic, though neither profound nor creative, examination of the place played in human affairs, past and present, by science. The job was worth doing and has been well done."

+ Nation 115:286 S 20 '22 50w

"Of the three parts of Professor Curtis's book the middle one is the only one that falls within the author's special competence, viz., zoology. Here we have a fairly clear statement of some of the principal problems of modern biology—perhaps most satisfactory on the problem of heredity. In the other two parts of the book, devoted respectively to the history and to the present significance of science, the author's complacent dogmatism is not mitigated by firsthand knowledge." M. R. Cohen

+ New Repub 32:255 N 1 '22 1800w

New Statesman 20:supxviii D 2 '22 30w

"At the present time, when ignorant prejudice is spreading like a cancer, it is heartening to discover a scientific thinker who can and will attack the malignant growth with knowledge, skill and courage. 'Science and Human Affairs' must assuredly rank as one of the most instructive and stimulating contributions to the thought of the day." Austin Hay

+ N Y Times p14 Jl 2 '22 2050w

St Louis 20:241 O '22

CURTIS, WINTERTON CONWAY—Continued

Sat R 134:926 D 16 '22 250w
 "He devotes what might seem a disproportionate amount of space in this book to cytology and the theory of organic evolution. Actually, however, these are the most valuable parts of his treatise; when he deals with more general subjects he is either trite or muddled."

+ Spec 129:771 N 25 '22 150w
 "Will make interesting and profitable reading both for the scientist and for the general reader."

+ Springfd Republican p10 Ja 19 '23 270w

Reviewed by J. K. Hart

Survey 49:sup192 N 1 '22 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p751 N 16 '22 90w

"The book as it stands cannot be recommended, save in its excellent biological section, for the use of those who are as yet unable to treat it critically."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p850 D 21 '22 1100w

CURTISS, PHILIP EVERETT. Mummies in mufti. 370p $1.75 Century

22-18101

Arnold Bellsmith, a scion of one of the old moneyed aristocracy of New England, with none of the sporting qualities supplied by a vigorous constitution, is threatened with a nervous breakdown from sheer ennui. One of his doctor's prescriptions is that he interest himself in a young actress, also one of the doctor's patients and a member of a musical comedy on tour. At once Bellsmith finds himself taking part in some of the jollifications of the actors and, on further advice of the doctor, impulsively buys the whole show. Too late he finds out that it is a losing concern on the point of dissolution. With the collaboration of the actors he recasts the piece, inserts musical numbers of his own composition and with the sacrifice of much labor and money makes a success of it and, incidentally, of himself.

Booklist 19:122 Ja '23

Cleveland p85 N '22

"Has all the earmarks of a first novel, and a most amateurish one. The dialog is hopelessly weak."

— Int Bk R p54 D '22 450w

Lit R p73 S 30 '22 330w

"Written entertainingly and with decided narrative skill. The characters are portrayed vividly, and yet naturally, the background of a small New England town is depicted with convincing reality, and the plot is built up logically and consistently." S. A. C.

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 180w

"It's done in such good humored fashion. He touches each situation merrily, imaginatively; his enjoyment of life pops from every page."

+ Springfd Republican p7a N 26 '22 360w

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Country beyond. 340p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

22-15205

In the wilderness beyond the north shore of Lake Superior, "Jolly" Roger McKay lived the life of an outlaw, having sinned against the letter of the law to obey the instincts of humanity. He plays a game of hide and seek with the Royal mounted police, by turns outwitting them and being outwitted. The constant companion of his hopes, fears and hardships is his faithful dog Peter, who also shares with him his love for Nada, the girl of Cragg's Ridge whose love and loyalty no outlawry could dampen. When, after a long and perilous separation, Roger and Nada are reunited and married, it is Peter who, unwittingly, helps the police to hunt them down for the last time. But it is only for the purpose of handling Roger his pardon.

Booklist 19:53 N '22

Cleveland p80 S '22

"Nobody who loves a dog can fail to rejoice that Peter's life story—or the most interesting part of it—has been adequately written up."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 O 8 '22 240w

"Slush on the trail." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 109:137 S 16 '22 200w

Lit R p34 S 16 '22 140w

"It requires but small brain to absorb 'The Country Beyond,' but so skillful is the author in handling his material and creating a certain suspense that even people with brains will find themselves slipping along through the tale with some degree of interest. After it is put down, however, cool reflection will bring up wonderment as to why they stayed to the finish."

+ N Y Times p15 Ag 6 '22 650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:532 D '22

Pratt p35 autumn '22

Spec 129:469 O 7 '22 20w

"The plot is somewhat made-to-order and the characterization is rather stereotyped, but the book will give mild amusement to those who do not take it too seriously."

+ Springfd Republican p7a O 29 '22 100w

D

DAGGETT, STUART. Chapters on the history of the Southern Pacific. 470p il $5 Ronald press

385 Southern Pacific railroad 22-4598

The object of the book is to give, for the first time, an account of the important political and business problems connected with the history of the Southern Pacific railroad. Every available document has been consulted, most of them from the collections of the Bancroft library of the University of California; the Hopkins railway library of Stanford university; and the State library at Sacramento. The book has many maps and diagrams, illustrations and an index.

"Professor Daggett has written a comprehensive history of the railroad. He discusses the spectacular episodes but he also explains and analyzes the other aspects of the railroad development which are less well known but important, none the less. . . . The reader of this book feels that the author has made a real contribution to railroad literature." C. O. Fisher

+ Administration 5:230 F '23 950w

Reviewed by I. Lippincott

Am Econ R 12:638 D '22 680w

Booklist 18:348 Jl '22

"Dr. Daggett's book is not a 'thriller,' and does not purport to be so. It is a book written by a business instructor, for business men." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '22 1000w

Cleveland p77 S '22

Engl News-Rec p1006 Je 15 '22 1½col

"Strongly distinguished by a freshness and a sense of contact with the present. On the other hand, historical students may regret that Professor Daggett has given so little attention to the beginnings of railroads in California, and none at all to the schemes for a southern route for a railroad to California, so vigorously agitated in the years before the Civil War. There is no formal bibliography, the maps are inadequate, and the arrangement of topics is at times confusing; but the book is well documented and is scholarly in method." St G: L. Sloussat

+ Pol Sci Q 37:519 S '22 500w

R of Rs 65:417 Ap '22 130w

DALRYMPLE, LEONA (MRS C. ACTON WILSON). Fool's hill. 352p $1.75 McBride

22-19218

Paul Northrop hated all women—except his mother. His two grandmothers and the high school sister came in for some especially sarcastic remarks, uttered from the sophisticated height of the high school junior. Then the boyish Minnie Quinn dawned upon his vision and "he knew that it was the sort of love that comes but once in a life time." All summer Paul lived in a species of hitherto unknown heaven, but it proved a time of peculiar torture for his family. Once started up Fool's hill there was no stopping him, and when the adored Minnie proved faithless there were Coralie, Jolla and Margaret and others, many others. But Paul was essentially a normal, healthy boy and for all his seriousness and romanticism there are hints of a manly future.

"It is wholly normal and delightful and wholesome comedy." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 10 '23 960w
Int Bk R p61 F '23 430w

"Amusing at best, always on the surface, and wholesomely insignificant at its worst. It should be popular, for the peculiar and incomprehending patronizing of adolescence is apparently a source of continuous delight to many readers."

+ Lit R p229 N 18 '22 300w

"It would, perhaps, have been better if the author had ended the book with the culmination of the Minnie Quinn episode. After that, the humor seems, at times, a trifle forced and the situations rather labored."

+ N Y Times p8 N 12 '22 420w

"Her book should be really valuable to parents, as instruction. Others may read it for amusement. It is very easy to read, anyhow. The style is brisk and graphic." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 22 '22 750w

DANE, CLEMENCE, pseud. (WINIFRED ASHTON). Will Shakespeare; an invention in four acts. 188p $1.75 Macmillan [6s Heinemann]

822 Shakespeare, William—Drama 22-1233

In the first act Shakespeare appears, at the age of twenty, in his cottage at Stratford with Anne Hathaway. Domesticity and Anne's love irk him and he resolves to join some travelling actors and go to London. The heartbroken Anne tells him that when the victory is won, when he is too old and weary for anything but peace, he is to come back to her. She will wait. During the next two acts Shakespeare in London is winning fame, the favor of Queen Elizabeth, and the love of Mary Fitton, lady-in-waiting to the queen. But Mary throws him over for Marlowe whom Shakespeare kills in jealous rage. In act four, Elizabeth, knowing Shakespeare's story, shows herself magnanimous and bares her heart to him. Love has passed her by too, leaving her nothing but resignation and work—work for England. She charges him with the same obligation and crowns him her heir—as she rules men so must he rule souls. The curtain falls on Shakespeare, once more at work and haunted by the voice of Anne.

Booklist 18:228 Ap '22

"Were it not for the unnecessary challenge that Miss Dane arouses in her readers I should proclaim 'Will Shakespeare' a splendid play; it contains some haunting lines; it has the real 'authoritative note of poetry' in it. Yet I venture to say that had 'Will Shakespeare' been some unnamed genius of just as warm a passion and just as rich a golden tongue Miss Dane would have had a better play. As it is, it is far from negligible. But it has in it some inherent elements of failure for the stage. For it contains purple patches that in themselves are declaratory." M. J. Moses

+ Lit R p411 F 11 '22 1100w

"At times, Miss Dane's play shows life and passion; but as a whole it is less Elizabethan than romantic and more poetic than human.

One does not get genuineness by importing a modern mood into a former time as if it were a means of understanding the past."

+ No Am 215:574 Ap '22 650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:236 My '22

St Louis 20:220 S '22

"In so far as it pretends to present us with the real Shakespeare it must be admitted a failure. Miss Dane's Shakespeare has certain Shakespearean characteristics as they appear in Frank Harris's admirable book, 'The Man Shakespeare,' but the Shakespeare of Miss Dane's play is only a lay figure dressed with Shakespeare's authority; he is not a living, convincing personality, much less a personality of genius."

+ Spring'd Republican p13a Ja 29 '22
950w (Reprinted from Lond Mercury)

The Times [London] Lit Sup p841 D 15 '21 1050w

"The play has great moments and dull ones; a sweep of poetry to meet a fine sweep of situation through entire scenes and again a laggard quality both in manner and material. It is a play worth writing and well worth reading. But it is rather too large a canvas for a playwright to fill who has not more experience than Miss Dane in the development of plot and character."

+ Theatre Arts M 6:173 Ap '22 80w

"A very spirited performance." O. W. Firkins
+ Yale R n s 12:194 O '22 250w

DANIEL, HAWTHORNE. In the favour of the king. 293p $1.75 Doubleday

22-8239

A story of romance and adventure in the sixteenth century. Don Francisco Vasques de Coronado, a favorite of the king of Spain, after having gambled away his entire fortune, is appointed governor of New Galicia, a province of New Spain in Mexico. Immediately upon his arrival in Mexico City, he falls in love with Dolores, daughter of the viceroy and in order to put himself on an equal footing with his rival Gorgoza, the craftiest and wealthiest man in New Spain, he gets himself appointed to head an expedition in search of the "Seven cities of Cibola" and their fabulous wealth. After three years of direst hardship and danger only Francisco and the priest are left of the entire army. On their return to Mexico City, Francisco, thanks to the machinations of Gorgoza, is thrown into prison and shipped in chains back to Spain for execution. But the ship that bears him away also carries Dolores, disguised as a page with a message to the king.

"The plot is coherent, but its archaeological value is limited, and it smacks more of modern times than mediæval in its dialogue and scenery. But it is evident that the novelist is a lover of nature, for his little descriptions of scenes are well sketched."

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 13 '22 240w

"A book that is undoubtedly interesting in spots, but which leaves much to be desired. Such a masterpiece could have been made of this theme that one is sorry the author could not have taken more time or expended more literary qualities on it. This is a book that should be judged from a literary viewpoint, for it belongs (in subject matter although not in execution) to the great romances of the world."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 30 '22 180w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 21 '22 100w

DANIELS, JOSEPHUS. Our navy at war. 390p il $3 Doran

943.45 European war—United States. United States—Navy. European war—Naval operations 22-4441

The Secretary of the navy, 1913-1921, tells the story of the United States navy from the moment of our entry into the war to the end. He follows the transportation of the more than two million troops to Europe, the operations in French waters which enabled troops and supplies to reach French ports in safety, the planting of the mine barrage across the North sea, the work of the submarine chasers, the conspicuous service of the marines, the development of submarine detection devices, and the work of shipbuilding. There are chapters on President Wilson as a strategist, on naval aviation, on radio, on recruiting for the navy and on fighting the profiteers.

DANIELS, JOSEPHUS—Continued

"Mr. Daniels's book is graphically and chatily written, with a wealth of anecdote, and copiously, and interestingly illustrated. The book possesses many of the merits and most of the weaknesses of an intentionally popular work; but it has evidently been too quickly thrown together, and is too inaccurate to be accepted in any manner as history."

— + Am Hist R 28:169 O '22 130w

"A vivid and interesting account. The most complete and readable popular account yet written concerning the service rendered by the navy in the great crusade."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:520 Ag '22 160w

"Mr. Daniels tells his story admirably. Every page of the narrative is fully and keenly alive, and there is not a dragging paragraph or sentence in it. . . In taste the book is excellent."

J. G. de R. H.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p10 S 3 '22 900w

"Nothing that bears on the work of the navy in the slightest degree is neglected in this book. There is no room for any more facts or encomiums. It may not be history, but it makes lively reading."

+ N Y Times p16 Je 11 '22 2450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:34 Ja '23

Pratt p30 autumn '22

St Louis 20:276 N '22

DARGAN, OLIVE (TILFORD) (MRS PEGRAM DARGAN). Lute and furrow. 140p $1.75 Scribner

811

22-26759

This book of lyric poems hails from the author's North Carolina farm and is strongly tinged with her love of nature and the soil.

Booklist 19:11 O '22

"The volume marks steady progress from the earlier singing—a progress not yet, we are sure, at its apogee. There is still the occasional blurred line; but the level is high." Clement Wood

+ Bookm 56:348 N '22 300w

"A book of lyrical song which comes to us so enrapturingly after a too long silence with the poet." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 17 '22 1500w

"Lyrical throughout, drawing their inspiration from the nature of the mountains, the poems boast of much more than a mere 'prettiness.' There is an understanding of life, of tragedy, of happiness, which is likely to leave the reader with something far more valuable than a picture." C. A. Hibbard

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p12 Ag 20 '22 1050w

"The book is in very large measure a record of rather bathetic struggles with insoluble questions and in her preoccupation with enigmas she has grown careless of form. Much of the work is haphazard and slovenly. And the pity of it is all the more poignant because her ideas are dictated by a generosity and sweetness not so common that we can afford to take them for granted." Leonard Bacon

— + Lit R p4 S 9 '22 550w

Nation 115:sup382 O 11 '22 70w

"Like all poets, she needs to be more careful in choosing themes germane to her talent, and to wait jealously for their true rhythm." R: Le Gallienne

— + N Y Times p9 S 17 '22 1450w

"A criticism is often levelled against American poetry in that it is out of touch with life. It is distinctly untrue of Mrs. Dargan. A new note is creeping into her work—a critical note, which refuses to accept the things that are as the ideal Arcadia, and questions if there be not something rotten nearer than Denmark." Clement Wood

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ag 6 '22 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:27 Ja '23

Springf'd Republican p6a D 3 '22 660w

DARGAN, OLIVE (TILFORD) (MRS PEGRAM DARGAN), and PETERSON, FREDERICK. Flutter of the goldleaf; and other plays. 114p $1.50 Scribner

812

22-26759

Both of the authors have contributed one playlet to this collection of four and collaborated in the other two. All the plays embody advanced scientific and sociological thought in poetic form. "The flutter of the goldleaf" shows a young student on the verge of insanity from over-concentration on one obsessing idea. In "The journey" an ardent young Chinese social reformer is so in love with his young bride that he is about to turn his back on his life work, when the girl, realizing the loss to a great cause, sacrifices herself to it by taking her life. "Everychild" is a poetic fancy representing the clown, Cho-Cho, dreaming of a "fool's paradise" which one day will come true, viz. a better, brighter saner and healthier world for every child. "Two doctors of Akragar" clothes modern ideas on mental healing in ancient Greek garb.

Cleveland p67 S '22

"They are even more didactic than her earlier plays, and quite as undramatic in treatment. Dr. Peterson's co-operation has not strengthened her flabby, diffuse dialogue or done away with the underlying sentimentality which insidiously disintegrates her work." M. L. M.

— Freeman 5:436 J1 12 '22 210w

Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 20w

"The plays in this volume are all of delicate and fine feeling, but vary in dramatic workmanship. 'The Journey,' by Mrs. Dargan alone, is by far the best thing in the collection. Exquisite in poetic imagery, clearly visualized, and legitimately dramatic, it utilizes the material of 'New China.'"

+ Lit R p493 Mr 11 '22 270w

"It is not often that we find poetry and psychiatry mixed, either in real life or the drama, and the result should be interesting, especially as both the authors' names are so well known and so highly esteemed in their respective fields."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 7 '22 320w

DARK, SIDNEY. Outline of Wells: the superman in the street. 200p il $2.50 Putnam [5s L. Parsons]

B or 92 Wells, Herbert George 22-8995

The author characterizes Wells as a crusader and a fierce critic of his own generation; a man with a mission; a preacher with a gospel which he has embraced after many experiments and after accepting and abandoning many creeds; a vehement personality, with amazing courage, and a genius for expression. In the course of the summary Wells is compared with other writers of prominence, his message to the world and his chief works are analysed, revealing the man behind the written page. The book has an introduction by Heywood Broun and caricature portraits of Joseph Conrad, Arnold Bennett, Anatole France, G. K. Chesterton, Hilaire Belloc and Wells.

Booklist 19:50 N '22

Bookm 55:535 J1 '22 100w

Cleveland p88 N '22

"Mr. Dark's chief quarrel is with H. L. Mencken whom he quotes not infrequently. These quotations, incidentally, form the only vital bits of critical analysis in the entire work. The author is not spiteful, however, and his comparisons are interesting."

— + Dial 73:457 O '22 80w

"The author of the present study does not succeed in finding many new things to say about Wells. But he says the necessary things forcibly in the brisk, studiously inelegant manner of current literary journalism." H. W. Boynton
+ — Lit R p714 Je 10 '22 550w

"Mr. Dark is an able practitioner of a very honourable type of journalism. We can define it best by a negative. It is not high-brow. It is the opposite of high-brow. It avoids the faults, the failures, the fatuity, that height of brow entails; equally, it lacks the delicacy after which the high-brow aspires. It is exposition, not revelation." G. G.

+ — New Statesman 19:46 Ap 15 '22 1000w
"There is a magnificence about this title, but within the book. . . none." E. R. Redman
— N Y Tribune p4 J1 23 '22 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:508 N '22

"A slight but entertaining study. It might be profitable to read Mr. Dark's book for the quotations alone."

+ Spec 128:791 Je 24 '22 130w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 15 '22 480w
Wis Lib Bul 18:253 N '22

DARLINGTON, WILLIAM AUBREY. Through the fourth wall. 256p $4 Brentano's [12s 6d Chapman & H.]

792 Drama. Theater (Eng cd 22-19992)

Essays on plays, players and the stage, by the dramatic critic of the London Daily Telegraph. Some references to American plays recently produced in England are included.

"Sound judgment and apt illustration make 'Through the Fourth Wall' both readable and distinguished." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 30 '22 560w
Nation 115:sup390 O 11 '22 350w

"Sometimes, to the highly critical eye, the judgment is more benignant than illuminating."

— New Statesman 19:304 Je 17 '22 720w

"Banality such as this falls between two stools. The fastidious will have none of it, and it is not florid enough for the Alfs. Yet there is plenty of matter in the book which only needed the antiseptic of style to be worth preserving."

+ — Sat R 133:526 My 20 '22 720w

"The signal feature of these articles is the genial candour of their author. Mr. Darlington's qualities are those of common sense and capable humanity combined with the expertise of the man who knows his work."

+ Spec 129:88 J1 15 '22 310w

DARROW, CLARENCE SEWARD. Crime; its causes and treatment. 292p $2.50 Crowell
364 Crime and criminals 22-18873

The author holds that scientifically speaking there are no such words as "crime" and "criminal"; that human behavior is not a matter of free will but of cause and affect; that given the same conditions the same result will follow forever; that all punishment for the purpose of causing suffering, or growing out of hatred, is cruel and anti-social; that the only justifiable attitude of society towards the transgressor is one of self-defense. Instead of attempting the moral reformation of the criminal he would increase his knowledge and add to his experience thereby helping him to build up restraining rules of conduct. Besides a thoroughgoing revision of our present penal institutions he would aim to prevent future crime by adjusting a child's environment to its heredity.

Booklist 19:108 Ja '23

Bookm 56:355 N '22 120w

"From Mr. Darrow one would not expect a conservative book on crime and its causes, yet we see little in his thesis that is startling and very little that is new. It is the swift strokes of reasoning on each of his subjects that make Mr. Darrow's book of especial value. Certainly we find nothing sentimental or maudlin about it. With much that he says enlightened opinion will agree, while certain statements may not be so universally accepted. Still it is far from being the radical book which Mr. Darrow's reputation might lead the reader to expect."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 D 9 '22 290w

Cath World 116:566 Ja '23 500w

"A book of real value. To one interested in the human problem the book is of value because of its clarity. Mr. Darrow tells us in non-technical English what the psychiatrists and criminologists have had to coin new terms to convey."

Stagg Within
+ Lit R p46 S 23 '22 340w

"He does not write over the heads of his readers or write down to them. He sits back in his easy chair and talks with them, using the same adroit simplicity with which he persuades a jury into at least a tolerance of ideas somewhat strange and disturbing, but appealing to the best of human nature. Thus he has written a dangerous and most entertaining book which will do no one any harm and will make many a man a more useful, charitable human being. A valuable Appendix to the Ten Commandments."

Donald Richberg

+ New Repub 32:339 N 22 '22 950w

Springf'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 330w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p571 S 7 '22 180w

DART, EDITH. Sareel. 318p $2 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d P. Allan]

22-12018

A Dartmoor story of the idyllic type. Sareel, workhouse born and bred, but of gentle and refined instincts, at sixteen hires out as servant to a farmer's wife on a lonely moorland farm. Overworked and ill-treated, she yet finds compensation for her beauty-loving nature in her love for the moors. A summer boarder at the farm, an impressionable Cambridge youth, leaves her with dreams for the future, but failing to hear from him, she marries another city man who has come to live on the moors and who chivalrously offers her marriage to rescue her from her cruel employer. She remains apathetic toward her husband but he straightway falls in love with her. After some months of marriage her first lover's intercepted letters are discovered and she flies to him, only to find that his mood toward her has changed. During convalescence from a serious illness she awakens to a realization of the greater love that has come to her and goes back to her husband and her moors.

Booklist 19:20 O '22

"As an English country story, with excellent insight into character, and a very exceptional appreciation of the beauties of the English landscape, 'Sareel' is admirable. Miss Dart is not a slipshod writer. She has an honest story to tell and tells it honestly and skilfully. In short—a novel of excellent quality."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 19 '22 230w

"The plot is not new. The beauty of the book lies in its clear-cut character drawing, and in its alluring reticence."

+ Dial 73:580 N '22 100w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Ind 109:108 S 2 '22 130w

"Most readers, particularly those who dislike stimulation, will commend the book as a healthy, sincere effort."

+ — Lit R p779 J1 1 '22 130w

"A pleasant but not especially noteworthy novel." J. W. Krutch

+ — Nation 115:sup384 O 11 '22 540w

"On the whole, a touching and winning story."

+ New Repub 31:365 Ag 23 '22 150w

"It is a pleasantly told little story. Unreal as it is, and some of the very numerous descriptions of Dartmoor are well written."

+ — N Y Times p23 J1 2 '22 220w

"A rather charming yet a disappointing book. It has so very many possibilities, and its author so nearly achieves success, and yet elusively misses it every time. The dialect is very excellently and accurately done, and is not dragged in enough to be tiresome; the style varies from a rather charming descriptiveness to a distressingly sentimental verbosity." Constance Black

DART, EDITH—Continued

+ — N Y Tribune p5 J1 16 '22 540w

"Marked with sincere workmanship and sound spiritual psychology." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 132:119 S 20 '22 160w

"The gradual development of the girl's character is well done, but the end of the book is perhaps not quite convincing."

+ — Spec 124:871 Je 26 '20 40w

"A simple and pretty idyll... Runs on quite conventional lines; but the writer's sympathy and delicate fancy make it worth the telling."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p305 My 13 '20 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:271 D '22

DARTON, FREDERICK JOSEPH HARVEY.
Soul of Dorset (Eng title Marches of Wessex). 352p il $5 Houghton

914.233 Dorsetshire, England 23-585

The book is designed primarily to show the fitness of Dorset for walking tours, it contains more of history than of description. The plan of the book is to combine in each chapter three things—a sketch of the main tendency of English history for the epoch covered by the chapter, an account of the local manifestations of that history in Dorset, and a description of the places, within the compass of a reasonable day's walk, in which some remains of the epoch dealt with are to be observed. Illustrated with photographs and sketch maps.

"To those of us who long for a breath of wide moorland air this volume comes as a great and beautiful joy. There is in it an exquisite leisure. It has been written as the relaxation, the labor of love, of many years, and is the record of excursions into peace. Nor is it only excursion. It is history as well." J. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 23 '22 850w

"A wonderful book. It is as packed with antiquarianism, social, political and economic history, literature, geology, landscape, and good writing as any of their several specialists could devise, and still it is not written for them. In some mysterious way, it appeals intimately and even poignantly to every reader who is none of these things, but has a more or less intelligent eye for the good and sweet things of life, for the way the centuries have twisted themselves into their present shape, for ironies and pities, for the doubtful progress of mankind, for the face of England seamed and furrowed, and for its fairness." H. J. M.

+ Nation and Ath 32:159 O 28 '22 1050w

"There are some pages which are too sentimental, and where the style is rather too precious. But Mr. Darton is fundamentally sincere, and it is because of his sincerity that, wherever he takes us on one of his 'reasonable day's walks,' his places and his people are all alive. Mr. Darton, in a word, makes you feel Dorset. He does not ask you to feel that it is better than Devonshire or Yorkshire, but only that it is rural England and very good in itself." C. M. L.

+ New Statesman 20:218 N 25 '22 1100w

"Truly no lofterer in the byways of English literature could find so many tempting blooms in so short a space as are to be found here. Every page is enriched by an imagination studiously fed with a wide and intimate historical knowledge. The twenty years spent by the author in compiling the material for this book must have been years made happy by a sane, deep-seated inspiration."

+ Spec 129:sup536 O 21 '22 410w

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 3 '22 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p644 O 12 '22 2200w

DAUGHERTY, JAMES SHARKEY. Sheet-metal pattern drafting and shop problems. 173p il $2.50 Manual arts press

621.79 Sheet metal work 22-13993

"Adapted for vocational, trade, technical and high schools or wherever pattern drafting and shop work are taught to apprentices. (Sheet metal worker, 1922)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Am Lumberman p58 Je 24 '22 %col

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:563 D '22

"Clearly presented. A number of special problems give added value to the book. It can be used very effectively for the purposes for which the author states it has been published, namely, as a textbook for trade schools and high schools, or as a reference for draftsmen, shop foremen, and metal workers who are engaged in laying out patterns for general sheet-metal work, heating, ventilating, cornice, skylights, and heavy plate work." Robert Woellner

+ School R 30:735 D '22 400w

DAVEY, HENRY NORMAN. Guinea girl; a melodrama in three acts together with the incidental music, here presented for the entertainment of the curious. 295p $1.75 Doran [8s 6d Chapman & H.]

22-8712

Monica Van't Hoff, an officer in the Woman's army auxiliary corps, refuses the love of Captain Paul Bellamy. He goes off to Monte Carlo and there meets a certain Yvonne Quesnoy, a woman of the demi-monde. He becomes infatuated with her and their doings and the gay life of Monte Carlo entertain till the story ends. Paul finally becomes disgusted with life in general and decides to devote himself to the more serious matter of earning a livelihood.

"Mr. Davey tells the story with blithe enthusiasm and a candor amazing for even these candid days, lighted, sometimes sardonically, sometimes amusingly, by an ironic humor which bubbles or simmers as the case may be."

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 17 '22 260w

"'Guinea Girl' is delicious reading; sparkling and human, it is a swiftly moving, entertaining story written in a brilliant, intelligent manner."

+ Detroit News p8 Je 4 '22 270w

"It is the effortlessly brilliant flow of the narrative, the live breezes of pleasantly satiric observation behind that light things up. This melodrama is cynical, but never cheap or at all ill-natured; it is effective in its episodic treatment of an airy and somewhat daring theme which could not stand consecutiveness."

+ Lit R p746 Je 17 '22 140w

"Mr. Davey is a gay ironist. But under his gaiety there is the true humanist's appreciation of the inherently tragic situation of man. . . . He knows what man is like and what literature is like and his book is to be heartily commended to those who hear the true music of the world and have no futile desire to tamper with the score." Ludwig Lewisohn

+ Nation 114:698 Je 7 '22 300w

"A book that is on the borderline between the light romance and genuine literature. Mr. Davey is not as big a man as his book suggests at odd times, but he shows potentialities, and there is no reason why he should not put himself among the authentic literary figures of his day in England."

— + N Y Times p19 My 7 '22 250w

N Y Tribune p8 My 21 '22 280w

"Mr. Norman Davey has a quality that is rather rare in these days, a sense of form, a gift of construction which enables him to begin and to finish a story satisfactorily."

+ Sat R 132:594 N 19 '21 400w

"He displays his material in fidelity to an original and happily conceived pattern and stands outside it and makes it serve artistic ends. His language has verve and brilliance, and, thanks to its deftness, scenic backgrounds are alive with atmosphere. His mind shows the nonmoral detachment of the true ironist, but his philosophic commentary, whether implied or expressed, seldom descends to mere cynical flippancy and never to impudence."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a J1 2 '22 500w

"Mr. Norman Davey has a humour that may well be called spritely. He has an engaging turn for embroidering the preposterous and the farcical with somewhat elaborate literary trimmings, quotations from the classics, philosophical reflections and clever descriptions of attractive scenery, and for reproducing in a few deft touches the faces and foibles of the more obvious characters in the human comedy. In fine, the thing is an airy soufflé compounded of the most expensive ingredients. The ingredients are Mr. Norman Davey's to use as he pleases: we cannot help feeling that he might, if he chose, compound something a little more satisfying."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p733 N 10 '21 600w

DAVIDSON, GLADYS. Stories from the Russian operas. 238p il $2 Lippincott [7s 6d T. W. Laurie]

782.1 Opera, Russian

The stories of the operas are presented in clear and readable form and may be read as dramatic tales in themselves, picturing Russian scenes, character and legend. Contents: Prince Igor, by Borodin; "Mademoiselle Fifi", by Cui; The stone guest, by Dargomijsky; Boris Godounov, Khovanstchina, by Moussorgsky; Aleko, Francesca da Rimini, by Rachmaninov; A night in May, Ivan the terrible, Mozart and Salieri, The golden cockerel, by Rimsky-Korsakov; The demon, by Rubinstein; The nightingale, by Stravinsky; Eugene Onegin, Iolanta, The queen of spades, by Tchaikovsky.

N Y Times p15 D 24 '22 280w

"Some excellent photographs of Chaliapin and other Russian singers add to the interest of Miss Davidson's book. She has conscientiously summarized the librettos of the better known Russian operas from Dargomijsky's Stone Guest to Stravinsky's Nightingale. We feel, however, that the reader would be better occupied if he read those works of Poushkin, Gogol and de Maupassant from which many of the librettos are adapted."

+ — Spec 129:879 D 9 '22 60w

DAVIES, W. H. Hour of magic; and other poems. 34p il $1.50 Harper [7s 6d Cape] 821

"Mr. Davies is a mystic. If there is any clear meaning in the world, all true poets are mystics. What is essential in their utterance they draw from waters whose springs they know not and whose final seas are beyond their guessing. Mr. Davies has more often than we realize passed over the border of that land where things are still perceived by fleshly eyes."—Sat R

"The collection impresses the reader with a quality of uniform strength and beauty." W. S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 20 '23 1200w

"Mr. Davies has had to appear in slender volumes, not because he is a slender poet but because he writes so little during any given year. Much of what he writes is of the best. In these thirty pages there is perhaps an unusual amount of fatness for him. But in plenty of places we come again upon the old, tiny charm, the sharp, sweet, wet, bright phrase wherein an image is perfectly served by the cadence, wherein a cadence catches something from the image." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 116:125 Ja 31 '23 350w

"One wonders indeed a little if his very untentiousness is not ever so slightly a pretence. Still, his little butterfly pieces are hard to pin down. On the whole, Mr. Davies gives the impression that he is becoming too facile and serene, too settled down in happy marriage with his Muse." F. L. L.

+ — New Statesman 20:116 O 28 '22 250w

"He refines his thought and his stanza to the utmost—being exceeded in this only by Housman. It must be conceded that Davies does not always penetrate life so deeply as Housman—on the other hand, he is not so constantly concerned with the thought of death. If one were to search for a single word to sum up this little book it would be 'serenity.'"

+ N Y Times p2 Ja 28 '23 300w

Sat R 134:638 O 28 '22 750w

"He has a certain type of freshness and verve and a lack both of profound feeling and of self-consciousness which attach him not to any particular age, but to a well-defined little company whose members are to be found in most ages. Perhaps the ages of Chaucer, of Spenser and of Herrick will afford us the greatest numbers of companions for the 'Super-Tramp' turned poet. . . . There is a great deal that is full of his peculiar quality of directness and charm in the new book." A. Williams-Ellis

+ Spec 129:601 O 28 '22 900w

DAVIS, FRANKLYN PIERRE, comp. Anthology of newspaper verse for 1921. 138p $2.50 The compiler, 1519 Cherokee st., Enid, Okla.

811.08 American poetry—Collections

"The present volume follows the plan first adopted in compiling the Anthology. It is an attempt to show the sentiment of the people generally concerning current events. By collecting the more distinctive verse published in the newspapers representing all parts of the country, it is hoped to record the thoughts of the great mass of the people, and make available to the student of history a source of information regarding those things that seemed of most interest during the year. The selections are made with this thought in view, not because of literary merit alone. . . . Newspaper verse is interesting. It is a barometer of the sentiment of the people in all parts of the country."—Preface

Bookm 56:231 O '22 110w

"The volume is rather better than that of the year before." W: R. Benet

+ — Lit R p820 J1 22 '22 40w

Reviewed by R: Le Gallienne

N Y Times p6 S 3 '22 2500w

DAVIS, FREDERICK C. Making your camera pay. 96p $1 McBride

778.5 Photography, Commercial 22-19715

A practical little book which will answer many questions of the commercial photographer—what to photograph, what not to photograph, where to sell, how does it pay, etc. The author shows that there is an almost unlimited market for salable photographs and possibilities for profitable returns in press photography. One chapter gives a survey of the needs of magazines which use photographs, by class. Another tells how to send the photograph to market and another explains copyrights and other rights.

Booklist 19:73 D '22

DAVIS, JAMES JOHN. Iron puddler; my life in the rolling mills and what came of it; with an introd. by Joseph G. Cannon. 275p $2 Bobbs

B or 92

22-15389

"It is an interesting record of the rise of a poor, strong, God-fearing Welsh youth from puddler's helper to Cabinet member. It is the story of a man and not of an agile-minded statesman. The author tells his story breezily, in the language of the stump speaker confident of his power over the crowd. One sees how he rose to leadership in his union, in local politics out in Indiana, in fraternal circles. He is honest, magnetic, merry, straightforward, untroubled by philosophic doubt. Life is an oyster that yields to strong fingers the pearl of success. Those who fail to crack it, nevertheless, should be satisfied in having had the opportunity. Though millions appear unsatisfied, that is their fault; they have been contaminated by the Bolsheviks; they are 'rats' in the hayloft of industry. Capitalism is all right; the country and its institutions are all right. Nothing needs changing except the attitude of Labor, which either hasn't been brought up properly or has been subverted by evil influences."—Lit R

DAVIS, JAMES JOHN—Continued

Booklist 19:50 N '22

Bookm 56:356 N '22 140w

Boston Transcript p7 Ag 25 '22 1300w

Cleveland p95 D '22

Reviewed by J. E. LeRossignol

Ind 109:170 S 30 '22 1050w

"Whoever expects to find any contribution to the interpretation of labor in this volume will be disappointed; but from the standpoint of human interest it is a real document, the growth-record of a warm, compelling personality." Arthur Pound

— + Lit R p2 S 9 '22 700w

"His best is attractively breezy and spontaneous, slangy, energetic, often epigrammatic, with an occasional touch of something almost poetry. But as he goes on in life, becomes trusted by labor and capital in the tin mill, is elected to local office, makes money, his book becomes less and less attractive. He does not share the common weakness for the underdog. 'I give three cheers for the winner'. . . Secretary Davis frankly admits that he thinks poorly of the Higher Life. 'This long necked jargon must go,' he says. Even, we suppose, if the alternative be roughnecked jargon. He is proud to confess himself a Low Brow: 'Intellectuals' is a name that weak men, crazed with envy, give to themselves.'" Robert Littell

— + New Repub 31:340 Ag 16 '22 2000w

N Y Times p16 O 29 '22 1350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:514 N '22

Pratt p33 winter '23

R of Rs 66:669 D '22 300w

St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

Springf'd Republican p10 O 25 '22 250w

Survey 49:sup210 N 1 '22 130w

DAVIS, JEROME DWIGHT. Russian immigrant. 219p $1.50 Macmillan

325.7 Russians in the United States 22-18226

The most important conclusions from the author's observations of the Russian immigrant can be summed up as follows. Nothing is done by employers or the government to assimilate them. Coming here with a cultural heritage totally at variance with ours, they remain isolated and out of touch with American life. Their home life is unsanitary and they are worse off in matters of health and recreational activities than they were before. Religious and educational forces do not reach them. They are exploited and tyrannized over by industrial authorities. They become disillusioned and embittered. An appendix presents the European background and native characteristics of the Russian immigrant. Bibliography.

"This book will present to an inquiring mind a mass of well-analyzed statistics and a valuable bibliography." Nathan Asch

— + Nation 116:75 Ja 17 '23 350w

"Mr. Davis has written a book which has quite as much to do with America as with the Russian immigrant. While it gives us a good deal to think over about the Russians, the most profitable thinking we can do as a result of reading it will be about ourselves. A number of books have been written in the last few years to encourage such thought in any who care to entertain it. To these books Mr. Davis has added an excellent volume, careful, restrained, thoroughly documented, all the more persuasive, when he is describing our long list of ignorances, injustices and cruelties toward the immigrant, for being animated by sincere regret rather than the triumphant malice of other critics of the 'melting pot.'" Robert Littell

+ New Repub 33:180 Ja 10 '23 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:10 Ja '23

R of Rs 66:560 N '22 110w

"It should be of very special value in promoting a more intelligent and sympathetic understanding of the new complications in the problem of Americanization, which have resulted from the revolution in Russia."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 22 '22 480w

"Unfortunately, the presentation of material is somewhat stereotyped in form. One senses the elements of a thesis rather than a written challenge. However, we must not lose sight of the fact that Mr. Davis has completed a pioneer task. No other volume exists on the subject. But without doubt the most important contribution of the volume is its excellent accumulation and fearless presentation of the facts involved in the treatment of Russians by the government of the United States." Ruth Crawford

+ — Survey 49:258 N 15 '22 900w

Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

DAVIS, JEROME DWIGHT. Russians and Ruthenians in America; Bolsheviks or brothers? with an introd. by Charles Hatch Sears. (Racial studies—New Americans ser.) 155p il $1 Doran

325.7 Russians in the United States. Ruthenians in the United States 22-14728

The book is published under the auspices of the Interchurch world movement. The author has studied the conditions of the Russians and Ruthenians in America from every aspect; their economic, social, educational and religious condition and their relations with the American people. He finds that they are almost completely isolated, a constant prey of economic exploitation and government injustice and that nothing is done to Americanize them spiritually, to make them feel that the country is worthy of loyalty and sacrifice because they love it. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. E. Park

Am J Soc 28:485 Ja '23 90w

Booklist 19:108 Ja '23

"For the purposes of the lay student this little handbook represents a brief but zealous survey, with only a shade of condescension toward other Americanizing agencies outside the church."

+ Bookm 56:644 Ja '23 50w

J Religion 2:660 N '22 30w

"There is an enthusiasm and a first-hand quality about this book that the subject needs, and too often, does not get. . . The chapter entitled Relations with the American People is of immense importance. Mr. Davis has come down to the proverbial brass-tacks; he has given much valuable information on the social and industrial situation of the Russians, and he has backed his statements with example after example. It is to be regretted that he has not been able to do as well for the Ruthenians as he has for the Russians, a failure which he himself remarks." E. H. Bierstadt

+ New Repub 33:231 Ja 21 '23 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:475 N '22

Pratt p9 autumn '22

St Louis 20:205 S '22

"The treatment, though limited by the nature of the undertaking, is sympathetic; and the book serves as a useful introduction for ministers and social workers who would know more of their foreign-born neighbors.

Survey 48:531 Jl 15 '22 40w

DAVIS, MARY GOULD, comp. Girl's book of verse; a treasury of old and new poems. 289p $2 Stokes

821.08 English poetry—Collections 22-20556

"Mary G. Davis has compiled a selection of poetry of personal interest to girls in the teens, basing it upon her own natural appreciation of poetry and her intimate experience with girls in library clubs and story hours. Dorothy Canfield has written the introduction."—Bookm

Booklist 19:91 D '22

"A book which supplies a very real need in books for girls."

+ Bookm 56:203 O '22 50w

"A beautiful anthology. May suffer some limitation in its audience because of its name; as a matter of fact it is a brief but admirable selection of old and new English poetry, which may be enjoyed by anybody, old or young, girl or boy, man or woman, as long as he or she can care at all for our best poetry."

+ Ind 109:334 D 23 '22 90w

"The delightful part about this anthology is its sincerity. All will be loved by the mother or father reading aloud and by girls for whom they have been collected."

+ Lit R p206 N 11 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:35 Ja '23

Pratt p26 winter '23

"The selection is sufficiently diverse to induce larger study of the poets whose writings have been drawn upon for the contents of this inviting volume."

Springf'd Republican p6a D 3 '22 150w

DAVIS, OWEN. Detour; a play. 122p $1.50 Little 812 22-11468

The drudging but still aspiring wife of a poor farmer, Helen Hardy, bends every effort of her resolute will to secure to her daughter the opportunity for self expression which had been denied herself. To this end she saves and scripps that Kate may go to New York to study art. With a thousand dollars saved, her hope seems about to be realized when of a sudden it is dashed to the ground. A visiting artist looks at Kate's best painting and sees nothing in it but the conventional schoolgirl water color. The hard earned savings are swallowed up in a new land deal of her husband's and Kate remains at home to become a farmer's wife herself.

Booklist 19:11 O '22

"An example of sheer realism, written with sincerity and conviction, and with a minimum of external manipulation of action for stage effect." M. J. Moses

+ Outlook 152:620 D 6 '22 160w

"This three-act play depends neither upon characters nor situations for its interest. All these it has in plenty, together with good dialogue and humor, but Mr. Davis shows rare penetration into the life of everyday Americans and their problems of existence."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 3 '22 180w

Wis Lib Bul 18:215 O '22

DAVIS, SHELDON EMMOR. Technique of teaching. 346p il $1.40 (7s) Macmillan

371 Teaching 22-2466

"Detailed consideration is given to six elementary-school subjects, spelling, reading and literature, composition and grammar, arithmetic, history, and geography. In each case the discussion includes a statement of the principal aims and problems involved, and special emphasis is placed upon the psychological facts with which the teacher should be familiar. The discussion is enriched with concrete material in the form of illustrations and devices which have been found helpful in teaching the subject. At the close of each chapter is a list of exercises to be used in testing the suggested devices by principles explained in the text."—El School J

Booklist 19:36 N '22

"The book will be found valuable for use in methods classes as well as for reference by those engaged in teaching. Its principal value lies in the great amount of concrete material presented." N. B. Henry

+ El School J 22:552 Mr '22 800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p293 My 4 '22 20w

DAVIS, WILLIAM STEARNS. Short history of the Near East: from the founding of Constantinople 330 A.D. to 1922. 408p il $3 Macmillan

949.6 Turkey—History. Mohammedanism 22-23804

"The book covers the history of southern Europe and the Levant from the founding of Constantinople in 330 A. D., to the fall of 1922 considered under four main headings—"The Christian Empire at Constantinople," "The Rise of Islam and the Saracens," "The Turkish Penetration of Europe," "The Turkish Retreat from Europe." Mr. Davis is professor of history in the University of Minnesota."—Springf'd Republican

"Professor Davis here unravels, with complete grasp of the factors and remarkable skill in unravelling them, that tangled maze of political and race interests which has come to be associated with the Near East. Gifts of literary style make the whole narrative a brilliant performance and well adapt it for general study." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 23 '22 850w

"A scholarly treatise. There is probably no better treatment of the subject obtainable by the general reader."

+ R of Rs 67:110 Ja '23 130w

Springf'd Republican p10 D 16 '22 120w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY WILLIAM. Vanishing point. 352p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk. 22-7210

Philip Hindwood's daring adventures in the interest of Santa Gorlof engulf him in the intrigues of war-torn Europe. He is an American railway magnate, knowing little about women but he suddenly discovers he is capable of reckless chivalry. Gorlof, a beautiful Eurasian, is consumed with the desire for revenge against an Anglo-Indian system which has made her an outcast. She is a fanatic who will stoop to anything to gain her ends, and her lovers are many the love of her is often fatal. One adventure after another follows in swift succession. The pictures of Europe are vividly drawn.

Booklist 18:365 Jl '22

"Mr. Dawson has frankly shirked the issue, It is impossible to see how anyone can see anything logical or convincing in the outcome. Emphatically this book is not Coningsby Dawson at his best." D. L. M

— Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '22 840w

Cleveland p50 Ag '22

"The novel is a good representative of its type; still, we would rather see Coningsby Dawson as the author of a different kind of book."

+ — Lit R p674 My 20 '22 270w

"Mr. Dawson has striven to write the typical E. Phillips Oppenheim novel and gotten away rather successfully with it. And such being the case, it is rather futile to point out that his art has perceptibly deteriorated. . . If the reader is essentially a literary reader, one who finds it hard to swallow the heroics of the Oppenheim prescription, he will be rather aghast at the strained thrills in 'The Vanishing Point.' He will find there not the Dawson he expected, but another Dawson, who has popularized himself tremendously and upon whose work is the mark of Cosmopolitan Magazine standards."

+ N Y Times p14 Ap 23 '22 650w

"Beautifully, movingly and powerfully written is 'The Vanishing Point.' In places it rings like the Prophet Ezekiel warning of the coming of desolation. The descriptions of the gray masses, hunger-driven, with famine swinging DAWSON, CONINGSBY WILLIAM—Continued about them in ever-widening circles, is unforgettable."

+ N Y Times p19 My 14 '22 650w

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 23 '22 110w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 S 7 '22 170w

DAY, HOLMAN FRANCIS. Joan of Arc of the north woods. 350p $2 Harper

22-20346

Rufus Craig is in the North woods trying to buy up all the timber for the Comas Consolidated Paper Company. The smaller lumber men struggle against the greed of the large corporation. Many of them refuse to sell out, and there is a feud started in which Lida Kennard, the Joan of the story, takes the lead for the independents. Craig tries by every foul means to ruin the men who will not sell but in the end Lida wins the day after some violence and intrigue, thru which runs the inevitable thread of romance.

Booklist 19:158 F '23

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 27 '23 900w

Lit R p184 N 4 '22 150w

"An entertaining and sufficiently plausible tale. It has plenty of incident and several exciting scenes."

+ N Y Times p18 O 29 '22 380w

DEAMER, DULCIE. Revelation. 256p $2 Boni & Liveright [8s 6d Unwin]

22-7532

A tale of Jerusalem during the reign of Tiberius Caesar. There is a deeply religious note thruout the book which graphically describes the days when Jesus went about the streets healing the sick and restoring the dead to life. The dancing girl Astarte is sold to Herod and her first dance in public attracts Valerius whom she despises, but she is rescued by David who loves her and recognizes her childlike innocence. She dies in David's house of a poison given secretly by a rival, but she is brought to life again by Jesus. After more dramatic adventures Astarte dies in David's arms.

"A venture in the same direction as 'Barabas' and 'Ben-Hur'; but we are reluctant to classify it among those two popular works. It is free from the flagrant errors in which they abounded, and is, indeed, informed by a real effort at understanding the social life of Jerusalem during Pontius Pilate's procuratorship."

+ Ath p71 Ja 21 '21 90w

"Its people are totally unrelated and without influence upon each other. For all its power it does not touch the emotions. It is graphic but not stirring, significant but not thought-provoking. The author is concerned too much with the panorama, the surface of life and too little with character and character's many depths. Accent on minutiae and on the broad contagion of the senses, showing the voluptuousness of that ancient period—are the book's undoing."

— N Y Times p16 My 7 '22 1000w

"A good picture of Jerusalem in the days of Tiberius Caesar. It would perhaps be in better taste if the author had not bent the Gospel narrative and the Acts to the purposes of her novel."

+ — Spec 126:210 F 12 '21 30w

"Those to whom this kind of story may appeal will find the period portrayed with some dramatic skill."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p110 F 17 '21 100w

DEEPPING, WARWICK (GEORGE WARWICK, pseud.). House of adventure. 344p $2 Macmillan [8s 6d Cassell]

22-12967

A story of reconstruction days in France. Paul Brent, an Englishman with a past which is no advantage to him, exchanges identification discs with an unattached comrade killed in the war and becomes to all intents and purposes Tom Beckett. At Beaumont, in a little inn half destroyed by German shells where he and Tom had sometimes stopped for a glass of red wine, he decides to billet himself and begin life over again. And here the young widow, Manon Latour, late owner of the inn, finds him settled when she comes back seeking the home from which she had been forced to flee before the Germans. They are both by nature constructive and they enter into partnership to rebuild the inn and help to restore the little village. From this point the tale becomes their love story, which after passing thru some evil days from the villainies of a rival innkeeper, ends in peace and content.

Booklist 19:53 N '22

"It is a somewhat 'medicated' novel, but the preachment is well worked in, to good dramatic effect and without clogging the story. 'The House of Adventure' is well sustained, its people are soundly conceived, without exaggeration, and the author's manner is better than in some of his earlier books."

+ Lit R p891 Ag 19 '22 280w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 115:416 O 18 '22 300w

New Repub 31:365 Ag 23 '22 130w

"Sufficiently interesting in its brimming narrative and steady flow of incident to hold the reader's attention, the book offers a rich harvest for those who ask no more of a novel than that. Its insight into human nature, its fine tolerance, its appreciation of even the half-hearted good in man, its apt phrasing, its style restrained but full of color and life, its warm humanness all make it a story for leisurely reading and for keen enjoyment."

+ N Y Times p17 Jl 16 '22 550w

"The tale is alive with incident and crises of danger and love." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 132:119 S 20 '22 50w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p645 O 6 '21 100w

DEHAN, RICHARD, pseud. See Graves, C. I. M.

DEHN, MME LILI (SMOL'SKAIA). Real tsaritsa. 249p il $3.50 Little [15s T. Butterworth]

B or 92 Alexandra Feodorovna, ex-czarina of Russia. Russia—History—Revolution, 1917- (Eng ed 22-12029)

The writer, who was the wife of an officer of the tsar's personal guard, was an intimate and devoted friend of the tsaritsa and her children from 1907 to the outbreak of the revolution in 1917. She was staying with the imperial family at the palace at the time of the tsar's abdication and remained with them until their exile. She writes with the purpose of defending the tsaritsa against the monstrous charges and slanders which have gained credence with some, and she shows her as a simple-minded kindly woman, devoted to husband and children, far more pro-English than pro-German. In the writer's attempted explanation of Rasputin and his influence over the tsaritsa, she makes the monk a less sensational figure than he has been reputed, and the tsaritsa's relation to him simply one of extraordinary trust.

"This round, unvarnished tale is so commonplace that one feels instinctively that it must be true."

+ Bookm 56:641 Ja '23 130w

"Commendable in outlook the book is, and we think that in the future it must be reckoned with when historical material is being sifted. The personal side of the Empress stands revealed." R. D. W.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 21 '22 620w

Nation and Ath 31:574 Jl 22 '22 100w

"Mme. Dehn's book is not very revealing on matters political, and what she tells us of Alexandra's character or of the family life rarely rises above the devoted comments of an intimate friend. Unconsciously, however, she tells us much about Russia which makes the progress of the Revolution there seem more intelligible . . . Mme. Dehn's book should succeed in its object of dispersing the more unscrupulous slanders about an unfortunate Queen whose only desire was to do her duty as her grandmother had done hers."

+ — New Statesman 19:220 My 27 '22 560w

Outlook 132:533 N 22 '22 90w

R of Rs 66:670 D '22 90w

St Louis 20:251 O '22

"Her book seems to be a genuine product of a true and close friendship."

+ — Sat R 133:497 My 13 '22 500w

Spec 128:664 My 27 '22 120w

"The picture she draws of the Empress appears to be accurate. Unfortunately Mme. Dehn is anxious to prove too much. . . The most sensational portion of this book is its attempted defence of Rasputin. Mme. Dehn could have done the Empress no worse service than to assure readers that Rasputin was a much maligned man. She depicts him as a modest, good-natured, pious peasant mystic."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p271 Ap 27 '22 1250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:273 D '22

DE HUFF, ELIZABETH WILLIS. Taytay's tales. 213p il $2 Harcourt

398.2 Indians of North America—Legends 22-17152

Forty-six folk tales of the Pueblo Indians, retold for children. The illustrations are by Fred Kaboti, a seventeen-year-old Hopi Indian boy, with a few pen and ink sketches by Otis Polelonema, another Hopi boy. "Neither of these boys has had any training in art. They have drawn and painted the pictures according to their own conceptions of the stories." (Preface)

Booklist 19:56 N '22

"The book is a distinct addition to Indian lore."

+ Bookm 56:204 O '22 80w

"In 'Taytay's Tales' we have one of the few authentic attempts to present American Indian folk tales in the aboriginal form and with something of the aboriginal idiom. It is doubtful if any similar group of American school children could render the folk tales of their own mixed inheritance in a manner so consistently adequate. In another direction the teller of 'Taytay's Tales' has scarcely been so successful. She has failed to render the quality of the joke that inheres in most of the animal tales." Mary Austin

+ Bookm 56:343 N '22 850w

"Very good stuff. They are retold here in the straightforward 'and then' style, and are full of the heartwarming sort of conversations in short telling sentences that we have all loved in 'Red Riding Hood.'"

+ Lit R p210 N 11 '22 120w

N Y Times p10 N 19 '22 130w

"The book is cleverly and interestingly illustrated by many drawings made by two 17-years-old Hopi Indian boys. These add much to the whimsical fantastic quality of these unusual stories. So entirely different an animal book is certain to be a favorite with juvenile readers who will enjoy 'Mr Fox,' the most prominent citizen."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a S 17 '22 200w

Wis Lib Bul 18:255 N '22

DEJEANS, ELIZABETH (JANES) (MRS SIDNEY BUDGETT). Romance of a million dollars. 361p $1.75 Bobbs

22-17035

"Marie Angouleme is small and pretty and piquant, but she is capable and stout of heart and high of spirit, and when she takes a position as chauffeur in the home of Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent, a fine estate on Long Island, it is evident that she is going to need all the ability and courage and spirit she can bring to her work. It is a household of strong, vigorous, secretive personalities, and from the time she enters it little Marie senses something sinister in its atmosphere. That sombre menace of evil threatens her in various ways, but she keeps bravely at her work, and after a while she succeeds in hunting down this evil thing that has been spreading its blight over the household."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:122 Ja '23

"Out of the hackneyed, away from the commonplace, is Miss Dejeans' mystery story." R. D. W.

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 23 '22 1400w

"This is a soundly constructed, steadily moving narrative, with well kept up suspense and a logical enough solution."

+ Lit R p34 S 16 '22 150w

"Miss Dejeans has never published a better mystery novel than this. . . The story outrages probability on almost every page, and every now and then possibility also. But that does not preclude it from being 'a rattling good' story, with a very ingenious plot, carefully constructed, its details worked out with care, its incidents vividly imagined."

+ N Y Times p23 S 17 '22 350w

"There are a few thumping improbabilities to be assumed by the reader, but such form the basis of any mystery tale, and the unfolding of this one is very neatly done." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 180w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 90w

Wis Lib Bul 19:25 Ja '23

DE KRUIF, PAUL HENRY. Our medicine men. 237p $1.75 Century

610.9 Medicine. Physicians 22-20983

The purpose of the book is to show that the practising physician of to-day has little claim to the title of scientist and that he is neither more intelligent nor less superstitious than the old-time physician. Both the public and the practitioner are as gullible as ever, as shown by the many cults—faith-healers, psychoanalysts, osteopaths, chiropractors, etc.—flourishing among us to-day, and the morale of physicians suffers deplorably from commercialism. The author shows how health crusades are liable to suffer from the ignorant enthusiasm of fear-mongers and health-messiahs and how physicians are turned out by our medical schools. He winds up with some constructive suggestions.

"These philippics against the medical profession would have appeared amusing and essentially sound did we not feel throughout that false impressions were conveyed by the dogmatic superiority with which the medical profession was excluded from participation in the developments of public health activities." Hans Zinsner, M.D.

+ — Lit R p381 Ja 13 '23 2900w

"No one who lacks a sense of humor should read this book. Physicians, especially, wanting in this gift of the gods, are warned against it. It requires a broad and tolerant mind to accept in a spirit of equanimity the good sense that occasionally flashes from its pages as a counterbalance to the multitude of grotesque absurdities it contains." Van Buren Thorne, M.D.

+ — N Y Times p7 N 12 '22 2200w

R of Rs 67:222 F '23 30w

"Stripped of its sensationalism and its turgid, meretricious Menckenesque language, 'Our medicine men' would be entitled to consideration for its presentation of two ideas. One of these is the charge that mediocre men have developed into pseudo specialists without general knowledge of physiology and are practicing their particular branches for purely commercial ends. The second idea is that directors of research in American bacteriological laboratories tend to become attached to a particular theory or method and discourage their associates from independent work which may prove their theories or methods wrong."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 N 20 '22 330w

DELAFIELD, E. M., pseud. See De La Pasture, E. E. M.

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. Down-adown-Derry. 195p il $3 Holt
821 22-7956

Mr De La Mare's poems are of fairies and witches and changelings, of mermaids and dwarfs, of the world of dreams, of such old friends as Sleepyhead, Lob-lie-by-the-fire, and the Sleeping beauty. Children of all ages will like the poems and the illustrations by Dorothy P. Lathrop.

Booklist 18:337 Je '22
Cleveland p84 N '22

"Wayward deliciousness. Here he bids an unregretful adieu to fact, throws the reins carelessly over the neck of his own hippogriff of fancy, and wanders off into a country which lies somewhere on the borderland between the realms of Poe and Coleridge and that 'land where the Jumbies live,' with which Edward Lear has made us so happily familiar." J. G. Fletcher

+ Freeman 5:525 Ag 9 '22 650w

Reviewed by W. R. Benet

Lit R p652 My 13 '22 390w

"These fairy poems are full of the elfin, and they are steeped in a tradition too. Walter de la Mare has heard the horns of Elfland. To the child who is imaginative enough to take possession of it he gives a double garden. Down-Adown-Derry has both quaintness and sorcery." Padraic Colum

+ New Repub 31:261 Jl 26 '22 450w

"There is possibly no writer living today who can write more delightfully and whimsically for children. Mr. De La Mare possesses just the fragile touch that is necessary to make these gossamer-like efforts complete successes."

+ N Y Times p19 My 14 '22 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:363 Jl '22

St Louis 20:276 N '22

Reviewed by W. E. G. Fisher

Sat R 134:796 N 25 '22 180w

"Miss Lathrop is a pleasant draughtswoman, is never vulgar, and is not often too precise and actual, but she is unfailingly sweet and pretty. The fact is, that in illustrating Mr. de la Mare, as in any other aesthetic enterprise, the artist must have in him an element of severity."

Spec 129:sup678 N 11 '22 380w

"As enchanted a garden of verses as could be thought of. It is a region of astonishments; there is no telling what new melody, new elf, new nonsensicality may suddenly play in the traveller's path. Delight indeed prevails all through the region. The fear which haunts the deeper alcoves of these woods is itself delightful, so subtle and spiritual is it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p801 D 7 '22 800w

Reviewed by E. B. Reed

Yale R n s 12:219 O '22 100w

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. Memoirs of a midget. 436p $3 Knopf [8s 6d Collins]

22-8937

The heroine of this remarkable novel is a tiny person whose height is measured by inches, tho she and the author are reticent about the number of these inches. She describes herself as "one of the smaller works of God." When she moves thru a meadow her head is on a level with the lowlier flowers and the tips of the taller grasses. Exquisite in person, witty, spirited, sensitive, at times elfish, she is yet altogether human. Reared with care and tenderness by her physically normal parents, she is left an orphan at twenty, with an income as tiny as herself. Refusing a home with an impossible godmother she takes refuge with the respectable Mrs. Bowater, a few miles out of London. Thus set adrift "to pick her precious way through the crowd of clumping humanity," she is destined to be taken up and petted by society, to love and be loved and to lose, to be exhibited by a gypsy showman, to know tragedy and barely to escape death, to find her way back to her childhood home and serenity, and all this in the space of a little more than a year.

"Searching and true is the reflection of the universe in the sphered soul of the Midget; the more intent the reader's gaze the greater his joy for he finds depths within depths. The style, too, has a bubble's perfection of texture, radiance, and color. Sentences, pages, whole chapters cause us to catch our breath; we turn the leaves back a second, a third, time to submit ourselves to the spell of a magic phrase. Evanescent and entrancing as the film of the bubble, which is also its substance, the style, like the universe reflected in it, has the beauty which endures." H: G. Pearson

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf My '22 680w

Booklist 18:236 Ap '22

"The book is not 'exquisite.' It is ravaging—but it is done exquisitely. A realist borrows moonbeams in which to twine himself, so that his welcome may be freed from alarms. Mr. de la Mare must have known that what he had to say in the 'Memoirs' would be unendurable if said too plainly. The surface of the book is laid over with fine traceries, with an infinitude of small and perfect rhythms. So half the book may be read before one senses that the delicacies are no delicacies, but mere painstaking understatements; that the story is of a long torture, bravely and elegantly borne; and finally, that the Midget is no midget, but simply one of us, made small by the guile of her author so that we cannot possibly escape the meaning of her story." Ruth Hale

+ Bookm 55:195 Ap '22 720w

"The 'Memoirs of a Midget' seems to be the only book of modern fiction in which, however much the reader may be charmed with the story, he is not content to be satisfied with that charm, but must seek to understand the elements which have composed what charms him. The quaintness and the beauty and the vision here must suffice for those who are not able to piece together their own meaning. However that meaning may vary in detail, the common root, it seems to me, must be grasped by all. Liken this romance to a wonderful plant whose flowers are beautiful, but their sustenance is in the roots which go down deep into the very nature of our human history." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 29 '22 1350w

Cleveland p27 Ap '22

"'Memoirs of a Midget' is really a singularly sober-minded book, and it is Walter De la Mare's triumph that, in the gravest, in the most humane way, he has been able to give us the life history of a being of delicate and singular faculties whose point of pride it is not to be too different from the rest of humanity. You may marvel after you have read it at the grace of the writing, at the glimpses into the world and into the human heart that are given in the course of the narrative, but as you read it you think only of a poignant and realizable story." Padraic Colum

+ Dial 72:416 Ap '22 900w

"A book of rich and varied portraiture, of delightful commentary, of action without machinery, and of a style which releases us from the jumpy clevernesses of the prevalent manner, and puts us at ease with a courteous, witty, and humane fellow-spectator of life." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 108:237 Mr 4 '22 850w

"Miss M. is great, is tremendous, is completely overpowering as an invention—as a product of the creative imagination. . . . And there is nothing, utterly and absolutely nothing, to account for all that she does and is save the fact that a certain man on an island, a man with a pen in his hand, has somehow or other been impelled to lay down an appreciable piece of his own life in the solitary struggle to purchase for her this inimitably vivacious and captivating existence of her own." Wil-son Follett

+ Lit R p331 Ja 7 '22 2150w

"A composition in which poetry is mingled with reality, and irony with pity. It is life in terms of an artist's conception—a tour de force of the studio. The author brought to its writing the genius which is long patience and its readers must bring this same virtue. Verily, they shall have their reward." R. M. Lovett
+ New Repub 31:54 Je 7 '22 1900w

"The book being a work of art, a true creation, will leave descendants. For centuries to come this book will inspire imaginative people. Beyond all doubt it will be an ingredient of future poetry." Rebecca West

+ New Statesman 17:496 Ag 6 '21 900w

"Whatever of critical judgment there is in one declares here is a great book. Here are pity and truth and laughter, gentlest compassion, fiercest irony. Here is our human heart laid bare, our weakness made manifest, our wild glory glimpsed. . . . It is a tragic book as a story of a misfit must be, for the world has little but cruelty for anything or any one that is not according to its pattern, that is built to some other measure than the accustomed rule of thumb." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 29 '22 1750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:321 J1 '22

Pratt p34 Ap '22

"We have had dwarfs in fiction, and little people seen from the point of view of average humanity. But never before have we, in any first-class piece of literature, been admitted to the inmost thoughts and feelings of a little perfect midget, and been able to share with her the loneliness of one born exquisite but out of scale. . . . She is no casual invention of the artist's imagination. She will live in criticism as a masterpiece of characterization and in our hearts as the most adorable, though often the most unapproachable, of the greater works of God."

+ Sat R 132:116 J1 23 '21 900w

"Having read it, we cannot forget it. The reader will understand what we mean when we say that the book is a real thing; one of those books which come into the world as a sort of extra fact, defying the law of the impossibility of adding to the matter in the world."

+ Spec 127:243 Ag 20 '21 700w

"The consistency of Mr. de la Mare in presenting Miss M., in reconstructing her own peculiar reactions and imaginings, is masterly. Lilliputian observation, chiefly of a poetic type, is the simplest of the difficulties which he makes easy. Mr. de la Mare's Midget is by no means invariably interesting, or lovable, or admirable; his picture is not drawn with the intention to make her so. It appears to us that the cosmos which she creates round her is his great attempt; and his great success. Of all the fields that open themselves before a writer in verse or prose there is none more exacting and less conquerable than daylight witchery."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p481 J1 28 '21 1750w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 J1 '22

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. The veil, and other poems. 84p $2 Holt [6s Constable]

821

22-4930

Of this collection of short poems seven, originally written for drawings by Miss Pamela Bianco, were first published in a volume entitled "Flora." The rest have appeared in English and American magazines.

"One speculates upon what imp of choice or circumstance determined the author to exclude the fantastic 'Sephina' and the whimsically galloping 'Suppose.' And one is likely to conclude that de la Mare has come to rely upon his familiar spirit rather than an unfamiliar critical sense: he is allowing too much of his poetry to write itself. And here he is in danger. For when a creator has perfected an idiom he must beware the pitfalls of style. It is a tragic irony to escape the clichés of other men only to become a slave to your own technique."

L: Untermeyer

— + Bookm 55:301 My '22 560w

Boston Transcript p8 Ap 8 '22 720w

Cleveland p69 S '22

"The volume is touched with delicate fantasy and thrilling with eerie imagery, but one leaves it feeling that this poet's strange wine is to be sipped at slow intervals, never drunk at a single draught. The one way, it is exquisitely intoxicating; the other, it makes one merely to drowse."

Dial 73:114 J1 '22 70w

"I am far from considering him to be a great poet, but he has an elvish fancy, a fitful and melancholy music of his own, and a nervous, needle-pointed style. None of the poems contained in 'The Veil' marks any advance on the work he has previously done."

J: G. Fletcher

+ — Freeman 5:403 J1 5 '22 300w

"Mr. de la Mare gives us many pages, indeed, in which he tries to persuade us that he is dealing seriously with life. Most of them read, alas! like a novice's attempt to paint masterpieces by taking up Mr. Hardy's sombre box of colours. If Mr. de la Mare had not written them, no one I think, would have greatly minded, or would his reputation have been less."

J: G. Fletcher

— Freeman 5:525 Ag 9 '22 650w

"Everything is ultimately pardonable in one who can so write. Yet Mr De La Mare is sometimes needlessly obscure; he has an annoying trick of omitting articles before nouns, presumably to meet metrical exigencies. Ah well! Each Aladdin's palace must have its unfinished window." Arthur Guiterman

+ — Ind 108:396 Ap 22 '22 360w

Reviewed by W: R. Benet

Lit R p652 My 13 '22 390w

"The Old Fisherman is a beautiful poem and one that is as original as anything that Mr. de la Mare has done, and the Gallias has a unique charm. But the rest give us the impression that they might have been written by a disciple who had steeped himself in The Listeners. But if this is a decadence one could wish that some of our writers of verse would learn from it—from its delicate music, from its perfected idiom, from its disciplined art." Padraic Colum

+ — New Repub 31:261 J1 26 '22 350w

"He brings us too much to be thankful for for us to bicker about small matters. Here is the true stuff of dreams, transmuted into words themselves dreamlike and enchanted." R: Le Gallienne

+ — N Y Times p19 J1 2 '22 1650w

"The Veil' is quite on a plane with the volumes that have preceded it. Here again are the faltering rhythms, the Blake-like purity of spirit, the faint perfume-like suggestions of unseen figures and rustling forms. All is atmosphere rather than direct utterance."

+ Outlook 131:428 J1 5 '22 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:511 N '22

Pratt p25 autumn '22

St Louis 20:300 D '22

"Every poem of Mr. de la Mare is so fine a fusion of sounds and meanings, a free wild melody is so cunningly built up from a sequence of epithets each as mathematically just as the elements of a chemical formula, that the secrets of his art recede further and further from solution. There is no difficulty, and much idle pleasure, in resolving his technical expedients—the inversion of verb and its auxiliary, predicate and its subject. Yet it is no more satisfying than the endeavour to identify the separate brush-strokes which have composed the canvas of a master."

+ — Sat R 133:118 F 4 '22 470w

"Mr. de la Mare's new book contains evidence that he is changing his style. He still writes in the fantastic, magic vein to which we are accustomed, but the poems of this type

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN—Continued in "The Veil" are not for the most part as successful as usual. If we were to judge by them we should, I think, be obliged to say that Mr. de la Mare's work was degenerating; but though they never caught the imagination of the public much, as has his fantastic manner, Mr. de la Mare always had two or three other poetical selves." A. Williams-Ellis

— + Spec 127:869 D 24 '21 480w

"The severest verdict against it can only be this, that it does not measure up to the standard of 'The Listeners,' with which it is fair to compare it, or of 'Peacock Pie.' The most unpleasant dissimilarities are little but annoying mannerisms that have crept in."

— + Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 1 '22 450w

"Mr. de la Mare is growing older, and age is having on him some of its inevitable effects. He is losing something of that airy lightness, swiftness, and grace which was once one of his chief notes and made his poetry often suggest the playfulness of a beautiful child. But the two things of which age most certainly robs those who once were children are, first, their beauty, and then, their dreams. Mr. de la Mare has lost neither."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p857 D 22 '21 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 18:182 J1 '22

DELAND, MARGARET WADE (CAMPBELL) (MRS LORIN FULLER DELAND). Vehement flame. 378p $2 Harper

22-11594

An ardent, sensitive youth of nineteen, Maurice Curtis, meets a woman twenty years older than himself under just the right conditions to feel her attraction, falls in love with and marries her, against her judgment tho not against her desire. All too soon he finds his mistake, for her dullness and jealousy affect their companionship more even than the disparity in their ages. For some time he remains patient and attentive, but, in a moment of desperation the vehement flame of her unreasoning jealousy drives him to infidelity. The results of this unfaithfulness furnish material for a considerable and well worked out plot. When after some twelve years of an impossible situation his wife dies, the girl playmate of his youth and the loyal friend of his unhappy days of marriage finds it sufficiently worthwhile to apply her young strength and love to repairing the wreckage of his life.

"The story is the story of Eleanor, and it is this fact which makes one wish that Mrs. Deland could have found it in her heart to illustrate the raging flame of an awful passion in a soul less petty. For the devastating power of a passion cannot be fully revealed in a small soul. The resulting lack is what one perhaps feels most in a novel otherwise so excellently written." R. M. Gay

— + Atlantic's Bookshelf J1 '22 580w

Booklist 19:53 N '22

Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '22 1200w

"Faulty construction and a plethora of material are accountable for the surprising fact that Mrs. Deland has obscured her intention almost beyond identification."

— Cath World 116:115 O '22 500w

Cleveland p50 Ag '22

Dial 74:103 Ja '23 80w

Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 30w

"Mrs. Deland's voice is the voice of a generation which was neither ashamed of sentiment nor afraid of a moral. . . I confess that for me the spectacle of Eleanor's pathos is prolonged beyond the bounds of sympathy. . . She is not a sufficiently lovable person to hold one's concern through so many pages." H. W. Boynton

+ — Lit R p735 Je 17 '22 740w

"The author's sensitive handling of the futile but pitiful figure of Eleanor gives the book originality and redeems it from type."

+ Nation and Ath 31:744 S 2 '22 90w

"An absorbing, illuminating, vital story of life." H: Van Dyke

+ N Y Times p1 Je 4 '22 3200w

"It is a vigorous and subtle study of a complex human character." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:351 Je 21 '22 400w

"She sometimes puts into her characters' mouths preposterously improbable words, but the movements of their hearts are probable. She has a humorous understanding, without being able to write humorously. She can convey jealousy, and pain, and regret, and despair, without having mastered the intellectual method in which she seeks to convey them. She is not top of her school; but she is sure of a prize in her own class." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 134:355 S 2 '22 170w

Spec 129:469 O 7 '22 100w

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 2 '22 700w

Springf'd Republican p8 S 9 '22 300w

"Mrs. Deland's people strike us as real, even though she takes a slightly sentimental view of them, and in the working out of the unhappy consequences of such a marriage she never takes advantage of merely mechanical devices."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 17 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:217 O '22

DE LA PASTURE, EDMEE ELIZABETH MONICA (E. M. DELAFIELD, pseud.). Humbug; a study in education. 345p $2 Macmillan [8s 6d Hutchinson]

22-4087

The theme of the book is a child's right to possess its own soul. Lily Stellanorpe's parents were sentimentalists who loved and yearned over her in their possessive way, who evaded the truth themselves and carefully guarded her from a knowledge of it, whose idea of education was to conceal the facts and gloss over unpleasant realities. Brought up in this stultifying atmosphere, foiled in every attempt at self expression, Lily had a sad, defeated youth and brought to her marriage, with a man twice her age, a child's ignorance and dread. Her husband was tender but uncomprehending and in her marriage as in her childhood she felt that her life was held together by pretenses. When her own child came, out of her bitter experience she willed that he should belong to himself.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '22 1850w

Cleveland p34 My '22

"It is sharp and subacid in treatment, touched with those high-lights of irony so characteristic of Miss Delafield's work. A book which will be read and relished—except by those who need it."

Dial 73:233 Ag '22 90w

"This Victorian Lily, with her pathetic ignorance and wistful yearning for 'self-expression,' is surely a mild and belated figure. The story of her journey toward enlightenment and toward resignation is readable, but in no sense striking." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 108:376 Ap 15 '22 250w

"Miss Delafield has brought to her task her acute sense of character, her satirical powers and her great skill in presentation which result in a most entertaining story and one which carries an important lesson."

+ Lit D p73 Ap 15 '22 900w

Lit R p608 Ap 22 '22 150w

"It is a pity that one of the most interesting and honest talents in recent British literature shows no gain in either depth or power. 'Consequences' remains Miss Delafield's best book. 'Humbug' is cleaner in workmanship, but her tenseness shows slackening and her peculiar acridness has lost some of its sting." L. L.

+ Nation 114:472 Ap 19 '22 680w

New Repub 31:141 Je 23 '22 90w

"The book is written with an intense earnestness of purpose. Very well written, for Mrs. Delafield has a clear and often vigorous style, and a gift for felicitous phrasing. It would be better were there less repetition, less under-scoring and emphasizing of points."

+ — N Y Times p11 Ap 9 '22 950w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 131:76 My 10 '22 100w

"A very clever and attractive story."

+ Sat R 132:693 D 17 '21 500w

"The novel is an admirable treatise on how not to bring up children. But, though it may perform this useful function, it will be rather a disappointment to Miss Delafield's readers, as the author's powers of analysis and insight into human character are not as notably displayed as in her former works."

+ — Spec 128:84 Ja 21 '22 380w

"It is undeniably clever, the details frequently palpitate with actuality, the connections are logical, yet illogically the whole seems faintly artificial. Something is missing. Perhaps the logic of events is too obvious. For life is illogical. Be this as it may, it would be unjust to dismiss 'Humbug' without recognizing its enjoyableness. It may not quite attain the prodigal naturalness of perfected art, but in the almost diabolical skill with which it cuts to the bone of our pet evasions and insincerities, the discernment with which it presents the quintessential, self-revealing utterances and poses of well known types, it offers abundance of entertainment to the discriminating reader." G: B. Dutton

+ Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 500w

"'Humbug' marks a deepening and refining of Miss Delafield's powers. It dissipates the uneasiness which some of her admirers must have felt lest her skill in seizing characteristic turns of speech and traits of behaviour should deteriorate into simple ingenuity. In 'Humbug' she probes deep enough beneath the skin to lay that fear to rest."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p857 D 22 '21 920w

Wis Lib Bul 18:217 O '22

DE LA PASTURE, EDMEE ELIZABETH MONICA (E. M. DELAFIELD, pseud.). Optimist. 297p $2 Macmillan

22-21107

Canon Morehard, the optimist, is a man of sincere, if not very rational, religious feeling, whose love for his five children is so exacting and his care for them so enveloping that one by one the younger ones break away, until the eldest only, Lucilla, his housekeeper and secretary, is left with him. He dies at the end lonely and disappointed, but still feeling that "all things work together for good." The story is told from the point of view of Owen Quentilian who as a child was a member of the household and who as a young writer comes back to it with his critical and analytical faculties keenly developed. The Canon, lovable but exasperating, is at all times the central figure of the book and the adventures and love affairs of the other characters are always subordinated to him.

Booklist 19:122 Ja '23

"Miss Delafield has fine understanding of values. She is profoundly pessimistic, but it is a healthful pessimism and she is a fine artist who has found her medium and writes with a vividness and an impressiveness unusual in our times." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 25 '22 1000w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Ind 109:389 D 23 '22 400w

"A tragic book in some ways but fine and true." Hildegarde Hawthorne

Int Bk R p70 D '22 40w

"The novel is doubtless too thoughtful to be widely popular, too charged with ideas and ideals to please the average man; but those who are interested in the interaction of sincere and cultivated minds striving to evolve a satisfactory philosophy of life will find it very well worth reading." Drake de Kay

+ Lit R p259 D 2 '22 600w

"Miss Delafield has given the devil his due. She has made her Optimist a real person and not a straw man made to be kicked by the clever, and as a result it becomes a matter of complete indifference that her thesis is not new." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 115:694 D 20 '22 550w

"The heart action of the story is rather weak, and its color pale. It is, however, the more engaging for its frailness, its perfect manners, and its uncanny intelligence."

+ — New Repub 33:154 Ja 3 '22 150w

"'The Optimist' is an excellent story; for characterization it deserves a deal of praise; and for the excellent handling of a thesis it becomes a valuable document. E. M. Delafield is not a great novelist. The book falls short in many ways; one of them is a begging of the question. But it is a good book and soundly written."

+ — N Y Times p22 N 12 '22 680w

"As always, Miss Delafield has done a very creditable and entertaining piece of work, though limited in its scope. Like a study in the black keys or variations of a set theme. Her books have no profundity, no great sweep nor depth. But they have purpose and finish. They are intelligent, cool, sane. Which qualities are surely desirable, and none too common." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p27 D 17 '22 850w

Reviewed by Gerald Gould

Sat R 134:554 O 14 '22 400w

Spec 129:733 N 18 '22 1250w

"There are no decorative flourishes to her titles, her style, or her plots. To flutter the plain leaves of one of her stories would be to get an impression of sobriety, almost of dullness—but how different the impression on reading the first few pages! You are deep in realities, gripped by living people, listening, you would almost declare, to the sound of actual voices."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p628 O 5 '22 700w

DE LA ROCHE, MAZO. Explorers of the dawn; with a foreword by Christopher Morley. 292p $2.50 Knopf

22-4825

Angel, John and the Seraph were three motherless boys ranging in age from nine years to five, whose father during his year or more of absence in South America left them in the care of his old governess, Mrs Handsomebody. She lived in a tall narrow house in the shadow of the gray cathedral of an English town, but tho their surroundings were drab and Mrs Handsomebody's rule heavy, the boys attracted one gay adventure after another. Their neighbor on the one side, old Mr Pegg, abetted them, on the other, their friend the bishop, and always the indulgent Mary Ellen, Mrs Handsomebody's maid, was their firm ally. It was under the bishop's guidance that they went forth to meet the dawn and Mr Pegg led them at midnight to the buried treasure. The book, with its imagination, humor and delicate fancy, makes the same kind of appeal as Kenneth Grahame's "Golden age" and as in that book the appeal is more to the Olympians than to children.

Booklist 18:236 Ap '22

"Although her book is an admirable endeavor it decidedly lacks the very quality which the well-meaning author of the Foreword claims that it possesses. It may be a moderate delight to boys and girls. But it is scarcely a novel." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 29 '22 500w

"There is a Golden Age glamour about this youthful trio that should endear them to young and old."

+ Cleveland p27 Ap '22

Cleveland p82 N '22

DE LA ROCHE, MAZO—Continued

"A story of three little boys—such as never were on land or sea. Their gracefully narrated adventures make pleasant sugar-plum reading. The book has charm, and charm, like beauty, is its own excuse for being."

— + Dial 73:113 J1 '22 60w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Ind 108:589 J1 8 '22 220w

"Here is a book so delightful that it is hard to put one's feelings about it into words. The chief charm of the book lies in its spirit—as clean and fresh as a flood of sunshine—and in its delicate imagery."

+ Lit R p494 Mr 11 '22 260w

"The book is humorous, charming, written in a style which appeals to both young and old."

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 5 '22 330w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:149 Ap '22

Pratt p35 autumn '22

"The scrapes Angel, Seraph and John were able to weather, Mary Ellen assisting, will send shivers of delight up the spines of tired readers who have forgotten how it feels to smuggle stray dogs into the house or put live birds into the time-honored glass case of stuffed birds. Everyone who has had the privilege of living with a boy or two will love the humor of this story."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a My 28 '22 440w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

DE LEEUW, A. L. Metal cutting tools, their principles, action and construction. 328p il $3 McGraw

621.93 Machine tools. Metal cutting

22-12101

"Covers the various types of planer tools, boring tools, milling cutters, form and shear tools, generating tools, thread-tools and hollow mills. In discussing every one of these types of tools the author starts with an analysis of the conditions underlying operation and from that builds up first the ideal conception of what a tool of that particular class should be, proceeding from this to a description, and at times criticism, of the particular tools now available. (Mechanical engineering, 1922)."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Machinery p852 Je '22 ¼col

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:35 J1 '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:565 D '22

Pratt p18 autumn '22

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Charles Rex. 378p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Hutchinson]

22-17911

"The hero is Charles Burchester, Lord Saltash, called by his intimates 'Charles Rex.' We are told that 'he has a strain of royal blood in him.' He is, of course of that fascinatingly 'wicked' type in which the author and her readers delight. Through a dramatic chance, Toby, a young boy, as Saltash supposes, is given into his care. And when Toby turns out to be Antoinette he keeps on protecting her and of course marries her. Other characters there be. Many of them. But Toby and Charles Rex hold the centre of the stage tirelessly. And the end is clear from the beginning, Miss Dell being too altruistic to allow uncertainty to torment her readers."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p2 S 16 '22 580w

Nation and Ath 31:714 S 2 '22 120w

"Miss Ethel Dell has received every sort of acclamation save only the morning stars singing together; and I doubt if one worries about the lack of superterrestrial recognition when one can sell nearly half-a-million copies of a single novel. . . . In every line that is written about Charles Rex, one hears the thundering, thundering hooves of a certain steed at full gallop; of the true Tosh-horse. For even as one cannot walk on one's own trudging diligent feet if one desires to attain to the height of poetry, but must mount Pegasus, so one cannot reach the goal of best selling by earnest pedestrianism, but must ride thither on the Tosh-horse." Rebecca West

— New Statesman 19:638 S 16 '22 1950w

"A bright, readable story for those who take their fiction straight, without any admixture of psychological or sociological problems. It is not likely ever to be ranked among the masterpieces of literature, but it is fairly certain to be found among this season's best sellers."

+ N Y Times p23 S 17 '22 400w

Reviewed by Kathleen Field

N Y Tribune p7 S 10 '22 640w

"The unctuousness of Miss Dell's writing does not diminish with each succeeding novel."

— Spec 129:407 S 23 '22 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p522 Ag 10 '22 210w

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Odds; and other stories 414p $2 Putnam [7s Cassell]

22-10240

"The odds' introduces us to the principal characters in 'Without prejudice,' the second and longest story in this volume of seven short stories written in Ethel M. Dell's accustomed manner. One theme runs thru all the stories, man's triumphant mastery of woman and her willingness to be mastered. Contents: The odds; Without prejudice; Her own free will; The consolation prize; Her freedom; Death's property; The sacrifice."

"Once more Miss Dell dips her pen into purest saccharine, and once more drops off that obliging bit of steel a set of mawkish stories in which the heroine almost runs away, but is reconciled just in time to the really admirable qualities of her husband. Time and again, Miss Dell harps on the theme; but never are the proprieties violated. Mid-Victorianism reigns triumphant, morality brays aloud and another Dell tale is done."

— Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '22 210w

Lit R p691 My 27 '22 150w

"The things that happen in these stories are the kind of thing that the unimaginative person could almost fancy for himself. The characters are lay figures wound to a certain pitch, who can be counted upon to do what they are to do as no human could be counted upon, and they are restful to the many who do not care for the unexpected." Hildegard Hawthorne

— N Y Times p2 My 7 '22 820w

"Miss Dell writes the kind of romance based as lightly as possible on the probabilities of life. She writes it in the vivid style which alone is sufficient to atone for an absent likelihood. And she is, it must be admitted, not less painstaking with her short stories than with her novels." E. W. Osborn

+ N Y World p13 Je 21 '22 180w

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 23 '22 120w

DELL, FLOYD. King Arthur's socks; and other village plays. 238p $2.50 Knopf 812

22-19636

Eleven one-act plays for the little theater. These plays, with one exception, were written in Greenwich Village, and most of them first performed there—some at the old Liberal club and others by the Provincetown players. Contents: Human nature; The chaste adventures of Joseph; The angel intrudes; Legend; Sweet-and-twenty; A long time ago; Enigma; Ibsen revisited; King Arthur's socks; The rim of the world; Poor Harold.

Booklist 19:114 Ja '23

"Often satiric plays they are supposed to be, but the satire of the 'village' (New York, Provincetown, or one's especial Bohemia) becomes at times, we fear, rather silly. Mr. Dell's future intellectual programme, with less time out for play, will no doubt show more impressively what that programme or intellect has to offer."

— Boston Transcript p7 N 15 '22 220w

"Nothing is firmly embodied; consequently these sketches fail as entertainments for the stage. Several are mere jokes arbitrarily drawn out."

— Lit R p300 D 9 '22 360w

"A very young book, written by a very young man, who stayed that way for a very considerable time. Of course, the argument is that these plays are not meant to be other than light foolery, and I dare say that is all they attempt, it may account for my longing for more intolerable lightness. They all attain a high level of inadequacy." Djuna Barnes

— N Y Tribune p10 N 12 '22 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:28 Ja '23

Springfd Republican p6 Ja 1 '23 250w

DENHAM, SIR JAMES. Memoirs of the memorable. 336p il $5 Doran [18s Hutchinson] 920

"When you have wearied me, oh world, and sickened me with sordid things, to these sweet pictures silently I pass, and all my spirit is surrendered to the respite of my dreams!" (Page 29) "If but I could begin life again and retread those pleasant paths bright with the garlands and noondays of the past, how sternly should I shut my memory's doors to all save the beautiful and the irreplaceable. . ." (Page 328) These two quotations give the cue to the memorable things recorded in these memoirs of a poet. Among these things are beautiful women, significant men, recollections of places, of wit and humor and memorable sayings. Index.

"Historical significance and the illumination of character are both distressingly absent from these 'intimate glimpses.'"

— Bookm 56:642 Ja '23 150w

"It gives us many interesting glimpses of men and women who were notable in their day and of some who are to be remembered for many days. The final impression which the book leaves in one's mind is of ease and finish, not of struggle and accomplishment."

+ — Boston Transcript p7 O 28 '22 330w

Nation and Ath 31:573 Jl 22 '22 480

"Sir James Denham wears rue. The decay of manners, the ungraceful roughness of the present compared to the elegant amenities of the past he remembers, wounds him."

— New Statesman 19:332 Je 24 '22 220w

"His memory seems to have retained very little that is not trivial. There are, to be sure, some gems in his collection."

— + N Y Times p10 F 4 '23 880w

"Sir James is a good story teller, and has garnered some rare ones together with others entirely Victorian in their stiff propriety. He is an agreeable writer whose specimen sonnets have charm and whose prose has an unflinching grace, with, now and then, high descriptive beauty." Esther Eaton

+ — N Y Tribune p11 N 19 '22 380w

"It cannot be said to have much literary merit or to give us much that can contribute to the wisdom or the humour of the world."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p263 Ap 20 '22 80w

DENIKIN, ANTON IVANOVICH. Russian turmoil; memoirs; military, social and political. 344p il $8 Dutton [24s Hutchinson]

947 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-

(Eng ed 22-13059)

The book describes conditions in the country and the army at the end of the old régime, the weakness of the Czar and the gradual disintegration of the army. The events since the Revolution are all treated from the point of view of one who sees his country's salvation to rest on a strong national army organized and disciplined along conservative and traditional lines and determined to overthrow the present soviet government. The memoirs end with General Denikin's release from prison in September 1917.

Booklist 19:78 D '22

Ind 109:214 O 14 '22 40w

"This book is a serious contribution to the history of the Russian Revolution. It is essentially a human document, written by a man who began life as the son of a peasant serf, who rose to high military rank after years of faithful service under two Tsars, and who viewed a tremendous social and political upheaval with the eyes of a staff officer possessed of inside information."

+ Nation and Ath 31:384 Je 10 '22 1200w

"What his book is, mainly, is a striking picture of the most tremendous and widespread disintegration of morale that the world has ever seen. In its pages, well documented, filled with facts and poignant instances, and livid with the rhetoric of horror and despair, one sees the progress of a frightful disease affecting millions of men and reducing a once mighty organism to a corrupt mass."

No Am 216:862 D '22 1300w

R of Rs 66:559 N '22 120w

"The stamp of truth is plainly marked on his general description of the rapid collapse of the Russian Army in the spring and summer of 1917. General Denikin writes on this subject purely as a soldier, with a creditable freedom from political prejudice. His account is historically valuable to all students of military psychology."

+ Sat R 113:610 Je 10 '22 650w

"He describes clearly, and on the whole dispassionately, the rapid and complete collapse of the Russian Army."

+ Spec 128:791 Je 24 '22 190w

DENIS, PIERRE. Argentine republic; its development and progress; by Joseph McCabe. 296p il $6 Scribner [21s F. Unwin.]

918.2 Argentina

22-26968

"Account of the natural resources, agriculture and climate of the country. For the financial and commercial aspects not so good as Martinez, The Argentine in the twentieth century but more up-to-date."—Booklist

Booklist 19:79 D '22

"A remarkably fresh presentation of the country of Argentina, not in its historical aspect, but in its economic features. The author has collected a multitude of facts concerning the conquest of the soil by man, the exploitation of its natural resources, the development of agriculture and cattle breeding, and the growth of the population and enlargement of the urban centres."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 720w

"An authoritative study of the development and progress of the most interesting of the Latin American Republics." W. B. W.

+ New Statesman 20:180 N 11 '22 450w

"There is no geographer writing to-day whose authority is considered as surpassing that of Dr. Pierre Denis. 'The Argentine Republic' is a book that comes at this time with a wealth of valuable information. It has been prepared after many years of careful personal research and should appeal in a special manner to colleges where men are trained for South American commercial pursuits as well as to schools, public and private, which undertake to train men for the diplomatic and consular service."

+ N Y Times p7 D 24 '22 260w

"An informative book full of statistics that will be useful to men of business and prospective emigrants."

+ Spec 129:438 S 30 '22 90w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p587 S 14 '22 50w

DENISON, EDWARD ELIAS. Play of auction hands. 284p $2 Lothrop

795 Auction bridge

22-3174

"This book assumes a general knowledge of the game of Auction, and, with the exception of some discussion of certain features of bidding and conventions, treats mainly of the play of hands, both as declarant and as opponent of declarant. . . Of the illustrative hands, all but ten are given substantially as they occurred in actual play, except a few that have been changed slightly to illustrate the particular point of play. The hands are grouped or classified according to the feature of play involved, and show the principles of play that usually occur in practice." (Preface)

DENISON, EDWARD ELIAS—Continued

DENNETT, TYLER. Americans in eastern Asia; a critical study of the policy of the United States with reference to China, Japan and Korea in the 19th century. 725p $5 Macmillan

327.73 United States—Foreign relations. China—Foreign relations. Japan—Foreign relations. Korea—Foreign relations. Eastern question (Far East)

"This is a study of the origin and development of American policy in Asia—in China, Japan, Korea, with passing attention to Siam, and the regions of the Indian and Pacific Oceans—in the 19th century. It is an entirely fresh study, based on original records and documentary sources. In large measure the human interest and the peculiarly personal qualities of the record of Americans in Asia have been retained. The actors are permitted to speak for themselves in their own words." (Preface) Bibliography. Index.

"Masterly survey of a century of American relations with the countries across the Pacific." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 6 '23 980w

DENNIS, GEOFFREY. Mary Lee. 442p $2.50 Knopf [Ts 6d Heinemann]

22-17451

Mary Lee was a child of the middle nineteenth century in England, an orphan brought up by her grandmother and her great-aunt Jael in the strict religious belief of the Plymouth Brethren. The cruelties inflicted on the child by her terrible aunt, whose chastisements were always administered in God's name, were almost past belief. Her grandmother, equally religious but more human, seemed powerless to help. Still greater tortures were in store for Mary Lee when she went to live with Uncle Simeon, likewise of the "Saints," and from whom she fled back to her first home as to a place of refuge. But a stranger had already become interested in the lonely child and in her education. At eighteen she went to France to be governess in a rich family. Out of all this experience a soul was born to Mary Lee and the book leaves her with unimagined happiness in sight.

"Although the woman is presented as telling her own story, writing in retrospect after she has reached middle age, her attitude is wholly masculine. Singularly enough, however, the story loses little because of this peculiarity. It nevertheless seems to be an authentic narrative, undoubtedly because of its intense vitality. Despite its shortcomings, it is a remarkable novel and in many ways a truthful revelation of a woman's soul." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '22 950w
Cleveland p34 N '22

"Her history is often so ghastly, and yet felt as so unescapably true, that it almost breaks the reader's nerve. It seems incredible that the story of this Mary, drab, ecstatic, odd, entirely human, should not be autobiographical—incredible until one remembers that autobiographical novels are not written with the economy and the self-control of this book."

Dial 73:456 O '22 190w

"There are several graphic scenes and vivid character-sketches, but the canvas is crowded with too many figures drawn with the same care and the same abundance of detail. The author can narrate an incident with much power, he can give to ordinary events the thrill of the adventurous, he can depict character with effectiveness; but he has yet to learn the artistic necessity of rejection." J. L. T.

+ Freeman 16:118 O 11 '22 220w

"Why a young writer should choose in the present age to depict the horrors of childhood that existed in another generation is the puzzle of this book. For Mary Lee, in this age and generation, there seems little excuse. The book awakens the hope that some time the bright, artistic ability of Geoffrey Dennis, his genius for depicting woman from the inside out, may be put forth on some subject that has more to do with the price of eggs." Mary Lee

+ Lit R p899 Ag 26 '22 420w

"There is a marked deterioration in original force in the second part. The first three hundred pages are the flower of this extraordinary exposure and what will make a name for the author. In spite of much poetry and tender insight, this remarkable book has an almost sinister power. It has many faults; it is shrouded in gloom and rocked in violence. But to compare it with the average novel would be merely silly."

+ Nation and Ath 31:829 S 23 '22 580w

"It has a genuine historical value. The author has shown courage in daring to create, through a vulgar and limited world, amid the shadows of a ghastly faith, and with his chief artistic device, a painful self-consciousness, a record so concentrated in interest, so significant in revelation, so mysterious and haunting in its appeal." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 32:51 S 6 '22 980w

"The tale is a shade too circumstantial and too squalidly so; but it is entirely individual in its accent and in its subject. The author has extended the frontiers of humanity's knowledge about itself." Rebecca West

+ New Statesman 19:588 S 2 '22 200w

"It is a long novel one which does not lend itself to rapid reading. Yet there is not a dull page in it. Although none of the characters is such as many of us have met or are likely to meet in our daily lives, the author makes them so real that we seem to have known them always. The author is to be congratulated upon the exquisite craftsmanship of his first novel."

+ N Y Times p15 Ag 13 '22 920w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson
N Y Tribune p5 Ag 27 '22 170w

Reviewed by Gerald Gould
Sat R 134:290 Ag 19 '22 1200w

"A first novel which is the work of a creative artist of rare powers. Something could be said about the weakness of the book, such as the lack of balance between the two parts into which it is divided; but we feel that an imagination which is capable of such achievement is certainly bound to become conscious of its past faults."

+ Spec 129:311 S 2 '22 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p532 Ag 17 '22 650w

DEPEW, CHAUNCEY MITCHELL. My memories of eighty years. 417p $4 (16s) Scribner B or 92 United States—Biography. United States—Politics and government 22-7398

For these reminiscences, the author states, he has depended on his memory and they are not supposed to be a complete autobiography. Beginning with an account of his early childhood and college days, he passes on to his public life with its memories of all the important personages of his time, to his business career and his life abroad. There is an index.

Am Pol Sci R 16:519 Ag '22 150w

"There is little of his mirth-provoking after-dinner style employed in the book. That is the only disappointment that can come from it. But there is plenty to make up for the lack of that humor for which he is so well known. His conservative estimates of a long list of conservative men of politics and business are a valuable contribution to historical documents."

+ Bookm 55:648 Ag '22 120w

"He has seen many interesting men and witnessed many important events and his reminiscences should be of great interest. That they do not come up to the greatest anticipation with which a reader may approach them is easily explained. In less than a month Mr. Depew will reach his eighty-eighth birthday.

Never a bitter antagonist, a straightforward but seldom offensive defender of the policies of his leaders, his good-natured and pleasant outlook has lost nothing with the years. He has kept no diary to guide his steps, and in a mellow maturity remembers the pleasantest things. The chief trouble with it appears to be that these are seemingly surface reminiscences, perhaps, because Mr. Depew was a surface statesman." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 Ap 1 '22 1050w
Cleveland p51 Ag '22

"Mr. Depew's volume is disjointed, sometimes to the point of obscurity; its English is sprawling, and its accuracy upon matters which did not come within his personal experience is highly questionable. Of most of the interesting and important personages whom he passes in review he gives the barest glimpse, contenting himself with a story or two and insisting upon a recital of their familiar characteristics, while most of his stories, though unhackneyed, are frankly second-hand." R. J. Davis

— Lit R p583 Ap 15 '22 1100w

Nation and Ath 31:512 Jl 8 '22 500w

"It is a thing apart in the way of autobiographies. It can best be characterized as an extended after-dinner speech in which this friendly old banquetter holds up to the reader's view some three hundred great and near-great of America and Europe, past and present. Four-fifths of his stories are either superfluous or inept. The other fifth are stale and characterless. But they are all good natured and are kindly intentioned. Mr. Depew is a humorist, but his humor is not very discriminating. He likes all men, if they are good conventional fellows, but they all look more or less alike in these pages." B. B. Kendrick

+ — New Repub 30:350 My 17 '22 650w
New Statesman 19:644 S 16 '22 500w

"He has told the story of his life, or rather the high spots of his life as they touched people in the public eye, in a debonaire fashion plentifully interlarded with entertaining anecdotes. 'My Memories of Eighty Years' is Mr. Depew's longest after-dinner speech, but one that will hold its readers to the very last."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 9 '22 2850w

"The book is one big storehouse of anecdote. It brings before one scores of noted people here and abroad, with bits of description and apt incidents of their lives—all in perfectly good-natured banter. The 'Memories' is not marked by distinction of style. It is decidedly objective in that it shows us what its author did and saw and heard, while there is little to show us what are his convictions or philosophy of life or views of public questions. But, whatever it lacks, it is most emphatically an entertaining volume." R. D. Townsend

+ — Outlook 130:555 Ap 5 '22 1500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:238 My '22
Pratt p35 summer '22

"His book is noteworthy, not so much for what it reveals about its author as for what it tells concerning the leaders in politics, finance, and industrial and social life from the time of the Civil War to the present moment."

+ R of Rs 65:537 My '22 220w

St Louis 20:127 Je '22

"In no unfriendly spirit, we must express a certain regret that the venerable American orator delayed so long to produce the recollections of his full and genial career. His vitality in extreme old age is wonderful, but it may not be hypercritical to remark that it seems insufficient to sustain the labour of condensed literary form."

+ — Sat R 133:637 Je 17 '22 500w

"An uncommonly entertaining book."

+ Spec 128:690 Je 3 '22 1750w

"Is just the collection of good-tempered reminiscence and anecdote that the reader would expect from such a man at such an age. On the historical side it is not so valuable as a complete biography of Mr. Depew would be. But it makes an agreeable record of Mr. Depew's diverse activities, and affords a cheerful and tolerant backward glance through the period in which the modern United States was being built up."

+ Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 1650w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p351 Je 1 '22 1350w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Jc '22

DERIEUX, SAMUEL ARTHUR. Frank of Freedom hill. 292p $1.75 Doubleday

Dogs—Stories and legends 22-11097

The stories of Frank, the big, lovable Irish setter, which have appeared at intervals in the American magazine, are here gathered together into a continuous narrative. Bred in the kennels, his next home was an apartment house on Riverside Drive which was a prison to him. From this prison he was transferred to another, the baggage car which was to take him south for a hunting trip. One night he broke his chain and made a dash for freedom. The first adventure in his new life was finding little Tommy, lost in the woods and needing a friend, whose rescuers Frank guided by his howls and whose home became his own. His days thereafter were filled with adventures, in all of which he proved himself a thoroughbred.

Booklist 18:365 Jl '22

"Mr. Derieux reveals to an unusual degree the invaluable faculty of carrying his readers with him emotionally. This seems to be a quality quite apart from the general excellencies of writing. It is a distinct asset naturally and when it is used as Mr. Derieux uses it it can only be considered a highly-to-be-prized gift. Combined with his clearheadedness and freedom from sentimentality it gives us a book for which we admit deep admiration." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 29 '22 900w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"The animal hero is portrayed with a vividness that gives him the status of an old acquaintance, and his deeds are reported with a skill and a dramatic intensity that lay tight hold upon the reader's attention. Manifestly, Mr. Derieux has a genuine knowledge of and affection for animals, as well as a deep interest in the narrative he is writing; and the reader must be stolid indeed unless he finds the author's enthusiasm infectious."

+ Lit R p748 Je 17 '22 170w

N Y Times p18 My 11 '22 80w

"The story of Mac, the blind setter, has genuine pathos and some very good writing. The author's style in general is pleasing and unaffected; and just as his dogs are generally quite credibly doggish, his human characters are agreeably human. An excellent piece of work altogether of its kind." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 3 '22 90w

"Vivid without being fanciful, dramatic without being sensational, and sympathetic without being sentimental."

+ Outlook 131:387 Je 28 '22 100w

"All of these stories are written with an understanding of both human and dog nature which gives them genuine interest, while the delicacy of feeling displayed adds to their charm."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 30 '22 130w

Wis Lib Bul 18:187 Jl '22

DESCOUR, L. Pasteur and his work; tr. from the French by B. H. and A. F. Wedd. 256p $5 Stokes [15s T. Unwin]

B or 92 Pasteur, Louis 22-21244

"This book is concerned mainly with the story of Pasteur's scientific work. It is, in fact, a biography; but there is very little to tell in Pasteur's life outside his scientific work." (New Statesman) "It is not surprising that, in France, the man who solved the problems of fermentation, cleared up the extremely costly silkworm disease, showed how to make domestic animals immune from the plague that destroyed them, and finally, found a cure for rabies,

DESCOUR, L.—Continued
should be able to compete, in the popular estimation, even with the politicians. Pasteur's researches had the valuable characteristics that they not only formed the basis of extended future work, but issued immediately in important practical results. His work belongs as indubitably to the history of French commerce as to the history of French science." (Nation and Ath)

"A number of 'lives' of Pasteur are in print. The new work ranks below none of these for scientific value, for accuracy of statement, and for that mingling of personal portraiture with details of work accomplished that makes so large a part of the interest of all biographies." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '22 1150w

"We had thought on first receiving this volume that perhaps nothing more could be said about Pasteur, but we believe that this book will find a large and interested audience, especially among those who have read the other accounts of Pasteur and wish more particularly to follow out in detail his scientific contributions." Hans Zinsser, M.D.

+ Lit R p318 D 16 '22 600w

Nation and Ath 31:204 My 6 '22 950w

"By the translation of this work Drs. A. F. and B. H. Wedd have made available to the English-speaking public one of the most complete accounts of the scientific career of Pasteur. It is perhaps unavoidable that in a book of this nature one reads little of the man himself. However, one does catch a glimpse here and there." S. P. B.

+ Nature 109:805 Je 24 '22 750w

"The story is told in a plain, straightforward manner, and presents no difficulties to the ordinary well-educated reader. It cannot be said that it gains by the translation, however; that could hardly be expected." H. E.

+ New Statesman 19:216 My 27 '22 1050w

Reviewed by Van Buren Thorne, M.D.
N Y Times p44 Ag 27 '22 2100w

Reviewed by S. A. Coblentz
N Y Tribune p21 D 24 '22 720w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:598 D '22
St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

"Very lucid and admirably translated volume."
+ Sat R 133:395 Ap 15 '22 850w

DESMOND, SHAW. Labour: the giant with the feet of clay. 251p $3.50 Scribner [10s 6d Collins]

331.8 Labor and laboring classes. Labor party (Great Britain) (Eng ed L22-153)

"Mr. Shaw Desmond, who was for fourteen years a member of the Labour Party, depicts the party as having now reached a stage at which it is useless for progress, split into hostile camps, and becoming a mere voting machine. He satirizes its leaders and denounces its programme and its methods; and he believes that Bolshevism and 'direct action' will before ten years have passed, have lost all interest for the working class. His own vision of the future is that of self-development towards a spiritual democracy."—The Times [London] Lit Sup N 25 '21

"Mr. Desmond is as able to hold our alert attention at the last page of his book as he was able to do at the beginning. His book is sane despite its brilliancy. This book of his ought to be read by every college undergraduate, by every woman who thinks herself a 'radical' and by every honest, intelligent union member in this country." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '22 460w

Reviewed by W. E. Walling
Lit R p686 My 27 '22 1250w

Reviewed by F. O'Brien
N Y Times p13 Ap 2 '22 1350w
R of Rs 65:555 My '22 160w

"The book suffers from much reminiscient small talk."

— Sat R 132:sup79 D 17 '21 130w

"The sincerity and strength of his style command attention. In spite of its exaggerations and misinterpretations, the book contains enough truth to make it worth while." B. L.
+ Survey 48:248 My 13 '22 490w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p775 N 25 '21 60w

"Mr. Desmond has been a very active and enthusiastic worker for Socialism; he knows the modern movement thoroughly, and not only in this country; and he is a most incisive writer. His book is full of pungent things and home-truths, which lose none of their force through being tempered by generous personal references to leaders of the movement he now finds himself compelled to condemn."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p835 D 15 '21 780w

DETWELER, FREDERICK GERMAN. Negro press in the United States. 274p $3 Univ. of Chicago press

326 Newspapers—United States. Negroes

There are about 500 newspapers and other journals in America devoted exclusively to the interests of colored people and nearly all edited by Negroes. Until recently the existence of such a press has been practically unknown to the white group. This book studies the character of these papers, their circulation and influence, their contents and favorite themes, the extent to which the papers voice race problems, the light which they throw on Negro life and thought. Many extracts from the papers are included. Bibliography. Index.

Booklist 19:142 F '23

Reviewed by W. F. White
Bookm 56:501 D '22 150w

Boston Transcript p8 N 25 '22 360w

"The author has done a painstaking piece of work and has given within the compass of a few pages a most valuable bird's eye view of the Fourth estate of the Negro world." G. E. H.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p3 O 28 '22 420w

"There have been other essays on the newspapers, magazines and books read by Negroes, but never have they been analyzed so shrewdly and yet sympathetically as in this study which gives the reader an insight into Negro tastes and peculiarities and the reasons for them, which is fascinating and enlightening."

+ Survey 49:sup208 N 1 '22 250w

DEVEREUX, ROY, pseud. (MRS DEVEREUX PEMBER). Poland reborn. 256p il $6 Dutton [15s Chapman & H.]

943.8 Poland

Our traditional view of the Pole as a romantic visionary no longer holds, says the author, nevertheless Poland's present problems are determined by its past history. This is briefly reviewed in the first chapter, followed by an account of Poland during the war and its struggles of reorganization since acquiring independence. How greatly this reorganization is complicated by the past is the theme of the book and particular stress is laid on the political importance of an independent Poland as "the keystone in the arch of Europe."

"She has spared neither energy nor time in her researches and has produced a careful, interesting and illuminating book."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 7 '22 750w

"While understanding Mrs. Devereux's sympathies, we are made sceptical by her political suggestions."

— Nation and Ath 31:477 Jl 1 '22 180w

"The account given of Russia is frankly hostile, and also misleading. The whole political point of view is the defence of the Polish feudal landlord, and of large capitalist interests, such as the Galician oil-fields. This sort of propaganda can only do the Poles harm."

— New Statesman 19:192 My '20 '22 350w
N Y Times p12 Ja 7 '23 1350w
R of Rs 66:335 S '22 100w
Spec 128:594 My 13 '22 1050w

"This is the first comprehensive and systematic account of Poland's reconstruction effort since the war. The author's sympathies on the Upper Silesian and other disputed questions are entirely on the side of the Poles. On the Jewish problem she has, without any evidence of investigation among the Jews themselves, adopted the official Polish viewpoint stock, lock and barrel. A really critical and interpretive account of the new Poland for American readers still needs to be written."

— + Survey 48:629 Ag 15 '22 80w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p284 My 4 '22 880w

DEVINE, EDWARD THOMAS. Social work. (Social welfare lib.) 352p $3 (14s) Macmillan 360 Social work 22-2022

The book is intended for the general reader as well as for the classroom. Beginning with definitions of the scope and character of social work and of standard of living, the author proceeds to consider the problems with which the social worker has to deal—poverty, disease and disability, and crime; the agencies for the improvement of conditions; the coordination, supervision and financing of charitable activities; preparation for social work; and the future of social work.

Am Pol Sci R 16:730 N '22 100w
Booklist 18:174 Mr '22

"A firmly written treatise introduces a series which is to follow on various branches of social welfare. He considers scope, progress, standards, present accomplishment, hopes of the future. Sometimes Dr. Devine can be detected in surface reasoning." S. L. C.

— + Boston Transcript p8 Ap 22 '22 900w
 Reviewed by J. E. Mitchell
Lit R p108 O 14 '22 820w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:471 N '22
Pratt p11 summer '22
Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 7 '23 270w

"Here is a book written by a scholarly man, and from the vantage point of long executive experience in one of the largest agencies in the largest city in the country. It is commended to all those who feel in need of getting on a surer ground, and of thinking themselves into a clearer and surer footed course." S. C. Kingsley
 + Survey 48:122 Ap 22 '22 750w

DEWEY, EVELYN. Dalton laboratory plan. 173p $2 Dutton

371.3 Teaching. School administration and organization. Dalton plan 22-3208
 The book is an exposition of the free study plan as originated by Mrs Helen Parkhurst and successfully carried out in the Dalton (Massachusetts) high school. The plan conceives of schools as sociological laboratories where boys and girls discover their native faculties and needs thru real experiences relating to the world they live in, follow the contract of work outlined by the teacher, but distribute their own time and work at their own rate of speed as self-directed, self-disciplined individuals. Under this plan the children are experimenters and the instructors are observers and helpers. Classrooms with their bells, recitation periods, lectures, daily assignments of lessons and arbitrary teacher-pupil relations are abolished. The book shows both the advantages and disadvantages of the Dalton plan and how a school can be reorganized on this plan.

Booklist 18:214 Ap '22

"Miss Dewey makes very clear that the Dalton plan is an experiment, still partially in the fluid state. The schools which have tried it give their reports accurately and encouragingly. The best of the plan seems its almost infinite capability of adjustment to varying conditions." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 10 '22 1050w

Reviewed by M. P. Shawkey
Educ R 65:132 F '23 250w

"As a popular presentation of the Dalton Plan, the book will excite general interest. But as a presentation to the educational profession, the book lacks that critical, objective treatment which such an interesting scheme of reorganization deserves." G. T. Buswell

— + El School J 22:549 Mr '22 1250w

"While Miss Dewey has performed a useful service in bringing the Dalton plan to the attention of American educators, she is, in spite of her introductory warning too apt to become more enthusiastic than the experiment warrants." I. L. Kandel

+ — J Philos 19:667 N 23 '22 1250w
Lit R p642 My 6 '22 360w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:481 N '22
Pratt p12 summer '22
St Louis 20:209 S '22

Reviewed by W. D. Bowman
School R 30:390 My '22 650w

"This is a book that no teacher can afford to miss." J. K. H.

+ Survey 48:83 Ap 15 '22 180w
Wis Lib Bul 18:180 Jl '22

DEWEY, JOHN. Human nature and conduct: an introduction to social psychology. 336p $2.25 Holt

150 Social psychology. Habit 22-4249

"Mr. Dewey's treatment of habit is the characteristic feature of his analysis of human nature. His views regarding the primacy of habit and its social significance are in marked contrast to modern interpretation. . . It is the outstanding feature of Mr. Dewey's book that in neither instinct nor in intelligence is to be found the basal fact of social significance. In understanding what men do and why they do as they do, it is to habit that we must turn. . . The problem of social psychology is not to explain how our socialized ways of acting are instincts writ large, but how existing institutions and customs fashion and shape the individual. What we have to explain is not how individuals develop their folkways and their group manners but how already existing social habits influence and develop character." —Nation

Boston Transcript p7 Mr 18 '22 420w
Cleveland p53 Ag '22

"Notable book. All who are interested in finding a scientific basis for social psychology will find here a rewarding treatment of some of the fundamental problems of social control." B. S. W.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p5 Jl '22 700w

"It could be profitably reconsidered with ever increasing illumination at least twice a year during one's remaining lifetime. . . All his past studies are brought together in the present work, which happily is expressed in language comprehensible to any serious-minded and thoughtful reader." J. H. Robinson

+ Dial 72:514 My '22 870w
Int J Ethics 33:108 O '22 650w

"This book seems to me rather more alive, more directly and humanly expressive, than any other that Professor Dewey has yet written." C. E. Ayres

+ J Philos 19:469 Ag 17 '22 2700w

"Dewey's book will be enjoyed by all readers because of its inspirational tone and graceful style. The academic ethicist . . . may question the author's psychological, historical, and economic interpretations, but he cannot help being stimulated by the directness of expression, the felicitous phrasing, the breadth of view, the unconventional approach, and the numerous acute observations." A. A. Roback

DEWEY, JOHN—Continued

+ — Lit R p701 Je 3 '22 1250w

A popular presentation in altogether non-technical language. It should, therefore, be easily intelligible to the general reader. Mr. Dewey is undoubtedly the most competent writer on social philosophy in America, and any one who is seriously interested in understanding human nature and in improving human society will find in his latest book a vast store of information for instruction and guidance." M. T. McClure
+ Nation 114:20 J1 5 '22 1100w

"Highly abstract and concentratedly subtle though the book is compelled to be, it has a quality of vitality and abundance, an eloquence and emotional immediacy joined with epigrammatic sharpness unprecedented in Mr. Dewey's work, and rare among philosophers anywhere. There is a tang of spring and youth about it." H. M. Kallen
+ New Repub 30:379 My 24 '22 4100w

"Human Nature and Conduct" is chiefly of value, enormously so, as a bold step toward revolutionizing psychology. But it would be doing Professor Dewey an injustice if we did not mention that, fine and penetrating as is his analysis of mind and character, the application of his fully ripened thought to the big questions of morality and social life is no less stimulating and enlightening. No philosophical writer expresses himself with so thorough an avoidance of jargon or with more picturesque literary quality. The work is not only the most interesting that has come from Professor Dewey's pen; it is one of the most important of all contributions to contemporary thinking, so much so that no one who pretends to be a student of modern life and social problems can afford to neglect it." Austin Hay
+ N Y Times p5 O 8 '22 1450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:471 N '22

Pratt p7 winter '23

St Louis 20:204 S '22

Survey 48:81 Ap 15 '22 530w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p398 Je 15 '22 120w

Wis Lib Bul 18:129 My '22

"The book will not appeal to those who like a style rich in metaphor and vivid with concrete imagery. Yet the style is not without virtues of its own; there are even epigrams that stretch the truth a little to give a delightful sting to the phrasing. Although the book will not be read for its style, the matter it contains is so original and fundamental that necessarily it will be widely read by those who desire to think effectively about our present-day social situation. For it is a really important contribution in its own way towards actualizing the hope of all men for a better social to-morrow." H. T. Costello
+ — Yale R n s 12:409 Jn '23 820w

DIBBLE, SAMUEL EDWARD. Plumbers' handbook. 629p $4 McGraw 696 Plumbing 22-5535

"Reference manual of plumbing practice, including sections on mathematics, metallurgy and chemistry, and heat."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 19:40 N '22

Cleveland p78 S '22

Engineer p587 My 26 '22 ½col

Heating and Ventilating Magazine p61 Ap '22 ½col

"A very valuable compendium. The book is equally suitable for the practical man engaged in carrying out schemes, and the student who is learning his business. The book can be strongly recommended to all connected with sanitation."

+ Nature 110:602 N 4 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:345 J1 '22

Power p1035 Je 27 '22 ½col

Pratt p24 summer '22

Sanitary and Heating Engin p260 My 5 '22 ½col

DICKINSON, GOLDSWORTHY LOWES. Magic flute; a fantasia. 128p $2 Macmillan
[5s Allen & U.]

822

(Eng ed 21-13068)

"Mr Lowes Dickinson has not retold the libretto, which is a mere pretext for Mozart's mystery play in music; but he has been inspired by the music to a fantasy of his own, in which the people keep the names of the libretto but live the life of the music. For him the play means a conflict between the old, dark, unconscious, irrational nature of man, represented by the Queen of Night and Monstrosities; and the conscious life of reason, of love, of all the higher spiritual activities, represented by Sarastro."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Keeping to very simple prose and libretto-like rhymes, Mr Dickinson works out his fantasy quietly, yet with a wealth of imagery and a profundity of thought. In a clever way he has endowed these old operatic figures with human qualities." B. U. B.
+ Freeman 4:550 F 15 '22 300w

Reviewed by C. W. Stork

N Y Times p19 F 12 '22 1300w

"His Fantasia, half-prose as it is, is beautiful. All through there is the spirit of 'The Magic Flute,' and, at times, almost the music. In fact, it is a success where one would expect at best an ingenious failure."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p9 Ja 6 '21 1400w

DICKINSON, JOHN MOORE. Building of an army; a detailed account of legislation, administration and opinion in the United States, 1915-1920. (Century new world ser.) 398p $3 Century

940.373 United States—Army. Selective service act, 1917. European war—United States 22-12553

A comprehensive account of the process by which the United States, with a regular military force of a little over one hundred thousand men in April 1917, succeeded by November 1918 in placing over three million men under arms. It is a story of legislation and organization, describing the evolution of a military policy, the passing of the selective draft act of 1917, the method of selection and classification, the working out of the administrative machinery, the development of a social program for the army, and the organization and work of the general staff. The book closes with the passage of the army act of 1920 and a summary of the essentials of American army policy. The equipment and provisioning of the army and its training and military operations are not touched upon.

Am Pol Sci R 16:718 N '22 170w

"Packed with statistics and judicial opinions and legislative discussions, the book is hardly one for 'the general reader' whoever he may be. It is meant, apparently, for the good citizen who cares to inform himself how much influence Washington and Washington office holders in the Capitol building exert on even minor details of practice." Elbridge Colby

Lit R p65 S 30 '22 1000w

R of Rs 66:112 J1 '22 140w

DILLINGHAM, ROBERT BARCLAY, pseud. See Foulke, W. D.

DINGLE, HERBERT. Relativity for all. 72p $1 Little [2s Methuen]

530.1 Einstein theory (Eng ed 22-18919)

The purpose of the book is not to represent the theory of relativity from the point of view of the physicist but from that of men and women "who look on physics as one of many avenues into the secret of the universe and wish to know its windings in their relation to the larger field of human inquiry." Two parts: The foundations of science; The laws of nature. Diagrams and index.

"As the theory is essentially mathematical, the book cannot be entirely specific, but it will give him who is willing to apply himself diligently a fair conception of one of the most revolutionary ideas ever conceived. The book is stiff reading—is a compact treatise to be read only when the mind is clear and free from interruptions. But it will cause wideawake, original thinkers to give professor Einstein's hypothesis more than passing attention."

+ Bookm 56:353 N '22 180w

"This is at the same time one of the most helpful and one of the most tantalizing of the breed. Its helpfulness consists in a simple presentation, with intelligible illustrations drawn from the stock of knowledge of the average reader."

+ Lit R p252 N 25 '22 250w

"Within the limits of seventy small pages, without any mathematical symbols, he has done as well as can be expected in suggesting the various strains of thought that go to the making up of the theory. The reader of this account may be assured that he is not being misled." E. Cunningham

+ Nature 109:770 Je 17 '22 80w

"Mr. Dingle's booklet seems to us quite admirable."

+ New Statesman 18:596 F 25 '22 270w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p10 O 15 '22 950w

DIX, BEULAH MARIE (MRS GEORG H. FLEBBE). Turned-about girls. 355p il $1.75 Macmillan

22-18856

On the train going East were two little brown-haired girls, each "going on eleven." When they became acquainted they found that they were both bound for the same village. Jacqueline Gildersleeve was a regular tomboy and dreaded the summer which she was to spend with an elderly, rich aunt, and her almost elderly daughter. Caroline Tait was a timid little soul, very fond of music, and she dreaded the summer on her aunt's farm, where there were boys and cows and probably no piano. Jacqueline had just been reading "The prince and the pauper," and the idea of changing clothes and identities seemed a thrilling one. The gentle Caroline finally consented and as the relatives had not seen their respective nieces since babyhood, it worked out beautifully, especially for Caroline.

DIXON, FRANK HAIGH. Railroads and government. 384p $2.25 Scribner

385 Railroads and state—United States

22-4597

"The purpose of this book is to take up the story of the federal regulation of railroads in United States where most of the treatises on transportation have dropped it, at 1910, and bring the history down to the present year. . . . More experience and experiments have been crowded into these ten years than into all the remainder of our railroad history of nearly a century." (Preface) The ten years treated are divided into three periods: federal regulation, 1910 to 1916; the war period; return to private operation. The appendices contain a bibliographical note and a scheme for the consolidation of the railroads of the United States into a limited number of systems.

Reviewed by E. J. Rich

Am Econ R 12:635 D '22 1600w

"The author has made a real contribution to a subject of national interest. The book is written in lucid style and the vital points, succinctly stated, are accompanied by just enough of detail to make their application clear." W. J. Cunningham

+ Am Hist R 28:112 O '22 550w

"The book was written as a narrative, and as a narrative it should be judged. This form of treatment has obvious limitations. If professor Dixon had not told us that he had written 'with teachers primarily in mind,' the subordination of stiff reasoning to narrative interest could be forgiven the more easily." H. B. Vanderblue

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:713 N '22 400w

Booklist 18:214 Ap '22

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 15 '22 700w

"An interesting book, and full of information." Hilary Rogers

+ Daily News Rec p12 S 7 '22 1150w

"An important contribution, marked by fairness and painstaking compilation and summary of detail." Ray Morris

+ Lit R p180 N 4 '22 540w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:483 N '22

"The narrative is clear and impartial, and very little of the author's text can be controverted by anyone either favoring or opposed to the government's railroad policies." A. M. Sakolski

+ Pol Sci Q 37:713 D '22 600w

Pratt p10 winter '23

"One finds in Professor Dixon's treatise less of the purely technical features than in most discussions of railroad economics."

+ R of Rs 65:447 Ap '22 100w

St Louis 20:239 O '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

DJEMAL, AMAD, pasha. Memories of a Turkish statesman, 1913-1919. 302p $6 Doran [18s Hutchison]

B or 92 Turkey—Politics and government.

European war—Turkey (Eng ed 22-23114)

"Djemal Pasha was a member of the triumvirate which largely organized and effectively controlled the Young Turk movement; the other members were Talaat Pasha and Enver Pasha. Last year Talaat was assassinated in Germany, and Djemal himself suffered the same fate a few months ago at Tiflis: Enver survives them. As was to be expected, the story of the eight years that the book covers is presented wholly from the Turkish point of view—from what may be regarded in fact, as the authoritative Turkish standpoint; it thus has a special value, as it may justly be said to state the case for Turkey vis-à-vis her entry into the war and her policy regarding Christian and other minorities within her territories, as well as the Arabs in the Middle East."—Sat R

"There is an opportunity for readers interested in the Near East situation, and especially in the Turkish phase of it, to acquaint themselves with what the Turks themselves would call an 'inside view.' Nor is the value of the story diminished by the fact that, with many naïve disclosures of himself, Djemal Pasha writes throughout as the champion of his people and as a firm believer in the part they are yet to play in the history of the world." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 16 '22 900w

"Read these memoirs, if you would desire to understand how a Turk reacts to the impact of Western civilization. Read them for a great deal of crude truth—if you can read discriminatingly. Read them for the indication of Oriental processes of thought and of action. You will find in Djemal Pasha that fiery, ferocious, courageous, loyal patriot, an extraordinary revelation of the character and general mentality of a Turk. You may find not only the mind of the Turk; you may even find his soul." P. M. Brown

+ Lit R p366 Ja 6 '23 1700w

"Djemal writes in a haphazard and irresolute way. There is no fixed plan or sequence in his arguments."

+ N Y Times p8 D 17 '22 2650w

"This is a very important book, particularly in the light of events in the Near East and the Middle East that now engage general attention. In several ways it is a key to the Turkey of to-day."

+ Sat R 131:593 O 21 '22 750w

"Djemal's reminiscences will be of interest to all who want to study Turkish character and method. His cynicism is unconcealed. He was a patriot, no doubt, but nowhere in his book is there a trace of liking for any great causes for their own sake."

DJEMAL, AMAD—Continued

Spec 129:972 D 23 '22 1600w

DODD, LEE WILSON. Lilia Chenoworth. 289p $2 Dutton

22-7926

Introduced in an arresting way, by an act of insubordination in her English class at a woman's college, Lilia Chenoworth is set before the reader, a lovely, appealing and vivid creature, with more than a spark of genius, a disturbing element in her college, in the heart of her young English professor, Dunster Thorpe, and in the life of the president of the college whose friendship for the motherless girl had brought her there. Her temperamental outburst in class is followed by an impulsive act of indiscretion which brings the young professor, whom she seems to have singled out at the same time for both her scorn and her love, into a difficult situation from which he tries to save himself in a cowardly way. Lilia leaves college and the scene shifts to Paris where she goes to try her ability as an actress. The climax is reached on the evening of her debut when against odds and in the face of an unfriendly house she has a brilliant success, but in making her exit from the stage is accidentally killed before the eyes of her lover. The story is a pæan to beauty and is built about the idea that "beauty is always defeated—and never defeated." In this case its unquenchable flame is passed on to Lilia's lover, who tho unworthy responds to its light.

Booklist 18:329 Je '22

"A powerful swift-moving story filled with delicate characterization. It is not exactly a pleasant story, but its general effect is happy and its deep sense of human understanding makes it possible to expect even finer things in the future." J. F.

+ Bookm 55:416 Je '22 200w

"Mr. Dodd has obviously endeavored to give the reader a high type of honest, well conceived and ably wrought literature. In putting his book on a purely intellectual plane he set himself a hard task. That he has always equalled his own best hope is doubtful, but his average is very high. This is not a book with which to while away an evening. It is a book for discriminating readers, who take delight in complex and rational character study in fiction." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 29 '22 700w

"'Lilia' is a novel about beauty; it is genuinely the author's greatest thing, ethically; he is movingly eloquent about it; he warms one with the conviction of its undyingness in defeat. But one is still a little short of convinced that he has been as faithful to it æsthetically as he has been morally. . . . One is entitled to ask why he has composed it in what can only be called a subtle, etheralized, and super-refined form of melodrama." Wilson Follett

+ — Lit R p595 Ap 22 '22 2200w

"Lilia is beguiling; one grasps her at moments as a symbol of the candor of true beauty. Both that impression and the human figure fade out in a conventional semi-Murgesque Paris. All these actions and passions end by being, despite Mr. Dodd's unquestionable literary accomplishment, novelistic in almost the sense of Wilkie Collins!" L. L.

+ Nation 114:724 Je 14 '22 260w

N Y Times p16 My 14 '22 540

"The story is capital reading up to the dénouement; then there is a feeling of disappointment, not at all because the ending is unhappy in the conventional sense, but because, when the tragedy comes, it follows too closely upon a tragic-ridiculous incident and because it is too elaborately precluded." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:263 Je 7 '22 170w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

DODD, WALTER FAIRLEIGH. State government. (Century political science ser.) 578p $3.75 Century

353.9 State governments 22-17627

"Mr. Dodd outlines the organization and problems of state government in the United States and discusses the various forms of local government 'as parts of the state governmental organization, rather than as independent institutions.' One of the most distinct additions made by this work to the literature of state government in the United States is the emphasis on machinery already in use and changes proposed for effecting co-ordination in the various parts of the state's governmental task."—Springf'd Republican

"The book is easily the best survey of the field yet made. It should do much to dispel the bogey that has lived long with the study of state government." A. F. Saunders

+ Ann Am Acad 104:180 N '22 1200w

"An excellent addition to an excellent series."

+ Lit R p249 N 25 '22 100w

"Few men in the United States are as well fitted as Walter F. Dodd to write on American state government. His broad and intensive study and teaching of many phases of government, from the making, form and amendment of constitutions to the practical application of this governmental machinery in administrative functions, has given him possession of the theories of government when Gov. Lowden of Illinois invited him to give counsel and aid in reorganizing the state government of Illinois. It is not surprising, then, that this book should show an unusual grasp of theories and practices of state government in this country." E. J. Woodhouse

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 31 '22 1000w

DOLCH, EDWARD WILLIAM. Manual of business letter writing. 327p $2.25 Ronald

652 Commercial correspondence 22-12321

"This book is intended to help business men get the greatest possible results from their correspondence. It is definitely committed to the position that every letter should be designed to sell the house and its products, and it applies this principle to every sort of letter and every detail of correspondence management. To render the volume useful for quick reference the plan has been adopted of presenting the essentials of the subject, with the utmost possible compression, in a series of outline statements. The paragraphs which follow the outline sentences, giving reasons for the statements that are made and indicating the variations from the methods that the outline has prescribed, are designed to enable the user of the book constantly to supplement what is said by judgments of his own." (Preface)

Booklist 19:71 D '22

Pratt p22 winter '23

St Louis 20:243 O '22

"The book supplies the aid that a young business man needs, and should be a valuable aid to the firm that is running downhill instead of up."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 26 '22 70w

DOS PASSOS, JOHN RODERIGO, jr. One man's initiation—1917. 128p $1.50 Doran

Martin Howe, on board the ship that is taking him to France to serve in the ambulance corps, is happier than he has ever been before. He feels he has turned a new leaf. At last things have come to pass. Some of the things that happen, with their psychological reactions on Martin, are recorded in the book in a series of disconnected pictures. They are drab pictures of disillusionment; of a realization of the falseness of the war—of its artificial hatreds, of the mutual suicide into which it has plunged the nations. In all of them Martin is seen, with a few of his comrades, struggling to save himself from spiritual death by a vision of a better way.

"Not a pleasant affair, despite the beautiful simplicity with which it is written. The literary workmanship is remarkably skilful as war is forced to parade in nakedness—robbed of its chauvinistic, romance-embroidered clothing."

+ Bookm 55:648 Ag '22 110w

Lit R p835 J1 29 '22 350w

"Mr. Dos Passos gives us a series of fleeting impressions, sharp, vivid, quivering with light and largely disconnected. Curiously enough, it is this very lack of continuity which lends the book something of the urgency of reality, conveying almost without any synthesis the immediacy of a fluent stream of events."

L. R. Morris

N Y Times p17 Je 18 '22 700w

Reviewed by Constance Black

N Y Tribune p5 Ag 13 '22 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:160 N '22

DOS PASSOS, JOHN RODERIGO, jr. Pushcart at the curb. 216p $1.50 Doran 811 22-20749

"Sketches in vers libre, of scenes in Castile and Italy, and with the army in France." (Springf'd Republican) "The poet-peddler has his license both for the New World and the Old; he is equally at home when he stops his pushcart in Madison Square or at the Battery, and when he trundles it through the streets of Bordeaux and Castile and Bassano Asolo." (N Y Times)

Booklist 19:152 F '23

"Time and again, he seems to be uncertain which tone to adopt, which gesture to use—and succeeds only in making a compromise that expresses neither him nor his intention. The echoes, experiments, and variation of form lead me to believe that Dos Passos is a poetic writer rather than poet, that, being first of all a novelist, he attains in his prose a rigor and clarity absent from this volume. But his pictures of travel, the best of which have the quality of a vivid improvisation, are never program-pieces, seldom over-elaborate, always stimulating." L. Untermeyer

+ Bookm 56:495 D '22 200w

"Mr. Dos Passos, from whom a good deal of freshness might have been expected, is stale enough to startle. [He] is here in complete irretrievable trance. He has adopted for good what may be called the imagist stare—cold, sullen, eyeless contemplation of life in terms of aesthetic experience. He has achieved satire on certain pages, and now and then an image has blood in it; but for the most part he gets nowhere." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 115:530 N 15 '22 160w

"Dos Passos has gone far toward making free verse a truly lyric instrument. True, not every poem is a model of texture and flexibility. But flexibility and texture the great bulk of his verse has, and to an astonishing degree."

+ N Y Times p2 D 17 '22 900w

St Louis 20:300 D '22

"A Pushcart at the Curb" is a good title for these scrawled, clumsy sketches in vers libre. There is riot of color, there is nervous, sometimes bitter, insistent observation; a love of the good red earth, of violent, rough, homely things."

Springf'd Republican p7a N 19 '22 260w

DOS PASSOS, JOHN RODERIGO, jr. Rosinante to the road again. 245p $2 Doran 914.6 Spain 22-5409

"A gesture and a quest" is the title of the first of a collection of sketches of Spain—its life and literature. Telemachus and Lyaeus, in their tramps across country, find the soul of Spain expressing itself in two distinct ways, typified in the personalities of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza. Telemachus and Lyaeus, the two figures that recur in all the "Talk by the road" sketches, are themselves in a way illustrations of the two types. Among the author's literary appreciations are Pio Baroja in "A novelist of the revolution," Blasco Ibáñez, in "An inverted Midas," and the poets Antonio Machado and Juan Maragall.

Booklist 19:49 N '22

"Informal, carefree, and picturesquely patterned chronicle. He is aesthetic in his tastes, and in his choice of words as well. It is unfortunate that in arranging his book, he has placed his best chapter first, giving the remainder the appearance of trying hard to equal the early pages, yet never quite succeeding."

+ Bookm 55:538 J1 '22 150w

"It is charmingly discursive and full of quaint moods and reflections. The style is admirably clear and lucid."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ap 1 '22 150w

"Readers who want guide-books in disguise had better not buy 'Rosinante,' for the author completely omits to insinuate information as to where to eat or what to find beautiful. 'Rosinante' is an effort to paint up the delight of present days, an effort at once lively and successful." Stewart Mitchell

+ Dial 72:640 Je '22 780w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Ind 108:283 Mr 18 '22 70w

"Obviously Mr. Dos Passos is an amateur at social diagnosis. His literature, however, is professional. His most competent pages are those on modern writers whom he met or read—Azorin, Unamuno, Machado, and Baroja."

+ Nation 114:698 Je 7 '22 150w

"The book must be taken as a series of marginal notes, some of them sound, others rather tentative, and still others the unconscious self-revelation of Dos Passos himself. There are times when his prose is most admirable and at other times he cannot restrain himself from slightly boring the reader. But through it all runs a quick intent to grasp the essential Spain, an intent that appears to be rather frustrated through too much of a literary outlook and a desire to intrude himself into his impressions." H. S. Gorman

+ New Repub 31:366 Ag 23 '22 780w

"'Rosinante to the Road Again' emphasizes the essentially impressionistic method of Mr. Dos Passos's art, but the impressionism is sure in its technique; his perception has lost no intensity by gaining depth of insight. It substantiates a conviction of the fortitude and significance of his talent." L. R. Morris

+ N Y Times p17 Je 18 '22 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:298 Je '22

St Louis 20:223 S '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:155 Je '22

DOSTOEVSKII, AIMEE. Fyodor Dostoyevsky. 294p $4 Yale univ. press [12s 6d Heinemann] B or 92 Dostoevskii, Fedor Mikhailovich (Eng ed 22-26152)

"The daughter of the novelist who, with her mother, is apparently living outside of Russia, has chosen to signalize the Dostoevsky centenary with a new biography of which the materials seem to have been provided by the family tradition. Mlle. Aimee Dostoevsky was eleven years old at the time of her father's death; her personal memories of him are therefore slight. On the other hand, she seems not to have reckoned with Dostoevsky's other biographers or even read very carefully his own published letters. Patriotic as she is, she wishes it to be understood that the anarchism of the Russian temperament had no counterpart in her father's life. To explain this she develops a somewhat fantastic theory of race-heredity. Dostoevsky, it appears, was not a Russian at all, he was a Lithuanian; and the Lithuanians are 'Normans.' . . . This obsession of race pursues Mlle. Dostoevsky wherever she turns."—Freeman

Booklist 18:187 Mr '22

DOSTOEVSKII, AIMEE—Continued

"The peculiar bias of this book can only be accounted for in two ways: it is evidently partly due to the writer's having uncritically accepted the traditions of her family, and partly to the desire to make friends for Dostoevsky in countries that are at present suspicious of everything authentically Russian. Aside from her obsessions, her opinions and her judgments, which violate either common sense or the known, accessible and patent facts of Dostoevsky's life, her narrative is most entertaining and sympathetic in every way."

— + Freeman 4:550 F 15 '22 1600w

"The simple truth is that Mlle. Dostoevsky does not know her father. She may have a certain visual conception of the famous writer, but her mind and heart have not the slightest acquaintance with him. Everybody and everything that was dear to the father is treated in the harshest terms by the daughter." M. G. Strunsky

— Lit R p505 Mr 18 '22 2500w

"It is exasperating on account of its vagaries and solemn prophecies, but one thing anyhow she has inherited from her father, the gift of arresting attention. She is never dull; from first page to last she holds the reader's attention. It is a romantic history; but her father was a romantic hero." W. L. Phelps

— + N Y Times p8 Ja 15 '22 1550w

"Mlle. Dostoevsky's study of her father makes strange reading, and tells the story of the great novelist from a curious point of view."

+ Spec 128:115 Ja 28 '22 980w

"Notwithstanding all the complaints that one will make about the book, it is one that ought to be read, not so much for its account of Dostoevsky—as for the insight it will give into the Russian intellectual process."

— + Spring'd Republican p13a Mr 12 '22 600w

"It would be a mistake to read this book as if it were a biography. Mlle. Dostoevsky expressly calls it a study, and to this the reader must add that it is a study by a daughter. The letters, the facts, the testimonies of friends, even to a great extent the dates which support the orthodox biography are here absent or are introduced as they happen to suit the writer's purpose. . . . The reader asks himself inevitably what there was in the man to cause this shrill and excited partisanship on the part of his daughter. The search for an answer among the baffling yet illuminating materials which Mlle. Dostoevsky supplies is the true interest of this book."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p25 Ja 12 '22 1500w

Wis Lib Bul 18:273 D '22

DOUGHTY, WILLIAM HOWARD, Jr. Socialism and the average man. 238p $2.50 Putnam

335 Socialism 22-10782

The author undertakes to expound socialism in its various forms to the average man, pointing out the fundamental differences between the divergent schools, and the fundamental fallacies common to all. The writer is thoroly opposed to socialism in every form—to its program, its propaganda and its hope for a social revolution either thru peaceful or violent means. He sees in it nothing but a social menace and accordingly warns the average man against it.

"Professor Doughty's book is not very profound, being rather a compilation of quotations from various sources. Quotations are a dubious means of presenting a case. One can refute with an equally copious flood of counter quotations."

— Bookm 55:649 Ag '22 110w

Boston Transcript p7 My 31 '22 250w

"Calm, dispassionate, logical, all the more convincing because of these qualities, this book is addressed, not to the confirmed socialist, nor to those whose opposition is based on reasoned convictions, but to such others who are instinctively opposed, without accurately understanding socialism, or who are in sympathy with it, without having given thought to its practical aspects, or its ultimate effect upon civilization."

+ Daily News Rec p9 Jl 5 '22 860w

Reviewed by J. E. LeRossignol
Ind 109:213 O 14 '22 400w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey
Nation 115:283 S 20 '22 250w

Pratt p12 winter '23

Spring'd Republican p10 My 31 '22 200w

DOUGLAS, NORMAN. Alone. 280p $3 McBride [12s 6d Chapman & H.]

914.5 Italy—Description and travel

(Eng ed 22-17369)

"'Alone' is not so much a book of travel as the book of a traveller, a record of the author's moods and impressions as he passes from place to place along the Ligurian coast, or among the villages of old Calabria. [Mr Douglas] writes much of himself, his likes and dislikes, such as Victorians; Addison; Henry James; and certain people whom he met in Italy. He is at his best when speculating on some less controversial subject, such as the colours of Italy, or its marbles, or analysing some writer who does not rouse his spleen, such as Craufurd Ramage, whose 'Nooks and By-ways of Italy' he appreciates."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 19:80 D '22

Bookm 56:640 Ja '23 100w

Cleveland p87 N '22

Ind 109:214 O 14 '22 80w

"The book follows no set plan of action. Its rambling, easy style leads one now to the Forum at Rome; then there is a change of scene and the reader finds himself in Soriano. He makes no attempt to touch the high lights, but occasionally a particularly beautiful valley or a wind-swept promontory comes in for its full bit of description."

+ Lit R p180 N 4 '22 300w

N Y Times p9 D 24 '22 360w

"Mr. Douglas writes simply and charmingly; he is indifferent to linguistic gestures, but he has a nice ear for words and cadences. His thought is as unaffected as his writing; seldom does he indulge in the luxury of epigrams, and when he does he usually flouts Wilde by expressing more than a half-truth." B. R. Redman

+ N Y Tribune p11 O 15 '22 1100w

Pratt p29 winter '23

"The travel-books of Mr. Norman Douglas, 'Old Calabria' and 'Alone,' its present successor, are among the most delightful books of their kind in our language. This sort of literature can concern itself with ordinary places and describe them in so extraordinary a manner that they are raised 'sublime, out of space, out of time.' [It is its] witty non-moral self-sufficiency which gives this book its recondite flavour and lifts it so aloof from the mischances of imitation."

+ Sat R 132:739 D 31 '21 1200w

"Mr. Douglas manages to discount the pleasure his book is intended to convey by a supercilious manner and a preface the atmosphere of which is as chilling as any blast that blows across the steppes of Russia. The east wind blows through these pages, scaring and exasperating the reader."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p801 D 8 '21 800w

DOUGLAS, OLIVE ELEANOR (CUSTANCE) (LADY ALFRED DOUGLAS). Ann and her mother. 292p $1.75 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

22-27467

Ann's mother, a minister's widow, used to a large family and a full busy life among her husband's parishioners, was discontentedly facing a lonely winter in an out-of-the-way country-house six miles from the station, with Ann and a faithful old servant only. To keep her from moping, Ann conceives the idea of writing her mother's life, as an evening pastime. The story is her life in the process of being written. Beginning with Mrs Douglas' marriage, Ann leads her on from reminiscence to reminiscence until the entire family history is told. In the course of their conversations all the intimate family happenings, amusing and sad, tender and character-revealing, come to the surface with many a quaint anecdote about the homely Scotch people among whom the minister's lot had been cast. Occasionally the old servant puts in a word, in her broad Scotch brogue, to jog their memories.

Booklist 19:122 Ja '23

"O. Douglas is not always master of the method. There are moments when the story halts, pages where the movement is slow and awkward, but there is always a feeling for character, an interest in people and in living, which holds the attention. Certainly it is a story which many people will love, just as it is a story for a very definite audience."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 O 25 '22 550w

"It is not a novel but a chronicle, a cross-section of life of surprising human interest."

+ Lit R p204 N 11 '22 390w

"O. Douglas is quite successful and this narrative of a Scotch minister's wife is carried through with a high degree of literary polish and humor."

+ N Y Times sec7:6 O 1 '22 130w

Reviewed by Kathleen Field

N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 190w

"In spite of the slightly irritating sense of strain occasioned by the indirect method of narration, it is quite possible to appreciate in this history of a Scottish minister's family the aroma of piety and cheerfulness, of sanity and courage, which makes all Miss Douglas's books such delightful reading."

+ Spec 129:469 O 7 '22 160w

DOWD, ALBERT ATKINS, and CURTIS, FRANK W. Tool engineering: jigs and fixtures. 293p il $3 McGraw

621.9 Machine tools 22-3640

"Gives some attention to fundamental principles. Includes designing and detailing of jigs, and milling, profiling, broaching, riveting and vise fixtures."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 19:40 N '22

Cleveland p76 S '22

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:19 Ap '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:349 Jl '22

DOWNING, ELLIOT ROWLAND. Naturalist in the Great Lakes region. (Univ. of Chicago nature study ser.) 328p il $3.50 Univ. of Chicago press

570.97 Natural history. Great Lakes region. Physical geography 22-9379

Beginning with a description of the geological and physiographic features of the Great Lakes region, the book shows how these factors have affected the distribution of plants and animals in that section of country. The several type regions are treated in separate chapters—dunes, forest, prairie, and river valley—so that with the book in hand and with the help of the illustrations, the student may learn to identify the plants, flowers and geological processes met with.

Booklist 19:9 O '22

"Nature lovers need no better guide through the Great Lakes region than Mr. Downing. His book was written mainly for teachers, but it also makes an appeal to students and to the general reader which will not go unheeded. Some of the material presented here has a local interest only; the great bulk of it can be assimilated to advantage by readers who have never visited the region of the Great Lakes and are not likely even to set foot on the American continent."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '22 600w

"The book provides a clear account in simple language of the geological and physiographic development of the earth as far as the existence of plants and animals is affected. It gives a wealth of description of the plant and animal life in the Great Lakes region, supplying both the common and scientific names. These descriptions are accompanied by excellent illustrations, the book containing more than four hundred and fifty figures and drawings. It provides, therefore, a useful nature-study guide for field work by teacher and class. The use of the book will not be limited to the nature-study group."

+ El School J 22:797 Je '22 470w

Lit R p728 Je 10 '22 410w

"A convenient, intelligent, and fascinating introduction to the geology, flora, and fauna of the upper Middle West; admirably illustrated."

+ Nation 114:626 My 24 '22 20w

"The book will serve admirably the purpose for which it is designed, and should be of the greatest use to teachers and students of Nature in the area with which it deals. It is evident, however, that the author is not himself familiar with the scientific names of the animals and plants of which he writes. There are dozens of mistakes in the spelling of these names, and if a second edition is called for, the author would do well to enlist the services of a competent zoologist and botanist and submit his scientific names to them for correction."

+ — Nature 110:444 S 30 '22 270w

St Louis 20:210 S '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p316 My 25 '22 30w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. Coming of the fairies. 196p il $2.50 Doran [12s 6d Hodder & S.]

133 Fairies 22-23374

"What fairies, gnomes, elves and nymphs actually exist and can be seen in their woodland haunts by ordinary people is the contention of the book. The author takes great pains to prove that photographs of fairies have been taken by some children in Yorkshire, which have been found to be absolutely authentic. He also cites a great many instances where fairies and diminutive woodland creatures have been seen by trustworthy persons. He also insists that these beings are subhuman and have nothing to do with the subject of spiritualism."

Boston Transcript p8 D 13 '22 350w

"An extremely interesting book and one, it is to be presumed, which will cause a deal of argument pro and con. One does not necessarily have to believe in fairies to enjoy it. Sir Arthur possesses a pleasant enough method of narration, and the various incidents appertaining to the pictures are engrossing in themselves."

+ N Y Times p5 O 22 '22 2000w

St Louis 21:3 Ja '23

Spec 129:639 N 4 '22 900w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. Wanderings of a spiritualist. 299p $2.50 Doran [12s 6d Hodder & S.]

134 Australia—Description and travel. Spiritualism 22-9954

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:139 F '22

"However ready to take the challenge of the volume seriously, the responsible critic returns to it again and again as a pathetic human document. It is not the author's conviction of the return of the departed, revealed through the questionable performances of mediums, that forms the stumbling block to the respectful attention that one would extend to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, M. D., but the puerile (or is it senile?) credulity that pervades the pages, and a curious combination of personal vanity and provincial prepossession." Joseph Jastrow

— Ind 108:116 Ap 29 '22 1450w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN—Continued

"It is not a book of argument or propaganda; it is really a sort of report by a thoroughly convinced spiritualist to those of his own faith. Nevertheless, candid folk of any opinion will find it not only an interesting story by the creator of 'Sherlock Holmes,' but a thought provoking book."

+ Lit R p440 F 18 '22 200w

"Although the average person may well be skeptical as to the true causes of the manifestations which are accepted by the author as psychic, the same average person will at least give Sir Arthur a respectful reading and an interested one. For the book is jammed with interesting things."

+ N Y Times p11 F 19 '22 2250w

"A robust credulity is just as monotonous a thing as is dogmatic disbelief, and that is the chief reason, we suppose, why we find Sir Arthur's narrative so uninteresting."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p607 S 22 '21 800w

DRAGO, HARRY SINCLAIR. Suzanna; a romance of early California. 286p $1.75 Macaulay 22-25008

It was in 1835, a time of outlawry in California, when the descendants of the conquistadores on their haciendas were ever on the alert against bandits. On two adjoining haciendas lived Ramon de Gutierrez and Chiquita de Sola. They had been betrothed in early childhood as a pledge of friendship between the two houses. But on the Gutierrez rancho there lived also Suzanna, daughter of a peon, who had been Ramon's playmate, and the two loved each other. Chiquita, on the other hand, while at school in Mexico City, had fallen in love with an adventurous bull-fighter. Into this ensemble Benito Pérez, the notorious bandit and outlaw, injected himself as protector of the lovers, Ramon and Suzanna. There followed thrilling revelations about the parentage of Chiquita and Suzanna, an interrupted wedding ceremony, flight and hot pursuit, and a happy ending.

"In a delightful manner the word pictures of scenery and surroundings throb with the heat of the California climate; the characters are well devised and excellently sustained, and the story holds the attention from the start. At times it has the elements of the romantic story; again the elegancies of 'The Tales of the Alhambra' are suggested."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '23 230w

"The heroine has rather more semblance of humanity than is usually allotted to such ladies and the story is free from the prevalent uncleanness—a harmless melodrama, mildly entertaining."

+ Lit R p371 Ja 6 '23 110w

"It is a lively story that Mr. Drago tells, one that is likely to prove popular both in book form and on the screen, for which it is already slated."

+ N Y Times p25 D 24 '22 470w

DRAGO, HARRY SINCLAIR, and NOEL, JOSEPH. Whispering sage. 304p $1.75 Century 22-18087

"This story's setting is Nevada. In Nevada are to be found many Basques, descendants of Celts of the Spanish Pyrenees. They are the best sheep herders on earth and seem to have heretofore been a missing element in Western literature. The story is of a fight for water rights, a fight which involves wits and shooting, many moments of danger and many moments of suspense, but all logical, all bearing upon the immediate story."—Lit R

"The collaborators have worked together very harmoniously in producing a good plot, with suspense which carries the reader on, with characters who are true to human nature and to racial characteristics, and with some interesting description of the West."

+ Lit R p113 O 14 '22 200w

"There is a lot of lively action. Alas! there is not much else. Evidently the dryness of Nevada has had its baleful effect upon the style of Messrs. Drago and Noel."

— N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 210w

DRAKE, DURANT. America faces the future. 339p $2.50 Macmillan

917.3 United States—Civilization. National characteristics, American 22-4319

The object of the book is a critical examination of our present American standards and practices in the light of the ideals and traditions that underlie our democracy and to which we owe our stability, prosperity and eminence. The author holds that the dreams of our fathers have never yet been more than half realized; that no essentially new ideals are necessary for progress if we are genuinely loyal to the old, that we are at present occupied more with self-idealization than with striving to realize our ideals. The five aspects under which he views Americanism are liberty, equality, democracy, efficiency and patriotism. He insists that we need more of each for the true solution of our ills. A list of suggested readings is added to each chapter.

Booklist 19:6 O '22

"Neither helpful nor interesting. The author attempts to cover a multitude of subjects, and does it in a way that will leave those who are not with him in the beginning, still unconvinced at the end."

— Cath World 116:267 N '22 200w

Cleveland p93 D '22

Lit R p780 Jl 1 '22 160w

Pratt p29 autumn '22

St Louis 20:205 S '22

DREISER, THEODORE. Book about myself. 2 502p $3.50 Boni & Liveright

B or 92

In 1890 the writer was a callow youth earning a scanty living as a bill-collector in Chicago. The city intrigued him, as did also Eugene Field's Sharps and Flats column in the Chicago Daily News. It was the inception of his ambition to write, to become a newspaper man. The book is the story of his career as such, told in detail and with great frankness.

Booklist 19:155 F '23

"Theodore Dreiser has written up a straightforward sketch of his experiences in newspaper work and filled it full of real people and events under their own names. Every line is vibrant with life seen through the prism of personality. What gives this book its particular quality is the depth of the author's insight and the sympathy that identifies him with his experience for the time being and, through his power of vivid word picturing, is handed on to his reader." Edith Leighton

+ Bookm 56:498 D '22 250w

"Since five hundred octavo pages are considered necessary by him to record his start in life, we are unable to prophesy how many more will be required to bring the chronicle down to the present day. These long-drawn-out chapters of self-record and self-analysis are continuously filled with searchings of the mind and spirit and they deal as much with his mental as with his physical activities. The romance of love and sex as it entered Mr. Dreiser's life is portrayed with a hand as unshrinking as if it were recording the adventures of a hero and heroine of fiction." E. F. Edgett

— Boston Transcript p1 D 30 '22 1350w

"The best parts of Dreiser's 'A Book About Myself' are not about 'Myself' at all. A page of honest narrative is worth fifty tons of third-rate self-analysis." E. L. Pearson
— + Ind 110:25 Ja 6 '23 250w

"Dreiser's great powers of observation and description are of course fully shown in these pages. His slow and not always distinct drone is broken by moments of extraordinary brilliancy." H. W. Boynton
Ind 110:99 F 3 '23 1950w

"A dull, distasteful and quite unnecessary book. The book has some good spots, but, in the main, to read it is 'on this short day of frost and sun' 'to sleep before evening.'" R. Le Gallienne
— + Int Bk R p10 F '23 1800w

"In describing himself or the characters in his best books Dreiser gives a better picture of our man in the street than either the popular novelist who describes the man as he thinks he is, or the idealist who describes him as he ought to be, because Dreiser has never had any philosophy other than that which he has picked up from the vulgar world in which he lived. I trust Dreiser's picture of the moyen homme sensuel because he is so obviously one himself. It is chiefly because he has doggedly refused to feel what he is told that he ought to feel or to see what he is told that others have seen that he has become an important writer." J. W. Krutch
+ Lit R p396 Ja 20 '23 1300w

"The volume is important, for in it is seen in the making a novelist who has brought Americans face to face with vital facts and vital forces. In this history of Dreiser's early career as a newspaperman one beholds the furnace in which the creator of Sister Carrie was forged. Dreiser's experiences are worth reliving vicariously by the reader. They are a stimulus to thought. One is not likely to regard many things with complete complacency after reading this book."
+ N Y Times p14 D 24 '22 2550w

"He has given us here a book of tenderness and truth, humbly and sincerely told, the poignantly interesting history of a not unusual life, which in its very commonplaceness may serve as a representative record of the barrenness of the average life in elements of adventure and ecstasy." Burton Rascoe
+ N Y Tribune p17 D 31 '22 2000w

DRESBACH, GLENN WARD. In colors of the West. 117p $2 Holt

811 22-13909

Tho there are songs of the western mountains, of the desert and the prairie, many more of these nature lyrics are not localized. The group entitled Vignettes from life brings together some poems of simple people and things and there is a group of longer narrative poems.

"A trifle better than the average run of local American poetry. Though the verses are neither stale nor heavy there is no noticeable freshness or delicacy of touch about the rhythms. The workmanship is very often conscious."
— + Bookm 56:357 N '22 180w

"He has combined simplicity and sincerity with a freshness of imagination that is wholly delightful. He has made the beauty of the desert a gift to us, and has put the magic of poetry into the hills, the pools, the sands and the stars, and that magic we find in line after line of his verse." W. S. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 4 '22 400w

"Always his material is of interest, never does his technique quite impress. It is a book of such resolute and careful workmanship that one hesitates not to say more about it, but in this particular perspective there is simply nothing more to say." W. R. Benet
— + Lit R p820 J1 22 '22 110w

Reviewed by R. Le Gallienne
N Y Times p9 S 17 '22 260w

"This book of poems, because of its sincerity of feeling, is to be recommended to all lovers of the West."
+ Survey 49:sup210 N 1 '22 80w

DREVER, JAMES. Introduction to the psychology of education. (Modern educator's lib.) 227p $2 Longmans

150 Psychology, Educational

An introductory and concise treatment of the relation of psychology as a science to education as a theory. The book takes special account of some recent developments which have a direct bearing on the psychological aspects of education—the movements represented by Montessori, Freud and the American behaviorists. Each chapter is followed by references for further reading. Index.

"He states his case rationally, appreciates the basic value of psycho-analytic theory without approving of its excrescences, and is definite without being dogmatic. Somewhat tough reading, perhaps, for the average layman."
+ New Statesman 20:120 O 28 '22 160w

"In general, Dr. Drever's work has been to clear us a middle course through very foggy waters. For chart, he has taken his wide knowledge of general psychology, and with its aid he has managed to keep his perspective undistorted. He is to be congratulated upon his success. He has met the crying need of the moment for a statement of broad, underlying principles upon which we can base our actions, and now we can only hope that he will devote himself to a more detailed study of the question. Such a work, from so eminent and sane a psychologist who has also the unusual ability to express his ideas clearly, would be of inestimable value."
+ Spec 129:729 N 15 '22 1150w

"He deals constructively, intelligently, but a trifle dogmatically with the Freudian psychology. All who have surrendered their souls to the keeping of the Freudians should read this book." J. K. H.
+ Survey 49:256 N 15 '22 80w

DREW, JOHN. My years on the stage: with a foreword by Booth Tarkington. 242p il 85 (21s) Dutton

B or 92 Actors and actresses. Theater—United States 22-24272

John Drew's memories call up most of the stage familiars of his time, including three generations of Drews and Barrymores. The autobiography is a genial, humorous and modest record of Drew's stage experiences and of the parts which he has played. Illustrated with numerous portraits.

Booklist 19:119 Ja '23

"When one thinks of the immensely rich and beguiling story of his life that Drew might spin if he were sitting at the Players' Club of a winter's night with a few good listeners gathered round, and when one compares such a play of sidelights on the great folk of the 'eighties and 'nineties with the painfully decorous and uneventful chronicle he has felt free to write—the difference is altogether too dismal." Alexander Woolcott
— Bookm 56:346 N '22 140w

"Mr. Drew's book is the cream of a ransacked scrapbook."
+ Dial 74:104 Ja '23 30w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Ind 109:310 N 25 '22 160w

"A book about the stage that will delight the casual reader and be also a faithful source of satisfaction to any student of the drama." Francis Wilson
Int Bk R p28 Ja '23 1300w

"That John Drew is the least critical of autobiographers, as well as one of the most cheerful, kindly and urbane, results, no doubt, from the fact that his long life has been phenomenally prosperous and happy."
+ N Y Times p7 N 19 '22 1300w

"The whole atmosphere resembles nothing more than a fireside conversation, with Mr. Drew in the rôle of the delightful raconteur."

DREVER, JAMES—Continued

The book seems to follow a rather consistent chronological outline, yet there are so many delightful incidental journeys into the field of anecdote that it is saved entirely from becoming a too-dry recital of the bare facts." S. T. Beach
+ — N Y Tribune p32 D 10 '22 1300w

Pratt p33 winter '23
St Louis 21:16 Ja '23

— Sat R 134:994 D 30 '22 60w

"Seldom does an actor write an autobiography so modest, so precise, and so straightforward. Mr. Booth Tarkington's introduction to this admirable story of his life shows that he is no less loved as a man than he is applauded as an actor."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p785 N 30 '22 350w

"As a comment on the art of the theatre or as theory, this record has no value; but as an unconscious commentary on the theatre as the field of Mr. Drew's activities and on the nature of an actor's career and development in the last five decades it has no small importance."

Theatre Arts M 7:84 Ja '23 90w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Cotswold characters. 2 54p il $1.40 Yale univ. press [6s 6d Millford] 828 22-7459

"Wholly in sympathy with the background and its natives, he describes half a dozen men. Thesiger Crowne, the Mason; Simon Rodd, the Fisherman; Rufus Clay, the Foreigner; Pony, the Footballer; Joe Pentifer and Son, all characters racy of the soil, oddly indigenous."—Lit R

"It is clear and concise, kindly and humorous—an example of Drinkwater's best prose style."

+ Bookm 55:76 Mr '22 80w

Cleveland p70 S '22

Dial 72:538 My '22 90w

"By the sincerity and simplicity of the telling he has made a graceful and sympathetic picture. The sturdy character of the people, the firm qualities of mind and body which have preserved them from the disintegrating effects of life in other rural sections of England—these have been caught in swift, significant moments, and set down with a poet's restraint." L. B.

+ Freeman 5:70 Mr 29 '22 150w

Ind 108:359 Ap 8 '22 50w

"The book is quaintly made, the writing decorous, to which the wood engravings in illustration, by Paul Nash, are a strange contrast. Mr. Drinkwater's 'rural pen' has given us charming impressions of that countryside."

+ Lit R p804 Jl 15 '22 190w

"Mr. Drinkwater has extracted almost more than all the flavour from his Cotswold masons and wheelwrights and thatchers, and the studies in which their characters are sketched produce an impression of rather sickly sweetness. However, the book will attract many readers, for it is pleasant and meditative."

— + Spec 128:409 S 23 '22 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p294 My 4 '22 40w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Seeds of time. 68p $1.25 Houghton [3s 6d Sidgwick & J.] 821 22-4931

"Very appropriately Mr. Drinkwater names his latest collection of poems, 'Seeds of Time.' There is a unity of thought and ideals in the substance, though the individual poems often seem to point an indifferent theme. The book ends with a sequence of twelve sonnets called 'Persuasion.'"—Boston Transcript

"For magic, Drinkwater substitutes melodious moralizing; instead of introspection he gives us inversions. There are gleams in many of his pages, but they have not the glow of the true metal." L. Untermeyer

— + Bookm 55:302 My '22 220w

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 22 '22 850w
Cleveland p69 S '22

Reviewed by J. G. Fletcher

— + Freeman 5:403 Jl 5 '22 500w

"Falls somewhat below the mark of Mr. Drinkwater, the dramatist. Perhaps this is a little unfair. Those who love the quiet, philosophic note will find much to charm them in these forty-two well-wrought poems; and we must not always demand striking originality, livelier spirit, and subtler music, when there remains something to compensate for their absence." Arthur Guiterman

+ — Ind 108:396 Ap 22 '22 150w

"He merely writes gracefully. His philosophy is essentially amiable, but it strikes no spark, engenders no thrill. Some of Drinkwater's verse moves us, as a breeze moves the grasses, and lulls. But that is all. There is gentle tenderness, there is well-bred nobility, there is 'the excellence of charity,' of which he sings."

+ — Lit R p804 Jl 15 '22 400w

"Mr. Drinkwater remains the pastoral lamb through all his attempts at ruggedness in rhythm."

— Nation 114:779 Je 28 '22 60w

"There are some taking pieces in the volume. [But] with the exception of these and a few others, 'Seeds of Time' makes but a labored climb to life, and leaves us conscious of the journey rather than its end. The love-sonnet sequence at the close has its dignity compromised by sententiousness."

— + Nation and Ath 30:626 Ja 21 '22 210w

"They are not, happily, 'perfect' poems—at least they leave no impression of self-conscious elaboration in the mind of the reader. These poems were made out of life and they carry life. In them poetry finds a sound vehicle to work its will. Despite their occasional note of temporary defeat and despair, they have at bottom the note of unfailing good hope."

+ N Y Times p4 D 3 '22 1700w

"The delicious coolness and delicate clarity of John Drinkwater's poetry is to be observed at its highest peak in this volume."

+ Outlook 132:254 O 11 '22 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:363 Jl '22

"Mr. Drinkwater throughout is too much occupied with Mr. Drinkwater. It is true of course that a lyric poet must be his own chiefest concern, yet only in a sense which Mr. Drinkwater rarely remembers. Above all he must not be concerned with poetic 'shop.'"

— Sat R 133:64 Ja 21 '22 310w

"Mr. John Drinkwater's new volume contains nothing that is very remarkable, though there are many pleasant pieces in it. But Mr. Drinkwater is not by any means at his best in the lyric. . . . He cannot, I believe, move of himself. This is no great matter, for he will never come to an end of all the queer buried facts that will cry out to so sensitive a listener. He will never lack grains of sand for his pearls." A. Williams-Ellis

+ — Spec 127:791 D 10 '21 200w

"In his new volume of poems Mr. Drinkwater is hardly so fortunate as in an earlier volume, 'Poems, 1908-1919,' for in the present collection there is neither the variety nor the virtuosity to be found in the former thicker book. Here he seems preoccupied with himself and the problem of time—a problem world-old and forever unsolved."

— Spring'd Republican p10 Ap 19 '22 680w

"Mr. Drinkwater is rendered almost helpless at times by some quite simple reflection. Ideas are in the long run essential to poetry, but by the time they have become poetical we hardly recognize them as ideas, and the poet who palpably reasons with us, as Mr. Drinkwater so often does, is in danger of losing his way. An even greater danger seems to us to be menacing Mr. Drinkwater: nothing less than a serious misconception of the significance of his contribution to the art."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p838 D 15 '21 400w

Wis Lib Bul 18:182 Jl '22

DRINKWATER, JOHN. comp. Way of poetry. 240p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Collins]

821.03 English poetry—Collections 22-19944

"An anthology for young readers. Mr. Drinkwater has chosen for it the motto, 'Poetry is beautifully like life itself in seeming not to change yet always being new.' There are as modern poets as Harold Munro and J. C. Squire included, not forgetting the better-known Georgians, and several poems of Mr. Drinkwater's own. There are many poems of animals and birds, and many bucolically simple."—Lit R

Booklist 19:91 D '22

Bookm 56:203 O '22 60w

"It is certainly a good kind of book for the child of the English countryside, good for the American child as an introduction to English poetry. There is nothing here too difficult or obscure, even in the selections from Blake. It is entirely a British selection. There is no American poetry here. It is thus limited."

+ — Lit R p167 O 28 '22 170w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:27 Ja '23

Pratt p26 winter '23

"If some of the selections seem too involved in idea, they are justified by their exhilarating rhythm. Perhaps the best feature of the book is its inclusion of recent work by British poets."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 15 '22 300w

DRISCOLL, LOUISE. Garden of the West. 98p $1.25 Macmillan

811

22-18208

"The note of transparency which runs through these verses will attract the many readers who want nothing but the simple machinery of rhythm and the primary elements of mental and emotional experience in the medium of rhyme."—Boston Transcript

"Miss Driscoll produces a quality of expression that sometimes has a sense of poetry, in distinction to mere verse. But for the most part her volume is nothing more than verse; it scintillates with attractive images, it has quite often the faint outline of symbolism, and there is always music flowing enticingly on the crest of her rhythms." W: S. Braithwaite

+ — Boston Transcript p5 O 7 '22 1600w

"Her charming, slight small pieces of verse do not give complete expression to the more mature emotion which can be felt underlying them. But we seek for something behind this pleasantness which may one day find itself wings of fire, untouched by the usual or the sentimental."

+ Lit R p251 N 25 '22 200w

"Louise Driscoll wants variety and strength. Her purity and sweetness make her an acceptable magazine poet; her book will wait in vain to be seriously read." D. M.

+ — Nation 115:sup382 O 11 '22 30w

"No poem in Miss Driscoll's book is great, none is even memorable. The lyrical, the visionary, the philosophic gift is slight. But no one can read verse after slender verse without receiving unmistakable intimations of a determined personality." Helen Goodspeed

+ — New Repub 32:343 N 22 '22 180w

"She is always facile and often graceful. The trouble appears to be in rising properly to the occasion."

+ — Outlook 132:725 D 20 '22 250w

DROWN, EDWARD STAPLES. Creative Christ; a study of the Incarnation in terms of modern thought. 167p $1.25 Macmillan

232 Incarnation. Jesus Christ 22-3906

Written around the thought that each generation must have a Christ real to itself and in accordance with its own ideals, this book offers an interpretation in terms of our own time of belief in Jesus Christ. It discusses the union of the divine and human in Jesus, how this union is different in Jesus from what it is in other men, and the meaning of the Incarnation.

"Because he hits the nail of modern necessity on its glaring head, Dr. Drown's new volume will make an appeal which few treatises on Christianity can make today." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 13 '22 900w

J Religion 2:332 My '22 50w

Reviewed by Lyman Abbott

Outlook 130:702 Ap 26 '22 490w

DRURY, SAMUEL SMITH. Thoughts of youth; papers for young people. 186p $1.25 Macmillan

170 Young people. Conduct of life

22-19245

In these talks to young people, especially to boys, the rector of St Paul's school, Concord, New Hampshire, speaks both to and for them, frankly of their faults, but sympathetically. The talks are on practical concerns of everyday living—manners, health, family, relatives, friends, vocation, etc. Religion is brought in simply and naturally, but never over emphasized.

Boston Transcript p7 Ja 27 '23 150w

"An exceptionally well-written and wholesome collection of talks to young people by an experienced teacher with boys of his own."

+ J Religion 3:109 Ja '23 30w

"For all its human and humorous tone, and its frequent whimsicalities of subject-matter, this little book of sermons about what boys had best do and like is from the cloister. A very modern cloister looking out to the football field, but yet a cloister, serenely inclusive of its own interests. No special 'attitude,' not a word in characterization of 'this age,' awaiting the rector's young hopefuls, just—pleasantly turned in this case—the eternal, valuable platitudes. But will youngsters not of St. Paul's School read the book?"

+ — Lit R p207 N 11 '22 160w

"A frank, readable discussion of the outstanding interests of every boy's life. It will help the old to understand the young, and the young to understand themselves."

+ Springf'd Republican p6a D 3 '22 100w

DUKES, SIR PAUL. Red dusk and the morrow; adventures and investigations in Red Russia. 322p il $3.50 Doubleday [15s Williams & N.]

914.7 Russia—Description and travel. Russia—History—Revolution, 1917- 22-5825

The author went to Russia as an official of the English Secret intelligence service and his main object was to ascertain the Russian people's point of view of the communist experiments of the Bolshevik government. His own attitude was neither that of the professional politician, nor of the social reformer, nor of the stunt-journalist, but that of the ordinary man in the street. He posed as a Russian, assumed many different disguises and faced many dangers. His conclusions are that the present government is utterly alienated from the sympathies, aspirations and ideals of the nation, that the Russian nation is not one of fools but of potential geniuses and that much is to be hoped in future from their genius for free co-operative organization.

"Sir Paul Dukes has written a thrilling, dramatic, autobiographical detective-story. The spirit, as much as his vivid portrayal of conditions and personal experiences, lends quality to the book. He has given us the best inside account of the organization and morale of the Red Army, and perhaps the best account of the Communist Party organization, which have been published in English." V: S. Clark

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ap '22 390w

"It is as full of exhilarating excitement and adventure as the most avid fiction reader could ask." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ap 8 '22 840w

DUKES, SIR PAUL—Continued

Reviewed by Harold Kellock
 Freeman 6:356 D 20 '22 450w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
 Ind 108:283 Mr 18 '22 130w
 Nation 114:780 Je 28 '22 180w

"Whatever political belief the reader may hold, if he respects impartiality and loves a good story for its own sake, he will find Sir Paul Dukes's book admirable for both reasons. The Communist and the anti-Bolshevist will dislike his conclusions equally, but we are certain they could not read him without interest and respect. There are enough adventures and intrigues in this book to provide the average novelist with the material for ten romances."
 Nation and Ath 31:598 JI 29 '22 430w

"To those who are trying to obtain a just perspective of events in Russia, and are endeavoring to form an intelligent opinion as to the advisability of recognizing the Soviet government Sir Paul Dukes has opened up new vistas of thought. After reading such opinions emanating from such an obviously conservative observer, actuated solely by love and understanding of Russia and its needs, those who oppose a de facto recognition of the Soviet government must advance sound arguments in support of such opposition." M. E. Harrison

+ New Repub 30:231 Ap 19 '22 1300w
 New Statesman 20:supxx D 2 '22 30w

"The volume is at once one of the most entertaining, most informing and illuminating of all the many books that have been written during the last four years about Russia."

+ N Y Times p10 Mr 19 '22 1550w
 Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:240 My '22
 Pratt p31 summer '22
 St Louis 20:76 My '22
 Spec 129:52 JI 8 '22 350w

"The book is without rancor or passion. It is a plain tale, plainly told, not without conviction, but obviously without prejudice, by one who has seen and knows. The telling of it is a great service of information."

+ Springfield Republican p7a My 21 '22 1500w

"The truth about Bolshevism has never been put more accurately, more concisely, and more fairly."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p331 My 25 '22 900w
 Wis Lib Bul 18:183 JI '22

DUNN, ARTHUR WALLACE. From Harrison to Harding; a personal narrative covering a third of a century, 1888-1921. 2v 420:444p il $7.50 Putnam

973.8 United States—Politics and government. Presidents—United States 22-17768

"While no attempt has been made to write the history of the presidential terms of Harrison, Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson, these six men . . . have been brought prominently forward. I have known all of them well, some of them intimately. What I have written of each or any of them is from the point of view of an unprejudiced observer striving to tell the story as it unfolded." (Conclusion) The author has also endeavored to set forth how the political pendulum swings back and forth—from party to party—and how the most marked among the many changes that have taken place within this third of a century, has been the change from a once virile states' rights doctrine towards centralized government. Index.

"He has not written a history of the times in which he has lived but he has written a book of so important and intriguing a sort that no future historian will write a history of this period without consulting it." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 30 '22 1200w

"His book is amusing and interesting, but it is not history." E. P. Wheeler

+ N Y Times p8 D 10 '22 2550w

"While bearing some of the marks of the hurried writing inevitable in the habits of the daily newspaper correspondent, the volumes are decidedly interesting."

+ Outlook 132:254 O 11 '22 170w

"So remarkably authentic and so free from bias. Was well worth the writing and will take its place among standard works in its field."

+ R of Rs 66:668 D '22 900w

DUNN, WALDO HILARY. Life of Donald G. Mitchell (Ik Marvel). 241p il $4.50 Scribner
 B or 92 Mitchell, Donald Grant 22-9768

The subject of this biography was author, editor, practical farmer, landscape-gardener, art critic, and attained distinction in all these activities. Born in 1822 he was the contemporary of Washington Irving, James Fenimore Cooper, Daniel Webster, William Cullen Bryant, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Nathaniel Hawthorne and Ralph Waldo Emerson. His pen-name, Ik Marvel, is most vividly associated with his "Reveries of a bachelor" and "Dream life." Most of his life was passed in the retirement of Edgewood Farm near New Haven. He was a rare and gentle spirit. The book falls into three parts: The formative years; The unsettled years; The Edgewood years. Bibliography, index and five portraits.

Booklist 18:361 JI '22

"It is graceful, easy reading, leisurely, unostentatious, and has a definite purpose."

+ Bookm 55:536 JI '22 120w

"In every detail Professor Dunn has accomplished a sound piece of biographical writing in this volume. It brings together personal matter in the shape of its subject's correspondence and published writings, and it gives a remarkably faithful picture of a notable personality." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 13 '22 1300w

"Mr. Dunn's biography is quite uncritical. It isolates and idealizes a subject which might have been made extremely interesting if he had been shown in relation to his times and with less of breathless wonder. As it is, Mr. Dunn has simply put another jar of sweet conserve on the shelves of the public libraries, where eulogy passes for biology." E. T. B.

+ Freeman 5:621 S 6 '22 450w

"Professor Dunn has had abundant material placed in his hands in the shape of correspondence, note books, and memoranda of various sorts. He has constructed a thoroughly readable and appreciative life." H. A. Beers

+ Lit R p758 Je 24 '22 1450w
 Nation 115:131 Ag 2 '22 110w

Reviewed by P. H. Boynton
 New Repub 31:52 Je 7 '22 720w

"The author has selected a hero, not a victim; he has written with reverence, not with irony. He has devoted all his energies to the illumination of his subject, rather than to self-advertising. All the time his eyes are on the chief character, not on the audience. The result is an admirable portrait, drawn with the insight born of sympathy."

+ N Y Times p3 Je 4 '22 2900w

"The author gives an excellent consecutive account of Mr. Mitchell's life."

+ N Y Tribune p5 JI 23 '22 250w

Outlook 131:428 JI 5 '22 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:367 JI '22

Pratt p35 summer '22

R of Rs 65:672 Je '22 160w

"High praise is due Prof. Dunn for his management of the materials at his command. The work is a worthy contribution to our knowledge of American men of letters and an admirable example of biographical writing."

+ Springfield Republican p7a N 26 '22 1250w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. Don Rodriguez: chronicles of Shadow Valley. 318p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

(Eng ed 22-11315)

Once upon a time, in the golden age of Spain, the Lord of the Valleys of Argento Harez left all his domain to his younger son who was dull of wit, but to his eldest he bequeathed his sword and his mandolin; for Rodriguez had skill with the sword and a way with the mandolin. The one would win for him what he could not achieve with the other. So Rodriguez sallied forth in quest of the wars, found in Morano a faithful Sancho Panza and had many adventures, all of which are recorded in the twelve chronicles of the book. He fared into the land of magic and of romance, of which his mandolin had sung to him. He won the favor of the king of Shadow Valley and the love of the fair Serafina. The former made him rich and powerful and the latter, happy forever after.

Booklist 19:53 N '22
Cleveland p84 N '22

"There are enough delightful things in this volume to make it a book worth buying. And there is a distinction in tone that makes anything Dunsany writes worth putting up on the favorite shelf." W: R. Benet

+ Lit R p286 D 9 '22 780w

"Even the most convinced of Lord Dunsany's admirers will be compelled to admit that in 'Don Rodriguez' he is not at his best. All the elements of matter and manner which should give the glamor of romance are there, but these 'Chronicles' are still-born." J. W. Krutch

— Natlon 115:503 N 8 '22 230w

"To throw off all restraint is too easy, and in Lord Dunsany's case it does not even achieve the superficial effect of novelty. For it is only his incoherence that is his own. His properties are desperately familiar, whereas his incoherence of method reminds us of those old ladies who play patience and shift a card whenever it is convenient. There is, of course, nothing reprehensible in breaking the rules: only one wonders why they take the trouble to play patience."

— New Statesman 19:130 My 6 '22 900w

Reviewed by W: Beebe

N Y Times p3 O 1 '22 1800w

"Dunsany has accomplished what few contemporary writers could, and has given us a novel that will prove attractive to all who are wearied by the fiction that confines itself stringently to fact instead of setting out on paths of its own and daring to imagine and to create." S. A. Cohentz

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 8 '22 660w

"Chronicles such as these demand a raciness, an instinct for the crude gross earth, which are lacking from these lily pages. The frequent addresses to the reader with which these narratives are strewn strip them of their last vestige of reality."

+ Sat R 133:423 Ap 22 '22 330w

"Written in highly decorated prose. Even those who have a limited appetite for the works of the more genteel picaresque and peripatetic school of writing will be bound to acknowledge that The Chronicles of Rodriguez are not without charm. Here and there the writing is amateurish."

+ — Spec 128:470 Ap 15 '22 600w

"You may find the book a bit wistful, a trifle sad, a little regretful—a poet's shadow-picturing of life: very real, and romantic and never quite what we imagined it would be, yet not so different after all when we have faith to depend upon the promise of the king of Shadow valley." R. W. N.

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 480w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. If. 185p $1.75 (3s 6d) Putnam

822

22-6838

This four-act play is a fantasia of the accustomed Dunsany type and in his usual exotic

setting. John Beal, an ordinary prosaic London dweller, thru the magic of a crystal given him in gratitude by an Eastern carpet merchant, is enabled to go back to a certain morning ten years ago and live in the span of one day the life of romance and adventure which he missed in consequence of losing the 8:15 train. In the words of William Beebe's foreword, the play "begins in a spirit of comedy, develops mysteriously, and ends satisfactorily."

"The play as a whole seems hastily done; it goes by fits and starts, in ups and downs. The first part one imagines Milne doing more effectively, but later the writer is at his best." J. W. D. Seymour

+ — Atlantic's Bookshelf J1 '22 270w

Booklist 18:322 Je '22

Cleveland p36 My '22

"The chief charm of the play lies in the irony which dances over all its surfaces, and which sustains the hero's matter-of-factness through all manner of amazing adventures. It is a good comedy for the library and a better one for the stage."

+ Dial 72:649 Je '22 130w

Freeman 6:286 N 29 '22 350w

"The Dunsany technique is inimitable—in its naïveté, in its odd combination of wit and poetry. The human interest of the play is well sustained, its construction compact, and its dialogue crisp and clever. One does not doubt that it will be successful in production. It has plenty of dramatic moments. Of course the tongue is constantly in the cheek, and that should spoil it for Broadway, but not for the judiciously light-minded." W: R. Benet

+ Lit R p527 Mr 25 '22 680w

"There are other qualities of Lord Dunsany's art only less important than his poetic imagination. There is the ironic, pungent humor of which he is almost uniquely a master, and there is a capacity for building up a crescendo of horror and terror which makes him, although essentially a poet, one of the most practiced creators of melodrama among contemporary playwrights. Into 'If' enter all these qualities." L. R. Morris

+ N Y Times p6 S 24 '22 680w

"The play is written in a vein of farce slightly more pronounced than we have been taught to look for from Lord Dunsany, and there are even signs that he had his eye on a possibly successful stage production. Still 'If' is extremely amusing reading."

Outlook 131:610 Ag 9 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:292 Je '22

St Louis 20:220 S '22

"The play is an illustration of Lord Dunsany's ability to contrive an ingenious, intriguing and fantastic situation, something peculiarly his own, and to many types of readers highly diverting. On the whole, the play has an acting possibility and no little theatrical relish to it, in spite of its thin content."

+ — Theatre Arts M 6:260 J1 '22 190w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins

Yale R n s 12:195 O '22 150w

DUTTON, CHARLES JUDSON. Out of the darkness. 282p $1.75 Dodd

22-5607

The unravelling of what at first seems to be a simple robbery, to be later complicated by a series of exciting happenings, taxes even the keen wits of the criminologist John Bartley. The evidences of traffic in illicit whiskey at Circle Lake near Saratoga, the scene of the story, and the spiritualistic practices of the sister-in-law of the murdered man, add considerable zest to the mystery, which is cleverly solved in a most unexpected manner.

"The various murders are actually thrilling. Better still, they are worked up to with a good sense of the dramatic, and surprise is an ever present factor. On the other hand, the actual solving of such matters is none so good."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '22 210w

DUTTON, CHARLES JUDSON—(continued)

"The book abounds in mysterious and exciting episodes, related in a manner curiously restrained. This effect is so marked that one wonders if the author was engaging in a technical attempt to present thrilling events in language so quiet that the excitement would be increased by the contrast. However that may be, the result is that of a film which shows photographed horrors, but which, for lack of light and shade, is itself washed out and flat in tone."

— Lit R p608 Ap 22 '22 190w

N Y Times p2 Ap 9 '22 200w

"It is quite a good story of its kind, and nicely told."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p618 S 28 '22 100w

DYE, MRS EVA (EMERY). Conquest. 443p $1.00 Doubleday

A22-1224

"Formerly published by McClurg in 1902. An historical novel describing the Lewis and Clark expedition and its results. Setting rather than plot is the important element, painting on a broad canvas the rush of immigration to the newly open West, the gradual subduing of the Indians, and the rising of cities in place of forests."—Booklist

Booklist 18:374 J1 '22

"She tells interesting facts, but her style is too discursive. She starts in one direction, and when another fact or interesting incident is 'dragged across the trail,' away she goes in the new direction, and tells that story, until the end, when she returns to the original trail. By that time the average reader almost has lost the thread of the original story, and unless reading closely must turn back and see where it started."

— Boston Transcript p6 My 31 '22 390w

"It is exceedingly disappointing to find that the author of this story has so completely neglected to weed out from the mass of material at her command innumerable facts and incidents which are so superfluous as to make the whole almost impossible to read with any enjoyment. The result is that each page is confused and disconnected and the story is lost."

— Lit R p643 My 6 '22 230w

"Miss Dye has gathered her facts carefully and expended a deal of energy on the story. It is a big book but it holds up well to the very end. . . . It is to be classed with volumes of small literary quality."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 30 '22 230w

"The story is true, and there is no mark of exaggeration; it is vital, and charged with historic significance; it is, in a word, blended remarkably to please at once the student of history and the lover of tales of the wild and the primitive." S. A. Coblentz

+ N Y Tribune p6 Ag 13 '22 580w

DYOTT, G. M. Silent highways of the jungle. 319p il $6 Putnam [25s Chapman & D.]

918.5 Peru—Description and travel

(Eng ed 22-23564)

"Mr Dyott's journey in search of air routes over unknown country nearly cost him his life. The narrative extends from the Peruvian coast over the Andes and down into the tropical forests of the Upper Amazon and its tributaries, where the author, deserted by his men, was left to die. He was found by some Indians, after days of starvation, and lived with them until his final escape and return to civilization."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 5 '22 100w

Boston Transcript p6 N 18 '22 650w

"Mr. Dyott is merely an honest wanderer. He tells us quietly, but in words that show genuine emotion, that our picture is nothing like the real thing; that the tropical forest was not made for man, but was designed with a cruel indifference to human needs. His narrative is a simple and sincere report." H. M. T.

+ Nation and Ath 31:711 Ag 26 '22 1050w

New Statesman 20:supxvi D 2 '22 60w

Reviewed by I: Anderson

N Y Times p10 O 29 '22 310w

"Mr. Dyott writes in a simple and convincing style. We are grateful to him for so readable a contribution to the library of adventure."

+ Sat R 134:481 S 30 '22 230w

Spec 129:275 Ag 26 '22 380w

"Noteworthy book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p489 J1 27 '22 1050w

E

EAGLE, SOLOMON, pseud. See Squire, J: C.

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Penguin persons & peppermints. 252p $1.50 Wilde 814 22-15770

"Mr Eaton has the power of picking up from the tame daily routine of business and pleasure significant little observations and comments, and he has also the power of setting these forth in eight hundred or a thousand words, which seem less in number because they are exact and because they are flavored with a dash of personality. The only unfortunate thing about the book is the title. 'Penguin Persons and Peppermints' suggests a sort of forced whimsicality, which is a very terrible thing, but from which these essays are mercifully free."—Lit R

Booklist 19:74 D '22

"Most of them are the sort of thing that one cannot resist calling whimsical; yet the book is not one to pick up if you have only a few minutes to read, because it is too hard to put down."

+ Bookm 55:538 J1 '22 110w

Dial 74:105 Ja '23 160w

"The interest is sustained, because there is always some tiny drop of thought or observation from which the bubble is blown and because he keeps on the safe side of the line which separates the trivial from the tedious."

+ Lit R p744 Je 17 '22 220w

"He never preaches even when he has a tempting text. He is never didactic or condescending, highbrow or toplofty. He is unfailingly friendly and fraternal." Brander Matthews

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 27 '22 400w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

N Y Times p7 D 31 '22 300w

"'Penguin persons' was a fortunate choice for the first essay. Anatole France is the literary discoverer of penguins, but penguinity is a new word which Mr Eaton has coined. It expresses the chief characteristic of the person, who, like the penguin, makes life 'sympathetically ridiculous by his cheerful inanities, and to whom life is apparently one 'huge joke.'"

+ Springfield Republican p7a J1 9 '22 390w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Skyline camps. 215p il $2.50 Wilde

917.8 Rocky mountains. Mountaineering
22-26969

The book tells of camping expeditions in Glacier park, of beautiful Lake Chelan and Crater lake, of an ascent of Mount Jefferson, of the beauties and characteristics of the Cascade range, and of a motor trip on the Columbia highway. In an interlude on the hills of home the author allows himself to dream not only of an Appalachian trail but of an Appalachian reservation. Besides the scenery the flora of each region is carefully described.

Booklist 19:80 D '22

Boston Transcript p9 N 22 '22 680w

"Agreeable sketches of travel that will be interesting especially to mountain-lovers."

+ Outlook 132:534 N 22 '22 30w

"It is wholesomely free from the sugary sentimentalism that spoils the writings of less careful nature lovers."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 19 '22 370w
Wis Lib Bul 18:273 D '22

ECKARDSTEIN, HERMANN, freiherr von. Ten years at the Court of St James': 1895-1905. 255p il $6 Dutton [21s Butterworth]

B or 92 Great Britain—Foreign relations. Great Britain—Court and courtiers. Germany—Foreign relations (Eng ed 21-21109)

The author was first secretary of embassy under Count Paul Hatzfeldt and as such, owing to the latter's protracted illness, acting ambassador. The translator and editor of the book, George Young, says of him that he was very much in the good graces of the English court and cabinet, an angel of peace from German liberalism and the ally of those English statesmen who were trying to re-establish the peace of Europe on the firm foundation of an Anglo-German alliance. His awareness of the deficiencies of Germans in political discernment and of the political and diplomatic blunders due to the idiosyncracies of William II, is apparent thruout the memoirs. Index.

Am Pol Sci R 16:519 Ag '22 150w

Booklist 19:17 O '22

"A truly fascinating book, not only from an historical standpoint, but because of the insight it affords of the German standards of diplomacy and morals. The author has achieved, in this series of memoirs, some masterpieces of characterization."

+ Bookm 56:228 O '22 160w

"No more enthralling set of reminiscences has been written in recent years than these. No more important historical subjects have been told more intimately or with greater authority. Although the author fought for his country, it is apparent that had he been a controlling factor in German statesmanship events would have been very different." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '22 1400w
Cleveland p95 D '22

"It would have been easy for Von Eckardstein to write a stout volume of the 'I-told-you-so' type, but this he has been careful to avoid. He hits hard at his opponents, but nowhere does he glorify his own skill."

+ Lit R p70 S 30 '22 800w

"We have here the fullest and the frankest account that has yet appeared of the Anglo-German negotiations that laid the foundations for the war. And yet, looking back at the book as a whole, one is amazed to find how little of any real importance it has told one that one did not know before. The only real revelation in the book is one which we knew or guessed already."

— + Nation and Ath 31:159 Ap 29 '22 850w

"Although Baron von Eckardstein failed to keep the peace, he has written a valuable work." C: A. Beard

+ New Repub 32:sup5 S 27 '22 780w

"The main intention of the book is to offer us fresh and unmistakably authentic evidence that there was nothing in reason to hinder a full and frank understanding between Great Britain and Germany in the twenty years before the war, except a distrust which could have been quite easily dissipated if there had been full publicity, and, on both sides, the desire to dissipate it."

+ New Statesman 18:596 F 25 '22 1000w

"The reader cannot fail to be impressed by the author's sincere respect and admiration for the English. His attitude was so friendly, in fact, that he was more than once accused of acting in the interest of England rather than of his own country. It seems more likely, however, that he was really trying to bring about a friendly understanding which would have been to the advantage of both countries."

N Y Times p7 J1 30 '22 1150w

"This book is notable and important, not because it stigmatizes Holstein or recaptures from new points of view the alternate folly and sanity of the Kaiser, but because it is a singularly clear, downright and full justification of England's policy toward Germany prior to the war, giving the lie direct to many important allegations of the German war propaganda."

— + No Am 216:281 Ag '22 800w

R of Rs 65:671 Je '22 60w

"A power of observation, tact and common-sense makes these memoirs, so ably edited and translated by Professor Young, one of the most interesting books of the day."

+ Sat R 132:667 D 10 '21 540w

"The author inspires little confidence."

— Spec 127:714 N 26 '21 100w

EDGETT, EDWIN FRANCIS. Slings and arrows. 125p il $1.25 Brimmer

818

23-1007

The free-verse "Slings and Arrows," which the author himself tells us are merely prose masquerading as poetry, are selected from his contributions to the Boston Evening Transcript. They are humorous castigations of the ways and foibles of men and women of this day and generation. Illustrated with sketches by Dwight Taylor.

"It might be used as a guide to conduct. It would keep us from blocking the sidewalk, lingering at the telephone, coming late to the theatre, rolling manuscripts, smiling meaninglessly, or in any other way neglecting the fact that we have neighbors on this planet."

Bookm 56:511 D '22 90w

"We question, indeed, that 'Slings and Arrows' is an immortal work, but it will no doubt entertain a good many contemporary readers."

R. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 4 '22 750w

"One who picks up 'Slings and Arrows' will become greatly reconciled to Outrageous Fortune. Introduced by the Boston editor, she becomes quite a jolly companion."

+ N Y Times p2 D 17 '22 280w

"Mr. Edgett's verses are tart with satire, some of it sprung from pungent reflection, and some of it from irritation. It is to be regretted that Mr. Edgett's subjects are treated to so large an extent in this vein of concentrated indignation."

— Springf'd Republican p10 S 27 '22 600w

EDIE, LIONEL DANFORTH, comp. Practical psychology for business executives. (Modern executive's lib.) 392p $2.40 Wilson, H. W.

331.8 Employment management. Psychology, Applied 22-19612

"This collection of material has been made with the purpose of bringing together in readable form some of the important and useful writings on the application of psychology to industry. The last decade has seen the growth of a body of psychological ideas of great importance in economic life. Many authorities have contributed the benefits of their experiments and discoveries to a wide and scattered literature in the field, and it is hoped that this symposium may aid in making business men acquainted with the more practical parts of this literature. A bibliography has been prepared, its divisions corresponding with the chapters of the book. For the most part, the publications which have been the sources of the quoted extracts used in this volume, have not been relisted in the bibliography"—Preface

"A real stimulus to an enlarged appreciation of the importance of psychological ideas in economic development. Unfortunately, the quotation, without comment or introductory critique of conflicting views on the instincts (e.g., Thorndike and Hall) may seriously confuse the more searching reader, especially if he be EDIE, LIONEL DANFORTH, comp—Cont. unacquainted with the present-day developments in psychology. This editorial oversight lessens the convincingness and the utility of an otherwise admirable volume." C: L. Stone

+ — Am Econ R 12:646 D '22 190w

"It is particularly useful to have a selection of competent material compiled by an authority who may be assumed to be reasonably free from prejudice. A compilation of this kind is in its nature rather hard to read, and yet perhaps executives and others interested in the future of industry can study a book like this with more profit than they would be likely to derive from a more pretentious volume the product of a single author." G. E.

+ Ind 109:314 N 25 '22 430w

Nation 115:443 O 25 '22 50w

"A conspicuously useful service both to teacher, student and business reader is rendered by Professor Edie's compilation of articles in the psychological field that are of industrial and managerial interest. He seems to have included practically all of the papers of the last few years which a complete collection should contain and his arrangement is clear and comprehensive. As in so many of the current volumes of compilations, however, each individual excerpt is cut down to extreme brevity." Orway Tead

+ — Pol Sci Q 37:713 D '22 250w

St Louis 20:234 O '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:250 N '22

EDIE, LIONEL DANFORTH. Principles of the new economics. 525p $2.75 Crowell

330 Economics 22-9185

"The primary purpose of this volume is to integrate the varied developments of recent years in economic thinking, and to relate them to the body of economic ideas which have been evolved through a long history of economic reflection. The method of the present volume is not to controvert, to dispute or to argue, but rather to make as direct and clear a statement as possible of the integrated and related bodies of interpretation." (Preface) Part one, Economic psychology, treats of the motives which underlie men's dealings with the questions of wealth. Part two, Economic institutions and functions, takes in the problems of capital and labor, of economic machinery and of money and credit. Part three, Economic adaptation, considers more especially the questions of reform—public control, radicalism, democracy. After each chapter is a list of references and there is an index.

"There are a number of minor faults. The bibliographies at the end of the chapters are ample, but there is a failure to place the references in alphabetical order, and to indicate at all the relative value of the works. In some places there are significant omissions of the best books. As a matter of social perspective and psychological viewpoint the book is reasonably satisfactory, but as an economic analysis it is far from being adequate. It is very readable and interesting from start to finish; on the whole it is free from bias; and it does present to economists in a suggestive way the importance of using data made available in psychology." E. W. Goodhue

+ — Am Econ R 12:624 D '22 900w

Am Pol Sci R 16:729 N '22 30w

Booklist 19:71 O '22

Bookm 55:535 J1 '22 130w

Boston Transcript p5 My 17 '22 450w

"The style is clear; the illustrations are well chosen." M. S. Wildman

+ Educ R 64:363 N '22 200w

"As indicating an important tendency, as showing the younger economists how one new approach can be developed, Professor Edie's book has great merit. A vitally pioneer enterprise of a courageous and independent character, it cannot expect the recognition, which a more mature handling of the same method will secure five years hence. Professor Edie undoubtedly realizes that this is the reward and the penalty of breaking new ground." Orway Tead

+ New Repub 31:142 Je 28 '22 580w

N Y Tribune p6 Je 18 '22 110w

Pratt p11 winter '23

R of Rs 66:448 O '22 70w

Survey 48:250 My 13 '22 30w

"A substantial American professorial work, with full reference bibliographies at the end of the chapters."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p309 My 11 '22 30w

"Mr. Edie writes in the recognized American professorial style, which is not without its difficulties for English readers. His work, however, bears the mark of much thought and thoroughness."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p785 N 30 '22 70w

Wis Lib Bul 18:213 O '22

EELLS, ELSIE SPICER (MRS B. G. EELLS). Islands of magic; legends, folk and fairy tales from the Azores. 289p il $1.75 Harcourt

398 Folklore—Azores 22-20316

"The author's preface to this collection of stories tells the reader that they were gathered by word of mouth in the Azores and are genuine folk-legends. Especially pleasing are 'The Islands of Flowers,' 'Why Dogs Sniff,' and 'The Messengers.' The frequent illustrations, by E. L. Brock, are quaint little line-sketches, full of suggestion and charm."—Lit R

"We expect something very quaint and charming, and in at least half of the tales we are not disappointed. In the remaining ones a rather stolid sequence of magical occurrences seems about all that is to be found, with a too frequent recurrence of the familiar plot. The other tales, at least a dozen of them, are delightful. They are simple in style, unusual in theme, and very appealing—both to grown-ups and children."

+ — Lit R p303 D 9 '22 160w

"They preserve a quaint local distinction." M. H. B. Mussey

+ Nation 115:sup618 D 6 '22 90w

EGAN, MAURICE FRANCIS. Confessions of a book-lover. 249p $2.50 Doubleday

$04 Books and reading 22-21933

In these chapters of literary autobiography, Dr Egan writes of the books he likes and of the debt he owes to them—of the miscellaneous reading of his boyhood, of reading the Bible, of Maurice de Guérin and Dante among poets, and of some modern American and English poets. There is a chapter on novelists, in which he comments on Dickens, Mark Twain, Booth Tarkington and others; a chapter on some of the letters, biographies and memoirs which he has most enjoyed; and a final chapter on books at random in which he singles out for high praise Charles S. Brooks's "Hints to pilgrims."

Booklist 19:75 D '22

"A quiet and warming book. Not hot water bottle warming, Mr. Mencken; but open fire, with good dry logs, shooting splendid sparks. 'My Boyhood Reading' is an essay worth calling an essay. Nor is any part of the book dull, and most of it is stimulating." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:489 D '22 80w

Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 280w

"The book is brimful of wisdom, of humor, of well-digested culture, and of human sympathy."

+ Cath World 116:413 D '22 520w

"The chief value of the book, indeed for contemporary readers its singular and inestimable value, is in its spirit and temper. Mr. Egan is a good critic; it is important, doubtless, to know what he thinks of this or that author, this or that literary movement or tendency. Much more important it is, however, to discern his invariable frame of mind, to mark the effect upon the human spirit of a long commerce with letters, intelligently and conscientiously accepted as a purely formative discipline. . . Mr. Egan's opinions are so suffused by the true literary spirit and temper that one perceives immediately that after all, agreement or disagreement is not the important thing."

+ Freeman 16:118 O 11 '22 2900w

Reviewed by Hildegard Hawthorne
Int Bk R p38 D '22 60w

"A pleasant and readable book, a miscellany of impressions from a long life and varied reading, whose judgments are as manifestly honest as they seem generally superficial, more enthusiastic than penetrative, and sometimes almost juvenile." Arthur Cotton

+ — Lit R p261 D 2 '22 900w

"We cannot be too severe on him. But he is sometimes incredibly stupid. His remarks on the vulgarity of Mark Twain are themselves a perfect example of vulgarity. Dr. Egan is by no means stupid in all his judgments. His account of his boyhood reading is pleasant enough, refreshingly free from cant about what is good for children. And some of his adult opinions about books, even his senile opinions, are sensible." J. Macy

+ — Nation 115:sup621 D 6 '22 380w

"Just such a chatty, meandering, illuminating, penetrating, endearing book about books as book-lovers always love!"

+ N Y Times p8 N 5 '22 2150w

"It is far too much the confessions rather of a book hater; Mr. Egan not only withholds his admiration from most of the important and significant books published during the last twenty-five years; he defends himself against them." Burton Rascoe

N Y Tribune p8 N 5 '22 120w

Outlook 133:148 Ja 17 '23 300w

St Louis 21:12 Ja '23

Wis Lib Bul 18:272 D '22

EIKENBERRY, WILLIAM LEWIS. Teaching of general science. (Univ. of Chicago nature-study ser.) 169p $2 Univ. of Chicago press

507 Science—Study and teaching 22-7937

The book is not a manual of classroom methods in the teaching of science, but an interpretation of the movement to establish, experimentally, an efficient course in science. It shows the character of this movement, its connection with the past history of science and teaching, its relation to the established sciences and its place in the new science of education. A brief list of references is given at the end of each chapter and there is a fifteen-page bibliography of periodical literature on general science teaching. Index.

Am J Sci p478 Je '22 25p

General Sci Q p568 My '22 1/2p

"He has gone to the root of the matter, dealing fully with the principles on which practice should rest; and the result is a book which no one who has the interests of science teaching at heart can afford to ignore."

+ Nature 110:731 D 2 '22 120w

"This book will undoubtedly be of great value to all persons who are interested in the teaching of general science. It should be of equal value to the teachers of special sciences in giving them the spirit and meaning of the general-science movement, and this applies to teachers in colleges and universities as well as to secondary-school teachers." H. W. Nutt

+ School R 30:475 Je '22 520w

School Sci and Math p600 Je '22 35p

ELHUFF, LEWIS. New laboratory manual; a book of projects for general science, first course. 33p 80c Heath

507 Science—Study and teaching 21-20459

"More than one hundred projects of high school grade. Includes demonstrations, and also individual projects for laboratory work or outside observation."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:552 D '22

ELIOT, SAMUEL ATKINS, jr., ed. Little theater classics. v 4 281p il $2 Little

808.2 Drama—Collections (18-19312)

Contents: Shakuntala, by Kalidasa; The wandering scholar from Paradise, by Hans Sachs; All for love, or The world well lost, by John Dryden; The martyrdom of Ali, from the Persian miracle play of Hasan and Husain.

Booklist 18:356 J1 '22

Cleveland p68 S '22

"In bringing this inaccessible or little-known dramatic literature to a wider public in a shape for stage production Mr. Eliot is performing a service to be gratefully acknowledged by all who take their theatre seriously. The accompanying prefaces and notes on production are informing and helpful. Scholarship without the heavy hand or the glazed eye marks this editing." R. Burton

+ Lit R p819 J1 '22 450w

"Has its excellences, though overtopped by limitations." M. J. Moses

+ — Outlook 132:620 D 6 '22 500w

"It is not merely in the choice of plays that Mr. Eliot maintains his distinction as editor, but in his explicit directions for staging, his descriptions of costumes to be worn, and his careful analysis of each character. The four plays chosen are certainly of widely different types, and yet all, as they stand, are practicable for actors not only in the little theaters here and abroad, but will be especially welcomed by dramatic clubs in colleges and by women's clubs."

Springf'd Republican p12 Je 1 '22 330w

Theatre Arts M 7:86 Ja '23 60w

ELLIOT, SIR HENRY GEORGE. Some revolutions and other diplomatic experiences. 300p $7 Dutton [16s Murray]

949.6 Turkey—History. Italy—History

(Eng ed 22-13157)

The book was first printed, for private circulation only, in 1900. The reminiscences have been compiled from a diary and private letters and give an account of various diplomatic experiences, beginning as attaché to the embassy at St Petersburg in 1841, and continuing as minister to Naples, Athens, Turin and Constantinople, up to 1876. Among the many stirring events which the author witnessed were the dethronement of four sovereigns, the election of a new king, the assassination of two cabinet ministers and the murder of two consuls by a fanatical mob. Index.

"Elliot enjoyed a long diplomatic career, but the reader of these interesting, though not entirely trustworthy, records of imperial policy and official eaves-dropping may be permitted to doubt whether the course of his career was determined altogether by his ability." H. N. Gay

+ — Am Hist R 28:118 O '22 1100w

"Sir Henry's observations are not always according to the generally accredited version of history, and his book in some instances is bound to open a discussion of whether he was right or not, but taken as a whole it is a valuable contribution to the history of the events he witnessed."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 16:722 N '22 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Thayer

Lit R p917 S 2 '22 1250w

Nation and Ath 31:162 Ap 29 '22 380w

"If only to show the shortcomings of our representatives abroad, this book is of value, for it reveals the personal factor, so lacking in the history of results and events."

New Statesman 19:104 Ap 29 '22 350w

"The author's Turkish pages are tinged with a slight bitterness from the memory of wounds inflicted by bitter attacks from Press and platform. We commend them, however, to our readers not only because of their intrinsic interest and importance, but because they go far to explain the extraordinary diplomatic success obtained in Constantinople in our own day by Germany, a country, as Mr. Finero might say, without a past in Turkish history."

ELLIOT, SIR HENRY GEORGE—Continued

Sat R 134:19 J1 1 '22 780w

"Altogether his memoirs are both instructive and amusing."

+ Spec 128:468 Ap 15 '22 1150w

"Warm congratulation is due to Miss Elliot on the success with which she has discharged her task as editor of her father's papers. First in an introduction, and then in an appendix, she fights his battles with aggressive and combative energy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p236 Ap 13 '22 940w

ELLIOTT, LILIAN ELWYN. Chile today and tomorrow. 345p il $5 Macmillan

918.3 Chile 22-20544

An account of Chilean geography and history is followed by a survey of Chile's natural resources, agriculture, commerce, railroads, finance, naval defences and racial divisions. There is a chapter on the troublesome Tacna-Arica boundary controversy and one on Chilean literature. Still another chapter is devoted to Easter Island, unimportant commercially, but possessing interesting remains of an ancient culture, in its strange series of stone statues and wooden carvings. A map is provided and a list of Chilean terms.

Booklist 19:117 Ja '23

"This volume should take its place as the definitive work on the subject of Chile." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 18 '22 750w

Reviewed by T: Walsh

N Y Times p7 D 31 '22 450w

"This book is packed with information."

+ R of Rs 66:672 D '22 20w

ELLIS, CHARLES ALTON. Essentials in the theory of framed structures. 330p il $3.50 McGraw

624 Structures, Theory of 22-5410

"A college text-book in which the aim is to develop the student's ability to think and reason rather than to produce either a good draftsman or a finished designer. . . The author has presented his subject in what he conceives to be the most natural sequence. . . Illustrative problems are shown first, from which the underlying principles and formulas are deduced. (Engin News-Rec)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:19 Ap '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:349 J1 '22

ELLIS, HAVELOCK. Kanga Creek: an Australian idyll. 68p $1.60 Brentano's [4s 6d Golden Cockerell press]

(Eng ed 22-17532)

"Kanga Creek, Mr. Havelock Ellis's first essay in fiction, is the story of a young schoolmaster whom circumstances propel into a life of unnatural solitude in a remote Australian village. Dwelling alone in his little schoolhouse, and seeing no one but his handful of daily pupils and the few villagers who bring him supplies he retires into himself to such a degree that [only] once or twice, for a brief moment he escapes from the prison of his introspection. In due time this young man comes into contact with a girl, and the first stirrings of sex are faithfully and quite delicately, though with a bias for the physical, described for us. The two meet frequently, and sometimes in circumstances conducing to intimacy; they tremble upon the verge of passion, and they part. The man is recalled to England, and the girl becomes for him a memory."—New Statesman

"A slender story of exquisite shading, set down with an exceptional insight and courage." L. B.

+ Freeman 6:211 N 8 '22 130w

"It is told with straightforward simplicity, such as one might expect from the pen of a scientist, and the background of lonely Australia, put in with the vividness of memory, gives the episode a significance which it would not otherwise possess. Mr. Ellis has the gift for narrative, which is quite different from the ability to make plots."

+ Lit R p72 S 30 '22 110w

"In spite of its merits, in spite of the beauty of many passages, the book fails by reason of its excessive subjectivity; it is defective in vitality."

+ — New Statesman 19:330 Je 24 '22 720w

"In both this inner and outer portrayal there are manifest both poetic feeling and scientific knowledge."

+ N Y Times p17 S 3 '22 600w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p28 Ja 28 '23 1700w

"A story of real beauty, but such a story as any writer of several dozens we can think of could have produced. It does not seem to have been written with that entirety of the man which is the main condition of important literature. The literary tap, as it were, has been turned on exclusively. We had hoped to bathe in less orthodox waters."

+ — Sat R 134:320 Ag 26 '22 560w

"Mr. Havelock Ellis has made the prime mistake in generalship of underrating the power of his opponents. He seems to have thought the writing of a story an easy task. Hence Kanga Creek, though not unattractive, is distinctly disappointing."

+ — Spec 129:86 J1 15 '22 40w

"The delicacy with which he summons up before our eyes the atmosphere of Kanga Creek, the sensitive insight which reveals with trembling candour the delirious dilemma of a youth responding to the first bewildering invitation of life, are prejudiced by moments more prosaic. Here the analyst stays the artist: realism, as so often, threatens the serene vision of reality."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p362 Je 1 '22 650w

ELLIS, HAVELOCK. Little essays of love and virtue. 187p $1.50 Doran [6s Black]

176 Sex. Sexual ethics. Marriage 22-6924

The little essays are a frank and dignified discussion of the part played by sex in human life. Each aspect is presented in historical retrospect, analyzed in its present tendency and viewed in the light of modern science and psychology and the future of the race. Contents: Children and parents; The meaning of purity; The objects of marriage; Husbands and wives; The love-rights of women; The play-function of sex; The individual and the race; Index.

Booklist 19:31 N '22

"His exposition of sex questions is informative, sometimes argumentative, always frank without a suggestion of vulgarity and, occasionally, one feels almost too erudite for the class for which it is written."

+ Bookm 55:313 My '22 130w

"His seemingly unlimited intelligence and comprehension permeate his writing in a manner most edifying to any reader and a new book by Havelock Ellis on any subject, and especially on the subjects contained in this latest work, should be read by every person who desires to keep abreast of the finest modern thought."

+ Detroit News p17 My 14 '22 300w

"It is a happy thing to see Mr. Ellis's long and faithful life work attain the golden pinnacle of these 'Little Essays on Love and Virtue.' The generation to whom he dedicates this book will rise and call him blessed." Lewis Mumford

+ Freeman 6:213 N 8 '22 650w

"Stimulating and valuable." Carl Van Doren

+ Nation 115:sup377 O 11 '22 180w

"Will do a great deal of good in helping parents and teachers to realize what a crime it is to treat sex as either a vile topic or an unapproachable mystery." P. L.

+ New Repub 31:163 J1 5 '22 390w

"It would be difficult to find a more concise statement of the whole case against that barbarous conception of purity and morality which is at the basis of all puritanism. . . Have-lock Ellis has forged in this excellent little book another weapon in his campaign for a civilized society." Ernest Boyd

+ N Y Tribune p8 Ap 16 '22 1200w
St Louis 20:203 S '22

"In these essays dealing with such vital homely topics as parents and children, or husbands and wives, a sensitive insight is applied to essential problems of all human life; an insight, fortified by prodigious knowledge and enlivened by the vision of an artist, so that they are cleaned from the dust of familiarity and commonplace, and glow once more with beauty and life. The power of spring is in the book: the heavenly power which 'makes all things new'."

+ Sat R 133:344 Ap 1 '22 600w
Spec 128:562 My 6 '22 150w

"The subject-matter is now generally familiar, but Mr. Havelock Ellis brings to it a mature knowledge and a wealth of historical and anthropological illustration."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p199 Mr 23 '22 190w

ELLWOOD, CHARLES ABRAM. Reconstruction of religion. 323p $2.25 Macmillan

261 Religion. Sociology, Christian 22-7867

The author, professor of sociology in the University of Missouri, believes the crisis in the religious world to have been brought about by the failure of existing religion to adapt itself to the two outstanding facts in our civilization—science and democracy. He finds that the need of the world is a more rational, vital and socialized Christianity, and that only a Christianity of this sort is equal to the task of saving civilization and harmonizing its warring interests, classes, nations and races. His purpose is to show how the social sciences may help religion to build a better world.

Am Econ R 12:668 D '22 180w

"This book undoubtedly is the ablest and most stimulating discussion of religion in its relation to modern life that has yet appeared. The style is direct and clear. The thought is logically presented. In spirit, it is fearless, outspoken and even-tempered. Would that every clergyman—and thoughtful member of society—might read and ponder it." J. H. S. Bossard

+ Ann Am Acad 102:210 Jl '22 1100w
Booklist 18:346 Jl '22

"The book is characterized by sanity, fairness, sound judgment, and a clear conception of the civilization of our day. It is thoroughly constructive, giving to the church a workable programme by which the Christianity of Jesus may save our civilization. To the clergyman it will bring wholesome criticism and reveal the grandest opportunity. No Christian minister who endeavors to be in touch with the great movements of the day will fail to carefully consider the message of this book." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 13 '22 1450w
Cleveland p72 S '22

"Seldom have we read a book of which we can say so unreservedly that we wish it could be read by every minister in the Church. We do not hesitate to express our judgment that if its message were thus read, and then heeded, a new day of unparalleled influence would dawn for the Church." S. M. C.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p5 Ap '22 1550w

Reviewed by H. F. Ward
J Religion 2:476 S '22 6750w

"A timely subject presented in an interesting and scholarly manner."

+ J Religion 2:659 N '22 70w

"The social interpretation of Christianity was incomparably better done by Walter Rauschenbusch a dozen years ago. This new reconstruction of religion is but a revival on a lower level of a movement which all but disappeared at the threat of war." Norman Thomas

— + Nation 114:725 Je 14 '22 1550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:8 Ja '23

Pratt p8 winter '23

St Louis 20:205 S '22

"Dr Ellwood is hardly fair in his estimate of the service of religion and philosophy to civilization in the past. Had he been less anxious to play to the gallery of science, and more accurate in his weighing of history, he would have found a wealth of additional material in the past which would have proved his contention for the need of the religion of Jesus in the present and the future. To put forward such considerations is not to say that the author has not given us a book worthy of earnest study. It is a sane, fair, thought-compelling book. The author has the valuable faculty of being constructive, and even heartening, in the very midst of strong criticism."

+ — Springfield Republican p7a Je 18 '22 920w
Survey 49:527 Ja 15 '23 680w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p47 Ja 18 '23 150w

EMERSON, WILLIAM ROBIE PATTEN. Nutrition and growth in children. 342p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton

613.2 Children—Nutrition. Children—Care and hygiene. Growth 22-4507

This book represents years of careful scientific observation and study of the causes of malnutrition in children. Dr Emerson shows how the condition may be detected and describes fully the methods of cure, involving problems of physical defects, fatigue, home control and health habits as well as diet and food habits. He outlines a practical nutrition program for the home, the school and the community and provides in appendices interesting tables of comparative weights, nutrition records, a glossary of technical terms and a bibliography of forms for nutrition clinics and of pamphlets.

"The book is the result of a rich, varied and successful experience. It is plainly and clearly written, in simple and practical language. It is an invaluable book for parents, teachers, social workers, physicians, and for all who love constructively the children of men." J. H. S. Bossard

+ Ann Am Acad 103:144 S '22 550w

Booklist 18:220 Ap '22

Boston Transcript p5 My 10 '22 190w

Cleveland p58 Ag '22

"No public school nurse, no public health officer, no school superintendent can afford to ignore the sane, constructive, and tested program offered by this book." O. A. Tingelstad

+ El School J 23:151 O '22 500w

"A fairly detailed description of Dr. Emerson's work on the malnutrition problem, his theories, his methods of procedure, and the results which have been accomplished thereby. Possibly the weakest point in the book is the tone of finality which it conveys concerning certain problems which are considered by good authorities as far from being definitely settled." Lydia Roberts

— J Home Econ 14:399 Ag '22 1050w

"The experiences of the writer are given in a simple, flowing way, like a story, that engenders cooperation and enthusiasm in the reader; the ominous terrifying style of the preacher, teacher, textbook writer or reformer are agreeably lacking."

+ Lit R p358 D 30 '22 300w

Mind and Body p93 My '22 12p

Reviewed by Agnes de Lima

New Repub 31:167 Jl 5 '22 400w

Pratt p16 summer '22

St Louis p91 My '22

"A book which no one engaged in practical social work with children can afford to miss."

+ Survey 48:629 Ag 15 '22 50w

EMERSON, W: R. P.—Continued

"A practical treatise fully illustrated."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p263 Ap
20 '22 50w

Wis Lib Bul 18:154 Je '22

EMERTON, EPHRAIM. Learning and living.
325p $3 Harvard univ. press [12s 6d Milford]
370.4 Education 21-16379

"One of the most delightful books recently published on the scholar's life is 'Learning and living,' by the emeritus professor of ecclesiastical history at Harvard. It is made up of a series of independent essays on the general topic of the academic life, with special reference to American educational problems, and it presents a rich and varied review of the situation, from the point of view of the scholar and also from that of the practical citizen. Less strictly practical in the narrow sense is the remarkably profound study entitled 'Gentleman and scholar,' in which Prof. Emerton deplores the separation in much modern thought and practice of two aspects of a life that is essentially one, since no gentleman can be unscholarly, nor any true scholar ungentelemanly." (Springf'd Republican) Contents: The academic life; What to do with a boy; The discipline of a university college; Gentleman and scholar; The choice of studies in college; Travel as education; The academic study of history; The rational education of the modern minister; The place of history in theological study.

"The title under which Professor Emerton has gathered these thoughtful and suggestive essays is not very appropriate to the thoughts or to the suggestions. [It] sounds the adventurous note in education, the readiness to recognize new problems and to find new answers for them; but the unity of this otherwise digressive volume is the author's conservatism, his instinctive distrust of new programmes, and his failure to examine the emergency in American education which those programmes attempt to meet." J. Erskine

+ Lit R p348 Ja 14 '22 1150w

Springf'd Republican p8 F 10 '22 200w

EMMONS, WILLIAM HARVEY. General economic geology; a textbook. 516p il $4 McGraw 553 Geology, Economic 22-7090

"An excellent introduction to the study of mineral deposits. For students having a knowledge of the elements of geology and mineralogy."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:19 Ap '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:343 Jl '22

ENGLAND. 272p $2 Houghton [6s Lane]
914.2 England. National characteristics,
English (Eng ed 22-14376)

The anonymous author, who styles himself an "overseas Englishman," studies the question "Has England as a separate, homogeneous race and nation really spent herself?" He is a most earnest champion of the English race and character, but he sees the English spirit declining, the gradual giving way of the national character to the imperial, the passing of leadership in politics, in army and navy, in foreign affairs and imperial administration out of the hands of Englishmen into those of adventurous Scots, Welsh, Irish and Jews. He is alarmed by the "effemination" of England, by the physical deterioration of the people and by her "present acquiescence in the destiny being arranged for her whose will was once supreme in the councils of the world."

Am Pol Sci R 17:148 F '23 80w

"The author's style is both vigorous and incisive, and his work compels and deserves the attention of all students of contemporary history."

+ Cath World 116:714 F '23 320w

"There is much repetition in the book, and most frequent is the stress upon altruism and philanthropy as the incentives to expansion. He makes a sensible plea for a return to the soil in discussing the matter of agriculture; but he disregards the economic problem of rent upon which the matter squarely rests. He is bitter against labour, and funny when he discusses literature and the Anglican Church." J. L. Tynan

Freeman 6:262 N 22 '22 2050w

"He would have made a better book if he had followed up fewer lines of argument and followed these more closely. But as a counter-irritant to much windy talk of 'Britishers' and 'British' ideals, this book has decided value—if taken with caution."

+ — Lit R p35 S 16 '22 280w

"Our friend from overseas, though a generous and terribly earnest champion, is anything but satisfactory to his fellow victims because his mind is muddled. One may rejoice in the overseas Englishman's thesis, but he ought to know a little more about the England over whose decline and fall he is weeping with a quite sincerely broken heart." S. K. R.

— New Statesman 18:470 Jl 29 '22 510w

N Y Times p7 S 3 '22 950w

R of Rs 66:417 O '22 40w

Spec 129:436 S 30 '22 600w

"It is fair to say that such a vision of 'England's destiny' does not represent the general sanity of the seer's criticisms of her past and present; it merely illustrates a certain lack of humour, and therefore of perspective, which mars his observation."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p374 Je
8 '22 1050w

EPSTEIN, ABRAHAM. Facing old age; a study of old age dependency in the United States and old age pensions. 352p $3.50 Knopf

331.25 Old age pensions 22-6629

The author shows that the problem of old age dependency is two-fold: first, the pace necessary in modern production forces the aged out of work long before they are worn out; and secondly, the wage-earner finds it impossible to provide individual savings to support himself in old age. As our present methods in dealing with the aged are antiquated, ineffective, costly and demoralizing, some constructive policy must be inaugurated. The author has given three years of first hand study to the problem in Pennsylvania, and has attempted to collect and present the latest available data. The five parts of the book consider: Actual condition of the aged; Causes of old age dependency; Existing methods of relief; Old age pensions—what they are and their outlook for the United States; Pension systems of foreign countries and various states.

Reviewed by Lucile Eaves

Am J Soc 28:197 Ja '23 520w

Booklist 18:309 Je '22

"The author qualified himself in this field by extended studies in connection with the most important pension investigation yet carried out in the United States, and has furnished from many sources a mass of information which will have to be reckoned with in all future discussion of the subject." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 3 '22 950w

"A careful study of the problem of old-age dependency and the solutions proposed. It is a valuable addition to a library of social insurance." L. M. C.

+ Com on Church and Soc Ser. Inf ser
p1 D 30 '22 350w

Reviewed by J. A. Lapp

Lit R p788 Jl 8 '22 720w

"Mr. Epstein writes frankly as a believer in a liberal pension system, but does not distort his facts in consequence. It is a pity to mar so useful a catalogue with the ungrammatical English and the typographical errors that disgrace so many pages."

+ — Nation 115:131 Ag 2 '22 120w

New Repub 22:315 N 15 '22 560w

"Mr. Epstein's material is adequate and well arranged; and his book deserves a place in the library of every student of sociology." W. H. C.

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 17 '22 260w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:269 Je '22

Reviewed by F. Almy

Survey 48:412 Je 15 '22 650w

Wis Lib Bul 18:171 Jl '22

ERSKINE, JOHN. Collected poems, 1907-1922.
2 175p $1.50 Duffield

811

22-23740

"Mr. Erskine's 'Collected Poems' brings together much of the best of his work during the past fifteen years. Mr. Erskine's art indicates a return to the sane conviction of the Greeks that the material of art is to be found in what is common and enduring in the experience of men, and to the notion that the importance of individual life is its illustration of human fortunes and destiny in the largest sense. Such an art would deal by preference with the eternal things of life rather than its casual accidents."

—Int Bk R

"These poems are to be taken quietly, out of the rush and turmoil of the combatants who are more concerned about fame than the devotion to the inner light, and they will richly repay those who ask for substance and vision in poetry as well as music and imagery." W. S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 30 '22 1500w

"Mr. Erskine's 'Collected Poems' make a total impression of emotional intensity and intellectual force, of abiding spiritual insight and rare sensitiveness to beauty. From the point of view of expression alone they represent a considerable achievement: the surface is clear and lustrous, the phrasing inevitable, the melodic line unblurred. They are the work of a poet with respect for the discipline of his art and command over the resources of his medium, a creative artist of distinction." Lloyd Morris

+ Int Bk R p32 D '22 950w

"His poems read like those of a precociously erudite youth whose mind is avidly receptive, who loves beauty with an ache he does not understand, and who, wanting to create beauty, sets himself to writing a sonnet." Eva Goldbeck

— N Y Tribune p23 Ja 28 '23 200w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 22 '23 210w

ERSKINE, LAURIE YORKE. Renfrew of the Royal Mounted. 256p il $1.75 Appleton

22-4438

Stories of the Canadian Royal mounted police told to a group of boys. Renfrew when a young man had gone to Canada in search of adventure, and joined the Royal Mounted police. He had the soul of a true woodsman and enjoyed his work to the utmost. Then one day a young Indian lad, snowblind and almost exhausted, stumbled into Renfrew's camp, and begged aid for his dying mother. The lad's absolute devotion brought memories of Renfrew's own mother, and after a stiff struggle, Renfrew left Canada and built a home for his mother in the United States. With Renfrew as guide and friend a boys' club was formed in the town and these stories were told at their meetings.

Booklist 18:329 Je '22

"While it is probable that the book appeals more to boys, it is none the less interesting for grown people, as showing the kind of risks these brave men take all in the line of daily duty."

+ Daily News Rec p17 S 26 '22 240w

"Hand-made for the juvenile market." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 109:137 S 16 '22 40w

"The amazing adventures through which Renfrew has passed certainly give him material enough to pack his yarns tight with thrills. Snow and ice and blizzards are right there to heap up the thrills a bit whenever they are about to slacken."

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 9 '22 130w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 21 '22 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 Jl '22

ERVINE, ST JOHN GREER. The ship; a play in three acts. 94p $1.25 Macmillan [3s 6d Allen & U.]

822

22-10540

A three-act play in which is dramatized the antagonism between a father and a son. John Thurlow owns the greatest shipyard in the world and has a passion for the ships he builds. A dominating personality, he is determined that his son shall carry on his work, while the son is equally determined to break loose from the shipyard and become a farmer. Strengthened in his self-assertion by his understanding old grandmother Jack Thurlow acquires his farm and is on the way to make a success of it when his father requires of him an act of filial self-sacrifice. Illness brought on partly by his son's desertion of the shipyard prevents John Thurlow from going on the maiden trip of his great new ship and he pleads with Jack to take his place and satisfy his sentimental desire that a Thurlow shall be on board. Unwillingly, for it is a critical time to leave his farm for three weeks, Jack yields to his father's desire, but goes down on the ship when she strikes an iceberg.

Booklist 19:12 O '22

Cleveland p66 S '22

"It is not a romantic play or a moving play. From the beginning to the end, there is hardly a line that is not disputatious, hardly a moment not filled with the noise of some one grinding his private little axe. Instead of characters Mr. Ervine has created (were it possible to create such things) points of view, instead of a play he has written an argument, and a very good one. As an argument the book is worth the reading. It is hard to say more for it."

— + Lit R p842 Jl 29 '22 250w

"On the whole, 'The Ship' is a most unusually competent example of the drama as it was perfected by Ibsen. A poised and reserved piece of work."

+ Nation and Ath 31:626 Ag 5 '22 400w

"In places a good play. But the pattern of it is limp, the motivation is loose. The whole thing is one of those made-up plays that often quite able Englishmen write, plays that run amiably through a mildly tragic world of mild creation and insight." S. Y.

— + New Repub 31:284 Ag 2 '22 250w

"This Tolstoyan young man is so woolly-minded that he loses dramatic force, even though he gives up his life in the end for a fine idea. He does not know what he wants, and so the others cannot help him much. But The Ship has the frame-work of good drama; it holds the reader and should act well."

— + New Statesman 19:668 S 23 '22 550w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

Outlook 132:620 D 6 '22 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:28 Ja '23

Pratt p27 winter '23

St Louis 20:301 D '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p519 Ag 10 '22 800w

"A play actable in the sense that the plays of the Manchester School may be regarded as actable."

Theatre Arts M 7:85 Ja '23 50w

Wis Lib Bul 18:252 N '22

ERVINE, ST JOHN GREER. Some impressions of my elders. 305p $2.25 Macmillan

928 Authors, English. Analytics 22-21939

In a series of articles reprinted from the North American Review the Irish dramatist records his impressions of some men of mind who have stimulated and influenced the young men and women of the early twentieth century.

ERVINE, ST JOHN GREER—Continued

Of the eight men whose character, work and beliefs he sketches, four are Irishmen. He brings out the underlying ideas of each and explains the influence each has had, in greater or less degree, in moulding the minds of his generation. Contents: The author to his readers; A. E. (George William Russell); Arnold Bennett; G. K. Chesterton; John Galsworthy; George Moore, Bernard Shaw; H. G. Wells; W. B. Yeats.

Booklist 19:155 F '23

"Wise and succinct portraits. While Mr. Ervine is respectful to his elders, he does not hesitate to display their faults in as grand colors as their virtues." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:754 F '23 220w

"Shrewd are the estimates here given, lively the pen-pictures drawn." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p36 D '22 60w

"Nearly all this praise, criticism, and gossip is amusing and much of it is delightful. Much of Mr. Ervine's work, particularly his opening chapter, is not much more than gossip, but the gossip is most engaging."

+ Lit R p340 D 23 '22 480w

"It is one of the most solidly satisfactory volumes which has appeared for some time. The secret of the satisfaction lies in the fact that Ervine is a dramatist; hence, it is the trait of his mind to penetrate unswervingly to the springs of action. It is this penetration to what lies behind the 'impression' which makes the 'impression' not something nebulous but something living."

+ N Y Times p18 Ja 7 '23 550w

"In this collection of more or less literary essays, his first publication of the kind, one finds all the quips and attitudes and some of the theories which made Shaw a remarkable journalist a quarter of a century ago. . . . The chapters on Bennett, Chesterton, Galsworthy, Wells and Shaw add nothing to what everybody who has seen or read these authors might have written. Mr. Ervine laments the absence of criticism in Ireland and the prevalence of abuse. His own book proves beyond a doubt that he, at least, is not destined to remedy either of these defects." Ernest Boyd

+ N Y Tribune p21 D 31 '22 1600w

"This is the book of a disillusioned man, but for all that it is a bold, and sometimes even gay, book. Without real brilliance, St John Ervine has nevertheless considerable liveliness, and his judgments are occasionally trenchant."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 28 '23 660w

ESCHOLIER, RAYMOND. Illusion (Dansons la trompeuse); authorised English version. 218p $1.75 Putnam

22-5892

A story of French provincial life and the struggles of a little old gentlewoman, Madame Lestelle, in her dilapidated chateau, to keep up appearances and maintain her illusions. She tried against all kinds of odds to play the comedy of life as she had played it in her youth. She invented ingenious ways to conceal her poverty and clung to all the foolish little artifices by which she hoped to hide the onslaughts of age. She even danced "The illusion" and almost believed that she was young again. But a day came when she could no longer summon the strength to deceive herself. She saw herself for what she was, a poor, sick, lonely, old woman. There was no surviving that discovery, and death was welcome.

Booklist 18:330 Je '22

Cleveland p50 Ag '22

"It is a story of tragic intensity and yet it is written with such a nicety and with such a deft and sure touch that the tragedy is captured and appreciated when one revives the story in one's mind. A finely conceived and finely executed little story. Small in scope and done with a firm delicacy it is a most satisfying and complete piece of writing." Howard Weeks

+ Detroit News p7 Jl 16 '22 180w

"What wins us is the subtle simplicity of its matter and manner (the quality that won us in 'Maria Chapdelaine'), and its penetrating and tender humor." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 108:528 Je 10 '22 180w

"It is neither risque nor mawkish. It is an interesting and charming study. Composed of the simplest elements, the story holds the attention by reason of the skilful portrayal of types, and the real excellence of its pictures of provincial French life in a southern countryside. The translation reads smoothly, except for an occasional awkwardness in rendering forms of address for which English equivalents must be invented rather than sought in the dictionary."

+ Lit R p569 Ap 8 '22 150w

"An altogether charming characterization, and one very beautifully done. It is all so delicately handled and of such gossamer and yet realistic texture that only by reading it can one appreciate its charm."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 4 '22 110w

"It is a story of exceptional beauty; in our hands it is a living book; once put aside it proves a haunting book. . . . Within its narrow scope the novel is perfectly conceived and perfectly executed." B. R. Redman

+ N Y Tribune p6 S 17 '22 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:460 N '22

Spec 129:930 D 16 '22 150w

EUCKEN, RUDOLF CHRISTOF. Rudolf Eucken, his life, work, and travels; tr. by Joseph McCabe. 216p $3 Scribner [10s 6d Unwin]

B or 92

A22-854

"The truth about Eucken's Autobiography is that it is the careful and modest record of an intellectual life, composed by a man of seventy-six, whose memory is evidently a little blurred by time, and who is too honest to invent what he no longer remembers. The result is a plain statement in which the facts of a strenuous professional career are set down in order. The story is frankly old-fashioned; we are taken back to the time before 1870, when the University life of Germany was simple and unaffected, when megalomania had not yet set in, and when intellectual simplicity had not been pushed aside by the passion for wealth and display. The amiable philosopher reviews the images of this old and almost pastoral time, which he looks back upon through the roaring years between with a sort of pensive amazement. A chapter has to be devoted to the years of the great war, but the reader will discover nothing sensational in it."—Spec

Booklist 18:187 Mr '22

Reviewed by F. W. Collier

Boston Transcript p6 Ja 25 '22 1400w

Cleveland p71 S '22

Reviewed by Austin Hay

N Y Times p4 Jl 30 '22 2800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:596 D '22

Pratt p35 summer '22

St Louis 20:275 N '22

"The record of his life is a purely intellectual one, and would perhaps be livelier if the author possessed more pictorial power. But it is written with simplicity and elevation of temper."

+ Spec 132:737 D 31 '21 850w

"The autobiography of such a thinker could hardly fail to be of interest. It is frank. It raises, both directly and indirectly, great issues. The chapters which cover the whole period of the Jena professorship, will not add to their author's reputation. In them a naive egoism, which is to be found elsewhere in the book, is unpleasantly prominent."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p52 Ja 26 '22 1150w

EUCKEN, RUDOLF CHRISTOF. Socialism: an analysis; tr. by Joseph McCabe. 188p $2.75 Scribner [9s Unwin]

335 Socialism 21-21877

"Dr. Eucken describes his book as an analysis of the philosophy of Socialism. He gives a lucid account, though almost without a name, a fact or a date, of the emergence of the economic and social problems of the nineteenth century; of the rise of Socialist ideas; of the ideals that Dr. Eucken himself recognises in the Socialist movement, and its view of life as a whole. Taken together all this amounts, as Dr. Eucken conceives it, to a Socialist philosophy of life, which he examines with sympathetic interest, giving it credit for many valuable contributions to thought and morality, and for suggestions and programmes of reform which he expects to see generally adopted and more or less effectively carried out."—New Statesman

"After all these years of heated controversy it has remained for the philosopher to write the most searching and effective criticism of the socialist ideal. Professor Eucken does not pretend to be an economist, and does not write in the language of economics, but he shows that back of its outward aspects socialism comprises an ideal of life which it is within the province of the philosopher to analyze." G. B. L. Arner

+ Am Econ R 12:530 S '22 370w

"Very interesting as showing the clash between some modern ideas and the idealistic traditions that largely underlie our orthodox religious creeds. The calm philosophic attitude, the courtesy and consideration, the recognition of very considerable merits in the socialistic ideal make a very pleasant impression on the reader. The translation is smooth and the printing and makeup of the book fairly sumptuous." V. E. Helleberg

+ Am J Soc 28:352 N '22 200w

Am Pol Sci R 16:731 N '22 30w

Booklist 18:214 Ap '22

"The book is well worthy the attention of every Socialist and, equally so, of all who want to be aided to a satisfactory probing of the Socialist theory and ideal. Its method and temper are those which are commonly associated with theological discussion. Herein lies its weakness: the strictures of the author apply—in so far as they do apply—to the formulations of Socialist dogmas; they hardly touch the living movement." J. Spargo

+ — Lit R p561 Ap 8 '22 800w

"This is a volume which the thoughtful reader in comfortable circumstances will find gently instructive and pleasantly soothing. It is well-informed, wise, frank and candid. But the critical student will feel that Dr. Eucken's 'Socialism' is an unreal abstraction. From beginning to end, he cites no authority and gives no quotation from the writings of any Socialist."

+ — New Statesman 18:424 Ja 14 '22 680w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:543 D '22

Pratt p12 autumn '22

"It is impossible to read this latest work of the venerable German philosopher without a feeling of deep respect, mingled with a certain amount of pity. The Socialism he discourses on is never defined, and his analysis is concerned with the most abstract generalities—truth and freedom, equality and justice,—without ever descending to particulars, much less to individual cases. We must add a word of praise for the translation which appears to be quite excellently done."

+ — Sat R 132:668 D 10 '21 660w

"He offers a consideration of certain shortcomings in the prevailing socialist view of life for which socialists will be even more grateful to him than their opponents. It is regrettable only that he does not quote authoritative expositions of the views he attacks and so occasionaly lays himself open to the charge of fighting windmills." B. L.

+ — Survey 48:87 Ap 15 '22 350w

"Eucken's intellectual eminence needs no attestation; it is a high tribute to the position attained by Socialism in modern thought that he has devoted himself to this examination of it, though Socialists, who are not accustomed to such a rarified atmosphere, are not likely to appreciate the honour."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p835 D 15 '21 780w

EVANS, IVOR H. N. Among primitive peoples in Borneo. 318p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

919.11 Borneo 22-26400

"The author of this work, who is a Fellow of the Royal Anthropological Institute, gives a description of the lives, habits, and customs of the piratical head-hunters of North Borneo, and from the prehistoric objects discovered in the island reconstructs the history of the people in their political and social relations." —R of Rs

Booklist 18:326 Je '22

"A good type of travel book. Mr. Evans is no tourist. He has none of that hurried person's gift for painting impressionist pictures which make no impression. His book has no need of padding. It is a solid work of information, most of it anthropological. Mr. Evans has a sure hand in description, and a happy design in arranging his information and episodes."

+ Natlon and Ath 30:951 Mr 25 '22 220w

Nature 110:146 JI 29 '22 200w

R of Rs 65:556 My '22 40w

"His well-written, well-illustrated book is a piece of work to be proud of."

+ Sat R 133:498 My 13 '22 760w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p131 Mr 2 '22 940w

EVARTS, HAL GEORGE. Settling of the sage. 300p il $1.75 Little [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

22-2102

"Cal Harris went to the Three Bar ranch with his gun swung in his belt in front and although the men, most of them, had a grudge against him it was pretty Billie Warren, mistress of the ranch, who most resented his coming. Billie's father, wishing to cement an old family friendship, had willed a half interest in the ranch to the son of his old friend Bill Harris, with the stipulation that his daughter and Cal must both live on the ranch and work it together for the three years after his death, and if either one left, the other should have all claim to the ranch. Billie didn't understand his motive and she suspected Harris of swindling her father for his own ends. Moreover, she was worried over the steady loss of cattle in large numbers, and the unwelcome advances of a nearby cattle owner. So Cal found it rather unpleasant at first. But he could manage men and women and he mastered the troubles of the Three Bar ranch."—Spring'd Republican

Booklist 18:237 Ap '22

"The strenuous story of the transformation of the open range, cow country into a more settled agriculture life has been rather overdone. This, however, is a fairly well built example of the type. It moves."

+ — Lit R p420 F 11 '22 70w

"There is no swashbuckling and a refreshing lack of sentimentality. The story is told simply and without adornment. Mr. Evarts apparently thinks the facts are thrilling enough to stand for themselves without literary artifice or art, and the average reader will fully agree with him."

+ N Y Times p24 F 26 '22 240w

Pratt p35 Ap '22

EVARTS, HAL GEORGE—Continued

"One of the most virile of the new western stories, and one which has an excellent chance for popularity."

+ Spring'd Republican p13a Ap 9 '22 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p142 Mr 2 '22 90w

"Though of a rather overworked type it is good of its kind. Well put together and readable."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:133 My '22

EVERARD, MRS FRANCES. Daughter of the sands. 310p $1.75 Dodd [7s 6d Hutchinsonson]

22-16872

"Mrs. Everard's Africa is not the full-blooded Africa but the north fringe where races intermingle. Saada Medene typifies it in that she is not really—as she herself supposes at the beginning of the story at any rate—half Arabic herself, but the child of white parents brought up as his own by a dignified and amiable Arab sheikh. He sends her to Europe to be educated, and it is in this way that she becomes engaged to Lance Railsford. An official post takes him to El Bourira, where he marries Saada—to leave her an hour later on hearing that he has inherited a great property in England. We are given to understand that he behaves in this extraordinary way because his mother and others have convinced him that a wife of colour will be a stumbling-block to his social career. Eventually Saada marries another Englishman who dares the consequences; and learns later that she, too, is English."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"'Desert' novels are becoming almost as common as those of our once 'Wild West. Hence this has not even the element of novelty to counteract its hyperbole of style and tedium of development."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 6 '22 300w

"It is 'desert stuff,' but all without offence to Mrs. Grundy: a deodorized desert. The handling of it is a little better than the plot would suggest, but it remains ordinary melodrama."

+ Lit R p922 S 2 '22 200w

"A novel in which the scene is laid at the border of the Sahara Desert and whose heroine is the reputed daughter of an Arab sheik might reasonably be expected to run something of a temperature, but those who look for passion at fever heat in 'A Daughter of the Sands' are doomed to disappointment. There is nothing in the book to which the most puritanical censor could possibly object."

+ N Y Times p27 S 3 '22 330w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p8 N 19 '22 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p326 My 18 '22 160w

EVERYDAY manners for American boys and girls. 115p il $1 Macmillan

395 Etiquet. Courtesy 22-7455

This little book of manners was prepared by the faculty of the South Philadelphia high school for girls. It treats sensibly and simply manners at home, in school, in public places and in business. To help in the application of the advice, problems are given at the end of each chapter.

Booklist 19:57 N '22

"The style of the book is both interesting and unusual, and its problems are such as to provoke thought in the reader."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Jl 26 '22 230w

"The book provides a well-written body of material for use in teaching this important social topic. Its success in Philadelphia is a strong recommendation for its further use."

+ El School J 23:75 S '22 260w

"A book that came together through the co-operation of editors and readers to meet a real situation, could hardly help being a live book. Compared with it the 'books of etiquette' are dull and formal." M. H. Abel

+ J Home Econ 14:400 Ag '22 280w

"It is a concise manual, covering the simplest social observances and manifesting in its dicta good sense and good judgment."

+ Lit R p828 Jl 22 '22 110w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:551 D '22

Pratt p14 winter '23

St Louis 21:7 Ja '23

Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 28 '23 70w

EVISON, MILLICENT. Peggy Pretend. 319p il $1.75 Lothrop

22-6601

Her real name was Peggy Pendleton, but her joyous habit of 'pretending' things caused her to be dubbed Peggy Pretend. There were only five or six of the Pendletons left in the little Virginia town, and they were facing the loss of their much-mortgaged home. Aunt Clemency did her best to keep her brother's four orphaned children and Mammy Loo from the knowledge of their abject poverty, but it was impossible. Then one of Peggy's favorite 'pretends' came true; she found the jewels which had been missing since Civil war days, and Merival Hall remained in the hands of the Pendletons.

"There is a certain amount of moralizing, a faint touch of Polliannity, but not enough to spoil the story for the purposes of those fortunate persons who are in their early teens. Charminglly bound and delightfully illustrated, it will prove the joy of many a summer hay-loft."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '22 490w

"A delightful story for girls, written with a most pleasant wit."

+ Lit R p726 Je 10 '22 190w

EWART, WILFRID. Journey in Ireland. 260p $2 Appleton [6s Putnam]

941.5 Ireland—History. Ireland—Politics and government 22-17078

The book describes conditions in Ireland existing just before the truce of July, 1921. The author during his journey undertaken to study the state of the country, made it his object to meet and to talk with persons of all shades of opinion and of all classes. He records his observations without suppressing anything of interest or significance and without offering any conclusions. Conversations were taken down, in some cases literally as they were spoken. The book has an introduction by the Earl of Winterton.

"The book is not only vivid but interesting. It loses somewhat in value, unfortunately, owing to the fact that it is concerned largely with remarks and prognostications concerning Ireland of the days prior to the agreement with England; but it has the merit of presenting material which, if not directly related to contemporary problems, is at least of historical interest."

+ Bookm 56:516 D '22 140w

Reviewed by J. L. Tynan

Freeman 6:334 D 13 '22 520w

Nation and Ath 31:741 S 2 '22 150w

"It is frankly a book by an outsider, though by an outsider with an open mind, a good critical sense, and exceptionally keen powers of observation." J. W. G.

+ New Statesman 19:471 Jl 29 '22 350w

Pratt p31 winter '23

Spec 129:82 Jl 15 '22 20w

"Interesting in style, the book is an honest attempt to picture the feelings of the Irish people. The integrity of its purpose is well supported by the author's refusal to draw conclusions."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 S 29 '22 300w

"Captain Ewart has not attempted to construct any new theory of the Irish political situation.

He has merely observed keenly, remembered accurately, and recorded with technical skill. The result is a book of lasting value."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p153 J1 13 '22 1100w

EWART, WILFRID. Way of revelation; a novel of five years. 492p $2.50 Appleton [7s 6d Putnam]

22-10168

The story opens in the midsummer of 1914, in society London, with a picture of the rising generation intent on the pleasures that belonged to its period. From the group of young people thus engaged two men stand out, Adrian Knoyle and Eric Sinclair, and the two girls on whom their thoughts were beginning to center, Rosemary Meynell and Faith Daventry. The war breaks. Adrian and Eric are among the first to leave for the front and the stay-at-homes are shown variously reacting to war conditions and influences. Eric marries Faith and is almost immediately afterward killed. Adrian, granted leave to come home and marry Rosemary, finds her consorting with a group of smart decadents, her lover forgotten. Descriptions of life in the trenches alternate with pictures of society at home. In the end, Adrian and Faith are left to patch up an existence together from the five years' wreckage of the war.

"The brilliance and real charm of this truly remarkable novel lie in the author's understanding of the effect of war on various types of men: the sensitive, the emotional but normal, the cold-blooded, normal, the subnormal member of the mass."

+ Bookm 556:33 Ag '22 270w

"If his creation of character was equal to his pleasing manner of style, Mr. Ewart's "Way of Revelation" would have been a notable piece of fiction. What it results in is a document of England with its social and military elements emphasized."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 15 '22 420w
Boston Transcript p8 My 20 '22 2450w

"The sentimentality of the final chapters does not keep the book from being a remarkable document, an impressive record of a young man's experience during a tremendous period."
D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 15 '22 1200w

"It is not the love story that makes this book most interesting, although that is well told, and sufficiently full of incident. It is the remarkable descriptions. The battlefields rise before us. Mr. Ewart never allows the little mannerism, an over-foundness for dashes, which one finds in other places, to creep in [here]."

+ Daily News Rec p9 J1 17 '22 850w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Ind 108:285 Mr 18 '22 300w

"It is an interesting story for the more serious minded; one of sound feeling, and one that is likely to become increasingly important as the war fades further into the distance, and readers are less anxious to get away from it." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p771 J1 1 '22 620w

"A good, even a superlatively good, book, with a few bad chapters in it."

+ Nation and Ath 31:160 Ap 23 '22 600w

"For the most part, it is well written, though there are times when the style becomes a trifle stilted, times when the narrative drags and conversations are given which might, one feels, have very well been omitted. But the novel holds much that is interesting, among other things, a picture of the relations between a modern mother and daughter which many mothers might consider to their advantage."

+ N Y Times p14 F 12 '22 750w

"It is all written in a swift, crisp manner that will carry the reader quickly along and cause him to lose sight of the fact that for a novel the book is extremely long. Some splendid descriptions of fighting and scenes behind the lines, including the hospitals, are painted. It is safe to assert that the reader will put the book down with an acute realization of the terror of the war and its monstrosity in a civilized age. The author carries no brief against certain figures and attempts no propaganda. His book is an objective picture set before the reader in a manner that is never bitter but always cognizant of the uselessness of war."

+ N Y Times p19 Je 4 '22 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23

"We have come across no English novelist who has yet brought home to us more vividly the glory and tragedy and squalor of the war."

+ Sat R 132:670 D 10 '21 220w

"The English in which it is written is far above the average of that of most works of fiction; but it is a thousand pities that so good a piece of work devoted to this particular theme should be published at this moment. Nevertheless, this book is an excellent achievement."

+ Spec 127:790 D 10 '21 900w

Spring'd Republican p11a Mr 19 '22 450w

"In the treatment of an obvious theme he has made use of the obvious characters, the obvious situations, the obvious emotions, and yet, because of his sincerity, because of his faith in his own vision of life, he has reached, through the obvious, the universal."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p769 N 24 '21 800w

EXLINE, FRANK. Politics. 226p $2 Dutton
320 Political science

The book is "an original investigation into the inherent defects common to all present forms of government, together with a proposal for a political system which will automatically produce the best government possible in any given community." (Subtitle) After examining political dogmas, the nature of laws, governments, and public opinion, the author concludes that human will, not law and justice, has always been the controlling factor in government; that commands, not principles, have constituted law; that democracy as a form of government is impossible; that public opinion is purely imaginary and impossible; that popular elections as now conducted are condemned and despised by the people themselves. The remedy which he outlines is a method of political selection based upon fitness and merit, scientifically ascertained, and a system of social classification for the entire population according to individual character and attainments.

"It is given to few people to project into the political forum an idea so fundamental that, if accepted, it would undermine the basis of existing thought and sweep ancient axioms and familiar phrases into the dustbin. It is given to still fewer to state the idea so clearly, with an outlook upon our political system at once so realistic and so finely philosophic, that dissent becomes very difficult. But that is what the author of this small volume has done."

+ N Y Times p1 Ja 7 '23 1900w

EYTON, JOHN SEYMOUR. Dancing fakir, and other stories. 178p il $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

22-14190

"A panorama of Indian episodes reminiscent of Kipling, being dramatic moments in the lives of whites, natives and jungle beasts."—Cleveland

"A volume of short stories which have charm, restraint and dramatic content. . . Mr. Eyton has mastered the art in short story telling, of knowing exactly the moment to draw the curtain, wasting no time, revealing a singular economy in explanations. He can tell terrible things in a single crisp sentence. In every respect these stories may be classed as literature, and their author essentially as a gifted artist."

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 4 '22 320w

Cleveland p86 N '22

EYTON, JOHN SEYMOUR—Continued

"There are life and tremendous dramatic action in these stories and the author's manner is good, but the effect is somewhat weakened by the ever-present, haunting ghost of Kipling, the Kipling of the early days, and the Indian stories."

+ — Lit R p158 O 28 '22 160w

"Almost perfect little tales of India. Each is sharp and clear, told in the simple, direct style of the story-tellers of old." D. G.

+ N Y Tribune p29 Ja 28 '23 500w

F

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Life of the weevil. 346p $2.50 Dodd

595.76 Weevils 22-2589

This is another volume of Fabre's famous "Souvenirs entomologiques," translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. The author tells us that the weevil is one of the oldest of the beetles and that the modern weevil is much the same in form and instinct as its fossil ancestors in the lime deposits of the author's native Provence. The book describes more than fourteen different kinds of weevils and opens up an unknown world to the reader. There is an index.

Booklist 18:220 Ap '22

"Has all the fascination of the other volumes, in which Fabre's wonderful discoveries are summed up. The book badly wants a much fuller index, and would be greatly improved by a plate showing a few weevils, in order that the unbiological reader—who can greatly profit by this book—may see what kind of creatures it is that he is reading about."

+ — Cath World 115:540 Jl '22 340w

Cleveland p64 Ag '22

Freeman 5:166 Ap 26 '22 280w

"No one can help but read this book all through, and that means, of course, joy and instruction."

+ Lit R p439 F 18 '22 150w

"Never does M. Fabre indulge in the flights of fancy, never in the colors, the fancies, the rich imaginings of the poet. He is always the scientist, but he loves greatly, he understands perfectly, he is interested to the depths of his being, he sees clearly, and he has a marvelous gift of expression. Wherein his gift exceeds that of the usual scientist it is more that of the novelist—a realistic novelist who loves his kind—than it is of the poet."

+ N Y Times p16 Mr 12 '22 1950w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:214 My '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p594 S 21 '22 1100w

Wis Lib Bul 18:180 Jl '22

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. More beetles; tr. by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. 322p $2.50 Dodd

595.76 Beetles 22-7664

The last volume on beetles in the collected English edition of Fabre's entomological works. It includes chapters on the habits, especially the food habits, of the cetonias or rose-chafers, the trox-beetle, the Minotaur, the cossus, the cock-chaffer, on some vegetarian insects and some anomalies in the insect world and on the nuptial habits of the gold beetle. Index.

Booklist 18:315 Je '22

Cleveland p75 S '22

"Another of the incomparably delightful books by the Homer of the insects. For those who know Fabre it is sufficient to say that it is no less charming in its intimate disclosure of the life of the beetles to which it introduces the reader."

+ Lit R p76 S 30 '22 120w

"Why do the publishers scare readers away by disguising such charming essays culled from the long series of 'Souvenirs entomologiques' under the deadly title 'More Beetles?'"

Nation 114:781 Je 28 '22 150w

"Whatever the explanation of the surpassing charm of Fabre's style, the fact remains that no other entomologist has been able to make his subject so attractive to the general reader. The creatures of which he writes are such as most of us either turn from in disgust or crush under a ruthless heel, but he makes the story of their lives read like a fairy tale."

+ N Y Times p15 Jl 2 '22 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:344 Jl '22

St Louis 20:122 Je '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p618 S 28 '22 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p813 D 7 '22 40w

Wis Lib Bul 18:180 Jl '22

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Wonder book of chemistry; tr. from the French by Florence Constable Bicknell. 385p il $2.50 Century

540 Chemistry 22-17462

In the form of talks between Uncle Paul and his nephews Jules and Emile and with the aid of the very simplest apparatus, the book presents a complete treatise of elementary chemistry. Wherever possible the author bases his talks on phenomena of everyday occurrence and guides his young pupils into making their own observations and discoveries.

Booklist 19:56 N '22

"It is a book to be placed in the hands of every boy and girl, and it may be given to them without fear, for Uncle Paul points out in warnings of thundering portent what experiments and chemicals are dangerous to handle. And it is a book to be placed in the hands of every man and woman, for if the knowledge to be gained fails to interest, there is still the moving drama of the world invisible ready to be clearly acted before the readers' eyes."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 4 '22 330w

"In the book Fabre has presented the wonders of the physical world about us, its combinations and mutations, in a very fascinating story-book manner." F. C. V.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 Ja 28 '23 600w

"The same combination of fascinating material and a style simple enough for the youthful intelligence, and yet interesting enough for a seasoned one, that marked the earlier books by the 'insects' Homer' stamps this latest accession to a library of science that ought to be on the shelf of every young person."

+ Lit. R p50 S 23 '22 200w

Nation 115:418 O 18 '22 30w

"The experiments he uses are substantially the same as those given in any of our modern school manuals and his methods are often inferior. Yet the manual is no more than a skeleton, while Fabre makes these dry bones live. The book would have been better if the translator had imitated Fabre instead of verbally following his text." E. E. Slosson

+ — New Repub 32:285 N 8 '22 560w

"Perhaps a book that any gifted artist might have composed, more important for the light it sheds on Fabre's character than for the information it conveys about sulphur and oxygen." A. D. Douglas

+ — N Y Tribune p8 S 17 '22 550w

"Not only simple, but well calculated to arouse the curiosity and interest of young people."

+ Outlook 132:254 O 11 '22 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:35 Ja '23

St Louis 20:266 N '22

Spring'd Republican p7a D 3 '22 60w

Wis Lib Bul 18:255 N '22

FAHS, CHARLES HARVEY. America's stake in Europe. 186p $1.35 Assn. press

327.73 United States—Foreign relations. Reconstruction (European war) 22-441

The object of the book is to serve as a study manual for discussion clubs and forums. It is the second volume in the "World problem discussion series." Each chapter has two parts: a list of questions on the points at issue, and a series of quotations from current opinions giving information on the questions. The whole is supplemented by a bibliography for further study and suggestions for the chairman of the discussion group or forum. Some of the questions asked are: Should America reassess her former isolation from European affairs? Should we cancel Europe's war indebtedness to us? What part should America take in bringing about the economic recovery of Europe? What should be the American attitude toward Germany? What is the bearing of Russia's distress on America's destiny?

"The book has definite practical value for a discussion group or forum." B. S. S.

Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p3 S 30 '22 520w

Reviewed by F. W. Williams

Yale R n s 11:410 Ja '22 70w

FAIRBANK, JANET (AYER) (MRS KELLOGG FAIRBANK). Cortlandts of Washington square. 399p $2 Bobbs

22-18892

"New York in Civil War time is the setting for this story. Ann Byrne, an angular red-haired child of ten, comes to New York when her widowed mother marries Hudson Cortlandt of Washington Square, and when her mother and her new stepfather are lost at sea she remains as the ward of the latter's brother, Hendricks Cortlandt, an elderly bachelor. When the war breaks out she wants to become a nurse, but the Cortlandts are opposed to it on the ground that nursing is not proper work for a young girl. But Ann has her way, as she usually does. Her guardian is in Europe on business for the Government, and the other Cortlandts are scandalized at Ann's unlady-like conduct in going unchaperoned to the front. Fortunately for them and for her, they know nothing about the most exciting and unconventional episode of her stay in the battle zone. They learn of that later and use it as a club in their attempt to force Ann into what they consider a very advantageous marriage. She is just about to yield when the right man appears on the scene and upsets all their plans."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:84 D '22

"A better story of the Civil War, from the Northern standpoint, has perhaps never been written. For though entirely lacking in controversy, it is vital with the spirit of the conflict. . . The last part of the book is a bit unnatural, though certainly exciting. The best is the middle, which seems so real that it must have been written with some old diary in hand. But the whole is fresh and vivid, delightful for its very conventions which Ann so scorned."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 25 '22 390w

"A popular novel that might have been written in the pre-Freudian era of American fiction, sweet, wholesome, and all things nice and elderly."

+ Lit R p158 O 28 '22 110w

"A novel unusually rich in fictional values."

+ New Repub 32:202 O 18 '22 100w

"The author has succeeded in presenting a vivid picture of life in New York just before and during the Civil War."

+ N Y Times p20 O 15 '22 450w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 28 '23 250w

"Recalls some of the charm of F. Hopkinson Smith, especially in the early chapters."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

FAIRFIELD, CICELY. See West, R., pseud

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON. Seeing the Eastern states. 244p il $5 Lippincott

917.4 New England—Description and travel. Atlantic states—Description and travel

22-17767

The section of country covered has been described as "the great coastal ellipse that reaches from Maine to Maryland, with Portland and Washington as the two foci, and which takes in the lower end of Maine, a third of New Hampshire, all of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey and Delaware, with a fifth of New York State, a fourth of Pennsylvania and a half of Maryland." Mr Faris adds to this section parts of Maine, New Hampshire, New York and Pennsylvania not included in it, and the whole of Vermont. He describes the picturesque surface features of the places he visits and recalls their historic associations. There are some ninety illustrations. Index.

"To say that this latest addition to his travel books de luxe presents the same characteristics which made the earlier volumes so popular, is really all the comment necessary. Whatever the locality, Dr. Faris describes, to it is given a new color, when it is familiar. And when it is not, the point of view he selects—as comprehensive as revealing—gives a gratefully vivid picture." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 22 '22 780w

Reviewed by Hildegarde Hawthorne
Int Bk R p35 D '22 30w

"A highly idealized color plate frontispiece establishes the tone of the book, which is sentimental. Mr. Faris is master of the travel cliché and writes with Chautauqua platform style in a popular, superficial manner. Most of the points of interest are, one gathers, interesting because at some time or another they were visited by George Washington."

— Lit R p232 N 18 '22 110w

"This volume is well illustrated and shows a commendable industry in antiquarian research, untainted by the breath of modern life."

— Nation 116:198 F 14 '23 90w

"This book has real value and interest for all book lovers."

+ N Y Tribune p6 N 19 '22 210w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:519 N '22

Pratt p30 winter '23

"Little more than a guide book in literary form. Even so, it does not attain completeness in its enumeration of places to be visited, routes to be followed or sights to be seen. It does, however, afford a pleasing and appreciative introduction to our northeastern corner, and it addresses itself to the railroad traveler and the pedestrian tourist as well as to the motorist. It achieves a companionable blend of scenery and history, but the result is necessarily sketchy."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 15 '22 900w

Wis Lib Bul 19:23 Ja '23

FARJEON, ELEANOR. Martin Pippin in the apple orchard. 270p $2.50 Stokes [Ts 6d Collins]

22-9875

"There is in the story a gruff old English farmer in whose memory still lingers an occasional ray from the lovelight of his youth. In his apple orchard are six lovely milkmaids who guard with six keys the still lovelier daughter of the farmer confined in the well house to prevent her from flying to the arms of a young farmer who weeps and moans incessantly for his lost love. And then comes along Martin Pippin, the Wandering Singer and Teller of Tales. In the goodness of his heart he tries to save the broken-hearted young farmer lover from the death he courts by restoring to him the imprisoned maiden and to that end he cajoles the guarding milkmaids with tales and songs. After many strange happenings, two lovers set forth traveling to find a garden in the midst of a forest beyond a green lane and a gate clambered over with blue periwinkle."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:53 N '22

FARJEON, ELEANOR—Continued

"Girls of high school age who love poetry and romance and who like to dramatize plays from old tales will find a mine of treasure in Martin Pippin's stories, while to those of us who know and love Sussex it is an ideal book to read aloud." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 56:206 O '22 180w

"Miss Farjeon has all the requisite qualities—imagination, a whimsical humor, romance, and, most of all, a gift of fancy that almost never survives the days of childhood. She has never broken faith with that spirit. It takes us out of the world of every day where two and two necessarily make four. It leads us into the world where anything may happen—a place from which we have been banished all too long and to which we return with joy. Miss Farjeon has in very truth written a book that is different." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 23 '22 1000w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Ind 109:311 N 25 '22 390w

"Has something of the same strange strain of fantasy that marks Stevens. If you can see the light that never was shining, then this is the book for you." Hildegarde Hawthorne
Int Bk R p70 D '22 50w

"Miss Farjeon's style is the cream of the book. Her style is firm, graceful, lovely; a fairy-book style yet all her own. A fresh spontaneity plus design is the achievement of this book: it makes fancy into a mosaic, yet keeps it free."

+ Lit R p195 N 11 '22 750w

New Repub 33:78 D 13 '22 90w

"A story of colorful, tricky, delicate beautiful fancy—pure fancy. A reader will either delight in it with a pleasure he cannot explain or justify, or he will think it unreal and puerile and futile, the sort of thing that could never happen."

+ N Y Times p19 Ag 27 '22 400w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

FARNHAM, DWIGHT THOMPSON. America vs. Europe in industry. 500p il $4 Ronald 65:7 Industrial management. Efficiency, Industrial 21-21692

The author, a consulting industrial engineer, compares European and American manufacturing methods, setting down and interpreting the experience of successful and far-sighted executives here and abroad. He shows the immense progress Europe has made during and since the war, the industrial advantage which Europe in many ways possesses, and American handicaps thru over-standardization, ignorance of international trade customs and high cost of labor. He covers business methods, labor conditions, factory buildings, principles of purchase and storage, machinery, standardization, planning, rate setting, personal direction, executive control, and the selection and education of employees. References on the training of workers and on shop government and profit sharing are given in appendices, as well as a list of definitions of British labor terms and the prospectus of an English day continuation school. Index.

Booklist 18:315 Je '22

"Although many executives will not agree with many of the industrial principles in which Mr. Farnham as an industrial engineer believes and here outlines, the description of some of these principles as actually practiced both here and abroad is interesting as well as timely and instructive."

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 17 '22 250w

"Engineers among our doughboys and many other interested Americans have observed the astonishing strides which industry has made during and since the war, in England, France, Italy, and Germany, as well as in America," but no one but Mr. Farnham has written about it in such lively, appealing language. He deals comprehensively with the standardization of industrial and elimination of industrial wastes to meet the seriously sharpening competition on the world markets of tomorrow."

+ Lit R p532 Mr 25 '22 580w

Springfd Republican p8 F 4 '22 140w

Survey 48:250 My 13 '22 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p309 My 11 '22 50w

FARNOL, JEFFERY. Peregrine's progress. 443p $2 Little [7s 6d S. Low]

22-19055

"Peregrine is a young chap of only 19 years, whom a loving aunt has brought up in seclusion, determined that he shall not be corrupted by the wickedness of the world, and endeavoring to make of him a poet or a painter. Spurred by the contempt of his uncles, who say that he lacks manliness, he sets off alone by night and very soon falls into adventures that lead on into more adventures and more complications. The fate of a lovely girl in a camp of gypsies is complicated with his in a romantic way. There is something happening, or threatening to happen, or bringing on the consequences of having happened, all the time, and there is a very great variety of incident and scene."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:85 D '22

"A good piece of romantic work and a book from the fascination of which even the most critical and fastidious cannot for the moment, escape. Still we cannot pass over the fact that the dénouement is utterly commonplace." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 11 '22 1000w
Cleveland p85 N '22

+ Int Bk R p62 F '23 400w

"There are some genuinely picturesque bits of description and there is always plenty of event. It is Mr. Farnol at his best."

+ Lit R p272 D 2 '22 160w

"The story is written in the style which admirers of Mr. Farnol's early work found so charming—leisurely, detailed, colorful. The story breathes the very air of romance in every word, but it is romance that painstakingly disguises itself as realism with its colorful details of all the circumstance and setting."

+ N Y Times p26 O 8 '22 300w

"It has all a patched-up, made-over air; it lacks the first fine careless rapture wherewith Mr. Farnol was wont to hurry one past the sheer impossibilities of his tales. His admirers will not reject it altogether; it is good enough in spots, but it certainly is spotty." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 8 '22 380w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23

"All is as it should be in a romance, and this is a romance that thrills to the end."

+ Springfd Republican p12 O 5 '22 240w

Springfd Republican p7a D 31 '22 500w

"Jeffery Farnol must have had some ado to keep all the strands of his story clear. He has done so, however, and for those who delight, as he does himself, in a pen dipped in tears and sugar, 'Peregrine's Progress' will give rich pleasure."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p586 S 14 '22 240w

Wis Lib Bul 18:274 D '22

FARQUHAR, ARTHUR B. First million the hardest: an autobiography in collaboration with Samuel Crowther. 323p $3.50 Doubleday
B or 32 Farquhar, Arthur B. 22-12028

The author of these memoirs is a great manufacturer of agricultural machinery and, altho now worth millions, began life as a poor boy. Born in 1838, he is still leading an active life. One of the chief interests of the autobiography lies in the ground covered and its record of social and industrial changes from comparatively primitive conditions to our present complex civilization. Characteristic of the man is the manner of his start in life by coming to New York from his home farm, at the age of eighteen, to interview William B. Astor, James Gordon Bennett, A. T. Stewart and others on how to make a million dollars. Index.

Booklist 19:119 Ja '23

"It is not often that a book so personal in its scope, is so thoroughly entertaining and readable as this." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 3 '22 500w

"The book might be tightened up a little by omitting a few repetitions; but such minor defects are overwhelmingly offset by its high degree of merit and delightful quality both as to style and contents. Any one who likes to read a true human recital full of suspense and dramatic incident, well handled, will want 'The First Million the Hardest.'" F. C. Kelly

+ Lit R p739 Je 17 '22 850w

"In its naive self-confidence, its homely, commonsense, honest, business philosophy, its shrewd comment on men and events, and its unbounded faith in this country, the book will help any reader understand what manner of man it is that has made this America of today." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 115:282 S 20 '22 180w

N Y Times p13 Ag 13 '22 1900w

Outlook 131:352 Je 21 '22 90w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:365 Jl '22

Pratt p33 winter '23

St Louis 20:251 O '22

FARQUHAR, HENRY HALLOWELL. Factory storeskeeping; the control and storage of materials. 182p il $2.50 McGraw

658.7 Factory management. Stores systems 22-16070

"Does not present a system for any specific type of factory, but gives general principles and methods in an attempt at standardization." Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"'Factory Storeskeeping' is the best book of its kind which has come to the attention of the writer, and contains a great deal of practical information which can be used by industrial engineers and accountants." J: M. Scanlon

+ Administration 5:106 Ja '23 450w

"There are many illustrative forms to drive home the statements of the text; and while the book is apparently written especially for the use of metal working plants, its explanations of storeskeeping principles, plus its illustrative examples of those principles in practice, should make the book helpfully suggestive to the men responsible for the constant, regular, frictionless flow of material into a factory of almost any kind."

+ Daily News Rec p9 N 2 '22 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:568 D '22

Pratt p21 winter '23

FARRAR, JOHN CHIPMAN. Bookman anthology of verse. 140p $1.50 Doran
$11.08 American poetry—Collections

"The poems selected have all appeared in the Bookman. Fifty-six poets are included. Of each some little account is given, written on a very personal note and these accounts form a conspicuous feature of the book, for there are only sixty-two poems to the fifty-six poets."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"For the most part, Mr. Farrar's cross section shows that our poetry has been more concerned with conquest than with cultivation. It has picked up what easy gold it could in its new lands and spent it lavishly. Now it is time to go back for the tools that it has forgotten to build carefully and consciously and to cut deep into the earth that lured it with a few loose nuggets." W: A. Norris

Lit R p347 D 30 '22 1300w

"Mr. Farrar, who by acquaintance or correspondence knows all of them, has sketched, briefly and with revealing phrase, a picture of each poet in advance of his contribution, adding thereby a charmingly intimate touch to a book already informal in the arrangement of its material. Happy is the effect. The elusive personalities of Sara Teasdale, Amy Lowell, John Dos Passos, Aline Kilmer, the Benét's and many others are caught in the noose of a swift, sure phrase." E: L. Donahoe

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 19 '22 350w

"Possibly the book is over-edited. It contains practically as much editorial comment as it does verse—which makes it as much a book of criticism as an anthology. Mr. Farrar's notes are chatty and clever, often to the point of flippancy, rather than profound."

Spring'd Republican p6a D 3 '22 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p827 D 7 '22 30w

FARRAR, JOHN CHIPMAN. Songs for parents. 52p $1.25 Yale univ. press

811

21-16510

"Forty-two frisky and friendly memories of childhood are offered in groups called 'Songs of Desire,' 'Songs for Out of Doors,' 'Songs of Circumstance,' and 'Songs for a Christmas Tree.'"—N Y Times

Booklist 18:75 D '21

Cleveland p84 N '22

"Here is a most joyous and delightful volume. Decidedly 'this book's a very happy thing.' It is full to the brim of two strangely assorted and charmingly mated virtues: delicacy and zest." Amy Lowell

+ Lit R p364 Ja 21 '22 360w

"Here is a dear, quaint, jolly little book. May the fates save it from owls, philosophers and solemn critics who want nothing less serious than the 'sublime style' or pathological realism! May they put it in the hands of babes, human beings, and the gently quizzical, tenderly humorous commentator, if there be such a one! It is a young poet's merry-go-round." Marguerite Wilkinson

+ N Y Times p14 N 13 '21 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:511 N '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:101 Ap '22

"In these brief verses, the real child speaks—not the sophisticated man, the sentimentalist who imagines he is nearer heaven when a boy. These are poems, never nursery jingles; and by their fancy, their metrical ease, their humor, their little flashes of beauty, they deserve their readers." E: B. Reed

+ Yale R n s 12:219 O '22 80w

FARRER, REGINALD JOHN. Rainbow bridge. 383p il $7.50 Longmans [21s E. Arnold]

915.1 China—Description and travel. Kansu, China. Botany—China (Eng ed 22-26026)

"On October 16th, 1920, Mr. Reginald Farrer died far away in the wilds of Upper Burma. He left behind him the MS. of the work now published, a sequel to his earlier book, 'The Eaves of the World,' in which he had already begun to describe his wanderings in Tibet. He set out upon these adventurous journeys with the object of studying the flora of the Tibetan hills and valleys, and the book is, among other things, a record of his botanical discoveries."—New Statesman

Booklist 18:151 F '22

"The reader is swept along by Farrer's colorful enthusiasm and, whether botanist or not, is as sad as the author himself over the failure to transport to Europe alive a beautiful plant. . . . There is a vast amount in the book besides the search for flowers; much about the daily life of the inhabitants, much about journeys over valley and mountain." F: S. Dellenbaugh

+ Nation 114:693 Je 7 '22 500w

"There is something garish and fatiguing about his style. It is not laboured, yet it is not quite natural. But though Mr. Farrer's taste in epithets is often distressing, and though we sometimes weary of his rhetoric, we must at least admire the imagination, industry and courage to which this volume bears witness, and admit that his bridge has led us into some very beautiful places."

FARRER, REGINALD JOHN—Continued

— + New Statesman 18:424 Ja 14 '22 640w

"He took a lively concern in men and scenery as well as in plants, and his descriptions of the remote hill-country are most attractive. Botanists, of course, will take a special interest in the long chapters on the Kansu flora, but even those who know little about botany will be delighted with Mr. Farrer's cheerful, scholarly and humorous narrative. Such a book as this impresses us with the innate power and stability of the ancient Chinese civilization, however troubled the political situation may appear in foreign eyes."

+ Spec 127:641 N 12 '21 140w

"His two books, 'On the Eaves of the World' and 'The Rainbow Bridge' (which are really but one book), will long outlast the average book of travel, and will, we believe, take a final place with the classic works of their kind. The unwearied, rich vocabulary of his style encloses all he wrote with a luminous glow; his curious turns of speech and his vivid presentation of people and scenery have something of the archaic and powerful tang of Mr. Doughty—an impression heightened by his peculiar and ironical humour."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p729 N 10 '21 820w

FASSETT, CHARLES MARVIN. Assets of the ideal city. 177p $1.50 Crowell

352 Municipal government. Cities and towns 22-6012

"In compiling this book, my aim has been to collect in one small volume a brief statement regarding each of the more important institutions and undertakings which have come to be generally understood as appertaining to modern life in cities." (Preface) Among the assets of a city to which special chapters are devoted are its government, its streets, its utilities, its educational, health, social and recreational facilities, its public structures and institutions. The book has a foreword by Harold S. Buttenheim, a selected list of books and an index.

"Although there is little that is new or original in this volume it is of especial interest as the product of a man who has made a success as the mayor of a large city and who has recently turned his efforts in the direction of presenting the results of his experiences and study to a wider public."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 16:531 Ag '22 110w

Reviewed by L. W. Lancaster

Ann Am Acad 102:208 J1 '22 120w

Booklist 18:309 Je '22

Boston Transcript p7 My 6 '22 210w

"As a collection of thumb-nail sketches, it serves very well to acquaint the general reader with the variety and extent of the activities and obligations of cities of to-day. It is not for the student or the specialist. It is published apparently as a supplementary volume to the author's 'Handbook of Municipal Government,' contains identically the same bibliography, and duplicates it at so many other points that one cannot help wondering why the two were not combined into a single volume." C. C. Maxey

— + Educ R 64:89 Je '22 140w

Lit R p725 Je 10 '22 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:330 J1 '22

R of Rs 66:111 J1 '22 60w

St Louis 20:208 S '22

"His book of assets is little more than a listing of problems that require the attention of the progressive community and of whole-some if not especially imaginative solutions for them. So far as the newer theories of civic development are concerned, Mr. Fassett has nothing to contribute."

Survey 48:36 Ap 8 '22 80w

FASSETT, CHARLES MARVIN. Handbook of municipal government. 192p $1.50 Crowell
352 Municipal government 22-6122

"This book . . . is intended to be a handy volume containing the essential facts of the development and structure of city government, including an outline of some of the administrative processes through which democracy functions in municipal affairs, and some comment, criticism and opinion upon these facts and processes." (Preface) It is intended as a text-book for use in schools and colleges and is particularly dedicated to the enfranchised American women. After a brief outline of the government of German and English cities, the various types of American cities are described and successive chapters are devoted to charters, elections and appointments, and the official and administrative duties and functions. There is a selected list of books and an index.

Am Pol Sci R 16:531 Ag '22 110w

Reviewed by L. W. Lancaster

Ann Am Acad 102:208 J1 '22 120w

Booklist 18:309 Je '22

Boston Transcript p7 My 6 '22 150w

"This book is so inadequate in scope and defective in method as to lead to the conclusion that it has been written by one little familiar with the problems and needs of the classroom. Whatever its value for the general reader, it is too incomplete and too superficial in its treatment of important topics to serve any useful function as a textbook." C. C. Maxey

— Educ R 64:88 Je '22 320w

"It would have gained in value as well as interest by giving a picture of a few typical or otherwise important city governments instead of devoting itself entirely to a general analysis."

— Lit R p725 Je 10 '22 40w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:330 J1 '22

R of Rs 66:111 J1 '22 90w

Survey 48:56 Ap 8 '22 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:153 Je '22

FAULKNER, JOHN ALFRED. Modernism and the Christian faith. 306p $2.75 Meth. bk. [12s 6d Allen & U.]

230 Theology 21-11344

"Professor Faulkner recognizes that if men are unable to accept the traditional doctrines it must be because those doctrines have been so presented as to fail to carry conviction. He is not so naive as to suppose that doctrines can be reinstated in one's confidence by telling the doubter that the authority of the church or of the Bible requires him to assent. The only way in which to secure real belief is to show that a doctrine is inherently believable. His book consists of a series of discussions dealing with the crucial doctrines in debate between conservatives and radicals. In every case he simply attempts in straightforward fashion to show why the conservative position seems to him more reasonable and more defensible than the alternate. A large portion of the book is devoted to a detailed amassing of historical testimony as to the nature of Jesus Christ. Here are objective data for a profitable discussion."—J Religion

"The book is scholarly, and has a vigor about it that those who disagree with its position must admire; and at the same time there is always present that gentle spirit that can disagree with one without the least ill-feeling." F. W. Collier

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 10 '21 550w

"The discussions are stimulating and are calculated to challenge real thinking and criticism. This is precisely the kind of debate which is needed, and the volume is to be welcomed as a wholesome contribution. The shrewd modernist, however, will wish some points to be cleared up a little further." G. B. Smith

+ — J Religion 2:103 Ja '22 650w

"The author is widely read in dogmatic theology and endeavors, as far as possible, to quote the liberals, to their own confusion and to the support of orthodox views. His style is clear even in metaphysical subjects. The faults of the book are certain undiscussed presuppositions and logical fallacies, and therefore lie well hidden beneath the exterior of learning and lucid English."

+ — Lit R p12 J1 23 '21 500w

FAURE, ELIE. History of art: 4v; v 2, Medieval art; tr. from the French by Walter Pach. 433p il $7.50 Harper

709 Art—History. Art, Medieval

The second volume of this most important four-volume history of art is devoted to medieval art. It has some 300 illustrations from photographs selected by the author.

"Never has an author been more fortunate in his translator. Here the almost impassioned French of the original is rendered into English with full knowledge of the values of both, and the fascination of the subject matter is invested with a new charm as one follows the thread of the narrative expressed in the faultless English which constitutes its medium. The work is one of the few being produced today which one would earnestly recommend for the library of an architect or anyone who would be even reasonably well informed as to the form and expression which art has assumed during different ages and at the hands of different peoples."

+ Architectural Forum 37:25 O '22 660w

Booklist 19:43 N '22

"A valuable contribution to world literature. His comments upon the art of the period covered in this book are illuminating and should enable the student to grasp the close relation between art and progressive civilization."

+ Bookm 56:514 D '22 80w

"The strength and the weakness of M. Faure's work arise out of his passion for generalizing detail. For one thing, he leaves a great deal of factual research to his reader. For the rest, one must fill up the gaps out of one's own store of impressions from city streets and museums and the interiors of fine houses. This work of M. Elie Faure's is by all odds one of the most important and interesting books that have appeared during the last generation. It is the monument to a splendid passion and a prodigious industry which cannot help heartening and stirring every mind that comes into contact with it." Lewis Mumford

+ New Repub 33:sup1 N 29 '22 1950w

"The illustrations are the point of the book, as M. Faure writes 'chit-chat,' which is inevitably not improved by translation into English. Unfortunately, the plates are not reproduced so well as they are in the French original. The weight of the book is also appalling."

+ New Statesman 20:supviii O 7 '22 500w

Pratt p22 autumn '22

St Louis 20:299 D '22

"Though we are full of gratitude for his great accomplishment, instructed and stimulated by the magical story he has told us, we may still humbly agree to differ with him over his valuations. The quantity and excellence of the illustrations to his book are for his readers the visible proofs or disproofs of his contentions, according to the nature of their aesthetic appreciations. We have disagreed where the Latin tag vainly warns us that we cannot dispute, but for the scholarship and insight of the author and ability of the translator we can offer, in their respective tongues, the sincerest praise."

+ — Spec 129:sup532 O 21 '22 600w

Wis Lib Bul 18:214 O '22

FAUST, FREDERICK. Village street and other poems. 98p $1.75 Putnam
$11 22-14298

The book is a collection of poems of sentiment and romance in rhyme and meter. Among them are six poems for children, the "Legend of St Christopher" and the long narrative poem "Ealin"—a legend of knight-errantry.

"The poet's technique, in his shorter poems, is not perfected, his touch is not altogether certain. Yet it is something to discover a modern writer so sensitive to the effectiveness of simplicity and clarity. In any case, the qualities that promise here are delicacy of touch in the shorter poems and distinct narrative power in the longer." W: R. Benet

+ — Lit R p837 J1 29 '22 800w

"The only fault to be found with Mr. Faust's poems is their lack of rhythmic vitality. They bring us charming pictures, and striking lines on occasion, and they are endowed with genuine poetic feeling." R: Le Gallienne

+ — N Y Times p9 S 17 '22 260w

FEIS, HERBERT. Settlement of wage disputes. 289p $2.25 (12s) Macmillan

331.2 Labor disputes. Wages 21-16761

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:141 F '22

Reviewed by E. F. Lloyd

Lit R p429 F 18 '22 1250w

"It is not a superficial study of the various forms of machinery for adjustment and arbitration, but rather a study of the economic fundamentals which must underlie any policy of wage adjustment." G: Soule

+ Nation 114:168 F 8 '22 1300w

R of Rs 65:447 Ap '22 130w

"Mr. Feis deals with the question of wages very thoroughly, and his book should prove most informing to people unacquainted with the works of English authorities from whom he quotes."

+ Sat R 133:sup24 Ja 28 '22 170w

"It puts forth no new or revolutionary doctrines but rather sets down factors which govern wage settlements in America at the present time and analyses the tendencies which these reflect. This has been done with great discrimination, but without perhaps the accumulation of statistical data needed for sound, scientific practice."

+ — Survey 48:80 Ap 15 '22 120w

FELLOWS, JENNIE DORCAS. Cataloging rules with explanations and illustrations. 2d ed rev and enl 303p $4 Wilson, H. W.

025.3 Cataloging 22-10795

"The following code of rules is a revision of Library School Bulletin 36, issued by the New York State Library, 1915, which was in turn a revision of the stenciled directions used in conducting the cataloging course in the New York State Library School, 1911-1914. In preparing the work as a textbook for the Library School it was recognized that different local conditions called for different treatment and an attempt was accordingly made, by explanatory statements and by suggestions of alternative methods, to give a somewhat broad view and to make the rules adaptable to varying needs. That feature has in this second edition received still further attention, with special reference to the smaller libraries and to the courses in summer schools, while certain minute specifications, originally included merely for the author's convenience in class work, have been omitted. The work is based on the A. L. A. rules. The few variations from the A. L. A. rules have been chiefly in the interests of simplification." (Preface)

Booklist 18:374 J1 '22

"As Miss Fellows suggests in the preface, her cataloging rules probably will not suit every cataloger in every detail, but grateful

FELLOWS, JENNIE DORCAS—Continued
 thanks are due her for all the exacting labor that has gone into this exceedingly valuable book which should be in the possession of all interested in cataloging problems." H. E. Howe
 + Lib J 47:407 My 1 '22 780w

"In Miss Fellows's book are the essentials of cataloguing, treated with a generosity of elucidation and illustration that make it easily a front-rank work on its subject. Every form of entry, so far as we have tested the work (and our test has not been a careless one), is explained and demonstrated. Hereafter, it will take its place as a valuable permanent contribution to its subject."

+ Lib World 24:186 My '22 980w
 Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:325 J1 '22

"The book can not be too heartily commended to all instructors in cataloging and to all catalogers. Because of its clearness of presentation, its definitions and its excellent sample cards, it will no doubt be the standard textbook in cataloging for many years." Ethel Bond
 + Public Libraries p371 Je '22 1100w
 Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

FERBER, EDNA. Gigolo. 291p $1.75 Doubleday
 22-26970

Eight short stories, originally published in magazines and written in Miss Ferber's accustomed crisp and competent manner. They are satires, most of them but satires in which a trace of sentiment sometimes lingers. The title story derives its name from the French slang term contemptuously applied to those "Incredible and pathetic male creatures," casualties of the war, who for ten francs or so sell themselves to American matrons and flappers in return for skillfully guiding them on the crowded dance floors of French public tea, dinner and supper rooms. Contents: The afternoon of a faun; Old man Minick; Gigolo; Not a day over twenty-one; Home girl; Ain't nature wonderful! The sudden sixties; If I should ever travel!

Booklist 19:85 D '22

"Clever, slangy, smart, and sometimes smartly."

+ Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 40w

"They are very human little stories, with—at least in the best of them—the deftest mingling of laughter and tears. She sees clearly, and what she sees she reproduces accurately, in her delightfully individual, often pungent style. There are certain strata of American life, and especially of American city life, which she knows through and through, and these she expounds vividly and very interestingly, with all the charm of the born interpreter."

+ Int Bk R p56 D '22 1000w

"Whether Miss Ferber discourses of great things or small, she is always competent, assured, and skilful. But you must expect the right things from her. She is neither a deep nor a subtle story teller. Her invention exceeds her imagination; her reason works more powerfully than her emotions; her observation is extraordinary, her interpretation obvious. . . . But satirists should stick to satire. There is a soft spot in Miss Ferber—or in her editors. I like her dressing of oil and vinegar, but not her sweets. When she stops being satiric she begins to be sentimental—not very sentimental, but enough to curdle the mixture." H: S. Canby

+ Lit R p144 O 28 '22 620w

"They are for the most part interesting tales. She knows well the kind of people with whom the majority of her stories deal, knows their surroundings and the sort of lives they lead, and puts them before us vividly and well."

+ N Y Times p10 N 5 '22 960w

"This collection of short stories shows Miss Ferber at her best (wherein she is, by way of being in the first rank of American writers of short stories), and at her worst (wherein she is, by way of being perhaps the most exasperatingly disappointing possessor of talent among our fictionists)." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 29 '22 1100w

"In every story there are the qualities we associate with her: verve, liting particularization, swift human sympathy and a crisp sense of humor."

+ Spring'd Republican p6a D 3 '22 260w
 Wis Lib Bul 18:274 D '22

FICKE, ARTHUR DAVISON. Sonnets of a portrait-painter, and other sonnets. 105p $2 Kennerley

811

Half the book consists of a reissue, with some additions and omissions, of Mr Ficke's sonnet sequence first published in 1914. To this are added four other and shorter groups: Don Quixote, Rue des vents, The middle years, and Epitaph for the poet V.

"With his greater command of form, Ficke's thought has broadened—or, what is the same thing, he gets greater breadth of thought into his improved mold."

+ N Y Times p2 D 17 '22 220w

"Mr. Ficke's little volume has real distinction both of form and substance. For fellow-poets seeking in shared experience the sanction of their own reading of life, Mr. Ficke offers an authentic word of comradeship." S. A.
 + Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 7 '23 600w

FIELDING, WILLIAM JOHN. Caveman within us; his peculiarities and powers; how we can enlist his aid for health and efficiency. 372p $3 Dutton

130 Psychology, Physiological, Psychoanalysis, Personality 22-23135

The object of the book is to demonstrate the dual nature of personality. There is in every one of us the caveman and the socialized human being. The roots of the former—the unconscious of the psychoanalyst—reach far back into our dim biological past; the latter results from our cultural progress. The author holds that most human ills are of a neurotic character due to maladjustments between the two personalities and that by a better understanding of our psychic mechanism we can achieve a greater measure of health and efficiency. He describes in terms of the psychoanalyst, the caveman's background and his various manifestations of himself in the life of the individual, both in co-operation with and in rebellion against the cultural personality. Index.

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 110:25 Ja 6 '23 140w

"The work is extremely interesting and suggestive. It masses richly many important conclusions of modern science and illuminates some of its tendencies."

+ N Y Times p9 D 24 '22 2500w

FINCH, M. B., and PEERS, EDGAR ALLISON. Origins of French romanticism. 303p $6 Dutton [15s Constable]

840.9 French literature—History. Romanticism (Eng ed 20-23013)

"The period of French literature covered by the present volume (roughly from 1750 to 1824) saw the decisive struggle between traditional ideas and the new romantic tendency. The chief artificers of romanticism, to each of whom the authors devote a chapter, are Rousseau, Diderot, Bernardin de St Pierre, Madame de Staël and Chateaubriand."—Ath

"The fault of the book is not inaccuracy, but a certain lack of incisiveness in dealing with ideas. A treatment of French romanticism as a purely literary episode, even an agreeable treatment like the present one, will not satisfy entirely those who have been following the recent trend of French criticism." Irving Babbitt
 —Ath p375 S 17 '20 1200w

Spring'd Republican p13a F 12 '22 300w

"This serious and informing volume will interest the critic and the student of literature, but does not possess the charm, the imaginative brilliance, the human interest, which can make the higher criticism as entrancing as a novel.

The reader must like the subject before he will care for the book; but those of that narrower circle will find in its pages not only the evidence of wide reading and the scholar's temper, but sometimes the trace of the philosophic mind."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p451 J1
15 '20 750w

FINCK, HENRY THEOPHILUS. Gardening with brains; fifty years' experiences of a horticultural epicure. 270p $2.50 Harper

716 Gardening 22-4368

That gardening requires brains the author has himself sufficiently demonstrated, for his own garden is in the Maine mountains where the season is late and a frost is liable to come almost any time in summer. His aim has been to give a great deal of information but in a readable fashion, and since he regards gardening as a sport and is a witty writer, he has succeeded. The book is a mine of information on the cultivation of all the best known vegetables and flowers and on some of the less well known, as well as on what use to make of the seed catalog. There is an index.

Booklist 18:220 Ap '22

Bookm 55:426 Je '22 90w

Cleveland p79 S '22

"Here is a book that is as entertaining and as full of adventure as a novel, and yet that is a wise and valuable guide to the amateur gardener who is looking for both joy and profit from his garden. It is a volume crowded with information, crowded with human nature, and furnishes thrilling and satisfactory entertainment for the most casual of readers." Hildergarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p12 Mr 19 '22 1450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:169 Ap '22

Pratt p20 autumn '22

Reviewed by Luther Burbank

+ St Louis 20:90 My '22

"Technical data and illustrations are noticeably absent. In an easy and winning style the author tells of his experiences, and you understand how to make the little plot of land bring choice flowers and juicy vegetables to the table. Where there are plenty of garden books giving all the facts for reference, this is one of the few works prepared for consecutive reading."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 5 '22 250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:180 J1 '22

FINNEY, ROSS LEE. Causes and cures for the social unrest; an appeal to the middle class. 287p $2 Macmillan

330 Social reform. United States—Social conditions 22-13133

The book is addressed primarily to the middle class in whom, the author maintains, lies the surest hope of sound and safe reform. He discusses the social injustices of our industrial order, showing that the middle class is, quite as much as labor, the victim of modern capitalism, and can save itself in the long run only by saving the laboring class. The main argument is that a decent wholesome standard of living must be secured for every American family, and that the standard of living for the rich must be reduced to a proper level by means of income and inheritance taxes. The middle class for its part must make a return to the old standards of simplicity and morality and must bring about a wider popular knowledge and understanding of the social sciences.

Boston Transcript p5 Ag 2 '22 230w

"If more of this sort of thing is to be perpetrated in the name of sociology, give us rather socialism with all its horrors; or rather, let us turn over the universities to Senator Lusk, provided only that he will set the deposed professors to plowing corn or doing other useful work instead of writing books." H: R. Mussey

— Nation 115:283 S 20 '22 200w

"The psychological angle from which he approaches his task is interesting. He identifies himself throughout with the middle class, and in his introduction reproduces exactly in mental processes and phraseology the average man's reaction to social questions. After thus gaining his 'prospect's' confidence, he prepares a brief for the validity of the discontent of the working man. In tone, this argument contrasts strongly with the introduction. The Chautauqua speaker has given place to the college professor, who presents surface skimmings from his class notes, abounding with echoes from Freud, Sumner, Malthus and Ricardo—particularly the latter." L. G. S. Spear

— New Repub 32:25 Ag 30 '22 450w

R of Rs 66:448 O '22 70w

Spec 129:1015 D 30 '22 150w

Survey 49:394 D 15 '22 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p767 N 23 '22 80w

FIRTH, VIOLET M. Machinery of the mind: with a foreword by A. G. Tansley. 98p $1.25 Dodd [3s 6d Allen & U.]

150 Psychology. Psychoanalysis 22-10708

A little book which presents in simple, clear language the rudiments of the modern view of the mind, the principles on which our characters are formed, and the means by which the process of thought is carried on. The book deals especially with abnormal psychology and is written for the patient who needs an elementary knowledge of the mind to enable him to think in a healthy way. The stress thrust is laid on the workings of the subconscious mind and it is shown that the instincts and not the reason are the key to the mind.

Booklist 19:143 F '23

"Her chapters originally prepared as a series of popular lectures, are addressed less to the general student of the subject than to 'the patient who needs an elementary knowledge of the laws of the mind in order to enable him to think hygienically.'" E. N.

Boston Transcript p6 My 24 '22 330w

"We should have been only too glad to commend this primer to the general public were it not for the numerous half truths the little volume contains on the working of the mind. Miss Firth is a very readable writer and has packed the mind with a veritable plant of machinery of all sorts, borrowing practically all from the psychoanalysts, but it is a misrepresentation to say that this machinery, is the subject matter of modern psychology."

— + Lit R p843 J1 29 '22 340w

"In a few lines the technical terms, sensation, percepts, concepts, images are used but not explained, while complex is used in two different senses. Analogy is useful in its place, but is very much over-used here; nor is it scientifically sound to give as evidence in a later chapter what has been merely asserted in an earlier. In short this book is little more than an expanded dictionary of some frequently used psychological terms with the drawback that the order is not alphabetical."

— Nature 110:146 J1 29 '22 200w

"One of the shortest and clearest of the many popular books upon modern psychology. The beginner would find this book, with its clear explanations of technical terms, a useful companion to more advanced treatises."

+ Spec 128:533 Ap 29 '22 40w

Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

FISCHER, HENRY WILLIAM HUBERT. Abroad with Mark Twain and Eugene Field: tales they told to a fellow-correspondent. 246p $2.25 Brown, N: L.

B or 92 Clemens, Samuel Langhorne (Mark Twain, pseud.). Field, Eugene 22-6716

"As a newspaper correspondent stationed abroad in Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg and other European capitals, Henry W. Fischer ran across Mark Twain and Eugene Field from time to time during their foreign visits. His recollection and anecdotes of them are now embodied in this volume, and equipped with a brief editor's note by Merle Johnson, to whose interest and enthusiasm the volume owes its origin. Only a few of the final pages of Mr. Fischer's book have to do with Eugene Field."

FISCHER, H: W: H.—Continued
—Boston Transcript

"This Boswellian effort gives Clemens's opinions and his reactions to various situations, but these are of less importance than his exact phraseology in expressing them; and that is lost. The Eugene Field section of the volume is an interesting brief historical sketch."
— + Bookm 55:315 My '22 40w

Boston Transcript p10 Ap 8 '22 550w

"Mr. Fisher appears to have been assiduous without great success; his contribution to the bulk of Mark Twain's recorded wit is hardly commensurate with the size of his book."
— Dial 73:235 Ag '22 60w

"The pages dealing with Field, comprising not much more than a postscript, are more interesting than those concerned with Clemens, because here the author is at less pains to prove the comic genius of the subject, and more intent upon the genuinely human side of the man." L. B.

Freeman 5:429 Jl 12 '22 160w

"It sounds to me unreal and it rings false, both artistically, and as a picture of the man [Mark Twain]." E. L. Pearson

— Ind 108:353 Ap 8 '22 180w

"Fond as Mark Twain was of Henry W. Fischer there is but slight reason to believe that he would thank him for this bit of editing. It contains too much of the humorist. It is one joke after another. It is all droll waggishness, and there is nothing of which any reader tires more quickly and completely than a 'joke' book. The few pages devoted to Eugene Field are less amusing but more informative."
— + Lit R p550 Ap 1 '22 240w

Reviewed by Burton Rascoe

N Y Tribune p5 Jl 30 '22 1150w

St Louis 20:224 S '22

"Their interest lies in their momentary flashlight illumination of a mood, an idea, a conviction, or an act of Twain's. The total impression is a good deal like that of meeting Mark in a group at the village shoemaker's or in some ramshackle law-office, where converse is errant and unrestrained, and he says what he thinks in about the way it flashes into his mind."
+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 10 '22 260w

FISHER, BOYD. Mental causes of accidents. 315p $2.50 Houghton

331.82 Accidents, Industrial. Psychology. Applied 22-23077

Begun as a study for the instruction of men having charge of the supervision of safety problems in workshops and public places the subject developed itself as a direct and revealing way of approach to the whole problem of psychology in industry. Accidents happen as the result of some interruption of routine, show up human nature off guard and the mental attitude of workers who get hurt or killed, and so provide a psychological basis for the study of safety problems. The author shows the various states of mind—unguarded, puzzled, misguided, stubborn, troubled, tired, etc., which are conducive to accidents, and from this classification outlines a technique for dealing with individual cases. The concluding chapter discusses different types of books on applied psychology and some books which the author recommends.

FISHER, MRS DOROTHEA FRANCES (CAN-FIELD). Rough-hewn. 504p $2 Harcourt

22-19057

"'Rough-Hewn' is a gigantic preface to 'The Brimming Cup,' in which the biographies of Neale and Marise are given with voluminous detail from the day of birth to the wedding. Neale is the young American athlete and ex-football player, tall, active, lean, with clean-cut face and muscles of steel; in character modest, sincere, and gentle. Marise is unspeakably lovely and virginal, wonderfully accomplished in languages, history, art, and literature, and a pianist of professional rank. . . . Neale, in his school and college education, in his hard toil in the woods in New England, is, without knowing, preparing himself to be the husband of Marise; while she, in her life in Europe, is going through a long course of preparation, undertaken with another purpose, which precisely fits her to be an admirable wife and mother. . . . The two for the first time find themselves when they find each other. . . . To the amazement of their Continental friends, the lovers depart from Paris and Rome to live, not only contentedly but abundantly, in a tiny village in Vermont."—Lit R

"In general the novel is better in description than in narration, and though it is written with never-failing facility, it lacks artistic economy. It is never uninteresting, but it might have been more engrossing if it had been three hundred pages long, instead of five hundred." R. M. Gay

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 400w

Booklist 19:85 D '22

"An unusual and fascinating dual story, a story that abounds in rich characterization, humorous incident, sentiment, and drama. Mrs. Fisher has never written with surer wisdom, or a defter touch." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:489 D '22 250w

"Rough-Hewn must have been a happy book to write, for it moves triumphantly to a joyous conclusion. It reveals more than any book Dorothy Canfield has written her ability to get inside her characters and to think relentlessly straight. It adds something to our understanding of the significance of American life." D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '22 1250w

Cleveland p84 N '22

"Few things in recent fiction have been as well wrought as the psychological development of Marise in her childhood in the Basque country and her pursuit of music in Paris. She is not French, but her soul, her environment, and her growth are." S. S. A.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 D 17 '22 720w

"Its faults are evident to the most sympathetic reader. It is too long; there is too much unnecessary detail. Furthermore, the novel is a curious combination of chapters that are original and admirable, with others that are so conventional as to be banal. Fortunately the skill of the author shows itself sufficiently often to justify her high reputation. No other writer has, I think, shown with such a combination of poetry and truth how two souls may come out of infinity, from two remote places in the universe, draw close to the point of contact—and then, either pass off to destinations equally remote as their origins (Neale and Martha), or unite forever (Neale and Marise). Dorothy Canfield manages the separate lines of hero and heroine up to the point of merging, with consummate skill." W. L. Phelps

+ Lit R p123 O 21 '22 1450w

New Repub 32:285 N 8 '22 300w

"Mrs. Fisher has given us a picture of family life, of the atmosphere of a typical American home unexcelled in its truthfulness and poignancy by any recent novel. It is a picture drawn from memory with exquisite felicity. . . . As a picture it presents not only the physical basis of life but the ideal objects; its very inclusiveness has the force of conviction. This, perhaps, is the best achievement of the novel." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 O 15 '22 1400w

"Marise and Neale are separate and carefully drawn portraits. Each as an autobiography is vivid in itself. Brought together, we have what attempts to be the explanation of why we have love and marriage according to the Anglo-Saxon code. This is a fascinating book to read, with its faithful reporting, its expert psychology, its humor and its moments of poetry. Here is a woman who writes with a clear outlook on life. She is not standing on a street corner shouting, 'I am great because I am unhealthy. I am a genius because I am ill-bred.'" J: Farrar

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 22 '22 1000w

"In its pages our author has, it seems, permitted the luxury of a playtime with romance and the life which is youth. The young figures of her idyl are exquisitely presented to the reader's eye. Miss Canfield has produced again, after her own fashion, a work of the sort to make us glad that, notwithstanding the wealth that is in old volumes, there still are new books." E. W. Osborn

+ N Y World p7e O 22 '22 330w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23

Spring'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 420w

Wis Lib Bul 18:274 D '22

FISKE, BRADLEY ALLEN. Invention: the master-key to progress. 356 il $4 Dutton

600 Inventions 21-18784

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

"This is a remarkable book, noteworthy alike for the range of its subject-matter, for the breadth of its views, for the wealth of its illustrative materials, and for the clearness with which the author develops his arguments." R. S. Woodward

+ Am Hist R 27:541 Ap '22 900w

Reviewed by R. E. Park

Am J Soc 27:670 Mr '22 160w

"The book would be useful if only as a compilation. But Admiral Fiske's readers are not going to accept all his statements without reserve or cavil."

+ Lit R p535 Mr 25 '22 260w

"It is doubtful if Admiral Fiske misses any modern invention that has affected civilization. . . If it should be thought that there is not much method in the author's survey, that the treatment is not scientific, the comment may be made that the scope of invention is immense and he has produced a book that holds the attention always by its interest."

+ N Y Times p13 Ja 22 '22 950w

FITZGERALD, FRANCIS SCOTT KEY. Beautiful and damned. 449p $2 Scribner

22-4437

The young people in the reckless, rudderless society this book depicts are a little older, a little harder, and infinitely more tragic than those of whom the author wrote in his "This Side of Paradise." Anthony Patch, grandson and heir-apparent of a multi-millionaire, is an idle and aimless youth, extravagant and sophisticated, when at twenty-five he meets Gloria Gilbert of Kansas City, a girl of "heavenly glamour" whose attitude toward life is expressed in her own words: "If I wanted anything I'd take it. I can't be bothered resisting things I want." With nothing else on which to build their married life than their delight in each other's physical perfection they start in at a rapid pace, which is greatly accelerated when Grandfather Patch decides to leave his millions elsewhere. The book leaves them after six years of marriage, damned by their excesses, sunk deep in debauchery and degradation, with Anthony a mental and physical wreck and Gloria's beauty waning.

"Wherein lies its secret vitality? It dwells, one imagines, in the shrewd, complete, and quite unequalled picture it renders of the life of the day and the manners and customs of a class. The topic of the hour, its favorite slang phrase, the kind of human being in which the moment dwells incarnate, all are to be found here at their best and freshest." H: Beston

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '22 560w

"The Beautiful and Damned" marks an advance over "This Side of Paradise": the style is more nearly mature and the subject more solidly unified and certain scenes in it are probably the most real he has ever done. But, in general, it may be said that he presents just now a spectacle to sadden the critic."

+ Bookm 55:22 Mr '22 1600w

"The trouble with 'The Beautiful and Damned' is not that it is racy, shocking, or ill-mannered but that it is blubberingly sentimental.

No one of late years has appeared on the horizon with a happier verve than Mr. Fitzgerald or with a more promising narrative talent; and no one ever collapsed so easily into the banal and commonplace as he has in this novel. This comes, possibly, from a refusal to subject his spontaneous outbursts to the refining process of self-criticism and to the clarification of a plan." Burton Rascoe

+ Bookm 55:305 My '22 360w

"The two years that have elapsed since his first novel do not appear appreciably to have modified Mr. Fitzgerald's literary gayety, nor have they succeeded in convincing us that there is not in it something of the insincerity or the advertising clamor of a youthful pose." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p10 Mr 11 '22 800w

"A sordid story. Mr. Fitzgerald is a doer of poor things well. There is amazing ignorance beneath his superficial brilliance, and, coming into contact with one shallow personality after another, one asks if Mr. Fitzgerald has ever met true greatness of character. Yet the writer's gift is his, and he speaks with power. Nevertheless, because of affectation, his work is artificial rather than artistic."

+ Cath World 115:699 Ag '22 180w

"The pell-mell of ideas, or rather of the names of ideas, in the book is startling, and more startling is the incipient philosophy of the author; but the book is important not for these. It is important because it presents a definite American milieu and because it has pretensions as a work of art." Vivian Shaw

+ Dial 72:419 Ap '22 1100w

"An achievement for so young a writer. It is one which, however, would seem less striking in England where they have had the highly intelligent commonplace for so long, or in France where they are the greatest masters of the highly intelligent commonplace in the world." M. M. Colum

+ Freeman 5:162 Ap 26 '22 640w

"A real story, but a story greatly damaged by wit. The narrative is infested with brilliant passages, 'striking' descriptions, and scraps of ebullient commentary. The persons are not permitted to emerge from the type; whenever they seem about to emerge, their author shoves them back to anonymity by making them his own obvious mouthpieces." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 108:397 Ap 22 '22 620w

"A book like this is worth writing and worth reading for its vivid picture of a phase of life that always exists, that is no more modern than the pyramids and a great deal less important, but that goes into the huge cosmos to add its modicum of color and motion to the sum of life."

+ Lit D p51 Jl 15 '22 1100w

"We are a little disgusted, a little touched, and profoundly interested. When Mr. Fitzgerald himself grows up, in art as well as in philosophy, he may tell us more, and more wisely. He will write better novels, but he will probably never give us better documents of distraught and abandoned but intensely living youth." H: S. Canby

+ Lit R p463 Mr 4 '22 950w

"Few current writers can represent young love in its incandescence as he can, but his knowledge does not extend with the same accuracy to the seedy side of life which he has felt he must explore. He has trusted, one suspects, his doctrine rather more than his gusto. For this reason he has, without adding much to the body of his style, sacrificed—or lost—some of the poetry which illuminated [his] earlier narrative and which illuminates the higher places of this one with a light never present unless there is genius not far off." Carl Van Doren

+ Nation 114:318 Mr 15 '22 650w

FITZGERALD, F. S. K.—Continued

"In emphasizing his smartness it would not be fair to lose sight of Mr. Fitzgerald's cleverness, and of something far more than that, of a real sincerity and vigor of mind." Robert Littell

+ — New Repub 30:348 My 17 '22 1200w

"So far as its style is concerned, much of the novel is well written, [but] it is to be hoped that Mr. Fitzgerald, who possesses a genuine, undeniable talent, will some day acquire a less one-sided understanding." L. M. Field

+ — N Y Times p16 Mr 5 '22 950w

Mr. Fitzgerald's strictures, or opinions, are at least seldom barbed, and one derives a large degree of amusement from his pert thrusts. The creation of his principal characters, however, is hardly worth the labor. The book, more ambitious and less satisfactorily wrought than 'This Side of Paradise,' is sprightly and entertaining and will give the jaded reader something new in the season's large output of fiction."

+ — Springf'd Republican p13a Ap 16 '22 400w

"A book that is worth reading. Mr. Fitzgerald's style is too clever. But the writing is never worse than clever, and sometimes it is brilliant; particularly when it is irrelevant. Mr. Fitzgerald 'manages' the drunken scenes without intellectual sensationalism. His characters are excellently created, and they live, but almost, at times, as if they had been electrified into life for examination and experiment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p669 O 19 '22 300w

FITZGERALD, FRANCIS SCOTT KEY. Tales of the jazz age. 317p $1.75 Scribner

22-18785

A group of eleven stories which range from broad burlesque in Jemina, the mountain girl, a parody on the John Fox, jr. school of melodrama, to sombre tragedy in May day. The stories between these extremes are: The jelly-bean, the jazz age in a small Georgia town; The camel's back, hilariously funny; Porcelain and pink, a farce which threatens to become indecent and never does; The diamond as big as the Ritz, a successful extravaganza; The case of Benjamin Button, Tarquin of Cheapside, and O russet witch, fantasies; The lees of happiness, a story in which pathos is achieved without mawkishness; Mr Icky, a parody on "quaint" literature. In the table of contents Mr Fitzgerald has supplied us with his own opinion of each story and tells us something of the circumstances under which it was written. The stories are reprinted from Smart Set, the Metropolitan, Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, Chicago Tribune and Vanity Fair.

"Competent enough, but it doesn't mean anything. It shows neither that Mr. Fitzgerald is a flash in the pan nor that he is a constellation. It shows nothing. There is no reason why it should. Mr. Fitzgerald, to compare him with any good football coach, very sensibly doesn't believe in showing all his stuff in preliminary or intermediate games. His old tricks are good enough to score in 'Tales of the Jazz Age.' It is better than the run. Why quarrel with it because it isn't great art—or pretend that it is?" S. V. Benet

+ — Lit R p219 N 18 '22 660w

"His characters never complete into substance; he sometimes succumbs to salesmanship; he has a fair range; he is better in fantasies; there are split-seconds of beauty expressed. But that emphatically is all." G. B. M.

+ — New Repub 32:257 N 1 '22 200w

"The book as it stands is amusing, interesting and well done, but it is filled besides with all sorts of hints, promise and portents that make it exciting beyond its actual content. There are flashes of wings and sounds of trumpets mingled with the tramp of feet and casual laughter, and though it is, as to its performance, a finished thing, each piece polished and fit for showing, yet there is also the effect of a glimpse into a workshop where tools are about and many matters afoot. Assuredly this makes for additional interest." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ — N Y Times p12 O 20 '22 800w

"Of varying merit, from the sentimental vapidity of 'The Lees of Happiness' to 'The Diamond as Big as the Ritz,' which is, with 'Blue Ice' and 'Benediction,' the high-water mark of Fitzgerald's achievement as a prose artist of abundant, exuberant, irresponsible and incorrigible talents." Burton Rascoe

+ — N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 110w

"This collection of 11 short stories will perhaps be valuable in later years as an exhibit of the sort of thing written about young people of the year 1922. One presumes that the world is filled with jazzy young folks of this type, even though one happens not to know any; at all events there is nothing new in adolescent flightiness. Anyway here are several tales worth reading."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 360w

FITZPATRICK, BENEDICT. Ireland and the making of Britain. 363p $4 (20s) Funk

941.5 Ireland—History. Great Britain—Civilization. Ireland—Civilization. Irish in England 22-1545

The book is a vigorous presentation of the conspicuous part which Ireland has played in history and of the relations between that country and England. We are told that "between the era of the Roman and the era of the Norman the Irish race was the master race in Britain," that Ireland was the nursery of learning and the center of intellectual activity while the rest of Europe was the prey of barbarism, and that a constant stream of Irishmen went out as missionaries of civilization to almost every country of Europe. The book is not concerned with the efforts of these Irishmen in continental Europe but confines itself to their activities among the different peoples inhabiting Britain. It seeks to show what manner of men these great missionary Irishmen were, whence they derived their culture, what motives prompted them and what work they actually accomplished. The book represents years of research among contemporary documents. A map of medieval Ireland and Britain is included and there is an index.

"Mr. Fitzpatrick gives us a book that makes for tolerant views, and in this time of reconciliation is well worth reading." E. N.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 Ja 4 '22 600w

"In every respect a book which is interesting as history and satisfying as a piece of workmanship."

+ — Cath World 115:100 Ap '22 490w

"Mr. Fitzpatrick has written the story, where it concerns Ireland and her sister isles, with fascinating, vivid, and untiring style, and with the knowledge of one who has read wide and deep, and from his reading has brought many triumphs home to Erin. With our heart we love this book and its generous championship of ancient Ireland. But with our mind we feel not a little that Mr. Fitzpatrick has painted in too thickly the 'glories of the Gael.'" E. Curtis

+ — Lit R p524 Mr 25 '22 2100w

"That there was a time of general anarchy in Western Europe when Ireland furnished the seat of peaceful culture and religion is true, but the part that she played in world history at that time, important as it was, is grossly exaggerated by this patriotic writer. Such a book is not history, but the glorious revenge of the Gael against the Sassenach."

+ — Nation 114:574 My 10 '22 160w

"Mr. Fitzpatrick is inclined to lay on the colors somewhat too thickly. But whatever errors of perspective and tone he may have fallen into, one cannot help admiring the brilliant and thorough scholarship he has brought to bear upon the elucidation of a chapter in history which has been almost entirely forgotten."

+ — N Y Times p16 F 19 '22 1600w

"The book shows most painstaking research, and will enlighten many as to the wealth and culture of mediæval Ireland."

+ Outlook 130:351 Mr 1 '22 40w

Pratt p30 Ap '22

St Louis 20:97 My '22

"Once accustomed to an atmosphere in which words lose any definite meaning, the reader will have no difficulty in following the author's assumption that because Scot at a certain time was the name for Irish, therefore all Scots in mediæval writings were Irish. Yet in spite of this the work has its uses. It emphasizes sides of our national history which are too often slurred over or left in oblivion. Under reasonable and proper limitations it contains an acknowledged truth."

— + Sat R 133:232 Mr 4 '22 1000w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p46 Ja 19 '22 150w

"After reading Mr. Fitzpatrick's book our conclusion must be that his genuine enthusiasm has an insufficient backing of the requisite knowledge. He has read widely, but without an adequate preparation of scholarship. As a linguist Mr. Fitzpatrick is courageous, but inaccurate. There is scarcely a single Latin sentence correctly printed in the book. But that may be the fault of his printer, in which case he is only an accessory after the fact. A more serious charge is that his notions of Irish are of the vaguest description."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p301 My 11 '22 1250w

FITZROY, SIR ALMERIC WILLIAM. Henry, duke of Grafton, 1663-1690. 100p il $2 Holt [12s 6d Christopher]

B or 92 Grafton, Henry Fitzroy, 1st duke of (Eng ed 22-15836)

Henry Fitzroy, duke of Grafton, was a natural son of Charles II. He distinguished himself both as soldier and sailor and at the age of twenty-six became vice-admiral of England and lieutenant of the Admiralty. After the death of his father he followed James II for a while and then gave his allegiance to William of Orange. He was mortally wounded while in command at the siege of Cork. Contemporary records show that his death, like his life, impressed the popular imagination, and his courage and exploits were celebrated by the ballad-makers of his day. This memoir is written by a descendant. Illustrated with portraits.

"Sir Almeric has given us a clear view of a neglected figure that was truly a hero. He shows us a man of 'straightforward mind' and 'dare-devil charm,' a man who in steadiness, vigor and good faith stands out in contrast to the days that produced him. A son who in character and strength has half redeemed a father's folly." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 10 '22 980w

"Contains many really excellent portraits. Unfortunately the text of the book is less valuable. In spite of the fact that there are a number of minor errors, Sir Almeric has proved his contention that Grafton showed an unusual precocity in achieving so much in the twenty-six years allotted to him." G. D.

— + Eng Hist R 37:300 Ap '22 400w

Lit R p71 S 30 '22 380w

FLAMMARION, CAMILLE. Death and its mystery; at the moment of death: tr. by Latrobe Carroll. 371p $3 Century

134 Death. Psychical research. Apparitions In this second volume of the trilogy, "Death and its mystery," the author deals with manifestations and apparitions of the dying, "doubles," and phenomena of occultism, both some time before and at the moment of death. His observations are cited to prove "that a human being does not consist only of a body that is visible, tangible, ponderable, known to every one in general, and to physicians in particular; it consists, likewise, of a psychic element that is imponderable, gifted with special, intrinsic faculties, capable of functioning apart from the physical organism and of manifesting itself at a distance with the aid of forces as to the nature of which we are still ignorant."

Booklist 18:346 Jl '22

Cleveland p71 S '22

N Y Times p20 My 28 '22 100w

N Y Times p6 Jl 9 '22 1350w

"While Flammarion's collection of cases is as large and quite as interesting as any that may be found in the works of any other writer, there is in them, as in all such compilations, a terrible monotony, a deadening unsatisfactoriness. This kind of unsure and unperfect revelation is not to one's taste; it does little more than harrow one's feelings. The truth seems to be that the study of the occult is a science in its crude and early stages. Its professors should be unmolested, but those who are in haste to popularize what they believe themselves to have learned are not doing so great a service to humanity as they imagine."

— No Am 216:426 S '22 650w

Pratt p6 autumn '22

St Louis 20:203 S '22

"We should have been more convinced by M. Flammarion's instances if a fair proportion of them had been supplied by people hostile, or indifferent, as a general rule, to his conclusions. The signatures appended to many of his documents prove the predisposition of his contributors to see precisely those apparitions they hasten so pathetically to record. There is room for a much more rigorous analytical treatment of these affairs than M. Flammarion seems likely to provide."

— Sat R 134:144 Jl 22 '22 950w

FLECKER, JAMES ELROY. Hassan, the story of Hassan of Bagdad, and how he came to make the golden journey to Samarkand; a play in five acts. 169p $2 Knopf [6s Heinemann]

822

22-19633

"Hassan is a confectioner of the Bagdad of The Arabian Nights. He falls farcically in love with a baggage who flouts him. Struck to the soul by her wanton cruelty, Hassan is found by one of the companions of Haroun al-Raschid and hustled into an adventure with the Caliph, in the course of which he is instrumental, not only in saving the life of the sovereign, but also in amusing and pleasing him. A conspiracy is discovered, the conspirators are captured, Hassan is elevated to the position of friend of the Caliph. When the Caliph next day tries the conspirators in full divan the atmosphere has changed. We see him for what he is—a sleek tiger. Hassan and Ishak, the young Court poet who has throughout befriended him, resolve to renounce the world and to go on pilgrimage. The play ends with the already famous climax of 'The Golden Journey to Samarkand.'"—Spec

Booklist 19:152 F '23

"A delightful piece of fanciful writing, chequered with surprises of incident and character, quickened with artful incongruities, melodious with lyrical passages in verse as in prose."

+ Nation and Ath 32:126 O 21 '22 360w

"The distinction of the play lies in its poetry, its philosophy, its style; the plot, simple as a whole and with plenty of fine situations, is not always convincing in detail." F. L. Lucas

+ — New Statesman 20:supv O 7 '22 850w

"A sheer delight from beginning to end. The philosophy of Flecker is here; the lyrical urge that is so much a part of this poet's work is to be found; most of all, that wise understanding of the Eastern attitude toward life which animates all of Flecker's Eastern poems is to be discerned."

+ N Y Times p13 D 17 '22 720w

FLECKER, JAMES ELROY—(continued)

"What this posthumous book of his may lack as a play it more than makes up in its beauty of thought and expression, and the time-dimmed violence of its imagery." Hunter Staggs

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 26 '22 1150w

Sat R 134:884 D 9 '22 750w

"On the stage, if it is properly produced and acted, Hassan should have all the obvious charm of a Chu Chin Chow as well as the real and dignified attraction of a work of art of masterly simplicity. Both these aspects of its merit might easily be buried in the upholstery of too lavish a production, even though visible luxury is an integral factor in the emotional situation."

A. Williams-Ellis

+ Spec 129:562 O 21 '22 1300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p597 S 21 '22 1850w

Wis Lib Bul 19:23 Ja '23

FLEMING, ARTHUR PERCY MORRIS, and BROCKLEHURST, H. J. Introduction to the principles of industrial administration. 140p il $1.25 Pitman

658.7 Industrial management

The volume addresses itself to students of industrial technology in universities or technical colleges and in industry; to students of economics and sociology; to teachers in evening, continuation and works schools, who desire to know something of the conditions under which their students in industry are employed; to foremen and inspectors; and to men and women who wish to study the general organization of modern society. Diagrams and index.

FLEMING, ARTHUR PERCY MORRIS, and PEARCE, JAMES GEORGE. Research in industry the basis of economic progress. (Pitman's industrial administration ser.) 244p il $4 (10s 6d) Pitman

601 Industrial research (Eng ed 22-3540)

The book considers the nature of research, how it may be applied to the development of industry, and how existing research resources may be utilized. Recent developments in co-operative research are examined and the conditions under which a works research organization may be established. The internal organization, selection of staff, design of buildings, equipment, cost, etc., are outlined and the relations of research laboratories to national, university and private laboratories. The concluding chapter treats of the internationalization of research. The sixteen-page bibliography includes both books and periodical articles and works in French.

Aëronautical J p191 My '22 1½p

Chem Age [London] p621 My 13 '22 ½col

Iron and Coal Trades R p716 My 12 '22 ¼col

J Royal Soc Arts p392 Ap 14 '22 1col

Nature 109:807 Je 24 '22 580w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p126 F 23 '22 40w

FLEMING, R. M. Ancient tales from many lands. 193p il $3.50 Stokes [10s 6d Benn bros.] 398 Folklore

22-15073

These folk tales from almost every country on the surface of the earth are not a haphazard collection but the result of much reading and study. The author's object was to present stories of traditional value that can be utilized by the teacher in the child's study of geography and history. Her ideas on the subject are elaborated in the appendices under the headings: Tradition and geography; Tradition and history; The selection of tales. The book has an introduction by H. J. Fleur. Bibliography.

"The mass of detail, when added to the authoress's rather literal style, her way of adding short statement to short statement, does detract from the literary value of these stories as here told. The book is a rich and interesting one, but it is one that will be read by grown-ups for study with the pleasure of reading and by children for reading, but with the difficulty of study."

+ Lit R p165 O 28 '22 210w

"It is apparent that very considerable pains have been taken in the assembling of Miss Fleming's examples, their range being literally world wide. Translations by English-speaking natives rather than native-speaking Englishmen have been used whenever possible, which seems a good notion; another being to eschew conventional illustrations in favor of a series of reproductions of native art stamped with the spirit of tradition, of which the plates supply many admirable examples. The book calls for criticism only in non-essentials."

+ Nation and Ath 31:350 Je 3 '22 180w

"Charming both in subject-matter and in style."

+ Nature 109:269 Mr 2 '22 150w

Pratt p14 winter '23

St Louis 21:7 Ja '23

"Adult readers, as well as children, will be charmed by the stories, and will unconsciously learn a great deal from the collocation of similar legends from widely severed lands. In the appendices Miss Fleming discusses the educational value of tradition and gives some valuable hints as to a course of study."

+ Spec 128:85 Ja 21 '22 140w

"The tales, where they go back upon genuine folk sources, have that child-like limpidity and directness which no literary art has ever been able to reproduce and which fits them so well for the reading of children. The illustrations are admirably selected to enhance the interest of the book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p21 Ja 12 '22 1100w

FLEMMING, JESSIE HATCH. England under the Lancastrians; with a preface by A. F. Pollard. (Univ. of London intermediate source-books of history) 301p $4 (12s 6d) Longmans

942.04 Great Britain—History—Lancaster and York, 1399-1485 21-18184

The third of a useful series of source-books of which "Illustrations of Chaucer's England" and "England under the Yorkists" have already appeared. (Book Review Digest, 1918, 1920) Miss Flemming has gone to printed and unprinted records, to the English and French chronicles, to year-books, to the Paston and other letters, and to the popular songs of the period from 1399 to 1461. The passages are classified according to subject—political, constitutional, ecclesiastical, economic and social—and arranged chronologically. There is an introductory essay on the sources and an index.

"Assuredly a first-rate production. A straight-away reading of its varied materials gives a clear impression that, although Lancastrian times were rough and turbulent, nevertheless government and society were healthier, more merciful, less corrupt, and less vicious than in the Yorkist period which followed. The notes on sources are excellent and the index is of high grade." G. C. S.

+ Am Hist R 28:151 O '22 100w

Booklist 18:325 Je '22

"The notes on the sources have been carefully compiled and the selection of passages is judicious. The translations from Latin leave something to be desired." C. L. K.

+ Eng Hist R 37:296 Ap '22 340w

"Extremely interesting. Miss Flemming has made a most readable collection."

+ Spec 127:755 D 3 '21 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p718 N 3 '21 40w

FLETCHER, JOHN GOULD. Preludes and symphonies. 60;99p $1.50 Houghton 811 22-19089

The volume is a re-issue of two earlier books of this imagist poet. "Irradiations; sand and spray" and "Goblins and pagodas." (Book Review Digest, 1915, 1916)

"There is audible music in John Gould Fletcher's 'Preludes and Symphonies' that a majority of the free verse formists have failed to sound. He has something else, too, which makes his work exoteric—his descriptions are real."

+ Bookm 56:517 D '22 70w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Ind 109:136 S 16 '22 220w

"Mr. Fletcher's art is not very subtle or impassioned, in spite of many excellencies—descriptive fidelity, reticence, metric variety, justice of epithet; but his peonies 'like spraying rockets' which 'poise in the twilight,' his crying herons, and 'golden desert of great wild grasses' stay in the memory."

+ Lit R p306 D 9 '22 280w

Reviewed by L. Grudin
N Y Tribune p27 Ja 28 '23 450w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Middle of things. 301p $2 Knopf [7s Ward, Lock] 22-19433

"Viner, a young gentleman of means and leisure, who has an aunt devoted to crime-stories at which he rather scoffs himself, is suddenly flung into the 'middle of things' by finding the body of a murdered man close to his own house. The quest of the murderer proceeds ingeniously from one find to another and introduces us to several very pleasant people. It contains many surprises and eventually leads back to the very spot, which astute readers may or may not anticipate by an early flash of intuition. But the best head among them all and the real heroine is Viner's crime-saturated aunt. And that is quite right. The real lover of detective fiction is up to every move in the game."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 19:85 D '22

"Of course it is all a story, but it is a story that again and again faithfully presents humanity and its mysteries." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 8 '22 700w

Cleveland p85 N '22

"A highly readable detective story. The plot runs along the usual lines, but it is worked out with care. The style shows the ease of a practiced hand. It is smooth-flowing, correct, lucid—all that the detective story reader has cause or right to demand."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 25 '22 260w

"Although the plot is technically flawless, it tends towards excessive intricacy. We have also a feeling that it is not quite fair to spring upon us at the last moment as leading villains two minor characters of quite irreproachable reputation."

+ Nation and Ath 131:445 Je 21 '22 180w

"The Middle of Things' is well done and well developed, moving with a good deal of rapidity, and not lacking in dramatic moments or in those touches of characterization which save the people in the tale from being mere puppets. A lively mystifying and very entertaining story is this."

+ N Y Times p10 O 8 '22 330w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson
N Y Tribune p10 O 29 '22 240w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 180w

"Another good story by Mr. Fletcher, whose invention appears to be inexhaustible."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p345 My 25 '22 120w

"Fletcher at his best."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Ravensdene court. 315p $2 Knopf [7s Ward, Lock] 22-15675

"When two brothers are murdered on the same night, at places hundreds of miles apart, it signifies something out of the common. Somebody has had an interest in getting rid of both men." Thus said the police inspector in commenting on the murder of Salter Quick and of his brother Noah, and thus it proved, when the network of crime and intrigue surrounding the dual murder was finally unravelled. In the process, two enthusiastic amateur investigators are drawn into the net and placed in grave peril of their lives.

Booklist 19:20 O '22

Cleveland p85 N '22

"There is enough plot to furnish half a dozen books."

+ Lit D p56 Ag 19 '22 640w

"Mr. Fletcher has roamed somewhat from the field of the more stereotyped detective story into that of the tale of adventure. He has, however, managed to sustain the suspense of his primary theme even while developing it through incidents that in themselves cannot appear other than far-fetched."

+ Lit R p810 Jl 15 '22 230w

"One of the best he has yet done. Has not only a perplexing, cleverly contrived and firmly constructed plot, with plenty of unexpected twists and happenings, but also color, atmosphere and characters who are more than mere puppets contrived to carry on the action of the story."

+ N Y Times p18 Je 25 '22 460w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p4 Je 25 '22 220w

"A very good specimen of this author's work."

+ Sat R 133:x Ap 29 '22 140w

Spec 128:471 Ap 15 '22 30w

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 30 '22 350w

"It is a fine, fresh story. A very pretty tale."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p142 Mr 2 '22 250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 Jl '22

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Rayner-Slade amalgamation. 303p $2 Knopf 22-7438

While in England negotiating a sale of pearls belonging to a Russian princess, James Alledyke is found dead one morning and the jewels disappear. Then follow three other mysterious murders, thereby removing all seemingly tangible evidence. The baffling happenings throughout the tale tax to the uttermost the wits of all those concerned in solving the mystery, especially the conduct of Miss Slade, secretary, who appears to be in league with one Rayner, a hunchback, and the East End chemist, Schmull, who was an expert in concocting diabolical secret poisons. The jewels are at last discovered in a most unexpected way.

Booklist 18:330 Je '22

Lit D p45 Jl 15 '22 780w

"Written with good taste and a real appreciation of the art of suspense. The twist at the end is along rather conventional lines, all the likely villains being whitewashed by official connection, but since the reader wants them to be, it all ends quite satisfactorily."

+ Lit R p675 My 20 '22 70w

"There are two or three incidents in it which seem to have been introduced solely for the purpose of mystifying the reader, and this is not an altogether fair method of procedure. But the story as a whole is so well done, and so very entertaining, that one readily forgives such peccadillos on the part of the author."

+ N Y Times p25 My 14 '22 360w

"The interwoven mystery deepens rather than dissipates until the moment when revelation is

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH—Continued
made. The reader can keep step with the investigators but will be extremely shrewd if he anticipates the solution."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My '21 '22
130w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 J1 '22

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Scarhaven
Keep. 316p $2 Knopf

22-1723

Bassett Oliver, the famous actor, was last seen on the tower of the castle of Scarhaven Keep, in a little north of England seacoast village. His disappearance was shrouded in deepest mystery and its solution leads thru many windings, involving plenty of action and a happily ending love story.

Booklist 18:189 Mr '22

"There seems to be no writer of this type of fiction who is able to keep so well his sense of plot and of characterization. If you like detective stories, here is one that I can recommend with vigor. It is well written, too." J. F.

+ Bookm 55:65 Mr '22 100w

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '22 1050w

"There is plenty of incident, both by sea and land, and the book may be heartily recommended as a thoroughly interesting and absorbing story."

+ Lit D p70 Ap 15 '22 500w

N Y Times p23 Ja 15 '22 480w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:149 Ap '22

Sat R 130:485 D 11 '20 60w

"Betrays no feverish preparation or careless workmanship. There is movement enough, and mystery, and suspicion galore, as belongs fairly to a good detective story."

+ Spring'd Republican p13a Ja 22 '22
250w

FLETCHER, WILLIAM L. How to get the job you want. 449p $3 Houghton

374.1 Applications for positions 22-6010

The argumentation in the book turns on two considerations: "The most important thing in the world to you is You and the most important thing for your employer is Himself"; and "The best way to take what is justly due you is to qualify yourself so well for the work you are doing that your employer will be glad to give it to you." The advice given is to analyse yourself, study the market, know the fundamentals of salesmanship, and how to approach a prospect, answer or run a "Want" advertisement, direct a mail campaign, answer objections and conduct an interview. Neither the man over forty-five nor the man in the small town is forgotten. There is an extended bibliography.

Booklist 19:111 Ja '23

Cleveland p86 N '22

St Louis 20:86 My '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:130 My '22

FLEURON, SVEND. Kittens: a family chronicle; tr. from the Danish by David Pritchard; with foreword by Carl Van Vechten. 248p $2 Knopf

22-4521

The story of Grey Puss and her six kittens is a true family chronicle. She was a farm-yard cat and it took all her courage and resourcefulness to feed her kittens and keep them from harm. Each of her brood is pictured as a distinct personality, differing from all the others as much in character as in appearance. Having brought her family thru many dangers, having long fought and foraged for them, taught them all her cat-wisdom, made them self-reliant, seen each one of them fitted into a place in society, she went back to the old home which she had left. Feeling in her life a certain incompleteness she was glad to encounter once more her old lover and the father of her children, the piebald fighting tomcat.

Booklist 18:237 Ap '22

"A remarkable piece of writing equal to the best things written on animal life by the world's greatest naturalists. The style is not inferior to that of Hawthorne in the chapter in which he so vividly describes the action of a pair of bantams. It almost seems as if Fleuron had a sixth sense by which he determines the inner life of the feline species."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '22 130w

Cleveland p61 Ag '22

"It is a book to place beside 'The Tiger in the House,' for it is complementary to that amazing and delightful storehouse of cat lore."

+ Lit R p515 Mr 18 '22 420w

"Svend Fleuron is not a faker. He does not even want his animals to be like human beings. . . The author has evidently studied cats with interest, and has been attracted by their inherent wildness, their closeness to nature after all the centuries of association with man. It is this side of the cat that he exploits."

+ N Y Times p17 My 21 '22 1000w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:149 Ap '22

"The story of this family's struggle for existence is realistically and sympathetically told, while an added charm is found in the author's close and accurate observation."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 Ap 3 '22 150w

"Shows remarkable observation of cat nature and is told with great literary skill. It should be emphasized that these stories are not for children."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:132 My '22

FOLWELL, WILLIAM WATTS. History of Minnesota. 4v v 1 533p Minn. hist. soc., St Paul, Minn.

977.6 Minnesota—History

21-20894

The first of a four-volume work by the president emeritus of the University of Minnesota. The present volume deals with the period of beginnings—the span of almost two centuries from the coming of the first white men to Minnesota to its organization as a state in 1857.

"This volume is an excellent illustration of the newer type of real state and local history which is fortunately taking the place of the so-called histories of states and localities. It is the work of a man who is by training, inclination, and devotion a scholar in political science and history, who combines fine discrimination in the use of historical materials, accuracy, and vividness in their interpretation, and rare clarity and vivacity of literary style." K. C. Babcock

+ Am Hist R 27:807 J1 '22 850w

"No better equipped person could have been found for this task than Dr. Folwell, whose long service as president of the state university, professor of political science and public servant has given him both the training and experience necessary for the writing of a comprehensive and critical history of Minnesota. There is scarcely a dull or uninteresting page in the entire volume and the work should appeal not only to residents of Minnesota but to all who are interested in the early history of the west."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:337 My '22 230w

"Seldom has local history been presented in a more attractive and scholarly way than in Dr. Folwell's pages. Though apparently not a professional historian, he has all the necessary equipment of an historical writer. His style is clear and picturesque; he marshals his materials with masterly precision; and into his copious footnotes there is thrown a wealth of bibliographical lore. These footnotes, indeed, are alone well worth the perusal of Canadian historical scholars."

+ Canadian Hist R 3:72 Mr '22 380w

FORBES, LADY ANGELA SELINA BIANCA (ST CLAIR-ERSKINE). Memories and base details. 321p il $6 Doran [24s Hutchinson]

B or 92 European war—Hospitals, charities, etc. (Eng ed 22-4340)

The daughter of the Earl of Rosslyn seems to have had endless opportunities of meeting titled men and women. She lets the world in to some secrets of her set of society and describes in much detail the constant round of its social pleasures and hunting experiences. Her social reminiscences are devoted mostly to trivialities but they come to an abrupt end with the outbreak of the war. The last half of the book relates to her experiences in the war, her work in first aid classes at home, and later as hospital nurse in France.

"Never mind if Lady Angela Forbes doesn't like Americans. She has written a vastly entertaining book, from beginning to end, full of life and color. And Americans will read it, doubtless, and she will make money by it—for that, she tells us, has been her chief object in writing it." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 13 '22 750w
"In the main, her memories are frivolous and unimportant, for, although she has come into contact with a host of really or allegedly important figures in English public life, she has not a memorable thing to report about them."

— Lit R p568 Ap 8 '22 270w

N Y Times p11 D 17 '22 1100w

"Only on the rarest occasions does pain or suffering creep into this pretty picture, to mar it. But, when its value comes to be reckoned, it is all rather dull and unimportant. Lady Angela closes with the question 'Was it worth while?' The war, or her book?"

— Sat R 132:644 D 3 '21 500w

"As usual Lady Angela is too long and there are frivolous touches which jar, but there is the record of work manfully done, and a good deal of skill in noting impressions faithfully."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p773 N 24 '21 480w

FORBES, KINGSTON. Principles of automobile body design; covering the fundamentals of open and closed passenger body design, with chapters on the design of commercial bodies. 336p il $5 Ware bros.

629.2 Automobiles—Design and construction 22-10857

"Based on a series of articles published in 'Motor vehicle monthly.' Covers body construction, trimming and upholstering, top building, hardware and mountings."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:565 D '22

FORD, HENRY. My life and work; in collaboration with Samuel Crowther. 289p $3.50 Doubleday

B or 92 Business management 22-26971

The author with the collaboration of Mr. Samuel Crowther, describes the beginning of his career as a mechanic, his obsession with the idea of a horseless carriage, the beginnings and subsequent development of his business and the principles underlying his methods of running it. He scouts the thought that industry and machinery are bound to drive away the pleasant things of life; he stresses the idea of service and shows that waste and greed are the two prime enemies of true service. He sums up his business principles thus: "Money is useful only as it serves to forward by practical example the principle that business is justified only as it serves, that it must always give more to the community than it takes away, and that unless everybody benefits by the existence of a business then that business should not exist." Index.

Booklist 19:71 D '22

Bookm 56:643 Ja '23 150w

"In some respects it is the most unique autobiography which has appeared in several years. Mr. Ford's collaborator has made himself a superb mouthpiece. Thanks to his part of the work the reader has the sensation of listening to Mr. Ford speak on the group of topics. His work is excellently done." J. G. de R. H.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 Ja 21 '23 1950w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:274 N 11 '22 100w

"Mr. Ford's book is a refreshing variation from the conventional biography or autobiography. It is a practical idealist's philosophy. The one may not accept all his ideas, any just estimate must give his book a place among the essentially sound and stimulating works of the season."

+ Int Bk R p15 Ja '23 1400w

"Most of us would greatly prefer to absorb our Henry Ford straight. The undiluted Ford content of this mixture is large, but it hasn't the kick the thing would—or might—have had if 'Uncle Henry' had been willing to let it go unedited. Nevertheless, it is a mighty interesting book—in spots; especially where the narrative is most intimate. And it is, throughout, a definitely human narrative."

+ — Lit R p130, O 21 '22 280w

"I regard [this book] as one of the most significant books of this generation. And I conceive it to be my public duty to do everything in my power to bring it to the attention of the widest possible public. I believe that the business man who reads it understandingly, with an open mind, and with a resolute adjournment of all prejudice, will find in it the key to a great public service and a great private fortune. All this, provided he forgets that it is a biography and regards it as a guide-book of sound business principles." E. A. Filene

+ Nation 116:17 Ja 3 '23 2000w

"Mr. Ford has been unusually well served by his collaborator, for Mr. Crowther has eliminated from the text of this book every trace of himself. He has successfully endeavored to be simply the phonograph through which Mr. Ford talks to his audience. The effect of the volume is less that of a written book than it is that of a man sitting near you at his ease and talking earnestly and with a curious sort of impersonal objective attitude about his life."

+ N Y Time p6 O 15 '22 2400w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p22 D 31 '22 1700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:596 D '22

St Louis 20:275 N '22

Spec 129:977 D 23 '22 330w

Reviewed by G. M. Williams

Survey 49:527 Ja 15 '23 680w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p775 N 30 '22 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 19:21 Ja '23

FORD, SEWELL. Trilby May crashes in. 286p il $1.90 Harper

22-18403

"Trilby May is just another flapper. She crashes into a theatrical manager's office and by the spell of her sea-green eyes and her invincible presence she forces him to accept a play of the cub reporter who is her discreet admirer. After her appearance in a Greenwich Village production of 'The Prince and the Flapper' she becomes the center and whirlwind of numerous adventures, with a hard-working mancurist who has married and supports a wounded aviator, with Uncle Nels's strictly nefarious financial operations rather too much in the outworn tradition of Wallingford, with a cautious oaf from her home town, with life on the East Side, and with a climax that leaves the doors wide open for later adventures which we may confidently expect in the fruitful course of time."—N Y Tribune

"The stuffs of the story are very old; Mr. Ford has already exhausted them with 'Torchy' and his other remarkable infants; but, on the other hand, he does write with a certain breeziness of spirit, and admirers of Mr. Ring Lardner and so on should much admire him."

— + Boston Transcript p4 O 7 '22 270w

FORD, SEWELL—Continued

"While the stories are very bright, pleasant little yarns of the talky variety, and sufficiently well done, according to their kind, the present writer finds that a little of them goes a very long way."

+ — Lit R p325 D 16 '22 280w

N Y Times sec7:6 O 8 '22 490w

"Perhaps the vernacular strains itself in the exercise of too much verbal trapeze work. Suffice it to say that to any question addressed her in the English language Trilby May replies concisely in the very latest model of our native rhythms." A. D. Douglas

N Y Tribune p6 O 1 '22 850w

"There is but little plot to these tales or chapters, but one is regaled with the most adaptable slang, and the wit, diplomacy and perseverance of Trilby May are entertaining."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 15 '22 360w

FORDYCE, CLAUDE POWELL. Trail craft; an aid in getting the greatest good out of vacation trips. 202p il $2.50 Stewart Kidd

796 Camping 22-14040

In this book for campers and followers of the trail, the associate editor of Outdoor Life gives practical information on hiking outfits, motor camping, mountaineering, desert travel, tents, recreation cabins, camp cookery, first aid treatment, precautions against insect pests, game hunting with a camera, etc. There are numerous illustrations and diagrams.

Booklist 19:113 Ja '23

Bookm 56:231 O '22 30w

"Dr. Fordyce not only gives descriptions, but in many cases there are illustrations showing just how the thing is to be done. Trail Craft is a very useful book for the traveller who wants to strike out from the more usually travelled roads."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 26 '22 160w

"Dr. Fordyce's book evidently assumes the desire of a growing number to 'get out' and he offers a book compactly and entertainingly filled with advice as to how to stay out with the maximum of comfort."

+ Lit R p843 J1 29 '22 500w

"A book of helpful and practical suggestions."

+ R of Rs 67:112 Ja '23 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:214 O '22

FORMAN, HENRY JAMES. Man who lived in a shoe. 334p $1.90 Little [7s 6d Hodder & S.] 22-18089

A whimsical tale in which the rather colorless life of Randolph Byrd, the bookworm bachelor, is completely upset by the coming of his dead sister's three children and their "mother's helper" from an orphan asylum, the fourteen year old Alicia. Uncle Ranny's engagement to the independent selfish Gertrude is indefinitely postponed. He is forced from the companionship of books to a world of business and interests other than his own, and a new existence crammed with the things that count in life is opened up for him. He even moves to the country for the benefit of his three charges who thrive under Alicia's gentle care. In the closing chapters we leave Alicia and Uncle Ranny starting to bring up their own son. Ranny is the very "original of the old woman who lived in a shoe," Gertrude rather bitterly remarks.

Booklist 19:85 D '22

Boston Transcript p6 O 11 '22 1100w
Cleveland p80 S '22

"It is an attractive, clean little story, with clear cut characters and written delightfully. Full of gentle humor and equally gentle pathos, it is keenly interesting throughout. No one is ever likely to begrudge the time spent with it."

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 25 '22 240w

"His treatment, light, evenly distributed, almost wholly narrative, at times over-obvious, at times sentimental, places the book in the category of a humorously pleasant story with a good moral. Nevertheless, the simplicity of the chronicle and the touching reality of the issues involved create for the book a sympathetic interest and warmth."

+ — Lit R p14 S 9 '22 430w

"A pleasant, sentimental little story, related in a whimsical manner which has more than a touch of charm, the style being decidedly the best thing about the book."

+ — N Y Times p20 S 24 '22 430w

N Y Tribune p7 O 8 '22 480w

"His tale tends to be rather cloying and sickly; but he errs, if it is error, only by excess, and not by any falsity of sentiment."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p618 S 28 '22 220w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

FORMAN, SAMUEL EAGLE. Our republic; a brief history of the American people. 852p il $5 Century

973 United States—History 22-20541

The book is a compendium of facts from the discovery of America to the Harding administration. These facts are not confined to our political and geographical development but take in the every-day life of the people, their industrial growth, and inventions. Emphasis is placed on the importance of the economic factor. Notes, a chronology, and suggested readings are appended to each chapter, and maps, a reading list, and an index are provided.

Am Pol Sci R 17:146 F '23 60w

Boston Transcript p3 N 18 '22 650w

N Y Times p32 D 21 '22 1400w

"Dr. Forman's use of popular language may now and then betray him into inexactness, but he sets out to tell a vivid story, and in the main does it worthily."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 O 24 '22 450w

FORSTER, EDWARD MORGAN. Longest journey. 327p $2.50 Knopf

22-13322

The story propounds both philosophical and practical problems which simmer down to the question: What is real and what is false in our civilization? Its characters are all more or less symbolic of the ideas the author wishes to convey. Sewart Ansell embodies the philosophic quest of the reality behind appearances. In Herbert Pembroke and his sister Agnes, the martinet and the opportunist, appearances hold sway to such an extent that they quite lose sight of the finer realities of life. Richard Elliot, (Rickie), the central figure, is hampered in his struggle to realize true values, as he sees them, by a frail, partially deformed body. To his half-brother, Stephen Wonham, whose primitive impulses are intact and whose mind is unsophisticated, civilization is a negligible quantity, with the result that he is something between a savage and a Greek god. His savagery, at last, is tempered by a glimpse of the vision that had haunted and lured Rickie.

"Altogether it is a story of dreary pessimism. Rebecca West calls Mr. Forster's novels 'wildly and tragically beautiful,' but the harsh and obscure style and the depression of its philosophy will hardly make this one widely read in America."

— Boston Transcript p5 Ap 19 '22 350w

N Y Times p15 My 14 '22 80w

"There is no questioning or resisting the charm of Mr. Forster. It is itself a fine companionship. This novel steadily attains beauty. The only drawback is that in its setting forth of spiritual realities it sometimes becomes fancifully attenuated."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 500w

FORSYTH, DAVID. Technique of psychoanalysis. 133p $2 Moffat [5s K. Paul]

130 Psychoanalysis SG22-146

"A book intended for the medical profession which sets forth in plain terms the result of the author's ten years' researches and practice, based on the work of Freud and others. It presupposes that the prospective reader already has some knowledge of psychoanalysis. Its three main topics are: The analyst himself; prerequisites of the treatment, and the analysis proper, which is the largest aspect of the subject."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 26 '22 360w
Cleveland p87 N '22

"This is an excellent study of the technique of psychoanalysis from the standpoint of the practitioner. The advice given is practical throughout, and the detailed study of the mental attitude that should be taken by the analyst is clear, exhaustive, and at times novel."

+ Lit R p908 Ag 26 '22 220w

Nature 110:246 Ag 19 '22 100w

"Every physician can read this book with profit, for the general practitioner who is armed with some knowledge of psychoanalytical methods has the advantage over him who is not so equipped. The student of this specialty can receive infinite benefit from the book, for it can teach him what to avoid as well as knowledge for which years of experience would barely suffice." Van Buren Thorne, M.D.

N Y Times p11 Ag 6 '22 400w

FORT, PAUL. Selected poems and ballads; tr. from the French by John Strong Newberry; with an introd. by Ludwig Lewisohn, and an appreciation by Carl Sandburg. 179p $3.50 Duffield

841

21-19762

"Who is Paul Fort? Briefly, he is the jolliest and vividest poet of twentieth-century France. Whether he is the greatest only Frenchmen may decide. More Frenchmen now than ten years ago deny that he is; probably he is not. But his quality is definite and unique. Within a few weeks now of being fifty, he can claim to have sung more sides of French life, or of all life, than any predecessor since Hugo. In the twenty volumes of 'Ballades Françaises' which he poured out during the twenty years between 1897 and 1917, and which for all anyone knows he may yet increase to thirty or forty, he has spoken very often for himself, of course—his joy at living and at feeling himself a poet—but he has spoken also for sailor, peasant and king, for animal, tree, and town, for past and present and future. Mr. Newberry has translated, with considerable abridgment, the 'Anthologie des Ballades Françaises,' which the Mercure de France published in 1918 and which for the time being represents the best of Paul Fort."—Nation

Booklist 181:181 Mr '22

"His art is not a principality of ideas. He is the singer pure and simple; his is pure sound and whimsical sense, often nonsense (in his satirical vein) that is none the less utterly charming. Through every mood there runs an abounding energy, an insurgent vitality, and in his historic tales he has completely mastered atmospheres that are novel in words remarkable for their exact relation to the mood. We prophesy that on these his fame will rest."

+ Bookm 55:312 My '22 250w

"The songs are always charming; the subjects are without end. Mr. Newberry's lines now and then get caught in dark and twisted alleys which the glib original never thought of. But as a whole the translation is swift and honest."

+ Dial 72:217 F '22 150w

"He is the poet of psychic uplift. We cannot read him without a feeling of exhilaration. His verses stream like banners on the wind. His images delight and astonish us. He is the most companionable of bards. For, as Professor Lewisohn says, he is the modern equivalent of the troubadour and the balladist." Padraic Colum

+ Lit R p522 Mr 25 '22 1200w

"It is an unspeakable pity that the volume found no more competent translator. Mr. Newberry deserves all credit for his enterprise and endeavor; but the fact is plain that he will do no good to the reputation of his poet; indeed he may do it harm. Paul Fort was readable; Mr. Newberry, nine pages out of ten, is not. . . Mr. Newberry is nine-tenths language and, what is less comprehensible, he is three-fourths eighteenth-century language of a remote and dreary sort that only misguided scholarship could have gone and got, for it is nowhere used today." Mark Van Doren

Nation 114:127 F 1 '22 1100w

"Paul Fort is one of the powerful figures in contemporary French poetry. Together with de Regnier, with Samain, with Richepin, with Jammes, he stands for a unique mode, a modern trend. He is thoroughly individual even to his methods of technique. And because of that very technique he is extremely difficult of adequate translation into English. There are failures among Mr. Newberry's translations as there are bound to be in a book so ambitious and large, but he has come very near the real Fort, and while such a delicate poet is impossible to render completely in another tongue it can safely be stated that Mr. Newberry's translations are quite often as near to the original in spirit, in verbal felicity and in technique as it is humanly possible to get."

+ — N Y Times p22 F 12 '22 1550w

Springfd Republican p6 Ja 28 '22 120w

"In the work of so voluminous a writer as this we find some poems that lack intrinsic merit, some that are unpleasant or obscure, one or two that do not quite ring true. But these are surprisingly few! Either Mr. Newberry has been most happy in his selections or M Fort is one of those rare geniuses whose literary output is mostly gold, with only a little human powdering of dross."

+ Springfd Republican p13a Ap 2 '22 1100w

47 WORKSHOP. Plays of the 47 workshop; third series. (Harvard plays) 92p $1.25 Brentano's

812

22-12771

"'The crow'snest,' by W. F. Manley is a dream of the greenhorn kid on board an old weather-beaten sailing vessel; 'The hard heart,' by M. A. Kister, Jr., is a Labor Day parade tragedy; 'Mis' Mercy,' by L. W. Bray, is a graphic portrayal of the endurance and bravery of the wives of Cape Cod seafaring men of the early 70's; 'The other one,' by Arthur Ketchum is an interlude enacted under a railroad bridge, the characters being a hardened criminal, a youth on his way back home after a first prison term, and the 'Other One,' the Christ character."—Cleveland

"All these four plays can be produced on a small stage, because they have been given, and successfully given, on the inadequate 47 stage, twenty feet by twelve." I. W. L.

Boston Transcript p5 N 25 '22 780w
Cleveland p68 S '22

"The plays on the whole are strikingly unoriginal. . . As far as technique goes there aren't any evidences of perfection about any of the plays. The plots are all old and threadbare. The manner of treatment is obvious. All that can be said of the plays is that they are fairly easy reading." Milton Raison

— N Y Tribune p6 S 17 '22 640w

Pratt p27 winter '23
St Louis 20:301 D '22

FOSBROKE, GERALD ELTON. Character revelations of mind and body. 198p il $2.50 Putnam

138 Physiognomy. Character 22-12413

The author holds that "a statement of methods for the study of the indications of character which are built into the face as a result of mental and bodily reactions," (subtitle) must be based on exact science; that there are certain definite laws of expression which enable the trained observer to judge a person's habitual reactions both psychological and physiologi-

FOSBROKE, GERALD ELTON—Continued
cal; that "character cannot be built without building the face, nor the face strengthened and refined without like effect on constructing the character." A great part of the book is devoted to analyses made by the author in regular professional practice and dictated to a stenographer while the subject was present. They are accompanied by photographs of the subjects.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 12 '22 390w

"It has enough superficial plausibility to be attractive, and there is, of course, a sense in which character shows itself in the face, especially in the case of fully mature persons. The whole thing is a mixture of shrewd observation, plain common sense, and a good many patent fallacies and scientifically apparent non-sequiturs."

— + Lit R p796 J1 8 '22 380w

St Louis 20:234 O '22

FOSDICK, HARRY EMERSON. Christianity and progress. 247p $1.50 Revell; Assn. press

230 Christianity. Progress 22-29672

In his Cole lectures delivered before Vanderbilt university in 1922 Dr Fosdick studies the idea of progress which is transforming man's thinking in every realm and the relation of this idea to Christianity. He shows that the idea of progress must naturally lead to a conception of Christianity which is itself progressive, a changing movement adapting itself to a changing world. Finally it must lead to a progressive idea of God himself, a conception large enough and worthy enough to meet the changing needs of the world.

Booklist 19:68 D '22

"Stand reading far better than the average unrevised oral address; these addresses are excellent in style, thoughtful in content, bearing the marks of attentive reading of the exponents of all schools of theology as well as of serious attention to the views of those who deny the value of faith altogether." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 4 '22 650w

"The lectures give a stirring and challenging interpretation of Christianity as a dynamic religion, capable of using its magnificent inheritance for the making of a better world."

+ J Religion 3:109 Ja '23 30w

"Dr. Fosdick has made a valiant effort to keep his contemporaries consistent in their Christian loyalties by showing them what the Gospel is in terms of current thought. If to those reared in traditional forms he seems at first blush a radical second thoughts will rate him an arch-conservative, holding fast the historic conviction of God in Christ, and doing as much as, and probably more than, any other preacher in the American pulpit to hold intelligent people fast to this faith and to the life which it opens up." H: S. Coffin

Lit R p148 O 28 '22 650w

"Dr. Fosdick has a wide range of reference, and his special merit is that he writes with individual freshness and without a trace of the jargon that is so distressingly current in the American psychological schools."

+ New Statesman 20:494 Ja 27 '23 250w

"A singularly able analysis of the growth of the idea of progress."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p751 N 16 '22 100w

FOSTER, HARRY L. Adventures of a tropical tramp. 359p il $2.50 Dodd

918 South America—Description and travel 22-6005

Under the influence of wanderlust the peniless author made a tour of South America, working his way at whatever offered, getting acquainted with city and country, with native, Latin-American, and foreigner and weaving his adventures into a consecutive, entertaining story. He found that South America is indeed the land of opportunities, but its opportunities are either for the very big corporation or the very big man. For the average man success is more difficult than at home. It is also the land of romance and of adventure, with its quaint cities and lonely trails and its nights beneath tropical stars.

"There are elements in it which lift it out of being merely one more picaresque journal, but still it drags at times, probably because of the overtruthfulness of the author or the incompleteness of his illusions."

— + Bookm 55:429 Je '22 140w

"It is all a very good story and very well told." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '22 750w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:456 My 13 '22 200w

"The story of his adventures shows that he possessed three important qualifications of the traveller: curiosity, enterprise and humour."

New Statesman 20:413 Ja 6 '23 300w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

N Y Times p16 J1 9 '22 150w

"A lively and agreeable account. He sees the picturesque side of things with an unflinching eye, writes in a bright, conversational style, and has made a book that will 'take.'"

+ Outlook 130:559 Ap 5 '22 60w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:299 Je '22

R of Rs 65:672 Je '22 130w

St Louis 20:223 S '22

Spec 129:sup674 N 11 '22 380w

"The narrative is vigorous, and reminds one a good deal of the Harry Franck books, except that it is somewhat more personal and less reportorial in its viewpoint, presenting more individual episodes and incidents and less direct information and economic, social and political observation."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 J1 11 '22 420w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p608 S 28 '22 700w

Wis Lib Bul 18:184 J1 '22

FOSTER, WILLIAM ARTHUR, and CARTER, DEANE G. Farm buildings. (Wiley agricultural engineering ser.) 377p il $3 Wiley

690 Farm buildings. Architecture, Domestic 22-3625

"Treats of the location, planning, construction, and repair of farm buildings. Discusses the relative merits of materials for various purposes and gives information on cost estimating."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:345 J1 '22

FOULKE, WILLIAM DUDLEY (ROBERT BARCLAY DILLINGHAM, pseud.). Hoosier autobiography. 252p $2.50 Oxford

B or 92

22-10555

"Born in New York of Quaker parentage, [Mr Foulke] removed in young manhood to Indiana and calls himself a Hoosier. He writes sympathetically of the Quaker customs, of early law practice in New York, and of life in Indiana in the seventies and early eighties. However, the chief permanent value of these reminiscences will be found in his discussion of causes and his estimates and recollections of leaders."—Boston Transcript

"This present volume is one of reminiscences rather than an autobiography. It is none the less interesting for that, although perhaps not so valuable as some of the other books he has written." C. R. Woodruff

+ Am Pol Sci R 17:131 F '23 400w

"It is significant as an autobiography of a sincere and progressive American citizen, written with genuine modesty. There are delightful incidents throughout and word sketches of prominent Americans."

+ Bookm 55:534 J1 '22 40w

"Mr. Foulke has had great opportunities for observation of men and affairs, he has distinct literary talent, he has been a force in national and to some extent world affairs. Such a man should write a delightful and important book of memoirs. It is high praise to say he has not disappointed our expectations." S. L. C.
+ Boston Transcript p7 My 31 '22 1000w

"There is an intimacy in the telling of the story that is far removed from boastfulness and a buoyancy of optimism that is communicated to the reader in a manner both sensible and satisfying."

+ Cath World 116:426 D '22 270w

"The only claim which this volume has on more than local interest is a fairly full length picture of Theodore Roosevelt." A. W. Vernon
+ — New Repub 32:105 S 20 '22 330w

R of Rs 66:110 J1 '22 110w

FOUNDRY, THE. Foundrymen's handbook, based on data sheets from the Foundry, rev. and supplemented to represent and interpret modern practice. 309p il $5 Penton pub.

621.74 Founding 22-10107

"Not a manual of foundry practice, but a collection of tables and data for reference. Some of the material can be found in engineering handbooks, but much is new."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Abrasive Industry p175 Je '22 1½col

Foundry p471 Je 1 '22 1½col

Iron and Coal Trades R p826 Je 2 '22 ¼col

Iron Trade R p1657 Je 8 '22 1½col

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:494 N '22

FOX, DAVID. Ethel opens the door. 337p $1.90 McBride

22-1719

The sub-title, "An exploit of the Shadowers, inc.," is the more embracing of the two. The Shadowers are an organization of ex-convicts and criminals of a high type of mentality, including every type of expert in criminal practice. They had formed themselves into a discreet detective agency that offered its services for strictly confidential investigations, never gave any information to the press, permitted no publicity, and never carried their results to the authorities. The only female member was Ethel Jepson, the fluffy, golden-haired guilelessly innocent, one-time shoplifter, who guarded the doors to the inner offices. The story leads the reader thru the mazes of a progressively complex case, in which clue leads to clue and trail crosses trail, and the client himself becomes the chief object of the Shadower's investigations and suspicions. Before the Shadowers can earn their fee the murderer, whom they are to forestall, gets in his work, and it is Ethel, the least among them, who solves the most baffling of the mysteries.

"The tale starts in rather clumsy fashion. Its dialogue rings false and its characters 'fumbled' through three chapters. Then they seem to take the story into their own hands. Incidents, moreover, follow upon each other in such rapid succession that the reader does not notice the employment of familiar and somewhat hackneyed detective devices."

— + Lit R p174 Mr 4 '22 100w

"Upon the whole, Mr. Fox is fair to his readers, and introduces no entirely unsuspected deus ex machina to end his story. After it is all over, perhaps the reader may have a suspicion that if even one of the characters had acted in a fashion not unrelated to normal human intelligence, the grisly tragedy might have been averted; but while he is reading he does not care. This book will delight lovers of detective stories; and those who are not deserve to miss it."

+ N Y Times p14 F 26 '22 350w

Springf'd Republican p15a My 7 '22 250w

FOX, PAUL. Poles in America; with an introd. by Charles Hatch Sears. (Racial studies—New Americans ser.) 143p il $1 Doran

325.7 Poles in the United States 22-14729

The author, who was born in Silesia of Polish parents, first fills in the European background for his study of Poles in America. He briefly sketches the history of Poland in five periods. He then turns to the main interest of his study—Polish immigration to the United States, its distribution, and the economic, social and religious conditions of Poles in America.

Reviewed by R. E. Park

Am J Soc 23:485 Ja '23 90w

Booklist 19:108 Ja '23

"For the purposes of the lay student this little handbook represents a brief but zealous survey, with only a shade of condescension toward other Americanizing agencies outside the church."

+ Bookm 56:644 Ja '23 50w

Daily News Rec p12 S 7 '22 600w

J Religion 2:660 N '22 30w

"It is statistical rather than descriptive. The statistics are excellent and should be most useful, but they need the balance that descriptive matter would give them." E. H. Bierstadt

— + New Repub 33:231 Ja 24 '23 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:475 N '22

Pratt p9 autumn '22

St Louis 20:206 S '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES-ANATOLE THIBAUT). Clio; a translation by Winifred Stephens; ed. by James Lewis May and Bernard Miall. 267p $2.50 Dodd

Fouquet, Nicolas 22-18712

The last published volume in the new and complete edition in English of the works of Anatole France consists of a collection of five historical sketches entitled "Clio," followed by the "Château de Vaux-le-Vicomte," an account of the castle and of the man who built it, Nicolas Fouquet, comptroller of finance under Louis XVI of France.

Booklist 19:114 Ja '23

"Only rare, sly glimpses of the satirical manner of the later France are evidenced here. But the stylistic brilliance and finish is, as always, unique and unmistakable."

+ Bookm 56:641 Ja '23 200w

"Anatole France, though this is not one of his greater books, here lounges with his Olympian ease through time and space, lucid as the sun, ironical as history itself."

+ Nation 115:418 O 18 '22 100w

"Each of the sketches is vivid and interesting, while the early ones have an additional and rare merit—that of making the reader feel that the people whom the author presents are not merely men and women of today clothed in ancient garb and more or less awkwardly using archaic forms of speech, but men and women belonging to a time that is past, whose angle of vision is different from our own." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p14 O 1 '22 950w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES ANATOLE THIBAUT). Count Morin, deputy; tr. by J. Lewis May. 70p il $2 Dodd

(Eng ed 22-16968)

This slight sketch is a satire on politicians and their ways. It repeats an episode contained in the author's "Marguerite."

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:261 Je '22

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES ANATOLE THIBAUT). Marguerite; tr. from the French by J. Lewis May. 75p il $2 Dodd [6s Lane]

23-1785

The story, which makes up one of the concluding volumes in the collected works of Anatole France in English, is the merest trifle. It describes with tender feeling the few chance meetings of a man, seemingly immersed in his business of drafting laws, with a little girl, Marguerite whom he fell in with in front of a toy shop in the Champs-Élysées, proved to be the child of the woman who first awakened in him a sense of beauty.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:261 Je '22

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES ANATOLE THIBAUT). On life and letters; third series; tr. by D. B. Stewart; ed. by J. Lewis May and Bernard Miall. 379p $3 Dodd

844 French literature (Eng ed 22-16343)

Essays in literary criticism for the most part of French authors. Partial contents: Charles Baudelaire; Rabelais; Barbey d'Aurevilly; Paul Arène; Science and morals: M. Paul Bourget; Chinese tales; Popular songs of old France; Léon Hennique; Baron Denon; Maurice Spronck; A family of poets [Tisseur family]; M. Maurice Bouchor and the story of Tobias; Josephin Péladan; Concerning Joan of Arc; Edouard Rod; J. H. Rosny; François Coppée; The ideas of Gustave Flaubert; Paul Verlaine; A day at Versailles; Auguste Vacquerie; Octave Feuillet; The songs of the Chat-Noir.

Booklist 19:45 N '22

"The wisdom of his years and experience and the glint of his genius make the book worth either casual reading or earnest study."

+ Bookm 56:107 S '22 110w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 30 '22 950w

"He speaks about literature with authority because he speaks about life with knowledge. His is the most civilized mind in the world to-day, and no ten pages of his work can be disregarded." Newton Arvin

+ Freeman 6:548 Fv 14 '23 1200w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:78 Ag 19 '22 100w

Reviewed by Hamish Miles

Lit R p868 Ag 12 '22 320w

Reviewed by Robert Littell

New Repub 31:285 Ag 2 '22 400w

Reviewed by Robert Lynd

New Statesman 19:18 Ap 8 '22 1650w

"That the volume should be closely packed with sharp, ironic flashes of wit was to be expected. But it is not in that quality that its principal value lies. Its importance is as a demonstration of a critical method, in its masterly analysis of ideas." L. R. Morris

+ N Y Times p8 Jl 2 '22 1950w

"Mr. Miall's translation of the third volume of 'La Vie Littéraire' is felicitously done. The charm of the great humanist and skeptic is there. This volume contains the superb essays on Baudelaire and on Verlaine, perhaps the wisest and most sympathetic critical treatment of these great, unhappy poets to be found anywhere." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 2 '22 480w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES ANATOLE THIBAUT). Opinions; recorded by Paul Gsell; tr. from the French by Ernest A. Boyd. 246p $2.50 Knopf

B or 92

22-11802

"During the years before the war it was the custom of Anatole France to open his house every Sunday morning to friends and admirers, who used to come to exchange ideas with him and listen to his entertaining discourse upon all sorts of subjects. Paul Gsell was one of the regular frequenters of those weekly gatherings and he has reported them with great humor and fidelity. Writers, artists, statesmen, Russian nihilists and Spanish anarchists were among the visitors to the Villa Said. The book is a charming picture of the great French sage, of his library filled with rare and venerable tomes, of his works of art and of the personality of the Master himself, with his ivory-pale face, silver-gray hair and beard, his dressing-gown and his red skullcap, whose angle was always an index to his frame of mind. The themes upon which Anatole France embroiders are those which one would expect from the creator of Monsieur Bergeret and Jérôme Coignard."—Ernest A. Boyd

Booklist 19:12 O '22

"In this really very gay as well as wise book, we have anecdote and conversation at its best." J. F.

+ Bookm 55:633 Ag '22 260w

"The writer has an immense command of 'twist of the wrist,' not a page of his two hundred and forty odd but is beguiling—unless one choose to regret a few wherein the esprit gaulois effervesces a bit too pronouncedly. The translation keeps step with the vivacity of the original." H. B. Fuller

+ Freeman 5:546 Ag 16 '22 1250w

"As a document the book is not without defects. M. Gsell gives us no indication as to whether these conversations at the master's house are to be taken as authentic reports, deliberately noted for preservation, or whether they are merely reconstructed frameworks of the talk. But nevertheless, from these anecdotes and epigrams and soliloquies there does emerge a more complete portrait of the man than has hitherto appeared, and many of the pages are illumined by France at his very best." Hamish Miles

+ Lit R p868 Ag 12 '22 430w

Reviewed by Robert Littell

New Repub 31:285 Ag 2 '22 650w

"This is the only book that has been published which, more than M. France's own novels and essays, reveals to us the great French master as he is among his intimates and acquaintances. The picture we get from the faithful and lively record by M. Gsell is that of a very human man, much given to gossip and to slightly malicious anecdote, not at all loath to invent an amusing yarn at a colleague's expense in the interest of entertainment or of character portrayal, serious about small things, light hearted about weighty matters, tolerant, kindly and just. We find, too, that, if M. Gsell's record is accurate, M. France is one of the most charming conversationalists whose words were ever preserved for posterity." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 16 '22 1650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:509 N '22

Pratt p33 winter '23

St Louis 20:275 N '22

Springf'd Republican p10 N 29 '22 780w

FRANK, TENNEY. Vergil; a biography. 200p $2 Holt

B or 92 Virgil, Publius Virgilius Maro

22-6335

The author, professor of Latin in Johns Hopkins university, accepting the authenticity of the numerous minor poems attributed to Virgil, draws from them much new material for an account of the poet's life and artistic development. These poems are full of personal reminiscences, revealing important facts about his daily life, his occupations, his ambitions, his ideals and the processes thru which he developed his art. The book is a biography and is not concerned with literary criticism or the subject of Virgil's literary sources.

Booklist 19:17 O '22

Cat. World 116:116 O '22 450w

"The book is forcefully and interestingly written. Misprints are few, but glaring." H: W. Prescott

+ Class Philol 17:275 Jl '22 1400w

Reviewed by E. K. Rand

Ind 109:82 Ag 19 '22 720w

"It is a careless book. Not that it is worthless. There are many suggestive passages; the part devoted to the philosophical studies at Naples, for example. But it ought to have been recast as pictures on specific points of Vergilian criticism, or to have formed the basis for a critical edition of the minor poems. The man who could make an account of the circle of Mæcenas dull is out of his element in biography." Arthur Ballinger

— + Lit R p918 S 2 '22 880w

"Sensible research—first staff of criticism—has made it possible for Tenney Frank, in his compact, spare, fascinating 'Vergil' to make the saint and wizard out a human being and a comprehensible artist. Mr. Frank has less imagination and he writes less well than the theme demands; but he keeps his eye fixed upon his central theme and follows his poet along a path which is often dim with a tread which is unusually firm." Carl Van Doren

+ — Nation 114:497 Ap 26 '22 300w

"In reworking the material on Virgil Professor Frank has managed to get out of it a lot that is new and important. Naturally his biography is a structure of hypothesis built upon hypothesis, but these hypotheses are so skillfully supported by so much evidence, probable, if not conclusive, that the reader cannot escape the conviction that the picture is on the whole true." A. J.

+ New Repub 31:286 Ag 2 '22 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:367 Jl '22

"In the patient elucidation of the middle years of Virgil's life the chief merit of this biography will probably be thought to lie. Not all the assertions which Professor Frank makes may be, it is true, more than probabilities but as he handles his materials with no airs of dogmatism, and as we nowhere detect any desire on his part to impose his conclusions on us by force, we find ourselves all the more in the mood to listen and to be persuaded."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p474 Jl 20 '22 750w

Wis Lib Bul 18:252 N '22

FRANK, WALDO DAVID. Rahab. 250p $2 Boni & Liveright

22-4977

The underlying fact of the story is a tragedy in a romantic girl's life that leaves her stranded in New York, cast off by her husband—once a drunkard and later a letter convert to Christ, however dead to the spirit—and robbed of her child. From this point her history is, externally, a gradual descent in the social scale, from industrial worker to kept woman and, at last, companion to courtesans. Her internal development, however, is a "falling up to God." The somewhat incoherent narrative portrays a series of states of mind, of exalted moods in which Fannie's mind and soul are in turmoil but in which she never loses her sense of spiritual purity, of striving after God and truth.

"A sentimental melodrama, written in the most forced and in the falsest style I have ever encountered." Burton Rascoe

— Bookm 55:306 My '22 60w

"It is startlingly simple. The book is undoubtedly Mr Frank's best piece of work up to date." Kenneth Burke

+ Dial 73:449 O '22 1850w

"'Rahab' is rarely commonplace, it is often unintelligent. Its characters give the illusion of people seen in an ether-dream, and they sometimes give the impression of having grown up or spent at least a part of their lives in a drain-pipe. The author seems at times to be deliberately trying to provoke Mr. Comstock's successor to suppress him; but undoubtedly his book is the most interesting experiment in form that has been produced in American narrative writing." M. M. Colum

+ — Freeman 5:162 Ap 26 '22 640w

"The degree of an intelligent reader's response to this kind of writing must depend upon whether he accepts it as a true style or as a trick of singularity. I have to confess that for me it is self-conscious and artificial, not a spontaneous utterance, but an uneasy demonstration." H. W. Boynton

Ind 108:314 Mr 25 '22 500w

"Mr. Frank is never tedious, never salacious, and never vulgar. [He] at times fails to illumine a cloth in which remain, after much handling, possible points of gold. . . It is a point in the navigation of Mr. Frank's mind, perhaps, rather than a high event in letters. But it is to be read, most certainly, with every respect for its maker's integrity." T. Beer

+ Lit R p543 Ap 1 '22 1050w

"Both story and doctrine call for careful statement, but both instead are clapper-clawed and mauled and dragged through keyholes and kept in the cellar until only God and Waldo Frank can quite guess what the row is all about. It is a pity, for Mr. Frank has at times a quite uncanny perception and a quite arresting candor. And there is vividness in a method which, eschewing narratives, darts from mood to mood, seen always from within the consciousness. But the total effect is not that of clear light; it is that of lights tangled and blinding; it is that of several films projected all at once upon the same sheet, and all flickering." Carl Van Vechten

+ — Nation 114:497 Ap 26 '22 260w

"This spiritual honesty and vitality in Mr. Frank count for a good deal in a day of jaded appetites: they make worth reading and pondering a novel which is frequently more a struggle for profound expression than an achievement. If anyone takes exception to the fact that Mr. Frank speaks of physical things in spiritual terms, and spiritual things in almost physical terms; if anyone dislikes to see the naked bodies of thoughts before they get dressed for society and leave the chamber of the mind, the fault is not with Mr. Frank's method but with the code of mental etiquette it infringes. Those who have no preconceptions about the verbal decencies will find many passages of deep emotion, finely conveyed; and they will perhaps achieve a sense of salvation which is in essence religious." L. Mumford

+ New Repub 31:338 Ag 16 '22 850w

N Y Times p14 Ap 23 '22 380w

"The volume is neither so consummately good nor so consummately bad as to call for promotion through critical condemnation. The reader is likely to rate it as an ordinary book, reminiscent of other work, affecting in subject a mode of the day, somewhat a hodgepodge in its introduction of symbolic and obscure sub-themes, written at times in imperfectly literate English, and aiming by way of sensationalism at a success of notoriety."

— Spring'd Republican p7a Je 18 '22 240w

FRANKAU, GILBERT. Love story of Alette Brunton. 487p $2 Century [7s 6d Hutchinson] 22-11447

The book is an eloquent plea for the freedom of woman from sex slavery as established by English law. "The Alettes of England! The women whose sole excuse for illegal matehood is love! There are half a million such in Great Britain to-day: women whose only crime is that, craving happiness, they have taken their happiness in defiance of some male." (Page 219) The Alette in question falls in love with Ronald Cavendish, after years of a joyless existence by the side of an unloved husband who has completed her alienation from him by his repeated infidelities. When she explains the situation to her husband, she not only fails to get her release but arouses his sensual passion and proprietary instincts whereupon Alette and Ronald run away. It is a story of high courage on the one hand and of revengeful cruelty on the other; of the bitterness of social ostracism and of the injustice of English law towards women; of the wonderful awakening of an old woman, Ronald's mother, thru love of her son, to an entirely new conception of social right and wrong.

"Without talent this novel would easily have lapsed into a treatise. It happens instead that Mr. Frankau has given his people life and gained ten times the emphasis which any treatise could have, because he has made us really care what happens to Aliette Brunton in the impossible situation in which her husband has placed her." D. L. M.

FRANKAU, GILBERT—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 7 '22 980w
Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 30w

"But for certain purple passages, 'with a difference,' it seems quite an ordinary kind of thing." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 109:109 S 2 '22 250w

"The book has the picturesqueness and glow and stir of romance. It exhibits the romancer's delight in the exceptional, the accidental, the intense. Unfortunately, it displays much of the tinsel of sham romance. . . One characteristic the book shares with true romance. It is distinctly readable. As the story develops, the glitter of cheap ornamentation ceases to distract the attention, and one is swept along in the current of an intrinsically vigorous narrative." G. B. Dutton

+ Lit R p736 Je 17 '22 650w

N Y Times p13 Je 4 '22 500w

"Mr. Frankau has written a novel which will grip the reader who asks only to be entertained and excited; a study which will probably receive an A grade from those who look upon novels as glorified examinations in psychoanalysis; a story which from cover to cover rises far above the sordid realism of so much modern fiction." P. I. Prentice

+ N Y Tribune p5 Je 25 '22 620w

Outlook 131:465 Je 12 '22 100w

"Although he has a few rather enervating tricks of style, such as the use of coined words and an occasional telegraphic omission of the minor parts of speech, Mr. Frankau writes with vigour, immense fluency, and a passion which is now and then only too passionate."

+ Sat R 133:208 F 25 '22 440w

"The Love Story of Aliette Brunton' is well constructed, the characters are, for the most part, well observed, the situations not only serve for the display of the characters but are intrinsically interesting. But all through the book we are haunted by his two faults—first, his exaggerated idea of the unfailing interest of the relations of men and women, secondly, his lack of distinction in phraseology and in thought."

+ Spec 128:278 Mr 4 '22 900w

"The whole story is vividly written and, though popular, gives one good insight into English divorce and murder laws. Several of the scenes are laid in an English courtroom, and one has the opportunity of witnessing the methods of English counsel."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a S 3 '22 320w

"A notable achievement. But perhaps it is the very vehemence with which his story inspires the author to write that leads him into errors of taste. English words must serve his purpose regardless of the rules of syntax. Active verbs become neuter at his bidding, nouns pose as verbs, adjectives as nouns. More serious offence will be given by the use of unnecessarily coarse expressions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p75 F 2 '22 720w

FRANKLIN, FABIAN. What prohibition has done to America. 129p $1 Harcourt

178 Prohibition—United States. United States—Constitution—Eighteenth amendment 22-19294

The author maintains that quite apart from all questions as to the merits of prohibition in itself, the Eighteenth amendment is a constitutional monstrosity; that it is "not only a crime against the Constitution of the United States . . . against the whole spirit of our Federal system, but a crime against the first principles of rational government"; that it abandons the principle (as such) of the self-government of the states; that it encourages law-breaking and leads to wide-spread contempt of the law. He also holds that, far from settling the question of drinking and drunkenness, the Eighteenth amendment has been a frightful breeder of unsettlement and contention and that it should be repealed outright.

Booklist 19:143 F '23

"Altogether, the author has presented a straightforward and competent survey, noticeably lacking in eloquence—but it is scarcely reasonable to expect eloquence from a throat Constitutionally dry, and further constricted by the halter of the prohibitionist." L. B.

+ Freeman 6:478 Ja 24 '23 280w

"Fabian Franklin in this little book, has presented briefly and succinctly entirely without trivialities and adhering closely to fundamental questions, the whole case against the eighteenth amendment." S. S. A.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 Ja 21 '23 650w

Reviewed by Lawrance Riggs, Jr.

Lit R p218 N 13 '22 900w

Nation 115:444 O 25 '22 70w

"A less helpful book bearing upon 'the issues underlying the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment' I cannot well imagine. Had Mr. Franklin called his book What Prohibition Has Done to My Feelings, it would fittingly have labelled the contents of his book. But the promise of his title is left wholly unfulfilled by what he has written. The story of the enactment of the amendment and its subsequent history is a piece of romantic and dramatic writing with no attempts at quantitative, factual judgment." Felix Frankfurter

+ New Repub 32:305 N 15 '22 1300w

"Mr. Franklin not only gets right back to fundamentals, to the first principles of the liberty of the individual, to the constitutional safeguards essential to the preservation of that liberty, but also, with a candor that is refreshing, he discusses prohibition without any of that discreet hypocrisy that still smudges so much of the public discussion of this vital issue." G. McAdam

+ N Y Times p3 O 29 '22 2200w

"Mr. Franklin possesses argumentative ability of no mean order, as readers of the Independent are aware. But it is not exhibited at its best in the generalizations embraced in this book."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 N 20 '22 600w

"Mr. Franklin, in a very able and readable attack on prohibition, entirely fails to deal with the economic and social results of that measure that can be statistically stated. The information on which this essay is built seems all to be second-hand, and most of it biased. . . The logic of Mr. Franklin's argument is full of holes."

+ Survey 49:sup204 N 1 '22 310w

Wis Lib Bul 19:21 Ja '23

FRAPRIE, FRANK ROY. Spell of the Rhine. (Spell ser.) 394p il $3.75 Page

914.3 Rhine river. Germany—Description and travel 22-7876

The author has repeatedly visited the Rhine and traversed its valley in all directions. He begins this trip, to which he invites the reader, at its mouth or mouths, at Rotterdam, going upstream, describing the scenery and giving the history of all the notable places as he goes along. The book is profusely illustrated, among the pictures being three full color prints. There is a bibliography and an index.

Booklist 18:359 J1 '22

"Mr. Fraprie is an observing traveler who writes with a history at one hand and his traveler's note-books at the other. The result is very satisfying, for the reader is assured that what is before him has been seen and proved, and what is traditional has the approving stamp of many centuries."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '22 520w

"The method is informal narrative, richly digressive, and the book is intended as a companion for a Rhine trip."

+ Lit R p764 Je 24 '22 80w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

N Y Times p16 J1 9 '22 130w

FRASER, CEDRIC. M'lord o' the white road. 319p $2 Appleton [7s 6d C. Palmer]

22-15975

Feudal sword-play and carousing, a damsel in distress, a wicked uncle bent on defrauding her of her inheritance, and hired assassins are some of the features of the story. Lord Anderley's exact double, a dispossessed young farmer, finding M'lord dying in the woods, is persuaded both by him and his man Peter, to impersonate the lord before his unknown fiancé, the Lady Gloria Clayville. The spurious lord and the lady fall in love with each other. He distinguishes himself as an unparalleled fencer and when he has been unmasked and everything has gone against him, he is discovered to be indeed a lord, cousin to the murdered man and heir to his estate.

Booklist 19:123 Ja '23
Cleveland p91 D '22

"The same ingredients have been used by novelists and dramatists time out of mind. All that we can ask is that they be mingled in a new way, and this Cedric Fraser has done."

+ N Y Times p28 Ag 13 '22 320w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson
N Y Tribune p6 S 10 '22 70w
Wis Lib Bul 18:274 D '22

FRASER, CHELSEA CURTIS. Around the world in ten days. 310p il $1.75 Crowell

22-15973

Paul Ross and Robert Giddings, boys of eighteen and still in technical school, were very much interested in aviation. Paul's brother John was a pilot in the government mail service, and when the government route was closed on account of too much expense, John and Paul set to work on a new model airplane, which they called the Skybird. When rival New York papers became interested in a trip around the world in ten days, the three lads and a cousin of the Ross's entered the contest with the Skybird. Their rivals did all in their power to win the race but were wrecked during a tornado. The Skybird after many exciting adventures won the contest with just one minute to spare.

Lit R p207 N 11 '22 60w

"The description of the countries through which the young aviators flew is excellent, and the story has a good plot as well as many exciting incidents."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 19 '22 70w

FRAZER, ELIZABETH. Secret partner. 206p $1.75 Holt

22-11514

Far away from the heat and dust of New York, Celia, the daughter of Klaggett King, enjoys the scenery of Hunter's Ranch and the company of Mr. Pinkney Sloane. Sloane is trying to raise a loan for the Sloane Salvage Company thru the help of this same King, a powerful Wall street financier, and all unknowingly he is at the same time falling in love with King's daughter. King haunted by a dream which disturbs even his waking hours, seems to be wrestling with a powerful adversary whom he believes he must conquer to win success, and of course success means the ruin of some of his most formidable business opponents, so Sloane is the victim. Finally, King dies after one of his nightly struggles with his dream partner, which is in reality his own powerful will, and Sloane's company gives him the chance of making a huge success in which, of course, Celia shares.

Booklist 19:20 O '22

"The most interesting part of the story to most of us is the psychological study of the effect of King's growing obsession with the dream. The rest of the story is ordinary enough, in fact is distinctly disappointing. It is all too easy, too simple, too uninvolved."

+ Boston Transcript p1 Jl 5 '22 150w
Cleveland p80 S '22

"The thing is very well done and holds the interest in spite of its somewhat hackneyed material. The author's style is better than the usual run; she is vivacious, but also restrained enough to avoid absurdity, and she has a saving sense of humor. All of her people are clearly visualized, well conceived, but they remain rather too much types, personifications than actual individuals."

+ Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 180w

"The story is rather short for a novel, although the author has packed enough action in it to suffice the most insatiate novel reader. Those readers who desire theme and suspense and action above characterization, description and philosophy, will find much in the book to please them and help pass idle hours."

+ N Y Times p26 Je 11 '22 400w

"The tale, as a whole, is not very well constructed. Miss Frazer has tried to make the technique of a short story do for a novelette." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 2 '22 360w
Wis Lib Bul 19:25 Ja '23

FREDERICK WILLIAM VICTOR AUGUST, formerly crown prince of Germany. Memoirs. 375p il $5 Scribner [21s T. Butterworth]

B or 92 European war—Germany. William II, emperor of Germany (abdicated 1918)

22-10713

"In his 'Memoirs' he says little of battles and campaigns of strategy and tactics, of politics and economics. He says interesting things about his boyhood and young manhood and about his own part in the war. He gives small but vivid pictures of many individuals who had to do with the war and with matters that led up to the war. Among them are the Kaiser and the Kaiserin, Edward VII (whom he greatly admired), Hindenburg, Ludendorff, Bülow, Moltke, Bethmann-Holweg, Falkenhayn, the Czar, Tirpitz, Abdul Hamid, and others of less consequence. These are but sketches, light and brief, but the Prince is not without discernment, and his opportunities were great."—Lit R

"The lamentations are dull, the excuses are more interesting and many of them are convincing. Assuming that the Crown Prince wrote all of the memoirs himself, a point on which there has been considerable discussion, he is more intelligent than we have given him credit for being. It is unfortunate that the publishers do not reveal the name of the translator."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:520 Ag '22 150w

"The tale is either very naïve or subtly sophisticated. One hundred per cent advocates of the Versailles Treaty will find here a shrewd bid for the restoration of the Hohenzollern dynasty, and will be inclined to insist upon doubling the guards on the dock at Wieringen." W. L. Sperry

Atlantic's Bookshelf Jl '22 550w

Booklist 18:362 Jl '22

"Viewed as a comedy, it makes interesting reading."

+ Bookm 55:645 Ag '22 120w

Boston Transcript p7 My 20 '22 1450w

"He contrives to come out of it all looking rather more infallible than father. With this reservation, however, the book is as illuminating as it is diversified—a panorama of opinion, conjecture, narrative, and high-flown sentiment—a restless record, curiously without stamina."

+ Dial 73:355 S '22 170w

"There is not a dry or pompous or pedantic paragraph in the book. There is tact and taste and sentiment." H. G. Prout

+ Ind 108:529 Je 10 '22 1450w

"Light and lively and entertaining." H. G. Prout

+ Lit R p741 Je 17 '22 640w

"The Crown Prince is a chip of the old block. He, too, is vain, omniscient, self-defending. Yet, surprisingly, there is more human warmth in his narrative than in his father's. Perhaps it is because he called in a professional journalist to help him write it. Perhaps it is because he was always gayer, more zestful of life. He is less sour, although even more sentimental." L. S. Gannett

FREDERICK, W: V: A.—Continued

— + Nation 115:sup632 D 6 '22 300w

"The publisher has already denied the report that most of it has been written by a second-rate German journalist; there is also internal evidence against this. Even a tenth-rate journalist would know more of human nature than to think that the world can be gulled by the gush and slobber of these pages: it takes a prince to be as silly as the author of them. Our language may seem too strong, but it is justified by its object. Every chapter and page of the book is contemptible."

— Nation and Ath 31:313 My 27 '22 1050w

"A remarkable book in at least three respects: its literary cleverness, its revelation of a new Crown Prince chastened by adversity, and its vivid pictures of men and events. It is very cleverly done. It is bound to create sympathy for him, in Germany at any rate. In fact, it is so cleverly done that for a moment one wonders whether the Crown Prince really did it himself. But internal evidence seems to leave no doubt that these are bona fide memoirs. The name of the translator is not revealed, but, whoever he is, he has done the Crown Prince good service in the skill and sprightliness of his English rendering." S. B. Fay

+ — New Repub 31:230 J1 19 '22 1050w

New Statesman 19:276 Je 10 '22 660w

N Y Times p9 My 21 '22 1550w

"His memoirs are written in an attractive style. On the whole, the American reader's estimate of the Crown Prince's mental stature is likely to be raised rather than lowered."

R of Rs 66:110 J1 '22 110w

St Louis 20:225 S '22

"His account of himself, considered quite apart from anything that one may have learned about him from other sources, does not impress one favourably. His attitude towards his father, whom he criticizes with a freedom, a detachment, and an assumption of superior wisdom that are really insufferable, is just what might have been expected."

— Sat R 133:551 My 27 '22 1000w

"If we accept them at their face value we must admit that they contain several excellent sentiments, and that the author is capable of writing engagingly about life and friendship and sport, and of dreaming dreams about the moral advancement of his country. But in all this do we see the real Crown Prince? If we do we can only say that he utterly failed to make his will felt through the thick screen of German intrigue and intolerable traditions and that he has been blamed for being malign when he was only miserably weak."

+ — Spec 128:687 Je 3 '22 1900w

"The ex-Crown Prince Wilhelm has turned his three years of seclusion in a rain-swept and uninteresting Dutch island to good account for his literary reputation. The interesting book now published under his name shows that either he was very much belied in the past or his character has been improved under the stress of misfortune."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p301 My 11 '22 940w

FREEMAN, JOHN. Music: lyrical and narrative poems. 190p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d Selwyn & B.]

821

(Eng ed 22-26311)

All of Mr Freeman's poetry is here collected written since the publication of his "Poems new and old." (Book Review Digest, 1921). Nature inspires most of the poems, which are simple and melodious, revealing sensitiveness of feeling and a gentle melancholy, but rarely passion or strong emotion.

"One would almost say that he has a gift for ecstatic wistfulness, but since wistfulness has its poignancies and we seldom find either mood or expression poignant in Mr. Freeman's verse the quality must have another and not quite so convincing a name. Is it alluring fatigue which entices the reader to the threshold of rapture and then lets him down on a gray, though delicate, abstraction? One feels that Mr. Freeman has been inspired by the artful artlessness of Robert Bridges' work; he caressingly woos words with the same unconcealed ardor as Mr. Bridges, but they do not respond with the same rich, pensive and mellow ripeness of substance." W. S. Braithwaite

— + Boston Transcript p7 Mr 4 '22 1200w

Cleveland p69 S '22

Reviewed by Malcolm Cowley

Dial 71:108 J1 '22 850w

"Mr. John Freeman has a slight but undeniable talent. . . . He has yet to make some use of his poetical equipment that will convince us that he was born to conquer his material." J: G. Fletcher

— + Freeman 5:187 My 3 '22 160w

"Though no one can deny to Mr. Freeman a genuine poetical gift, a competent-craftsmanship in the orthodox tradition, and a laudable willingness to experiment with newer modes, still in this latest collection there emerges even more clearly and more fatally his well-recognized besetting sin—verbosity."

— + Lit R p660 My 13 '22 220w

"Confirms the impression that he is a pure writer but thin. All of his pieces are too long. He seems to have resisted no phrase that came to him through his reverie and his rhyme. He is one of those county poets, sweet and mild and unoriginal, of whom England is able these years to produce any conceivable quantity."

— + Nation 114:402 Ap 5 '22 100w

"To us it appears that Mr. Freeman is less a poet than an essayist who chooses gentle verse to be the vehicle of his meditations. He has a sense of beauty that is quickly but seldom deeply stirred. Tender, reflective, accomplished in manner, and invincibly respectable, his poems seldom startle the mind with their significance or thrill the soul with their beauty. When he speaks in his own person, Mr. Freeman is too self-conscious, too well-bred, ever to raise his voice. His music is as innocuous as Mendelssohn's without being as sweet."

New Statesman 18:710 Mr 25 '22 450w

"Mr. Freeman's poetry has a way of making you feel friendly toward it, making you wish there were more of it—not in bulk but in essence; making you wish, in short, that you could read it. Its vitality is so low, its attractiveness so sparse, its 'spark' (genuine enough) so small for the number of words it has to animate, that I am afraid Mr. Freeman will not be appreciated as his intentions deserve. [He] is a poet, from whom a selection could and should be made as much in his own interest as in that of his possible readers. Unselected, unwinnowed, he is apt to go unread." R: Le Gallienne

— + N Y Times p6 Mr 19 '22 1400w

Reviewed by A. Williams-Ellis

Spec 128:184 F 11 '22 220w

"We had not read far into the volume before beginning to feel that Mr. Freeman was disappointing us; and the effect of the book at length was one of words, words, words, though interrupted with periods of beauty and adequacy. Those moments of clear achievement tend to be lost in a mist of incomplete, uncertain poeticizing."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p784 D 1 '21 1100w

FREEMAN, JOHN. Portrait of George Moore in a study of his work. 283p il $5 Appleton B or 92 Moore, George (Eng ed 22-16770)

One of the younger English poets makes this study of the Irish novelist and of his place in contemporary literature. The book is a combination of biography and literary criticism, showing the influences discoverable in his work, his attitude toward his art and toward other writers, his friendships and contacts with men and women. Each of his books is subjected to careful analysis. A full bibliography of the works of George Moore, compiled by Henry Danielson, is added.

Booklist 19:82 D '22

"This is no revelation of hero worship. It is a critical analysis of the many books Moore has written—an attempt to show the heights to which the author has at times risen and also to point out the ordinary plane which he sometimes followed. This volume gives a good speaking acquaintance with all of the Irishman's literary efforts, warning the cautious buyer away from those Freeman feels are not happily typical of the man's best work. Besides, the portrait is in itself a delectable bit of writing."

+ Bookm 56:106 S '22 120w

"Exemplifying his own ideal of portraiture, Mr Freeman has set forth 'the character, the spirit, the inward history' that Mr Moore's work 'has expressed or suggested,' giving a portrait so faithful that a detractor could not say that he has suppressed blemishes or idealized his subject; moreover in refusing to minimize an unbeautiful feature, he has not immortalized it. He is at every point his own man and Mr Moore's deepest admirer could not wish a more glowing likeness or a finer light." Marianne Moore

+ Dial 73:664 D '22 2700w

"As a revelation of the workings of Moore's creative imagination, this 'Portrait' is a rare achievement. But a portrait, after all, must not only be lifelike, it must also not be lifeless; and in this respect Mr. Freeman's painting is, if not academic, yet so polite and formalized that we are left wondering, as we look at it, whether the being represented is of the genus homo, or the human embodiment of a mechanism for producing literature." Temple Scott

+ — Freeman 6:261 N 22 '22 1400w

"The portrait of the man which emerges from this study of his work and which is the special theme of the last chapter is cleverly and delicately fashioned; and the present reviewer, who has enjoyed the privilege of many talks by the fireside in Ebury Street, can vouch for its vividness and accuracy." S: C. Chew

+ New Repub 32:256 N 1 '22 700w

"Mr. Freeman's method is neither arresting nor subtle. He dishes up in chronological order the revelations Moore has made about himself, and comments cautiously upon each of his works in turn. He has nothing new to tell us about the man, and little new criticism to offer of the books." R. M.

— New Statesman 20:409 Ja 6 '23 720w

"Mr. Freeman, who is favorably known in England as a poet, here shows that he is gifted with an unusually good prose style, distinguished and yet attractive, as distinguished styles not always are. It is seldom that a book of the kind is such pleasurable reading." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p7 Jl 16 '22 3200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:515 N '22

"We hope that Mr. Freeman will give us other studies in this form. It is a form which has great possibilities: it is capable of a richness, variety and human interest which, in ordinary criticism, are too frequently wanting, and this without sacrificing the detachment and accuracy which we demand in good criticism. Mr. Freeman uses it in a masterly manner: his book is delightful reading and a fine tribute to a fine writer."

+ Spec 130:145 Ja 27 '23 1150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p765 N 23 '22 30w

"Mr. Freeman's book was evidently written according to plan, and its vital defect is the obvious weakness of that plan. He has simply attempted to do all over again what the novelist himself has done so superbly in those ingenious essays in autobiography. Mr. Freeman has accomplished a work of supererogation. He has given us a stone when we are asking for bread." Ernest Boyd

— Yale R n s 12:435 Ja '23 1250w

FREEMAN, LEWIS RANSOME. Down the Yellowstone. 282p il $3.50 Dodd

917.87 Yellowstone river. Yellowstone national park 22-19958

After some hundred pages devoted to Yellowstone national park, Mr Freeman describes a trip from the source of the Yellowstone to the Missouri. His adventures, the queer characters he met, cities and scenery along the way are described and illustrated with numerous photographs.

Booklist 19:80 D '22

Boston Transcript p7 D 6 '22 580w

"Shoddy and uninspired stuff."

— Lit R p306 D 9 '22 160w

"A very interesting book of travel from beginning to end."

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 19 '22 160w

Wis Lib Bul 18:273 D '22

FRENCH, WILLIAM LESLIE. Psychology of handwriting. 226p $3.50 Putnam

137 Graphology 22-22646

The book sets forth the underlying principles of handwriting psychology as revealed thru numerous specimen facsimiles. It shows how characteristic traits, aptitudes, talents and shortcomings can be foretold by an individual's script and suggests the uses a knowledge of handwriting can be put to in practical life.

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 13 '23 130w

"The lack of unbiassed evidence is a weakness in the book. One feels that Mr. French is playing to the galleries when he gives facsimile after facsimile of handwriting of prominent people—politically, theatrically, artistically, commercially—and designates largely characteristics in their favor. If he so much as hints at a criticism, he smooths it over. This aspect of the book will no doubt add to its sales value, but does it strengthen the argument that the individual can be read by his handwriting?"

— Lit Rl p360 D 30 '22 310w

"Readers who are convinced of the significance of handwriting will do well to overlook Mr. French's unfortunate manner and to study his book."

+ — Spec 130:152 Ja 27 '23 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p846 D 14 '22 40w

FRIEDMAN, ELISHA MICHAEL. International finance and its organization. 702p $7 Dutton

336 European war—Finance. Finance, International 22-2438

The book aims to present a concise account of the financial changes in Europe during and since the war, and a summary of the proposals for financial reconstruction. It treats the questions of foreign exchange, banking and public finance in Great Britain, France and Germany, the other countries involved in the war being considered only incidentally. The methods of war finance are compared and appraised and an attempt is made to outline the measures taken or recommended to hasten the return of stable conditions. There is a bibliography and an author as well as a subject index.

"Through orderly and logical arrangement, the most important material has been presented in an interesting manner. As a source-book and history of the financial ills of the world growing out of the war, it is undoubtedly the most comprehensive work that has yet appeared. The book will prove serviceable not only to the student but to the layman." W. F. Gephart

+ Am Econ R 12:478 S 22 700w

FRIEDMAN, E. M.—Continued

Reviewed by E. M. Patterson
Ann Am Acad 101:305 My '22 300w
Booklist 18:309 Je '22

"A considerable part of the book is necessarily descriptive and statistical. But the author relieves that aspect of it with shrewd criticism of undesirable financial practices and constructive suggestions for both present and future."

+ Boston Transcript p9 F 11 '22 1150w

Reviewed by Clive Day
Lit R p485 Mr 11 '22 440w

"The work is in reality a seven-hundred-page encyclopedia of the financial facts of the war and the peace. No one except a reviewer can possibly read it, and no one can do without it. . . Of the body of theory presented little need be said except that it is sensible, moderate, and generally in accord with the best prevailing economic opinion." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 114:570 My 10 '22 130w

"All things considered, we judge this to be the most informative volume yet produced upon the economic and financial problems of the past eight years in Great Britain, France and Germany. Mr. Friedman does not refrain from shrewd criticism and judicious appreciations and condemnations, but his main purpose is to give the facts and figures from the most authentic sources."

+ New Statesman 19:192 My 20 '22 160w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:332 Jl '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 17 '22 70w

FRIEL, ARTHUR O. Pathless trail. 337p $1.75
Harper

22-5608

The exciting adventures of some Americans who set out to find David Rand in the desolate jungle of Javary on the frontier of Brazil and Peru, make interesting reading. Rand has had the habit of suddenly disappearing and nothing has been heard of him for five years. He thinks he is guilty of murder and in a half demented state has lived among the little known savages of South America. The wily German, Schwandorf, who has used Rand for his own evil purposes, hears that the Americans are seeking him as the heir to over a million. He tries to frustrate their plans in the most treacherous manner, but all turns out well and Rand is restored to the civilized world.

"Mr. Friel's story has all the usual necessary qualities of rapid action, excitement, suspense, battle, murder, and sudden death, with a highly picturesque background; and it also has a fine naturalness, an entire plausibility, and a direct simplicity of effect that are not at all common in this kind of fiction. It is a soundly artistic piece of literature."

+ Lit R p587 Ap 15 '22 360w

N Y Times p2 Ap 9 '22 120w

Wis Lib Bul 18:218 O '22

FRIEND, JOHN ALBERT NEWTON. Chemistry of combustion. 117p $1.25 Van Nostrand [4s Gurney & J.]

541.3 Combustion (Eng ed 22-15710)

"Bibliography and notes. 'Though this work is primarily a collection of lectures to students it should prove of value also to gasworks and other practising chemists.' (Gas engineer, 1922)" —Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:15 Ja '23

FROTHINGHAM, ROBERT, ed. Songs of challenge; an anthology. 182p $1.65 Houghton 821.03 English poetry—Collections. Courage—Poetry

An anthology of poems which speak man's courage in the face of death and of life.

Booklist 19:45 N '22

Bookm 56:519 D '22 50w

"Mr. Frothingham has garnered into small space a wealth of treasure and left us to find it at will. We thank him."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 18 '22 390w

"The book is attractively bound and slips easily into the pocket. It is a good book for the man in the street."

+ Lit R p88 O 7 '22 170w

Pratt p26 winter '23

"For the most part, Mr Frothingham has retained the simple while escaping the hackneyed; new poets mingle with old, and, while the tone of the work is popular, it keeps reasonably clear of the banal. The little book should stimulate and broaden the average man's desire for poetry."

+ Springfield Republican p7a O 8 '22 150w

FRY, HENRY PECK. Modern Ku Klux Klan. 259p $2 Small

363 Ku Klux Klan

22-4267

"A collection of the papers in the exposure of the organization printed by a number of newspapers, under the leadership of the New York World. The author was formerly identified with the organization, but resigned when he became convinced that it was a menace to the peace of the country and not at all what it had been represented to him to be. He exposes its ritual and offers evidence, some of it documentary, and some inferential, that it is anti-Negro, anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish and anti-Japanese, while insidiously operating under the hypocritical pretense of being '100-per cent American.'" —Springfield Republican

"In spite of the fact that the book is poorly written, it does contain material from which the sociologist can draw significant conclusions. The facts gathered by the author show in a concrete manner the way in which pluralistic behavior may become perverted." M. M. Willey

+ Am J Soc 28:353 N '22 550w

"Mr. Fry is not to our mind a proper person to follow when it comes to consideration of civil rights, but he is able to put into black and white, facts about a notorious body [which] in the name of Americanism is perpetrating one of the most un-American of movements."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 26 '22 360w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:329 Jl '22

Springfield Republican p10 Mr 15 '22 800w

Survey 47:901 Mr 4 '22 40w

FUCITO, SALVATORE, and BEYER, BARNET JULIUS. Caruso and the art of singing; including Caruso's vocal exercises and his practical advice to students and teachers of singing. 219p il $3 Stokes

B or 92 Caruso, Enrico. Singing and voice culture 22-4323

"Two considerations have prompted me to write this book on Enrico Caruso's art: first, the desire to pay my tribute to the memory of a friend and a great artist; and, second, the hope that I could pass on to all who are concerned with the art of singing, Caruso's methods in breathing and producing tones, his vocal exercises and his views on vocal technique, his ideals of singing as well as his practical advice to singers. I have dwelt on his life only in so far as it was closely related to his art, and I have essayed to set down some of the recollections he was so fond of telling." (Preface) The book is illustrated with photographs of Caruso in various rôles and with caricatures drawn by Caruso himself.

"As long as [the] authors write of the singer's life they are handling romantic facts that refuse to be made dull. When, however, they fill other pages with 'Caruso's vocal exercises and his practical advice to students and teachers of singing,' they are offering nothing to him who does not sing and only false hopes to the aspiring vocalist lacking the physical gifts with which Caruso worked."

+ — Bookm 55:312 My '22 90w

Boston Transcript p7 My 13 '22 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:293 Je '22

St Louis 20:92 My '22

"Has a great appeal not only for Caruso's musical friends, but for teachers and pupils of singing."

+ Springf'd Republican p13a Ap 2 '22 330w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p587 S 14 '22 350w

Wis Lib Bul 18:132 My '22

FUESS, CLAUDE MOORE, and STEARNS, HAROLD CRAWFORD, comps. Little book of society verse. 355p $1.75 Houghton

$21.08 Society verse. English poetry—Collections 22-11190

The compilers define society verse as poetry having "lightness and delicacy of touch, gracefulness of phrasing, and an appearance of spontaneity combined with a hint of artifice . . . These versifiers—writers like Prior and Gay, Praed and Locker-Lampson, Holmes and Dobson—have had no other aim than to give delight . . . Self-control, politeness, conventionality—these are the marks of Society Verse." Both English and American poets are included and they are mostly of an older day, tho Sara Teasdale, F. P. A., Witter Bynner and a few others of the younger poets find a place among them.

Booklist 18:356 Jl '22

"Not without its charm. The selected verses are charming enough. Makes a most attractive gift book, and if too filled with delicacy for some, it will come as a relief from the modern to others." J. F.

+ Bookm 55:523 Jl '22 250w

"A most excellent anthology."

+ Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 30w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:456 My 13 '22 60w

Lit R p807 Jl 15 '22 600w

"A remarkably dainty selection, made with good taste."

+ Nation 114:626 My 24 '22 60w

"The editors have done their work well, on the whole. They have brought together a large proportion of the best things of this kind." Brander Matthews

+ — N Y Times p2 Ag 20 '22 1950w

"The 'Little Book of Society Verse' is, for all its lapses, a collection for which the adjective 'charming' seems to have been invented. But this, I must add, is partly due to the finesse of the printer, the binder and the gentleman who designed the highly appropriate rose-lilac gift and tan cover."

+ — N Y Tribune p4 Jl 9 22 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:363 Jl '22

"They choose well and liberally; but they define 'society verse' a little too narrowly to fit the range of selections here."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a O 1 '22 360w

"Apart from the neglect of American writers, this is a very representative collection." E. B. Reed

+ — Yale R n s 12:218 O '22 380w

FUETER, EDUARD. World history, 1815-1920; tr. by Sidney Bradshaw Fay. 490p $3.75 Harcourt

909.8 History, Modern. Europe—History 22-17316

Unlike the usual world histories consisting of a series of narratives of different continents and peoples, this volume surveys the history of the last one hundred years from a really universal viewpoint. Those events only are brought out which have universal significance or influence and the historical personages introduced are confined to those who have affected the course of history. The period chosen, the nineteenth century, saw the spread of European civilization and colonization over the whole world. Europe and the European nations, therefore, are given the first place in the narrative.

"His presentation of such contentious issues as are raised in the chapter on the World War shows his fairness and his detached viewpoint. It would be difficult to find a better balanced short account. Moreover, he has a gift for saying things clearly and succinctly." H. R. Shipman

+ Am Hist R 28:358 Ja '23 600w

"The book is notably succinct for the enormous range it covers."

Am Pol Sci R 17:141 F '23 70w

Booklist 19:117 Ja '23

"It is a refreshing method of presentation. One receives an impression of being borne along on a wave of effect and viewing, clear eyed, the causes which, taken separately, often are perplexing to the point of befuddlement. Great events are dissected as with a surgeon's knife and laid bare in the revealing light."

+ Bookm 56:640 Ja '23 120w

Dial 73:684 D '22 130w

"On the whole his book is a brave attempt to find and apply a unifying principle of interpretation. Even apart from his main thesis, there are many chapters, more especially those dealing with English, French and Italian history, which are particularly fresh and informing; and everywhere one comes upon penetrating comment and illuminating generalization." Carl Becker

+ New Repub 33:sup16 N 29 '22 1300w

R of Rs 66:446 O '22 130w

Springf'd Republican p10 O 10 '22 240w

Wis Lib Bul 18:272 D '22

FULLER, HENRY CORBIN. Story of drugs. 358p il $3 Century

615.1 Drugs 22-9645

A popular account of the origin, preparation, and commercial importance of drugs. Beginning with a definition of drugs and a survey of the places they come from, the author, who is connected with the laboratories of the Institute for industrial research, traces the beginnings and accomplishments of the medicine industry, tells how medicines are made and describes large scale drug farming. Chapters are devoted to the medical uses of alcohol, the place of patent medicines in the drug industry, vaccines and serum therapy, vitamins, narcotic drugs, the family medicine chest, cosmetics, and legislation relating to drugs.

Booklist 18:351 Jl '22

Cleveland p75 S '22

"His accounts of the origin and manufacture of drugs are the most interesting part of a book which is remarkable for its information." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 108:488 My 27 '22 100w

J Am Pharmaceutical Assoc p399 My '22 13col

"Well written and entertaining."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:35 Jl '22

Reviewed by Marie Ryan

N Y Tribune p4 Jl 2 '22 660w

R of Rs 66:561 N '22 90w

St Louis 20:211 S '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:251 N '22

FULLER, MARGARET WITTER. One world at a time. 322p $2 Century

22-18679

Here is pictured the life of a South Carolina plantation some years after the Civil war. The narrator looks back over its memories and scenes from the time when as a child of eight, from the North, she first went to visit her uncle, Norbert Lapierre, on his Bellefont plantation. Uncle Norbert is a personality unique and unforgettable. Loving and trusting all mankind, he was at the same time a domestic tyrant, whose eccentric, absent-

FULLER, M. W.—Continued

mindful ways made him the despair of an indulgent but often exasperated wife. The narrator lingers in memory over these scenes and personalities of her childhood, the spacious old house, the land itself, with its sea islands famed for cotton, the life of the plantation, the development of a rare love story, and thus recreates a piece of the old South, hardly changed by war.

Booklist 19:85 D '22

"Excellent in outlook, restrained, dignified, original but not extreme, we think of only good things to say. As one might surmise, it is for the discriminating reader—perhaps for one who never reads a best seller."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '22 130w

"I do not know how to describe its peculiar quality, its unconventionality, its ripe humor, its firm characterization, its quiet original charm of style." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:311 N 25 '22 450w

Lit R p113 O 14 '22 330w

"A book most certainly written for love, and full of charm." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 8 '22 270w

"A quaint, delightful book to read at leisure."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 28 '23 30w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

FULLERTON, GEORGE STUART. Handbook of ethical theory. 380p $2 Holt

171 Ethics

22-11376

The object of the book is to show that altho there can be no given infallible standard by which to judge the conduct of men there is a possibility of finding a scientific basis for ethical theory. The author finds this basis in human reason, not in the reason of any one individual but in that which manifests itself in an enlightened social will. The ethics of reason, he holds, gives relative justification to the varying moral codes of communities of men in the past and in the present; it recognizes the social will as something deeper and broader than the individual will; it distinguishes between lower and higher ethical laws; and it rests upon the manifold relations in which man stands to his environment, physical and social. The book includes a comparative study of other important schools of moralists. Index and notes for teachers.

"Prof. Fullerton's book, compact in size yet ranging widely, should be in large demand by the student of ethics. It covers, with exposition, interpretation and criticism, the main outlines of practically everything that has been advanced in this field from beginnings."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ji 22 '22 360w

"An attractively simple little textbook of ethical theory. While it does not seem likely that it will in any way supersede some of the books already in use, such as those of Seth, Muirhead and Mackenzie, it has the merit of being a thoroughly fresh and individual exposition, in no way dependent on its predecessors in the same field." J. Baillie

+ New Repub 32:sup24 O 25 '22 490w

FURNESS, HORACE HOWARD. Letters. 2v 351:296p ll $8 Houghton

B or 32 Furness, Horace Howard 22-18832

The writer was the well-known Shakespeare scholar and lecturer, editor of the Variorum Shakespeare. His letters, edited by his son and, after his son's death, by his grandson, cover the years from 1851 to 1912 and are full of comment, literary, historical and social, concerning the events of these sixty years. There are letters to Charles Eliot Norton, William J. Rolfe, William Aldis Wright, Agnes Repplier, Edwin Booth, Francis Child, Charles Francis Adams, and other personal friends, as well as many intimate letters to members of his family.

"The fascination of these volumes lies in the unfolding of a humanity that with the years grew deeper, richer, more tender, and more irresistible. A single sentence may bring a shout of laughter or a gush of tears; whichever the response, we are happier for companionship with a man who had come so near to the secret of life." H. G. Pearson

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf F '23 420w

Booklist 19:50 N '22

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p8 O 14 '22 1400w

"After reading these letters one not only turns with an involuntary rekindling to his Shakespeare, but one is aware of that expansion of being that comes from intercourse with a fine ripe, fizzing personality, an irradiant intellect to which every moment of living is good grist. His grandson, Horace Furness Jayne, has edited the letters most ably and delicately."

+ Dial 73:683 D '22 150w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:106 S 2 '22 450w

Reviewed by Agnes Repplier

Lit R p262 D 2 '22 1600w

Reviewed by W. A. Neilson

Nation 116:194 F 14 '23 880w

"No possible reader can fail to derive pleasure from these letters; but to those of us who knew Doctor Furness personally and loved him they are a peculiar joy, for they show the world what we have always known; that he was much more than a scholar." S. C. Chew.

+ New Repub 32:sup21 O 25 '22 1600w

R of Rs 66:560 N '22 80w

FURNISS, EDGAR STEVENSON. Foreign exchange; the financing mechanism of international commerce. 409p $2.50 Houghton

332.45 Foreign exchange 22-11008

Writers on foreign exchange have usually treated the subject as a phase of the banking problem to the neglect of the business man's relations with the exchange market. In the present volume the discussion has been made to bear on the business man's problems as well as upon the broader questions of national policy. The author has been careful to avoid petty technical details and to keep close to concrete realities. The book is indexed, contains an introduction by Allyn A. Young and many forms and specimen letters.

"Professor Furniss knows his subject and has supplemented his lucid explanations with concrete examples of the business problems connected with payments for imported goods." H. T. Collings

+ Ann Am Acad 103:149 S '22 580w

FYFE, HENRY HAMILTON. Fruit of the tree. 302p $2 Seltzer [7s 6d L. Parsons]

22-20582

"Mr. Hamilton Fyfe has taken Muriel Overledge, one of the new women, as the subject of his novel. . . Left poor on the death of her parents she set about making a career for herself at the Bar, but, before being called, consented at his urgent request, to marry Edward Tanstead who was well-to-do. She refused to have children—who would have hampered her freedom. Edward longed for them. He found in a typist, Margaret Seymour, a passion for motherhood. He made her his mistress, and obtained from her the family life for which he craved, while enjoying the intellectual companionship of Muriel. All went well for five years. Enter the Bishop of Patagonia. All parties see fit to make him a confidant. He insists that Edward should arrange a divorce with Muriel and marry Margaret. There are many objections to this; the insurmountable objection coming from Margaret, who refuses. She, too, is a new woman in her way; she will not consent to Edward's acquiring authority over her children. The two women decide to leave things as they are. Exit the bishop hurriedly to Patagonia, 'where life is comparatively simple.'"

--The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The artistry of the book is excellent, particularly in Mr. Fyfe's manner, which is half playful, sometimes satiric, but always tolerantly understanding. It is a strongly individual book; one will either like it greatly or not at all."

+ — Lit R p158 O 28 '22 550w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Nation 115:694 D 20 '22 480w

"Mr. Fyfe is an expert journalist and writer, and it is a pleasure to watch him at work intelligently and with a light and happy touch upon so neat a fabric. The trouble is that it is too neat. Human beings are complex; women cannot be pigeon-holed into Megs and Muriels, and the situation depends upon Meg having nothing of Muriel in her, and Muriel nothing of Meg. There is, too, a repellent element in the entire want of feeling exhibited by all parties. . . It is not the irregularity, but the cold-bloodedness, which offends. But Mr. Fyfe is conducting a criticism of society through the medium of certain figures in a novel, not constructing a study of character or human relations. As such his book has point, wit, and sense."

+ — Nation and Ath 30:564 Ja 7 '22 360w

New Repub 33:302 F 7 '22 80w

"It is a compliment to Mr Fyfe's skill and artistry to point out that he has avoided pitfalls and completed a story which deserves the most serious consideration. His characterizations are astute, his situations arise naturally enough and his dialogue, through which most of the motivating argument is conveyed, is exceptionally realistic and well done."

+ N Y Times sec7:6 O 8 '22 300w

"As a social drama the book is not badly done and presents some rather good dialogue. It is a serious study, but could be improved with a touch more of color." C. R. Smith

+ — N Y Tribune p10 N 19 '22 240w

"The story is told with a cheerful glibness, but is not very provocative either of thought or emotion."

+ — Sat R 132:695 D 17 '21 100w

"Whatever we may think of his conclusions, the matter is speciously argued, though perhaps the introduction of the scandalized bishop is a mistake, as partaking more of farce than of comedy."

+ — Spec 127:675 N 19 '21 50w

"A novel having the tone of witty 'intellectual' talk and achieving by discussion the statement of a proposition rather than the illumination of life by imaginative reproduction may be properly described as a Shavian novel."

+ Springfield Republican p6a D 3 '22 360w

"The problem is interesting, and is handled by Mr. Fyfe so as to provide much entertainment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p715 N 3 '21 700w

FYFE, HENRY HAMILTON. Widow's cruse. 304p $2 Seltzer

"This is the story of Florence Poore, a woman who had nothing in common with her husband while he lived, but who became completely wrapped up in him after his death. While he lived she enjoyed his best friend more than him. After his death the best friend came to mean nothing to her, while her husband came to mean everything. During his life Everard Poore was a moderately paid newspaper man. After his death the publication of some posthumous works made him a famed and celebrated author. And Florence, the shallow and self-engrossed, in her ambitious greed for recognition and prestige basking in the reflected light of her dead husband's brilliancy eventually almost convinces herself, and her friends, that she and Everard were an ideal couple, and that she is left a heartbroken widow bravely and loyally clinging to all that pertains to her dead husband."—N Y Times

"The finale of the story is very adroitly managed by the author. This book ought to be a 'best seller.' But unlike the excellent books of the deceased author, 'The Widow's Cruse' is very badly advertised." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 1 '22 520w

+ Cleveland p80 S '22

"Has its points, as stories go. The numerous ramifications of its plots all hinge upon character, arguing ingenuity and perception in their author. But it is a pity that so many novels are written professionally, or as a relaxation from the arduous business of filling newspaper columns."

+ — Dial 73:112 J1 '22 50w

"An entertaining novel with an agreeable flavor of satire."

+ Lit R p534 Mr 25 '22 130w

"Verges toward the farcical. His satire has body and potency, but it has also the suavity which gives mellowness." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 114:sup436 Ap 12 '22 140w

"It is all very delightfully and adroitly done. It is mildly ironical, full of sly drollery, clever little thrusts of satire and gentle cynicism. In these overabundant days of hackneyed plots and themes it holds the valuable asset of originality, while more than once its style reminds one of the charm of Leonard Merrick and the humor of Arnold Bennett's lighter moments."

+ N Y Times p26 Ap 16 '22 290w

G

GABRIEL, GILBERT WOLF. Jiminy; and her lost sonnets; with some few short examples, occasionally suitable from her own poetic works. 270p $2 Doran

22-26483

This delightful extravaganza is all about a quest for Raphael's lost sonnets made by Benjamin Benvenuto Reni and his little wife, Jennie Rafferty Reni, affectionately called Jiminy. It all began on their honeymoon, in an out-of-the-way bungalow in New Hampshire, on discovering on the wall a print of Raphael's La Fornarina, recalling to Jiminy Browning's poem on the sonnets that were lost after the death of Guido Reni. In their love ecstasy the Renis take upon themselves the task of finding the sonnets. From an Italian art dealer they learn that Benjamin is the last descendant of Guido Reni, that the sonnets actually exist and are hidden in the bungalow wall behind the picture. But they are stolen before they can get possession of them; are recovered and stolen again; lead to a stabbing and a wild chase thru the streets of New York, and when once more in the hands of the Renis, are swept into New York harbor. When a week later in a neglected cove on Governor's island, the waves wash the parchment book to Jiminy's feet, the water has obliterated every trace of writing from its pages.

Booklist 18:365 J1 '22

"Mr. Gabriel fails because he has neglected the realities of life. His book is unconvincing. It is artificial. It is trivial."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 My 31 '22 240w

"This book, light and dainty as a fruit salad, with a gay green jacket, is obviously intended for the hot weather. It is mental refreshment and is written with a flow of youthful good humor that defies serious criticism."

+ Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 290w

"A book which will prove delightful reading because of its freshness, its beauty and its sentimentality, which never once becomes wishy-washy."

+ N Y Times p13 My 28 '22 420w

"So light that it forbids the touch of criticism. It is a delicate web that dissolves as we seek to hold it for examination between thumb and forefinger. That it is extremely fragile does not mean that it is extremely beautiful. Rather it is pretty always, and beautiful sometimes. Read in the proper mood it is perfectly satisfactory—

GABRIEL, GILBERT WOLF—Continued
of its own little kind it is excellent. Mr Gabriel writes well enough to try his fortunes with another kind." B. R. Redman
+ — N Y Tribune p6 J1 30 '22 270w

GADE, FELIX. Collecting antiques for pleasure and profit. 222p il $6.50 Putnam [18s T. W. Laurie]

749 Collectors and collecting. Antiques. Furniture

The author treats collecting in all its aspects, as an art, a sport and an investment, and has adapted his book to the collector of moderate means. Parts one and two deal entirely with furniture of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Part three is devoted to clocks, needlework, rugs and carpets, and engravings. Part four has to do with such subjects as authenticity, renovation, dealers, taste and prices. The book is profusely illustrated from photographs by the author and there is an index.

New Statesman 19:76 Ap 22 '22 650w

"A pleasant account of the author's experiences, giving some of that sound advice which the beginner in collecting invariably disregards."

+ Spec 127:754 D 3 '21 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p828 D 8 '21 50w

GALE, ZONA. Secret way. 118p $1.50 Macmillan

811 22-20293

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:181 Mr '22

Cleveland p26 Ap '22

"As a poet, she is intensely sensitive, has delicate precision of phrasing and the power of combining in her moods the natural and the supernatural. She is aware of much more than the thing she touches; her thoughts transcend the expression of them like waves rolling over a too narrow beach." Laura Benet

+ Lit R p451 F 25 '22 980w

"The last third of the book containing 'News Notes of Portage,' 'Wisconsin and Prose Notes,' is the best, being the most mature and specific. The few 'News Notes,' free verse character sketches, are really worth while. It would have been wiser to have left the early poems unpublished at this late date and waited until there was enough work of the Portage calibre to make a book."

+ — New Repub 30:385 My 24 '22 250w

"The thought is usually mystic, the expression gnomic, neither one nor the other often clear, in spite of her skilled and sensitive use of words. Sometime one suspects that the poet herself does not know what she means or realize what she is saying. All of which is probably as she would have it; for her aim would seem to be suggestive rather than expressive." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 5 '22 920w

Wis Lib Bul 18:101 Ap '22

GALLARATI-SCOTTI, TOMMASO. Life of Antonio Fogazzaro; tr. by Mary Pritchard Agnett. 314p $4 Doran [15s Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Fogazzaro, Antonio

"A religious rather than a literary biography. Its author is less concerned with Fogazzaro's place among Italian writers than with his place in the spiritual history of his time. In the same way the book tells as more about the ideas than the life of the author of 'The Saint.' Signor Gallarati-Scotti is, none the less, within the limits he has set himself, well fitted for the work he has undertaken. Formerly among the Modernists himself he can yet enter into ideas and systems from which he dissents. He paints adversaries with justice and understanding, and admires Fogazzaro without lapsing into hero-worship."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Nation and Ath 32:24 O 7 '22 350w

"Persons who care nothing for religious controversy and who never heard of 'The Saint' may find in this profusely documented biography a message of universal human appeal. Those who already know the works of the man now become acquainted with the man himself, learn how the evolution of his mind is constantly reflected in what he wrote, who his characters were and their actual rôles in life." Walter Littlefield

+ N Y Times p19 D 24 '22 1950w

"The present biography is primarily devoted to an explanation of Fogazzaro's spiritual history, and the culminating incident of his clash with the church is treated exhaustively and sympathetically. There is little of interest to the literary critic in this bulky book." Ernest Boyd

+ — N Y Tribune p28 D 10 '22 1350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p593 S 21 '22 1950w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Family man. 108p $1 Scribner [3s Duckworth]

822

22-26484

In this three-act play John Builder, a pompous Midlands magistrate, is faced with a full-sized revolt on the part of his women folk, whom he treats as if they had no existence apart from his own. One daughter has already been driven from home and his long-suffering wife is threatening to leave him. In trying to exercise what he thought a little wholesome family authority, he loses his temper, sees red, strikes his daughter, and is brought into court on the charge of assault. Wife and daughter prove too soft-hearted to sustain the charge and he is released, only to find himself in a state of splendid isolation, no wife, no daughters, no magistracy, his mayoralty hopes blasted. But his relenting and pitying wife returns to comfort him.

Booklist 18:365 J1 '22

Cleveland p66 S '22

"There is as little reserve as in the divorce stories of the scandal sheet. Furthermore, no single character wins the sympathy of the reader." R. A. P.

— Freeman 5:550 Ag 16 '22 370w

"Most assuredly it does not exhibit the author at anything like his best. It reveals some of his familiar virtues, but more of his besetting faults. The story is far below the level of Mr. Galsworthy's finest achievement. It offers, no doubt, a number of theatrical opportunities and the moral which it is intended to enforce is entirely unexceptionable. But the illustrations are exaggerated and the argument unconvincing, not to say disingenuous."

— Lit R p874 Ag 12 '22 680w

"It cannot be said that Mr. Galsworthy has added either a new idea or even a new complication to his theme. If he has not added a new fable or idea to the drama he has drawn a magnificent portrait of a subject which many have attempted. The record he has made of this type is complete and final, delicate and massive at once." Ludwig Lewisohn

+ — Nation 114:654 My 31 '22 740w

"Nobody could take A Family Man as biting or brilliant satire. It never furnishes even for a moment one of those sharp surprises or revelations or flashes of clarifying wit and devastating and riotous light, that make up the genius of satire. Facile patter around the idea of the changing forms of society and very little else this play remains; and finely illustrative—this time in the realm of satire—of Mr. Galsworthy's facility and limitations."

+ — New Repub 31:284 Ag 2 '22 270w

St Louis 20:218 O '22

"The irony is at times too thick to be true; it is the artificial irony of a man playing with a subject. But the wit of the dialogue seldom falters."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 27 '22 100w

"Satirical writing of no distinction to speak of, and of no brilliance. Aetable in a mild way."

— Theatre Arts M 6:350 O '22 40w

Wis Lib Bul 18:182 J1 '22

"Mr. Galsworthy's new play raises again the old questions. Why is it that sincerity of thought, rare and passionate desire of justice, a gracious spirit revealed in balanced words, an intimate sense of the theatre cannot of themselves evoke that emotional intensity without which the greatest drama is not born? The most amazing thing in 'A Family Man' is his understanding of youth. His young people have been through the war, and come out different. No other of our older writers has penetrated to that difference." Storm Jameson

+ — Yale R n s 11:427 Ja '22 470w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Forsyte saga. 870p $2.50 Scribner [7s 6d Heinemann]

22-6520

This volume brings together the chronicles of the Forsyte family, which have been published separately as "The man of property," "In chancery," and "To let," with "Indian summer of a Forsyte" and "Awakening" as interludes in the long tale.

"Within these pages John Galsworthy has collected and given to us his best work as a novelist. Every one interested either in modern literature or modern life should own a copy of 'The Forsyte Saga.' It is a compendium of the Victorian epoch and of the first twenty years of the twentieth century. Its characters are verifiably true, and the history of this typical English family is told not only by a first-rate literary artist, but by a thinker who is fundamentally honest and sincere." W: L. Phelps

+ Lit R p559 Ap 8 '22 1400w

"A noble volume. Nowhere else in the whole range of English fiction has the propertied class of the Islands been given with such knowledge, accuracy, and distinction."

+ Nation 114:473 Ap 19 '22 40w

"It is my belief that his position in English literature will be definitely strengthened by the publication of 'The Forsyte Saga.' It is a positive, powerful and permanent contribution to the social history and to the literature of England." W: L. Phelps

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 9 '22 1700w

"This is a magnum opus in both senses, physical magnitude and breadth of artistic achievement." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:74 My 10 '22 290w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:321 J1 '22

"'The Forsyte Saga' tells an absorbing story. It is intense, genuine, richly human. Its characters are as solid and substantial as the members of a Rotary club. Its incidents are authentic and at the same time relevant. The reader never has to suppress a yawn."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a My 28 '22 920w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p411 Je 22 '22 1300w

Wis Lib Bul 18:183 My '22

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Loyalties; a drama in three acts. 110p $1 Scribner

822 (Eng ed 22-12847)

The scene opens in Meldon Court, near Newmarket. Charles Winsor is entertaining a houseful of guests for the races and there have been the usual stakes won and lost. One of the guests, a rich young Jew named De Levis misses a thousand pounds from under his pillow and tactlessly accuses Ronald Dancy, who had had bad luck at the races but who had done brave work during the war. Winsor, dreadfully upset over the affair, offers to pay De Levis if he will withdraw the charge. He appeals to his esprit de corps as a fellow member of the club but De Levis, feeling that he has been merely tolerated for his money, refuses and pursues his charge to the bitter end. Dancy's friends and his young wife stand loyally by him even when his guilt is proven and beg him to flee the country before a warrant can be issued. Dancy, who had been driven into his act by the triumphant sneer of De Levis at dinner, in his wife's interest shoots himself just as the police arrive.

Booklist 19:75 D '22

"The story is carefully calculated; the characters deftly sketched in, with quick, sure strokes; each step is taken with extreme care, so that it will appear plausible, indeed inevitable, and so that one can not fail to wonder what is going to happen next. The new wine of thought in the drama can still best be sold to the people in the old bottles of the simple story-play. It is Galsworthy's shrewd though perhaps unconscious utilization of this fact in 'Loyalties' which has enabled him to reach so large an audience with a play of genuine significance." W. P. Eaton

+ Freeman 6:281 N 29 '22 1700w

"For all his skill in dramatic construction, for all his faithful verisimilitude, for all his mild irony tempered with a certain prim humanitarianism, John Galsworthy does not, in 'Loyalties,' quite rise above the æsthetic level of Sir Luke Fildes, or any of those other artists of the Royal Academy who paint pictures like 'The Cheat,' dealing with dramatic incidents in English country homes and inviting reproduction in the illustrated weeklies." R. A. Parker

+ — Ind 110:32 Ja 6 '23 1350w

"To say that it is well written is almost superfluous, but the subject does not lend itself to the display of special literary eloquence. The dialogue is crisp, simple, compact, nicely appropriate to each speaker, and eminently 'talkable.' There is, perhaps, a little exaggeration in all this, but not much more than is legitimate for dramatic purposes. The dexterity with which the different manifestations of this clan spirit are made to contribute to the development of the plot is quite masterly. Very seldom has the melodramatic method been adapted so skillfully to the ends of realistic social comedy." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p260 D 2 '22 850w

"The texture of the drama is beautifully human. It is woven of speech and action which, however severely selected, seem to have all the carelessness of nature, all the easy continuity that mark our common days. Yet the fundamental notions about which the play grew shine luminously through every word and act." Ludwig Lewisohn

+ Nation 115:420 O 18 '22 850w

"Loyalties as popular theatre is remarkable. As any real instance in serious drama it is amiably negligible. It lacks resource in the revelation of vitality. It moves on the surface only of any life that could be called a living thing. It has a pleasant gift of mild social insight and analysis, and a very easily seen cerebral gesture. By way of solution of any intellectual problems that he arouses, Mr. Galsworthy supplies a gentle, reflective and agreeable paralysis. He has a tact for distributing the blame that sends us home with softer moral horizons. He has a kind of bland profundity that up to a given point has a popular use. But in Loyalties there is little creative power." Stark Young

+ — New Repub 32:277 N 8 '22 1950w

N Y Times p4 Ja 14 '23 1250w

"A success on the stage; it will be eagerly read in print." M. J. Moses

+ Outlook 132:619 D 6 '22 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:28 Ja '23

Pratt p28 winter '23

St Louis 21:12 Ja '23

GALSWORTHY, JOHN—Continued

"Galsworthy has written no drama that is anywhere near so good a piece of 'theatre.' This story unwinds with steady and compelling force until the guilty man meets his end. It is full of excellent and subtle characterization." Kenneth MacGowan

+ Theatre Arts M 7:4 Ja '23 350w
Wis Lib Bul 18:272 D '22

GARDNER, VICTOR RAY; BRADFORD, FREDERICK CHARLES, and HOOKER, HENRY DAGGETT. Fundamentals of fruit production. (Agricultural and biological publications) 686p il $4.50 McGraw

634 Fruit culture 22-8371

The subject is studied under the headings water relations, nutrition, temperature, pruning, fruit setting, propagation, and geographic influences."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:418 O '22

GARNETT, EDWARD. Friday nights, literary criticisms and appreciations; first series. 377p $2.50 Knopf

824 Literature. English literature 22-10884

Papers by an English critic whose work, except for a few articles in periodicals, has not appeared before in America. The papers cover a period of more than twenty years, from the early essays on Nietzsche and Ibsen written in 1899, to criticisms bearing as recent a date as 1921. They are mostly in appreciation of "favorite authors whose sails were either flapping in the uncertain breezes of public esteem or had borne their craft on far reaches athwart the popular tide." He writes of Nietzsche's appearance in European thought, of Ibsen, Chekhov and Ostrovsky, of W. H. Hudson, Joseph Conrad, Richard Jefferies, D. H. Lawrence, G. M. Doughty and his "Arabia deserta" and Henry Lawson's Australian sketches. There are papers on Sarah Orne Jewett, Robert Frost, and Stephen Crane, among American authors, a paper on American fiction, and one on American poets. The concluding essay is on the province of the contemporary critic.

Booklist 19:12 O '22

Bookman 55:645 Ag '22 100w

Cleveland P 7 '22

"The sympathetic reactions here presented are not now valuable as criticism—more thoroughly analytical intelligences have worked the mines that are Mr Garnett's discoveries—but they do tell us what, for example, their writer felt about Joseph Conrad in 1898. The sentiments do Mr. Garnett credit, but they contribute nothing to our understanding of Conrad. Where are Mr Garnett's anecdotes? They should prove valuable."

+ Dial 73:581 N '22 200w

Reviewed by Newton Arvin

Freeman 6:67 S 27 '22 2650w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:488 My 27 '22 80w

"He has done more for modern literature in England than any other living man. His book, fascinating in itself is yet more interesting because it throws light upon that singular achievement." J. M. Murry

+ Nation and Ath 31:568 JI 22 '22 750w

"Mr. Edward Garnett is neither a bull in a china shop nor the angel with a flaming sword. He does not rush about smashing idols, nor does he bar the gate of Paradise against the entrance of aspiring mortals. He is neither a frantic futurist nor an anxious academic. He devotes a great deal of attention to contemporary American authors. As a publisher's reader and an eager reader on his own account, he has made many discoveries in American letters." J. W. Beach

+ New Repub 32:79 S 13 '22 450w

"Too much of the book is journalism of the moment—and the moment is often that of ten, twenty or more years ago. The interest of many of the pages is historical rather than critical—and in some instances, for example, the essay on Ibsen and England, much of the paper must be almost unintelligible except to those who already have a fairly good historical knowledge of the subject."

+ New Statesman 19:565 Ag 26 '22 950w

"The author of this illuminating book of interpretative criticism has for long been a force, perhaps the most helpful and subtly potent, among the currents of written English. His strength and value as a critic lie in his singular intuition and delicacy of perception; his complete independence, and his truly great knowledge. Though he may call himself 'contemporary,' it can be said with some certainty that those whom he crowns today will keep their heads among the revolutions of tomorrow." J: Galsworthy

+ N Y Times p1 My 14 '22 2700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:361 JI '22

St Louis 20:219 S '22

"Mr. Garnett is revealed in 'Friday Nights' as a critic of scrupulous honesty and high ideals, but sectarian in his outlook, and, like all sectaries, in danger of becoming old-fashioned."

+ Sat R 134:146 JI 22 '22 580w

"He is guilty of all the loose adjectives, and the invocatory parentheses, which we too often associate with the pulpit; while the relative pronoun is a stumbling-block which all his years of literary practice have not taught him to avoid. The surprising thing is that in his quotations he always gives something rich and pregnant, his choice showing that he does possess that judgment for which he is noted."

+ Spec 129:118 JI 22 '22 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p424 Je 29 '22 1250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:181 JI '22

GARNETT, JAMES CLERK MAXWELL. Education and world citizenship; an essay towards a science of education. 515p $12 Macmillan [36s Cambridge univ. press]

370.1 Education (Eng ed 21-10269)

"An attempt by one who has done much admirable educational work to formulate principles of education based on an analytical investigation of mental phenomena, and leading towards one comprehensive interest as the educational goal—to form Christian characters as members of a Christian community. Mr. Garnett enters closely into the different parts of an ideal educational system and adumbrates a national scholarship programme administered by local authorities."—The Times [London] Lit Sup Ap 7 '21

"As a whole, the book is an outstanding contribution to educational literature. The treatment throughout is systematic and logical, and the supporting footnote evidence is sufficient to meet the demands of the scientific reader."

+ El School J 22:468 F '22 900w

Freeman 4:190 N 2 '21 600w

"This is certainly one of the most interesting and instructive books that have ever been written on education. There can be no doubt that the book is an extremely valuable one, both theoretically and practically." J. S. Mackenzie

+ Int J Ethics 32:445 JI '22 620w

Nature 107:386 My 26 '21 950w

"It is no exaggeration to say that this book is one of the most important, dealing with education, which has appeared for years. It has faults, grave faults. Its importance comes from the angle from which Mr. Garnett looks at his subject and from the wide scope of his vision."

+ New Statesman 17:22 Ap 9 '21 1000w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p230 Ap 7 '21 70w

"It is a stimulating performance, based on certain assumptions as to the relation of emotions and instincts which, though disputed are largely accepted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p370 Je 9 '21 950w

GARNETT, WILLIAM. Little book on water supply. 144p il $2.50 Macmillan [6s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

628.1 Water supply. London—Water supply (Eng ed 22-20942)

"Dr. Garnett's book on the problems of water supply, with special reference to London, is intended for use in schools and colleges, but it will interest many adult readers. He describes briefly the water supplies of New York, ancient Jerusalem and our great cities. Then he deals at length with London's water, its sources, the methods by which it is stored, purified and distributed, the history of the companies and the Water Board."—Spec

Boston Transcript p9 S 30 '22 160w

"The illustrations are few and of no great interest."

— Lit R p136 O 21 '22 60w

"As a scrap-book of useful and often entertaining information on the supply of water to modern London and ancient Jerusalem the book will give pleasure to many readers, and the facts as to other cities, ancient and modern, are accurate wherever we have tested them, though not always up to date. Our sole complaint is that a scrap-book should be put forward as an educational work, for we hold that continuity of plan, clearness of arrangement, and simplicity of statement are essential for any such book, and these we do not find." H. R. M.

— + Nature 110:275 Ag 26 '22 330w

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:47 O '22

Spec 129:55 Jl 8 '22 260w

"Its charm and interest lie in the fact that it touches on a large variety of what ought to be every-day knowledge, ranging discursively from physics and chemistry to bacteriology, and from geology and meteorology to engineering, with a good deal of London history and topography."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p430 Je 29 '22 400w

GARRETT, GARET. The driver. 294p $2 Dutton 22-20878

The story of high finance dates back to the Coxey army episode and tells of the evolution of one Henry M. Galt, obscure speculator on the stock exchange, into the monarch of Wall Street and economic dictator of the country. It shows him driving ahead with aggressive bluntness, his eyes riveted with fanatic intentness on his one goal, overriding every obstacle, gaining his end, making enemies and turning them into friends and at last changing from a repellent, awe-inspiring figure into a sympathetic one.

Boston Transcript p6 Ja 3 '23 800w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Ind 109:352 D 9 '22 500w

Lit R p402 Ja 20 '23 280w

"If a clever paean to success and some boldness that looks closely like fact is what you want, here it is; but not reflection, or merits particularly sophisticated." C: Truthhood

+ — Nation 116:152 F 7 '23 320w

"Mr. Garrett presents his tale maladroitly from an interior point of view, and mixes the values of fact and fiction to the disadvantage of both."

— New Repub 33:154 Ja 3 '23 120w

"It is a moving story, written with that artistic instinct that intuitively fashions construction in accordance with the demands of art and gives to the whole structure the seeming of life."

+ N Y Times p20 O 8 '22 500w

"A good, rapidly moving novel of 'Wall Street' methods, written by a man who knows."

+ Springfd Republican p6a D 2 '22 200w

GARSTIN, CROSBIE. Ballad of the Royal Ann. 90p $1.75 Stokes [3s 6d Heinemann]

$21

"This book of verse is characteristic of the open-air Britisher with the roving foot, a sense of the picturesque, and an ear that can carry a tune. Throughout his book there are color, spirit, and vigorous treatment of the historical romantic theme. His love of salt water is manifest in most of his ditties."—Lit R

"The author shows a gallant spirit, a romantic and humorous mind, and distinct cleverness as a versifier."

+ Lit R p136 O 21 '22 400w

New Repub 32:281 N 8 '22 160w

"The Ballad itself is perhaps the best; but all the pieces are accomplished and effective in their own vein." F. L. L.

+ New Statesman 19:98 Ap 29 '22 40w

Reviewed by Milton Raisin

N Y Tribune p29 D 3 '22 100w

"The ballad is reinforced by a number of spirited poems which express the personalities of the Scilly Islands rocks in the most buccan- eer and magnificent metres."

+ Sat R 133:317 Mr 25 '22 240w

GARSTIN, CROSBIE. Coasts of romance. 258p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Heinemann]

916.4 Morocco—Description and travel. Spain—Description and travel 22-21827

"Taking passage on a steamship from Tilbury on the Thames, Mr. Garstin journeyed southward, and during a cruise of Mediterranean ports and the lands adjacent thereto, he visited Gibraltar, Algieras, Tangier, Casablanca, Fez, Cadiz and other places in Europe and Africa. The record of the travels he sets down vividly and picturesquely from chapter to chapter of a volume that is racy with the mingling of fact and imagination."—Boston Transcript

"Humor is to the fore at every step of his journey and on every page of his book. It is an enlivening and enlightening story of pleasant wanderings." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '22 980w

"A genial book. Reading it is like looking at someone else's photograph album: the subjects of the pictures are unknown and therefore seem of no great importance, but one is surprised now and again by excellently focused snapshots that convey the life of the original. The author's illustrations, by the way, are dexterously done and the best fun in the book." Eva Goldbeck

+ New Repub 33:178 D 13 '22 160w

New Statesman 19:616 S 9 '22 470w

"The book is one of the few travel books that will hold a reader's interest from cover to cover. So if you can't go to Morocco or Fez, there's an excellent substitute within reach."

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 19 '22 450w

Pratt p29 winter '23

"A gay and bright account of his recent holiday. . . . Almost every page has an arresting note. We must also praise the spirited verses interspersed through the chapters, and the very graphic drawings in pen and ink with which Mr. Garstin illustrates his text."

+ Sat R 134:481 S 30 '22 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p383 Je 8 '22 210w

GARTLAND, HANNAH. House of cards. 327p $1.75 Dodd 22-853

"Back in headquarters Inspector Kane of 'the Force' filled his pipe and settled himself down comfortably into his desk chair. 'Dead easy!' he soliloquized. 'Dead easy!' But this was soon after that morning, when Pa- trolman Dooley had found Gregory Barwood, wealthy clubman, and one of the most skilful card players in New York, sitting in one of the carved chairs of his luxurious reception room, with a bullet hole in his forehead. But the solution of the 'Barwood mystery' is not as 'dead easy' as Inspector Kane at first thinks. On the contrary, it grows more and more complicated as the evidence in the case accumulates. Many are the clues followed by Inspector Kane and his subordinates, by various special detectives, by Attorney General Wallace and by Jimmy Macoy, the cub-reporter, whose wide-open eyes discovered what the police missed, and whose perseverance and young American ignorance of the verb 'to fail' led him at last to the heart of the mystery."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p6 F 8 '22 250w

"The book is more than a mere detective story—than the ordinary detective story. The characterizations are at times astonishingly good. The details show a power of observation and a real love of the work."

+ N Y Times p16 Mr 5 '22 600w

"The author handles her subject matter with much skill, injects abundant action and conceals the identity of the criminal until every other person connected with it, even the most remote suspect, is eliminated. The tale holds the reader's close attention throughout."

+ Springfield Republican p7a Je 4 '22 180w

GATES, ELEANOR (MRS FREDERICK FERDINAND MOORE). Rich little poor boy. 419p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

22-2347

"Johnny, a universal type of fine little boy, with a fancy the stronger the more it and Johnny are starved is nurse to grandpa and slavey to everybody in Big Tim's tenement rooms. School does not exist for Johnny, nor out-of-doors. But when Tim and his quaint stepdaughter, Cis, have gone to work and grandpa has fallen asleep, then Johnny leaves cleaning up till last, and settles down to the kind of dreams that go with being written by Eleanor Gates. Johnny joins the Poor Little Rich Girl in renewing to a cynical public the old, old triumph of dreams over unkind reality. But unlike the Poor Little Rich Girl, his really satisfactory adventures are not to lie in dreams. She escapes from reality by dreams, a usual course; Johnny's dream life is only the charming introduction to a more wonderful reality which is to free him from the necessity for dreams."—Lit R

"It is an appealing little story, told with that over-brimming sentiment and sympathy which endeared its companion fantasy to many readers."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 15 '22 500w

"Miss Gates, having neither the humor nor the genius, has bitten off rather more than she can chew. She exhibits a sympathetic knowledge of what goes on in the mind of a child when its thoughts are away in the land of its own possession, but by the conventional weaknesses of her story, the utter idiocy of every adult concerned, and a constant insistence upon the sentimentality of the occasion, she makes the best of her book unconvincing and the worst of it most difficult to read." L. Y. Erskine

— Detroit News p7 Jl 16 '22 250w

"A charming story, and memorable for character work, even though each character does conventionalize as we read on." Marion Ponsonby

+ Lit R p483 Mr 11 '22 580w

N Y Times p14 F 26 '22 400w

Springfield Republican p7a D 24 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:133 My '22

GAUGUIN, PAUL. Letters of Paul Gauguin to Georges Daniel de Monfreid; tr. by Ruth Pielkova; foreword by Frederick O'Brien. 178p $3 Dodd

B or 92

22-11018

Letters written by the French artist to a friend and fellow-artist during the last dozen years of his life in the South seas, the last letter being written only a few weeks before his death. Daniel de Monfreid was the man who made possible whatever ease and comfort Gauguin had in the South seas. He was his friend, adviser, banker, and agent for the sale of his pictures and sent the artist the few necessities which he required from the world of civilization. Gauguin's letters are little more than a succession of pleas for enough money to provide him the barest necessities of life and materials for painting the pictures, which were, after his death, to make him famous.

"All told these letters are scarcely as illuminating or as interesting as we might have hoped. Occasionally he forgets his troubles for a moment in describing one of his canvases or his unusual use of color in a certain place, or he stops to tell a bit of his personal life, but in the main they are simply the account of a terrible hopeless struggle under conditions which should have been controllable." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 29 '22 800w

"The present collection of sixty-four letters—editorially connected by essential narrative links—provides a coherent history which reveals Gauguin more definitely than he managed to reveal himself in his frankest moments of confession. It is, despite certain obvious lacks, the most informing book on Gauguin that has yet appeared. . . The correspondence with De Monfreid shows the painter in his unguarded moments, shows his reactions to circumstances, shows the man as he was rather than as the man he thought he was." B. R. Redman

+ Lit R p914 S 2 '22 940w

Nation 115:22 Jl 5 '22 200w

"For the superficial reader there can be nothing but disappointment in these letters, for the note they harp upon is practically a single one—the painter's abject need of money. No one looks for style in these letters. Neither does one look for comments on art and life. Here is nothing but Gauguin, a painting done in harsh lines and with no softening colors." H. S. Gorman

New Repub 32:154 O 4 '22 700w

Reviewed by L. R. Morris

N Y Times p17 Jl 23 '22 2900w

"This book does not convince one of his genius. It does furnish a tragic picture of the profound moral abyss into which a man may fall who sacrifices to one passionate desire all bonds of friendship, family affection, and decent conduct." R. D. Townsend

Outlook 131:499 Jl 19 '22 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:366 Jl '22

St Louis 20:224 S '22

GAUL, AVERY. (MRS HARVEY P. GAUL). Five nights at the Five Pines. 280p $1.75 Century

22-17452

A New York couple, eager to escape from city life, bought an old sea captain's house, Five Pines, in a fishing village on Cape Cod. They had been warned that the house was haunted and the first five ghastly nights passed there by the new mistress form the substance of this ghost story, into which is fitted the personal history of the very human ghost who is responsible for the weird happenings.

Booklist 19:85 D '22

Boston Transcript p7 O 7 '22 640w

"The show is well managed, performed with such zest that the publishers will not lose any money on it, and many thousands of the people who like this sort of thing will be happily beguiled. Every one will get his money's worth, in fact. But the book's assured success will appear a melancholy failure to the reader who discerns genuine talent in its palimpsest." E. T. B.

+ Freeman 6:211 N 8 '22 250w

"A beautifully done thing, and no mere clever handling of psychic miracles." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p70 D '22 50w

"To be perfectly frank, the book is nothing more than a short story which a considerable mass of detail stretches to novel length. Yet in justice to the author it may be added that there is no apparent padding. It is just a 'ghost story' and a rather good one."

+ — Lit R p72 S 30 '22 380w

"Mrs. Gaul has done something very unusual indeed in the ghost and mystery way—she has imagined an original and appealing theme for her story, she has kept it in close touch with the human and the homely both in itself and in its background, and she has developed it with striking ingenuity and reality. In both readable and artistic qualities it is so successful that any one who reads it will hereafter be on the watch for any later novel from her pen."

+ N Y Times p22 S 10 '22 700w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:461 N '22

GAVIT, JOHN PALMER. Americans by choice. (Americanization studies) 44p $2.50 Harper

323.62 Naturalization. Americanization. United States—Foreign population 22-18538

"This book devotes itself to those who have become Americans not by birth, but of their own free will and accord, by that process of voluntarily adopting a fatherland known as Naturalization. It endeavors to tell generally what happens to them in that process, and something of what they do and contribute to our political life after they have been admitted to active membership in our body politic." The methods and machinery of naturalization are carefully studied. The reader follows the foreign-born citizen from the day he declares his intention to apply for citizenship to the day of his admission and thru his development and political activities as an American. In the statistical chapters the information contained in more than 26,000 petitions for naturalization has been compiled and analyzed.

Am Pol Sci R 17:144 F '23 70w

Booklist 19:69 D '22

"Mr. Gavit has made a detailed investigation of the subject and presents his results with thoroughness and historical accuracy, enlivened by touches of humor and a sympathetic attitude toward the troubles of the alien."

+ Bookm 56:645 Ja '23 90w

"A scholarly treatment of the immigrant in his political relations. It is written in a style that grips and holds the attention every minute. Most heartily, we recommend this study to all who are interested in the problems of immigration and Americanization."

+ Cath World 116:422 D '22 640w

"Mr. Gavit's criticisms are incisive, but always constructive. The play of his sarcasm is keen, but never cynical. He dares face the worst, but in order to report the better that is being achieved. Compact, comprehensive, thoroughgoing, interesting volume." Graham Taylor

+ Lit R p398 Ja 26 '23 950w

"Mr. Gavit's volume is a genuine contribution, containing a detailed study of the process by which the alien is inducted into citizenship. One of the valuable features of the book is an analysis of the answers to a questionnaire sent to the approximately 1,100 judges in the country having jurisdiction in naturalization proceedings." Arthur Warner

+ Nation 116:47 Ja 10 '23 700w

"Mr. Gavit's book is one which should be read and what is more, pondered by every American. It is not only rich in information concerning our naturalized fellow citizens, but it is encouraging and comforting to those of us who have been disposed to 'view with alarm' the flood of immigration which has poured into the country for the last seventy or eighty years." E. B. Hill

+ N Y Tribune p23 F 4 '23 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:542 D '22

Pratt p9 winter '23

R of Rs 66:417 O '22 90w

St Louis 21:4 Ja '23

Wis Lib Bul 18:250 N '22

GAYTON, BERTRAM. Gland stealers. 314p $1.75 Lippincott [7s 6d H. Jenkins]

22-17450

"Gran'pa, 95, lounging lazily in the autumn of life, reads by chance of the possibility of rejuvenation by the grafting of gorilla's glands. Then the fun begins. First Gran'pa procures a monkey, which, after hurling the family china promiscuously about the kitchen, escapes, to be heard from next after he has scared a sedate old lady out of a year's growth by dropping into her lap as she sits atop of a motor bus. The scene is laid first in London, and later in Africa. After chartering a ship and buying some planes, gran'pa takes 100 aged men to Africa in search of youth. Follow thrilling scenes in the jungle, the capture of about half enough gorillas to go around, the drawing of lots, the rejuvenation of some of the ancients and the culmination of Gran'pa's romance."—Springf'd Republican

"The story is not plausible and is not intended to be so; it is merely imaginative and entertaining."

+ Lit R p158 O 23 '22

"A diverting and inoffensive exploit in extravagant nonsense."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 19 '22 150w

"The notion is one which it would require a very exceptional humorist to rescue from banality. We are afraid Mr. Gayton has not the necessary gifts."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p382 Je 8 '22 30w

GEER, WILLIAM CHAUNCEY. Reign of rubber. 344p il $3 Century

678 Rubber industry

22-19027

A popular and non-technical, but at the same time accurate account, by the vice-president of the B. F. Goodrich Company, of the development of this basic industry from the time of the first discovery of rubber in crude form to the present day. The early struggles of the pioneers and inventors in the industry are described, the mechanical methods and processes, rubber growing and the plantation industry, the reclaiming of waste and the chemistry of rubber mixtures. Then the author considers in turn the different branches of the vast industry—tires, footwear and clothing, druggists' sundries and mechanical rubber goods. There is a closing chapter on the future of rubber. Index.

Booklist 19:71 D '22

"Dr. Geer has done excellent service in writing this compendium of rubber facts. His book is not a tract or propaganda for the business; it is simply a step toward the essential education of every intelligent person in the knowledge and understanding of a substance which plays so important a part in the personal life."

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 14 '22 290w

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:47 O '22

"Naturally, it has its romance, and while Dr. Geer's book is always precise in its information and obviously written for trade purposes, this fact is frequently noted during the course of the book."

N Y Times p19 Ja 14 '23 250w

"An excellent record of the epic of rubber."

+ Outlook 132:534 N 22 '22 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:18 Ja '23

GEISTER, EDNA. It is to laugh; a book of games and stunts. 141p $1.25 Doran

790 Games

22-6820

The object of this collection of games is to promote the gospel of recreation which has received so great an impetus in war work and is now continued in recreation work in churches, in communities, in schools and in social service work of all kinds. Contents: Mixers

GEISTER, EDNA—Continued
[getting-acquainted games]; Group games; Races; Trick games; Picnics; Partners, refreshments and dinner table amusements; Index.

Booklist 18:354 J1 '22

"Adults are to be the victims of these jovial tests, it appears, and outdoors or in, Miss Geister has left no stone unturned to provide ready recreation for the willing or unwilling. There are enough varieties of entertainment strenuous and otherwise, it seems, to last the ordinary hostess an entire year with no duplication."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 19 '22 100w

"It is full of suggestions sure to make any party of unacquainted people soon feel the warmth of an enjoyable social group."

+ J Religion 2:336 My '22 30w

"Edna Geister shuns amusements adapted only to children, and also ordinary athletics, and makes a valuable contribution to special material for amusing adult groups, large or small. This volume is frankly a collection of games and stunts, with just enough about leadership to insure its practicability."

+ Lit R p515 Mr 18 '22 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:289 Je '22

St Louis 20:218 S '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:154 Je '22

GENTILE, GIOVANNI. Reform of education: auth. tr. by Dino Bigongliari; with an introd. by Benedetto Croce. (European lib.) 250p $2 Harcourt

370.1 Education 22-16364

The writer, who is professor of philosophy in the University of Rome, shares with his friend Benedetto Croce in the leadership of Italian thought. Like Croce he is an idealist and in this volume on the meaning and aim of education, he pleads for a more spiritual conception of education, for maintaining its unity, for lifting its problems out of the sphere of discipline, routine and method and connecting them with the fundamental problems of human life. Contents: Education and nationality; Education and personality; The fundamental antinomy of education; Realism and idealism in the concept of culture; The spirituality of culture; The bias of realism; The unity of education; Character and physical education; The ideal of education; Conclusion.

Booklist 19:108 Ja '23

"A scholarly work, coherent, lucid, logical, and, as opposed to many so called 'reform' works, is not characterized by a plethora of glittering generalities. The author gets down to cases, points out glaring faults in our modern educational systems, and suggests plausible and practical substitutes."

+ Bookm 56:357 N '22 100w

Reviewed by Kenneth Burke

Dial 74:97 Ja '23 1650w

"His book is marked by earnestness and an ardor which is sometimes almost religious in its character." R. D. Carmichael

+ Lit R p149 O 28 850w

"One cannot but be sympathetic with the beautiful intention, whatever one thinks of the method. It is a little late in the day to dismiss the whole structure of experimental knowledge with a dialectical wave of the hand. Nor will the chastened contemporary mind prefer eloquence to inquiry. It is healthy nevertheless to move for a little while in a realm of discourse whose cadences are so different from those heard among the devotees of test tubes and reaction times. It is good to find a philosopher who hates so much the mechanization of life that he tries to prove that mechanism itself is an illusion." Irwin Edman

+ Nation 115:sup636 D 6 '22 1500w

Reviewed by Cecilia Farwell

N Y Tribune p11 N 19 '22 1300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:472 N '22

GEORGE, WALTER LIONEL. Her unwelcome husband (Eng title Stiff lip). 308p $2 Harper. [7s 6d Chapman & H.]

22-18090

A story of London society life. Claire Caldecot, disastrously married and deserted by her husband, finds all her life in a rising young politician whom she had been the means of helping in his parliamentary career. They have been lovers for years but unable to marry because Claire's impecunious and unprincipled husband hovers in the background holding over her the weapon of blackmail. When the story opens the lovers are both nearing forty. Tho Claire is still sure of Rodbourne's love and admiration, she is growing too old to be his playmate and a young girl has just appeared on the scene who is ready for the rôle. Against his protests Claire resigns her power in favor of the young Patricia. The tragedy of her renunciation is followed by a crowding succession of misfortunes each one of which she gallantly meets even to the acceptance of life once more with her outcast husband.

"The book is written with that cleverness we expect from George, and with a comprehension amounting to tenderness besides." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Bookm 56:500 D '22 180w

Reviewed by Hildegard Hawthorne

Int Bk R p70 D '22 40w

"Technically a very fine piece of work; distinctly better in workmanship and finish than any of his earlier studies." H. L. Pangborn

+ Lit R p124 O 21 '22 720w

"A very sophisticated tale written from a viewpoint that is sophisticated to the point of saturation, Mr. George's new novel is yet redeemed from being a wholly sodden and blasé picture of life by the gallant soul who is its central figure. And the picture is made by a hand that is as clever, as skillful and as ruthless as that of any vivisection investigator experimenting with a lot of white rats."

+ N Y Times p18 S 17 '22 550w

"The theme is interesting, and the plot, so far as it is developed, is dramatic. But neither is quite worked out to the end." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 5 '22 950w

"Extremely readable, clever, interesting; unlike several of his recent books, it is more than that. There is in it a constructive idea. The plot is unexpected and exciting, if highly improbable. The incidentals are good. But there is something lacking." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 134:450 S 23 '22 600w

"Mr. W. L. George used to write better than this."

+ Spec 129:604 O 28 '22 80w

"Quite mechanical, and it is difficult to conceive any enthusiasm of the author's in its construction."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p583 S 14 '22 540w

GERARD DE NERVAL, GERARD LABRUNIE, known as. Daughters of fire: Sylvie—Emilie—Octavie; tr. from the French by James Whitall. (Sea gull lib.) 138p $1.50 Brown, N: L.

22-11592

"As a collection of sketches, 'Daughters of Fire' is partly autobiographical and in part imaginative, written with the spirit of the true Romanticist. 'Sylvie' is the essence of romantic love, a vague searching for the ideal that exists only in the heart of the Romanticist. With 'Emilie' Gerard De Nerval is the adventurous knight, and the story-teller rather than the bard of 'Sylvie' and 'Octavie.'—Boston Transcript

"For sheer beauty of form and of word suggestion there is no French poetry of the Romanticists more in tune with the spirit of the mediæval bards than these prose portraits of Gerard de Nerval."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '22 310w

"Written with an all-too-innocent fervour. De Nerval's visions were more prolific than ingenious, and their fluctuations within these stories result from the author's vagaries rather than through any aesthetic necessity."

— Dial 73:234 Ag '22 80w

"'Sylvie' may be one of those books that will survive. It is simply and freshly written, and intensely personal. 'Octavie' is indeed a memory of travel, but an elusive quality, charming as twilight, has dimmed the style." Clarkson Crane

+ — Freeman 5:572 Ag 23 '22 980w

"Our generation is not guilty of neglecting this author: judgment was rendered against him long since, and readers of 'Daughters of Fire' will find reason to confirm the decision. It represents a fragile romanticism that is quite meaningless in the present day; a romanticism that had some of the tints, and approximately the life, of a butterfly's wing." B. R. Redman

— Nation 115:311 S 27 '22 650w

GEROULD, KATHARINE (FULLERTON)
(MRS GORDON HALL GEROULD). Lost Valley. 452p $2 Harper

22-1722

Lost Valley is a beautiful but run-down New England village, deserted by its sturdier stock and become a place of decay and degeneration. Madge Lockerby is one of the strong left behind to care for the weak—her insane grandmother and her illegitimate, half-witted sister Lola; a girl of fifteen with the face of a Botticelli madonna. To this village the young artist Arthur Burton comes, to execute a painting commission. He is the first civilized man Madge has ever seen and the result for her is inevitable. But her sense of loss when he goes away is overshadowed by the greater loss of her sister who runs away after an Italian organ grinder and his monkey. Madge's quest of her takes her into the Italian quarter of Boston and New York and into New York's Chinatown, proves the worthlessness of her artist, but discovers for her a friend and later a lover in Desmond Reilly.

"The obstinate questionings of skepticism are smothered again and again by sheer absorption in the vivid tale. For it is unfolded with swift and concentrated power; with humor now sardonic and now simply mirthful; and, even at its most fantastic, with the sense of reality given by the sudden illumination of hidden corners of hearts." E. W. Hawkins

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ap '22 550w

Booklist 18:238 Ap '22

"There are fine moments of morbidity in the early chapters. But, alas! separated from gloom, Mrs. Gerould seems unfailingly to become either melodramatic or sentimental. Assiduously enough, this critic of the younger generation seems to have borrowed many of both its virtues and its faults. When she remains a realist, she is excellent. When she attempts a picture of city youths under romantic circumstances, she seems to me either not to know them or to choose to draw them as they are not." J. F.

+ — Bookm 55:64 Mr '22 400w

"Mrs. Gerould has, hitherto, etched cameos and probed her own mind skillfully, out here, with the commoner realities of life before her, she has failed through lack of understanding."

— Dial 73:112 Jl '22 110w

"The book's lack all comes down to the lack of that miraculous co-ordination between idea, character, and event which marks a true story from an invention. Miracles are not performed by taking thought. Therefore, while Mrs. Gerould has plainly made a most honest and earnest attempt to achieve a novel of power and substance, it is quite within the probabilities that she should have failed." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 108:147 F 11 '22 950w

"The whole performance is a marvel of artistic sobriety and conscientiousness. It is meticulous in the smallest matters of New England dialect and local mannerism, an accurate and faithful chapter in the sad natural history of the descent of man. But its very fluency gives in the end the effect of inarticulacy. It is like a desperate talker going on and on, aware of some important message which struggles within him for utterance, hoping to shape it forth by an accumulation of vestiges, hints; when, all the while, his meaning and his magic are wrapped in one potent phrase which cannot be found." Wilson Follett

+ — Lit R p411 F 11 '22 3400w

"Not seldom the morbidity and the melodrama detract somewhat from the dignity of her story, and there are times also when that deep-lying snobbishness of her temperament leads her to substitute her remarkable literary virtuosity for sympathetic understanding of her characters. At the end, however, she rises again to the tragic level." J. W. Krutch

+ — Nation 114:375 Mr 23 '22 650w

"The novel is very well written, in a deft and flexible style, free from that self-conscious subtlety which has marred some of Mrs. Gerould's work. [She] is a conscientious artist in words, and though it would not be difficult to pick flaws in her novel, it is far pleasanter to commend it for its many admirable qualities." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p18 Ja 22 '22 1500w

"About the only faults one has to find with Mrs. Gerould's first novel are, as might be expected, technical faults. The novel has the spirit of great fiction in it, and the impression made by the best parts of it is deep and permanent."

+ — No Am 215:571 Ap '22 1100w

"There are two or three improbabilities in plot and incident. Apart from that, the novel is strikingly well done, the men and women are carefully rendered, and the play of heredity, temperament, and circumstance on character and life is sincerely worked out." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 130:351 Mr 1 '22 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:197 My '22

Pratt p35 Ap '22

"Though not of commanding importance, is worth reading, because as a story it is interesting and because the presentation of New England character and moribund community-existence is good."

+ — Spring'd Republican p13a F 12 '22 400w

Wis Lib Bul 18:103 Ap '22

GEROULD, KATHARINE (FULLERTON)
(MRS GORDON HALL GEROULD). Valiant dust. 347p $2 Scribner

22-22699

Twelve short stories, of which the title is perfectly descriptive. Each one reveals the valor of some soul at a moment of tense drama or of moral victory. The appeal of the stories is more intellectual than emotional. Contents: An honest man; Habakkuk; Miss Marriott and the faun; Martin's Hollow; The knight's move; Blue Bonnet; East of Eden; Sea green; The penalties of Artemis; Lonquieu's third act; The toad and the jewel; Belshazzar's letter.

Booklist 19:158 F '23

Bookm 56:624 Ja '23 320w

"Here is a collection of stories whose subjects are thoroughly abreast of the times. They are told with that vigor of 'intellectual integrity' that will make them live, we cannot but believe, long after their themes have passed into the commonplace." L. H. G.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 23 '22 400w

"Clever, subtle, brilliant—these are the adjectives which come to one's mind on closing Mrs. Gerould's new book. All through there is a certain hard, even brittle quality; many of her characters are interesting, but not one of them is lovable. Very well written, very well constructed; many of the characters are real people, and the book has the merit, none too common, of appealing to the intelligence of the reader."

+ Int Bk R p63 D '22 1050w

GEROULD, KATHARINE—Continued

"Reading these stories together and sorting them, we can but feel that we have profitably traversed a territory which is clearly the author's own proper bailiwick, whether or not it chances to appeal to us as a salubrious or fruitful country for permanent residence." H. W. Boynton

Lit R p347 D 30 '22 800w

"If you can get over your irritation at being lengthily edified, you will find here rather robust story telling, somewhat hindered, it is true, by discursiveness and a style like stiff plush." C: Trueblood

+ — Nation 116:152 F 7 '23 250w

"It should be a welcome book to all who are jealous for the good repute of American literature, for one feels in its stories the sure hand, the authentic note, the convincing touch of the student of life, the trained artist and the born story-teller."

+ N Y Times p14 N 26 '22 550w

Outlook 133:320 F 14 '23 80w

"Represents the best that Mrs Gerould has written for the past six years. The book is cleverly named out of Shakespeare. It suggests at once certain characteristics of the stories therein."

+ Springfield Republican p7a Ja 7 '23 450w

Wis Lib Bul 19:26 Ja '23

GIBBON, MURIEL MORGAN. Pharisees. 338p $1.75 Doubleday [7s 6d Hutchinson]

22-5369

"The scene is, except for some chapters whose action is transferred to London, in the South of Wales. The story is partly taken up with the development of a young fellow not lacking in talent but oversupplied with temperament, sensitive to his surroundings and liking to have his human contacts comfortable. David is the name of the weak young man, and David's engagement to one girl and his sudden marriage to another, the devotion of a fine young farmer with a passion for books and a longing for some means of self-expression to the young wife, the manly love and loyalty of another upstanding young Welshman for the girl who loved David and was left in the lurch, make an interesting complication in human emotions and in motives for consequent action."—N Y Times

"While this is distinctly a psychological novel, with the strongest emphasis laid on the development of the characters, it is not exhaustively analytical. Miss Gibbon sketches lightly, her portrayals are appealing, suggestive, and skilful, but not vital or gripping. Her touch is too light for her material. But she is a good craftsman, and she has produced an eminently readable novel."

+ Lit R p534 Mr 25 '22 220w

"The author does not always sufficiently motivate the actions of her people, but, if one is generously minded, that may be attributed to their Welsh temperament. All the characters are refreshingly vital and distinctive in their personalities, and the story as a whole is written with noteworthy charm of manner."

+ — N Y Times p19 Mr 12 '22 430w

Spec 18:246 F 25 '22 60w

"Her story is by no means lacking in dramatic incident, but her narrative suffers from a certain devious and disconnected quality."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p62 Ja 26 '22 160w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. Introduction to world politics. (Century political science ser.) 595p $4 Century

327 World politics. Diplomacy 22-13337

"The narrative of this century during which world politics has been the guiding force in the destinies of nations has a fascination that is not to be gainsaid. Following the various threads spun by the conflicting foreign policies whisks us from one end of the world to the other and back again. We witness... [finally] the explosion that blew to bits four imperial régimes and left the whole world shaken—and wondering whether the system of world politics itself had not been shattered by the cataclysm: then the gradual picking up the old guide ropes at Versailles, St. Germain, Trianon, Neuilly, Sévres, after the failure to establish a permanent clearing house in the League of Nations; finally, the 'continuation conferences' from London to Genoa—punctuated in the midst by the exclamation point at Washington—and the realization that in the atmosphere of world politics we still live and move and have our national being. It is to this vast drama that Dr. Gibbons affords us an introduction."—Lit R

"Readable his story is, and uncommonly interesting; although if the book is to be considered as a work of history, Mr. Gibbons has done better work before. Parts of the book are somewhat superficial, and lacking in imagination; and one cannot help questioning some of Mr. Gibbons' conclusions. It is not a great book. But is well worth reading." F. B. Sayre

+ — Am Pol Sci R 17:117 F '23 900w

Booklist 19:36 N '22

"Dr. Gibbons's book is notable for the thoroughness of its presentation and for a scientifically objective attitude that makes intelligible the actions of Germany and others during the World War."

+ Bookm 56:106 S '22 160w

"Attention to the growth of peoples and how, through ages of vicissitude, they have got along or fallen out with each other, brings a good deal of ordinary history into this informing and well-written volume. But the material selected does not run along conventional lines: the facts are marshalled for a special purpose, and it is in his utilization of them that Dr. Gibbons shows a grasp of the larger world movements they reveal, which is rare in contemporary writers." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 26 '22 1000w

"An excellent summary of what, expanded, would require a hundred volumes." G. E. Porter

+ Lit R p885 Ag 19 '22 1200w

"Mr. Gibbons honorably employs the same weights and measures for all the participants in world politics: this is his first great merit, the merit of temper; besides, he distinguishes himself by a solid method which consists in resting his determinations on the proved acts and not on the hollow professions of governments. Against the profitable amplification which results from Mr. Gibbons's method must be set a serious drawback. This appears the moment he turns from his narrative of facts to a discussion of remedies. For, deftly exposing from the first page the crying evils which have culminated in the existing chaos, he fairly obliges himself to point out a way of escape from our intolerable plight. In the concluding chapter on the Washington Conference may be found practically all that he has to offer on the reconstruction of foreign policy. And that amounts to very little, in fact so little that in a book which wishes to be accepted as, in some sort, a manual of World Politics, it creates a positive effect of triviality." Ferdinand Schevill

+ — New Repub 33:sup2 N 29 '22 1100w

"One of the soundest and most illuminating treatises about international relations that have yet been written, though no especial brilliance of style or parade of conclusions signalizes this fact. The excellence of the author's point of view and general method may perhaps best be indicated by saying that no writer has more successfully than he digested his economic determinism. This doctrine makes him, as it were, cynical as regards the past, yet leaves him rationally hopeful. This is as it should be."

+ — Ho Am 216:568 O '22 800w

Wis Lib Bul 18:251 N '22

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. House of Mohun. 356p
$2 Appleton

22-12893

This story is apparently a defence of the rising generation, and especially of flapperdom. Cherry Mohun has all the marks of her time and type, but when faced by adversity, her qualities of honesty, independence and confidence, somewhat arrogantly used in the days of her pride, prove her salvation. It is the tale of a nouveau riche family—the father a successful promoter, the mother an equally successful social climber, the children left to go their own unrestrained ways. When the crash comes it is the lovely young Cherry who takes its brunt, who proves the mainstay of her sick father, who bolsters up her weak mother and finds a way for herself out of the ruin.

"Marks a high note in the work of Mr. Gibbs. For the first time the story is entirely subjugated to character modeling, though it suffers from the author's usual trouble, that he does not make all his characters alive. Though the plot is of minor consideration, it is delightful, because [it] is not a plot at all, merely the story of what happens. The people are not 'framed' to make a book, nor 'railroaded' into situations they otherwise would not occupy. Here we see the touch of power which makes us look forward to Mr. Gibbs's next book."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 J1 15 '22 640w

Lit R p205 N 11 '22 120w

"Most of the personages in the novel are of rather conventional types, but the author gives to each one a freshening, individual touch. And the story as a whole makes pleasant reading for a Summer day."

+ — N Y Times p21 J1 9 '22 400w

"The story appeared as a magazine serial, and conforms to the Median-Persian magazine standards of style, which means an agreeable mediocrity." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p4 J1 9 '22 350w

"Commonplace in its picture of the flapper girl tamed by adversity, and decidedly padded in its conversations."

— Outlook 131:534 J1 26 '22 20w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

GIBSON, CHARLES ROBERT. Romance of coal. 310p il $2.50 Lippincott [6s Seeley, Service]

553.2 Coal

The book is a general survey of a large subject. It covers the geological formation of coal, its varieties and industrial uses, also the methods of coal mining and safety appliances used, the chemistry of coal and its by-products.

"Mr. Gibson has taken the trouble to go down a coal-mine in quest of local colour, and describes what he saw more vividly, perhaps, than a mining engineer to whom it had become hackneyed would do."

+ Sat R 134:926 D 16 '22 70w

"Not only does Mr. Gibson deal with the actual mining in a popular though interesting fashion, but he also describes some of the chief effects that 'coal-power' has had upon our civilization, both for good and evil."

+ Spec 129:977 D 23 '22 80w

"It is quite a readable account, but [Mr. Gibson] might have been better advised if he had stuck more closely to his last, even if he had been obliged to sacrifice antiquarian and rather tedious details."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p824 D 7 '22 220w

GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON. Krindlesyke. 133p $1.75 (6s) Macmillan

822

"Krindlesyke is a lonely shepherd's cottage on the Northumbrian fells, and within its walls Mr. Gibson has staged a dramatic chronicle. Through four scenes, covering a space of more than twenty years, he has traced for us the dreary, reiterated destiny of a peasant family 'from one generation to another,' a family rude and pitiful as the solitude in which they are set. His book is not a drama; it is rather an evocation through the Barrasford family of primitive life in its instinctive tragedy and incompleteness. . . . There is as little startling or various incident in Mr. Gibson's chronicle as in peasant life itself. It is a tale of lust and love and death and mean bickerings, of wild life in perpetual revolt against the bonds of labour and solitude."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 19:152 F '23

"It abounds in long conversations that are occasionally illuminating, occasionally monotonous and dreary; but it presents a vivid if gruesome picture, and probes down into dark and rarely fathomed caverns of character."

Dial 74:106 Ja '23 70w

"Only in the broadest sense of the term can it be called a play at all. None the less, it is highly effective. The characters, with their rough ways and rougher conversation, stand out vividly before us; the situations are real and are depicted with dramatic power and intensity; and the dark background of the mountain overshadows us at all times as a fitting accompaniment to the action." S. A. Cohlentz

+ Lit R p432 F 3 '23 700w

"The plot serves its main end of giving adequate room for the eternal, twofold conflict—of age against youth, roadside against fireside—which is the keynote of the whole. The real weakness lies in the extravagant verbosity in which the action is smothered." F. L. L.

+ — New Statesman 20:116 O 23 '22 1000w

"Many of the speeches occupy an entire page, a long-windedness proving a hindrance in reading, as well, causing both action and interest to lag. Despite, however, profuseness and constructive weakness, the frequent beauty of the lines, and often vivid characterizations make a reading of the play distinctly worth while."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ja 7 '23 300w

Reviewed by Djuna Barnes

N Y Tribune p25 Ja 28 '23 1160w

"'Krindlesyke' is too fine a production to be spoiled by that is after all an affectation, an excessive virtuosity. We would suggest to Mr. Gibson a revision of the poem in which only sufficient dialect words of such dark meanings were retained as discreetly to produce his atmosphere."

+ — Sat R 134:842 D 2 '22 780w

"A notable but imperfect achievement of the sympathetic imagination."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p627 O 5 '22 1550w

realization larger and finer than anything that has been indicated in Mr. Gibson's previous work."

+ Theatre Arts M 7:84 Ja '23 80w

GIDDINGS, FRANKLIN HENRY. Studies in the theory of human society. 308p $3 Macmillan

301 Sociology

22-4338

A collection of studies rather than a consecutive treatise. Professor Giddings's keen analysis of social processes has neither the form nor the formality of a text. In the first section he traces the development of culture thru the ages and the history of social theory. An analytical section discusses the concepts and problems involved in the ideas of social order and progress. In the synthetic section the author expands his theory of pluralistic behavior and propounds a list of yet unanswered questions for the student of human society.

"Some of Professor Giddings' keenest thinking is to be found in this collection of essays. To those who are laying the foundations of the future science of sociology method and classification seem to be of transcendent importance, and this volume makes first rate contributions

GIDDINGS, FRANKLIN HENRY—Continued to the philosophy of both these subjects. In this respect the author is in line with the best quantitative tendencies." L. L. Bernard
+ Am J Soc 28:231 S '22 800w

Am Pol Sci R 17:140 F '23 50w

Bookm 55:538 JI '22 60w

Boston Transcript p7 My 6 '22 820w

Nature 110:571 O 28 '22 150w

"His method is somewhat discursive, and he inclines at times to garrulity, while the form of the book lends to repetitions which are occasionally wearisome. Professor Giddings is, however, an acute observer as well as a very learned student; and particularly in some of the later chapters he has new and important things to say."

+ — New Statesman 19:522 Ag 12 '22 130w

"Only his fellow-sociologists are competent to appreciate its purely technical merits and to discuss the validity of Professor Giddings' own contributions to the science. But the plain man who is in the habit of doing his own thinking will find this book suggestive and stimulating. It is a book intended for the more intelligent part of the general public. Those for whom it is intended will find that it can be read with pleasure and returned to with profit. It tells us many things that we all need to know; and it supplies abundant food for thought, not pre-digested but demanding mental mastication." Brander Matthews

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 16 '22 2000w

"Serious students will be richly rewarded by a careful reading of this book."

+ R of Rs 66:447 O '22 60w

"The book is decidedly not one for beginners."

Survey 48:56 Ap 8 '22 90w

GIDE, CHARLES. Consumers' co-operative societies; tr. from the French by the staff of the Co-operative reference library, Dublin. 287p $2.50 Knopf [8s 6d Unwin]

334 Cooperation

22-23787

This American edition of the English translation of Professor Gide's book has been adapted to the needs of the American student of cooperation by its editor, Cedric Long, by several additions and changes. The additions consist in an introduction and opening chapter by James P. Warbasse. The latter points out that the book answers the question: "Can the people conduct their own business effectively or must they eternally look to private profit-making interests or to the impersonal state to do it for them?" In his opening chapter he outlines the history and the present status of cooperation in America. The translated portion gives the history, object and program of the movement and deals with the various practical problems involved. Index.

"The book is a keen, critical study of the movement in its physical aspects. The well-balanced, almost detached, point of view and the readable style reminds one somewhat of the writings of our own John Graham Brooks, who comes near to making sociology as absorbing as fiction." Albert Sonnichsen

+ Nation 116:20 Ja 3 '23 550w

New Repub 33:48 D 6 '22 400w

R of Rs 67:112 Ja '23 80w

GILBERT, BERNARD. Old England. 297p $5 Small [20s Collins]

821

(Eng ed 22-12928)

"It would never have been written unless Mr. Masters had written 'Spoon River Anthology,' but the acknowledgment to that work is slight and inadequate. Mr. Gilbert chronicles the thoughts of nearly two hundred inhabitants of an imaginary English village at a single moment of an afternoon during the War. Each villager, from the Lord of the Manor to the poacher, utters his thoughts in a kind of free verse. Intrigues, political rivalries and hatreds are disclosed, and the industry and ingenuity of the author are manifest. It is oddly supplemented by a map of the village, by a 'Who's Who' and even by genealogical trees of these imaginary families!"—Ind

"It is both laborious and clever, but it is not, like 'Spoon River Anthology,' a work of genius." E. L. Pearson

+ — Ind 108:118 F 4 '22 140w

"The sub-title of Mr. Gilbert's book is 'A God's-eye View of a Village.' It is, however, important to bear in mind the fact that Mr. Gilbert is not God, and this unfortunate deficiency on his part vitiates his attempt from the outset; so much so, indeed, that judged by the aspirations of the Preface, it must be pronounced a failure."

— Nation and Ath 30:804 F 25 '22 180w

"Mr. Gilbert has attempted a task far beyond his powers. He has no great insight into character, and his verse, whether free or rhymed, is lacking in any sort of distinction."

— New Statesman 18:426 Ja 14 '22 800w

N Y Times p15 Ag 6 '22 700w

Reviewed by R. W. Brink

N Y Tribune p24 D 10 '22 1150w

"Mr. Bernard Gilbert has succeeded in a difficult and exacting task. . . It is a most interesting piece of work."

+ Sat R 132:669 D 10 '21 330w

"Mr. Bernard Gilbert's Old England is so remarkable a book that we could wish he were less myopic, less hemmed in by the parish boundaries of the suburban psychoanalyst. We leave the village of Fletton with the feeling that in Old England we have been cheated out of a great book."

+ — Spec 128:626 My 20 '22 1200w

"It is a pity that Mr. Gilbert has surrounded with so much misrepresentation and wooden unreality a few pieces of powerful verse, among which the apologia of Nathaniel Dodds, 'what built yon chapel,' has a fierce pre-eminence. It is a pity that he should have crowded almost every hue of courage and joy out of his large canvas, to make room for events which when they do happen are extraordinary; to caricature, not even to satirize, an English village."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p807 D 8 '21 1350w

GILBERT, CLINTON WALLACE. Behind the mirrors; (the psychology of disintegration at Washington. 236p il $2.50 Putnam

328.73 United States—Politics and government. Statesmen, American. United States—Congress 22-14134

The author of the "Mirrors of Washington" takes a look, this time behind the mirrors, to find the political psychology and tendencies to account for our present brand of political personality from the President, through Cabinet and Congress. The criticism is caustic, as in his previous volume, and the book is aimed toward exposing the incapacity, the absurdity even, of many of the men who hold the places of power. Senator Borah almost alone comes in for praise as the "most potent single individual in the upper house,—the most nearly free man in Washington."

"Lacks many of the qualities which made The Mirrors of Washington so successful. Here and there are found a few clever thrusts and some interesting light is thrown upon the activities of the agricultural bloc."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 16:727 N '22 150w

Booklist 19:17 O '22

Bookm 56:232 O '22 100w

"The author of 'Behind the Mirrors' only makes us yawn. He comments during the impersonal parts of his book on the fact that politically we are nowhere, that we are without definite purpose and, to make use of an expressive modern characterization, that 'we don't know where we're going but we're on our way.' All this is very sad and some of it very true, but the vaporings of an irresponsible journalist will not give us pause." S. L. C.

— Boston Transcript p5 Ag 2 '22 1000w

Cath World 116:570 Ja '23 250w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Ind 109:22 J1 22 '22 420w

"'Behind the Mirrors' is a seductive title, connoting a journey to some such wonderland as Alice discovered via the looking glass. Instead it is for the most part a dry, discursive, and rather unconvincing bit of commonplace iconoclasm, relieved only occasionally by flashes of incisive comment, or characterization." H. P. Stokes

— Lit R p822 J1 22 '22 1300w

"A comparative study of this book and of the 'Mirrors of Washington' shows a certain improvement in the essential thesis of this second book and a manifest falling off in cleverness. There is a great deal of impudence in this succeeding volume, some wisdom and the garnered result of a great deal of experience in the Senate and House such as some skillful newspaper men who are not greatly in the centre of things manage to pick out. It is an amusing book, mainly because its humor is unconscious." M. F. Egan

— N Y Times p10 J1 16 '22 2450w

"The fault of the book lies in its length. In its general plan it is not concise. The author repeats; he wastes pages in elaboration of a point which would not need elaboration did he give his readers credit for ordinary intelligence. But on the whole it is an extraordinary and valuable book. It is sane and witty, clever and penetrating, and it is written from the point of view of a man who is acquainted with the philosophy of history and literature of social thought. It will please and irritate and it will provoke a healthy interest in affairs at Washington." Burton Rascoe

+ — N Y Tribune p5 J1 9 '22 1700w

Pratt p9 autumn '22

St Louis 20:275 N '22

"The author undertakes to prick many bubbles of American political conceit and illusion. That, if honestly gone about, is a laudable business. There are many bubbles in our politics which need pricking. But the close reader, mindful of gross inaccuracies in his first book and noting others in the second, mindful also of too evident malice in both books, is forced to turn the pages in constant doubt of the author's intellectual integrity. The fundamental fault with the book is in the standard which the author employs in measuring public men. Exactly what that standard is it is impossible to say; one only knows that they all fail."

— Springf'd Republican p7a S 3 '22 1750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p731 N 9 '22 90w

GILLIARD, PIERRE. Thirteen years at the Russian court; tr. by F. Appleby Holt. 304p il $6 Doran [24s Hutchinsonson]

914.7 Russia—Court and courtiers 22-4092

The book consists of the reminiscences of a former tutor to the czarévitch who was intimately connected with the imperial family and accompanied them into exile, remaining with them till the last imprisonment before their massacre. He gives a very human picture of the family life, of the characters of the czar and czarina, and throws much light on the circumstances leading to Rasputin's power over the latter. The book bears the imprint of impartiality and truthfulness. It is profusely illustrated.

Bookm 55:428 Je '22 70w

Boston Transcript p6 My 10 '22 1200w

"He writes some fantastic footnotes to history. His intimate picture of the Czar and his family in captivity is of special interest."

Nation and Ath 30:732 F 11 '22 170w

"This volume lacks only an index to be admirable, in the sense that it gives accurate information. The author's facts are well documented." M. F. Egan

+ N Y Times p3 My 14 '22 1300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:299 Je '22

St Louis 20:126 Je '22

"He writes simply and without effort, and his book gives the reader the impression of being a perfectly honest record. M. Gilliard was evidently devoted to his pupils, and the 'personal memories' which he records give a charming picture of their 'extreme simplicity, candour, freshness and instinctive kindness of heart."

+ Sat R 133:39 Ja 14 '22 900w

"With the captivity in Tsarskoe-Selo the pathos of the story deepens. Family affection and religious devotion sweetened the last hours; and they are touchingly described by one whose affectionate loyalty never failed towards the fallen Imperial house."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p847 D 15 '21 140w

GILMAN, BRADLEY. Roosevelt, the happy warrior. 376p il $3.50 Little

B or 92 Roosevelt, Theodore 21-19777

"A biography written by one of his classmates at Harvard. It makes no attempt to be anything but a friendly, eulogistic story of the life told with many anecdotes and comments by the author to whom his subject is indeed 'the happy warrior.'"—Booklist

"Although the book contains little that is new, it is written from a new angle and is interesting throughout."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:343 My '22 50w

Booklist 18:118 Ja '22

"If one were to characterize truly this [book], he might perhaps call it a 'life by anecdote.' A few of the anecdotes have been told before, and are well worthy of re-telling; many of them are wholly new to the reader, and afford an excellent view of the character of the man." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 26 '21 1400w

"He has not sought to portray at much length the public measures of Roosevelt's far-flung strenuous career, but the book is very personal, and, informal in style, it includes many new anecdotes, incidents, and reminiscences. It was obviously written to give loyal friendship an opportunity to express itself. The word 'classmate' occurs on almost every page." Z. V. Walser

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 Mr 12 '22 1500w

"A most pleasingly made book, this, from the manufacturing standpoint—clear type, broad margins, interesting illustrations. We only wish the text had kept pace."

+ — Lit D p37 D 24 '21 130w

"The biographer's analysis of his hero's motives and deeds is done in a dispassionate, judicial way that is both admirable and convincing. While he draws liberally on other biographers, he is original in going back of the anecdote used to trace the psychology or ethics of the Colonel's acts. While he never wavers in his admiration, his portrait of Roosevelt is truer because he does not try to make his hero consistent at every stage of his career." Daniel Henderson

+ — Lit R p653 My 13 '22 560w

Outlook 130:271 F 15 '22 100w

GILMORE, MELVIN RANDOLPH. Prairie smoke. 2d rev ed 80p $1.50 Tribune co., Bismarck, N.D.

970.1 Indians of North America—Legends 22-8049

The curator of the State historical society of North Dakota has made a study of the Indians of the Missouri River region, learning from them about their plants and animals, their myths, stories, traditions and customs, and preserving this lore in the present volume, which is issued as a second revised edition. Dr. Gilmore claims that "these myths of the country in which we live are at least equal in beauty and interest to the myths of the Greeks, and to the old Teutonic myths of Thor, Odin, and Freya; or even to our own old British myths, which we have from our Druidic ancestors." The book is adapted to supplementary reading not only in the schools of North Dakota but in schools elsewhere.

GILMORE, MELVIN RANDOLPH—Continued

"The book contains a wealth of Indian lore not only of use throughout the school system but also to adults interested in the subject. Dr. Gilmore's natural clearness of diction and simplicity of style makes an appeal to all ages and is understood by young and old." M. E. Downey (director of the state library commission of North Dakota).

St Louis 20:210 S '22

GINSBERG, MORRIS. Psychology of society. 174p $2.50 Dutton [5s Methuen]

301 Social psychology (Eng ed 22-8129)

After having examined the relation that instinct and impulse bear to reason and will in the psychology of the individual, the author considers their function in society as a network of interrelated individuals, and points out the differences existing between the individual as an organism and society as an organism. The object is to show that social institutions do contain rational and purposive elements, that reason is the very life of the whole social process and that on it depends the discovery of conditions for the harmonious development of personality and society. Bibliography and index.

"The discussion throughout the work is free from the extreme views which characterize those writers who seem much more anxious to be recognized as making original contributions than discovering the truth. The author knows the ablest and sanest writers in the field of social psychology, and he clearly understands the real contributions they have made. Students of social psychology will find the work very valuable."

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 23 '22 390w

"The aim of the author is successfully achieved and the book should be of great use to students in economics and political science as well as to historians." C. D. Burns

+ Int J Ethics 33:111 O '22 400w

"It is a good little book, though a bit too hopeful in the final victory of common sense, and certainly much too small for the scope of the title. Mr. Ginsberg clears social psychology from gratuitous presuppositions, but he does not even touch upon the actual field of social psychology, which, according to his own view, deals with the fortunes of human nature in society. Mr. Wallas's 'Great Society' is still the nearest to such a study we possess." B. Stolberg

+ Lit R p85 O 7 '22 900w

Reviewed by Austin Hay
N Y Times p5 O 8 '22 300w

"This is an excellent, lucid, and important critical consideration of the various theories which have been put forward in connexion with the subject matter of what is now generally specialised as the Science of Social Psychology."

+ Sat R 132:646 D 3 '21 240w

GINZBERG, ASHER (ACHAD HA-AM. pseud.).
Ten essays on Zionism and Judaism; tr. by Leon Simon. 256p $2.50 Dutton [6s Routledge] 296 Zionism. Jews

The author of these essays is a well-known Hebrew thinker whose writings have helped much toward the shaping of the Zionist movement. The essays, eight of which deal with some aspect of Zionism, form a series which will enable the reader to follow the history of the movement. The first of the essays was written some thirty years ago in the early days of the Jewish national movement and before the name Zionism had been applied to it. The last of the eight records his impressions of the practical results of Zionism in Palestine up to 1911.

"Mr. Ginsberg's Hebrew essays deserve attention because they show that to one learned and influential Jew at least the methods of the Zionist organization in Palestine seem to be open to serious criticism."

+ Spec 127:895 D 31 '21 1250w

"The essays serve as an able statement of the idealism guided by a stern apprehension of realities which has throughout characterized Mr. Ginzberg's Zionism."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p863 D 22 '21 160w

GIVLER, ROBERT CHENAULT. Psychology: the science of human behavior. 382p il $3 Harper

150 Psychology 22-13110

The book undertakes to supply such knowledge of psychology as will enable an individual to employ his mind to the greatest possible advantage. Throughout the author stresses the interrelationship between psychology and physiology and maintains that mind, dependent on bodily activities, is in the last analysis action, and psychology the science of human activity which is a combination of physical, chemical, and electrical energies developed by the nerves, muscles and glands of the human organism. The book concerns itself principally with normal human psychology and its applications to the various interests of human life.

"Mr. Givler employs humor and a goodly seasoning of comprehension of the average reader's limitations."

+ Bookm 56:512 D '22 60w

Boston Transcript p7 S 9 '22 620w

Reviewed by B. Stolberg

Lit R p85 O 7 '22 420w

Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

GLASGOW, ELLEN ANDERSON GHOLSON.

One man in his time. 379p $2 Doubleday

The scene of the story is Richmond, Virginia, after the Great war, in the midst of the old, conservative pre-Civil war aristocracy. One Gideon Vetch, born in a circus tent, but with a magnetic personality that has brought him leadership, has been elected governor. There is a sharp line of demarcation between the old and the new and it is the thoughtful few who have broken the ranks, in their realization of the inevitableness of change, who create the dramatic situation. Of this the features are: the humanity of Gideon Vetch, the vivid personality of his little daughter Patty, so keenly conscious of her position as social misfit, and the clear sighted courage and nobility of the blue-bloods Stephen Culpeper and his cousin Corinna. It is with the help of the mature judgment of Corinna that Stephen regains his nervous balance, lost in France, and finds the courage of his love for Patty.

Booklist 18:366 J1 '22

"Miss Glasgow has followed the lines of least resistance, and has given her readers a little of almost everything in the way of psychology, sociology, politics, religion and ethics. She should be thanked, however, for not forgetting to tell her story in a manner that discloses her as more expert in the matter of style than as a maker of plots or the writer of an enlightening novel on the ways and manners of this changing world." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 31 '22 780w

Cleveland p50 Ag '22

"Though it is not in the class with some of her earlier works, it is an interesting study of present conditions which have affected both individuals and the country at large."

Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 J1 23 '22 270w

Lit D p46 J1 15 '22 820w

"In this latest novel from her pen Miss Glasgow still rises above the 'deadly levels,' but unfortunately not far enough above them to command more than passing notice. . . Miss Glasgow has it in her to do better work than this book."

— Lit R p771 J1 1 '22 580w

"The melodrama of the plot hurts a charming piece of local color which contains many significant comments upon the mood and temper of the times." Carl Van Doren

+ — Nation 115:sup377 O 11 '22 180w

"Miss Glasgow's style, fastidious, polished, as richly colored and many faced as some splendid jewel, serves her well in this portrayal of changing conditions, of the desire, nervous rather than mental, to go, go somewhere, with little or no idea as to what that somewhere may be, which she sees as the very essence of the modern spirit, restless, crude, undisciplined, but adventurous and alive and full of possibilities, frequently expressing itself in dissonances, but never sinking into the apathy of silence. The book as a whole is one of those rare, stimulating novels which tempt not only to comment and quotation, but to a far more extensive discussion." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p2 My 28 '22 1450w

"She has accomplished the feat of remaining as faithful to her background as any Thomas Nelson Page, while steadily acquiring toward it an attitude shrewdly critical. She paints with warmth and fullness the atmospheric conventions and still active traditions of her scene, but plays the bitter lights of irony and glamorous pathos upon the people who confront life with only such defenses as those conventions and traditions can supply." Hunter Staggs

+ N Y Tribune p6 My 21 '22 680w

"She studies human relationships with an air of criticism, of allowance; she is very clever—more than clever, subtle; but there is a consciousness, I could almost say a condescension, in the manner. We do not get her story direct; we are kept in our place and told the story." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 134:355 S 2 '22 170w

"Miss Glasgow, with her enduring patience of creation, her fine sympathy, her lifelong concentration upon Anglo-Saxon trait and character as exemplified in the people of the South, her remoteness from the sentimental, her true and lofty realism, has added one more to the books of outstanding excellence that one needs to know in order to know the ideals that have entered into—and perhaps are disappearing from—the life of America." R. W. N.

+ Springfield Republican p7a J1 9 '22 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 J1 27 '22 140w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 J1 '22

GLAZE BROOK, SIR RICHARD TETLEY, ed.
Dictionary of applied physics. 5v v 1-2 1067;
1104p il ea $15 (63s) Macmillan
v 1 Mechanics; Engineering; Heat
v 2 Electricity

530.3 Physics—Dictionaries (22-11438)

"Encyclopedic work of very wide scope; the first treatise in English to attempt a comprehensive survey of this field. Consists largely of monographs by recognized authorities, but is cross indexed under specific subjects." (Pittsburgh Mo Bul) The main topics and cross references in each volume are arranged alphabetically. For example Dr T. E. Stanton treats of Friction in a sixty-three-page article; while under the headings, Dynamical similarity, Rolling, Slipping of belts, Viscosity, etc., the reader is referred to the several sections of Dr Stanton's article where these specific divisions of the subject are discussed. The monographs are signed with the initials of the contributor, and a list of these contributors is given at the beginning. There is also a complete index to authorities quoted.

Booklist 19:71 D '22 (Review of v 1-2)

Canadian Engineer p614 Je 13 '22 1/2col
(Review of v 1)

"This important work is a welcome and valuable addition to the reference resources of the physicist, the engineer, the manufacturer, and all interested in the applications of physical science in the arts and industries. It is undoubtedly the most valuable work in its field in the English language." L. F. Wheeler

+ Lit R p178 N 4 '22 1200w (Review of v 1-2)

Nature 110:595 N 4 '22 1700w (Review of v 2)

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:35 J1 '22 (Review of v 2)

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:486 N '22 (Review of v 1)

St Louis 20:297 D '22

"The book is admirably planned and the separate articles are thoroughly scientific in treatment."

+ Spec 128:628 My 20 '22 380w (Review of v 1)

Spec 129:504 O 14 '22 40w (Review of v 2)

GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY. Progress in religion to the Christian era. 350p $2 Doran
[10s 6d Student Christian movement]

290 Religion—History 22-23724

"A series of popular lectures which attempt to show how religion among the Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans in pre-Christian times exhibits three principal stages of evolution that are designated as Magic, Morality, and Personal Religion."—J Religion

Booklist 19:143 F '23

J Religion 2:654 N '22 30w

"A notable book." W. G. S.

Nation and Ath 32:125 O 21 '22 1100w

New Statesman 20:216 N 18 '22 250w

St Louis 21:4 Ja '23

"Mr. Glover has done a useful and important work. It is needless to say that he has done it in a temper at once scholarly and religious; to few writers does religion owe so great a debt."

+ Spec 129:sup534 O 21 '22 720w

"At heart Dr. Glover is a religious teacher. He writes history, just as he uses classical scholarship, with a purpose; and that purpose is the vindication of the Christian valuation of human life. Yet he cannot be accused of special pleading. He certainly does not re-write history with an ecclesiastical bias, neither does he prefer bad scholarship to good. In fact, there are many who will be disturbed by his frank acceptance in the present volume of modern critical conclusions with regard to early Hebrew records. The scholar triumphs over the partisan; truth is more important than creed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p678 O 26 '22 1600w

GLYN, ELINOR (SUTHERLAND) (MRS CLAYTON GLYN). Man and maid. 334p $2
Lippincott [7s 6d Duckworth]

22-10545

"Sir Nicholas Thormonde, who tells his own story, is a lover with something of the fire and masterfulness of Mrs. Glyn's earlier heroes. But he has been badly damaged in the war; and living, a rich bachelor, in his rooms in Paris, while shells from Bertha fall around him, he wears a little of Suzette, Coralie, and the rest of them, and finds 'Miss Sharp,' his new, prim, icy, and shabby secretary, with her horn spectacles, very restful. The sequel is almost too obvious; the only problem is the real identity of Miss Sharp. She is discovered, of course, to be of noble parentage."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Boston Transcript p6 Je 24 '22 1500w

"Altogether an interesting study, and much superior to Mrs. Glyn's previous books. More care in proof reading would have erased a number of small aggravating mistakes. For instance, the great French Marshal is each time styled: Foche, and there are other errors of spelling and even grammar."

GLYN, ELINOR—Continued

+ — Daily News Rec p9 J1 5 '22 370w

"'Man and Maid,' dealing with Paris at the time of the armistice, a time when a suffering world was already beginning to let its ideals slip, will certainly do nothing to bring back those ideals, but perhaps it will equally do nothing to lower them. Certainly it is without strength to make any lasting impress and if the reader remembers it at all beyond the reading, it can only be as one remembers the countless bits of ugliness that one must encounter all through life, which when one cannot prevent them, are allowed to drop as quickly as may be out of the conscious mind." M. T. Hamilton

— Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p2 J1 23 '22 450w

Lit D p56 S 23 '22 600w

Lit R p827 J1 22 '22 100w

"Summer is theoretically the silly season, which no doubt is why it was chosen as the most nearly suitable time for the publication of such a production as 'Man and Maid.'"

— N Y Times p26 Je 11 '22 280w

"There is an inexhaustible public for conventional love-stories, especially where the characters are titled and rich; so that 'Man and Maid,' which is quite luscious and lively, should sell readily."

+ — Sat R 133:499 My 13 '22 360w

Spec 128:663 My 27 '22 90w

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 30 '22 500w

"The story makes agreeable reading, and though it is not so good as 'The Career of Katherine Bush,' it shows again how much Mrs. Glyn has advanced in her art since her earliest ventures with their vapidities and scarlet passions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p246 Ap 13 '22 190w

GOETHE, JOHANN WOLFGANG VON. Goethe's literary essays; a selection in English arranged by Joel Elias Spingarn. 302p $2 Harcourt [9s Milford]

834 Literature. Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von 22-1472

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:181 Mr '22

"The task of collecting these admirable and valuable essays required a scholar. It found one in Professor Spingarn, to whom the lovers of the best in literature owe genuine gratitude for this volume."

+ Cath World 115:538 J1 '22 380w

Freeman 5:286 My 31 '22 2250w

"An excellent piece of work. The editor can be unreservedly commended for his selections."

+ Lit R p472 Mr 4 '22 340w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 28 '22 70w

"A good deal of what is here reprinted was never of more than ephemeral interest. . . . It would have been much wiser to give more of the Conversations and fewer of the critical articles. Some of the best things recorded by Eckermann are not given here—things of a hundred times the importance of most of these paltry journalistic notes. However, in spite of its defects, Mr. Spingarn's book has plenty of good stuff in it."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 16 '22 1600w

GOLDBERG, ISAAC. Brazilian literature; with a foreword by J. D. M. Ford. 303p $3 Knopf

869 Brazilian literature 22-21940

The book is a contribution to the centenary commemoration of Brazilian independence. Part one is an outline history of Brazilian literature, giving its racial and traditional background and its various phases from 1500 to the present. Part two is a series of critical essays on representative literary personalities: Castro Alves, Machado de Assis, José Verissimo, Olavo Bilac, Euclydes da Cunha, Oliveira Lima, Graga Aranha, Coelho Netto, Francisca Julia, and the newer writers. Selective bibliography, index.

Booklist 19:152 F '23

Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 40w

"Mr. Isaac Goldberg is an indefatigable co-operator with his South American colleagues in this task of making known the literatures of Latin America. To those who cannot consult the native oracles he performs the functions of a liaison officer. 'Brazilian Literature' does for Portuguese what he has already accomplished for Spanish." Ernest Boyd

+ Nation 115:527 N 15 '22 760w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:25 Ja '23

R of Rs 67:111 Ja '23 60w

St Louis 21:12 Ja '23

GOLDBERG, ISAAC, comp. and tr. Brazilian tales; tr. from the Portuguese. 149p $2 Four seas

22-2863

"A small collection of five stories and one short play, representing four Brazilian authors. Brief critical estimates of the writers are found in the preliminary remarks." (Booklist) Contents: The attendant's confession; The fortune-teller; Life, by J. M. Machado de Assis; The vengeance of Felix, by José Medeiros e Albuquerque; The pigeons, by Coelho Netto; Aunt Zeze's tears, by Carmen Dolores.

Booklist 18:238 Ap '22

"For those who enjoy unpleasant things well done, here are thrills, a bitter laugh, a gasp and a tear."

+ Bookm 55:202 Ap '22 60w

"'The Pigeons,' by Netto, and 'Aunt Zeze's Tears,' by Carmen Dolores, are the only stories in the book that may hope for a sympathetic welcome among the English reading public."

— + Cath World 115:844 S '22 180w

"Mr. Goldberg presents four writers who play delicate, exotic, and individual variations on motifs furnished by Poe. His choice is intelligent though somewhat arbitrary."

+ — Dial 72:536 My '22 160w

"As they stand, these tales seem rather angular and thin; and one is inclined to believe that this is not so much due to an intrinsic frailty in the stories themselves, as to the inability of the translator to catch some elusive quality in the originals. Even with this reservation, however, the book is a welcome piece or pioneering, opening a field which still remains largely unexplored by North American readers." L. B.

+ — Freeman 6:310 D 6 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:461 N '22

"A world-weariness and air of blasé unconcern with moral ideas is observable throughout these stories, and does much to convince a casual reader of their slight sincerity; they too obviously owe much to an old-world literature—are too imitative to be first rate."

— Springf'd Republican p7a Je 18 '22 360w

GOLDENWEISER, ALEXANDER A. Early civilization. 428p il $5 Knopf

572 Anthropology. Society, Primitive. Civilization 22-15632

The author, who is lecturer on anthropology and sociology at the New school for social research, New York, begins this introduction to anthropology with sketches of five primitive cultures: The Eskimos; the Tlingit and Haida of northwest America; the Iroquois matriarchate; the Uganda state; a central Australian community. In these five primitive societies are encountered all the aspects that characterize human civilization, including our own. Part two is a comparative study of the elements represented in these early civilizations: religion, art, social and political organization, industries, economic pursuits and ideas. In part three the author outlines and briefly criticises a few of the more important theories of primitive mentality, those of Spencer, Frazer, Wundt, Durkheim, Lévy-Bruhl and Freud.

"The volume is the first important effort to synthesize the assured achievements of the research of the present generation of critical anthropologists. While by no means as brilliantly written as the previous works of Tylor and Marett, the book is well arranged and the diction clear. To those historians who are interested in the development of civilization or in the laws and processes of cultural and social evolution Dr. Goldenweiser's work will prove a timely and indispensable aid." H. E. Barnes
+ Am Hist R 28:293 Ja '23 750w

Reviewed by W. C. Smith

+ Am J Soc 28:484 Ja '23 250w

"We can recommend this book to those who wish to obtain a good idea of the present position of sane anthropology."

+ Cath World 216:255 N '22 450w

"There is such an abundance of concrete material that the general reader is in no danger of being wearied by flights into the empyrean of speculation. Moreover, the descriptive passages reveal a deftness of touch that will render this Introduction as interesting to the general reader as to our college students, whose salient characteristics certainly do not include an abiding interest in abstract thought. No man could maintain so high a level of excellence throughout the whole domain of a vast subject, and it is small wonder if Dr. Goldenweiser falters in the course of his pilgrimage; yet on almost every topic he not merely sets forth the approved position of modern investigators, but succeeds in giving his statement some individual twist." R. H. Lowie
+ — Freeman 6:235 N 15 '22 2400w

"The work is opportune and most valuable."
A. M. Tozzer

+ Lit R p398 Ja 20 '23 450w

"He performs the service of overriding a number of hobbies which have had some vogue in the literature of anthropology, if not beyond it. But certainly not this merit is sufficient to justify the title of introduction to anthropology to a book for which the problems of the physical character and ethnical distribution of the branches of the human race are non-existent and in which there is no hint of the fascinating variety of things human nor any scale which can assess their values." Hartley Alexander
+ — Nation 115:sup628 D 6 '22 530w

"While the book is well organized and clearly written, the vocabulary is somewhat scientific and the treatment methodological and generalized. For this reason it is scarcely an ideal book for beginners in the study of anthropology or for introductory courses in undergraduate work in college. It has little of the intimacy and literary charm of Tylor's old manual or Marett's admirable little summary, and while it will be of infinite value to teachers and advanced students it can scarcely be hoped that it will popularize the newer anthropology. Throughout the book is well-balanced. The latest views on the origin of religion are well presented and the diversity of forms of early social organization clearly indicated." H. E. Barnes
+ — New Repub 33:sup7 N 29 '22 1600w

St Louis 20:297 D '22

GOLDIE, VALENTINE FRANCIS TAUBMAN.
See Taubman-Goldie, V. F.

GOLOVIN, H. Problem of the Pacific in the twentieth century; written in collaboration with Admiral A. D. Buhnov; tr. by C. Nabokoff; with an introd. by Harold Williams. 256p $3.50 Scribner [10s 6d Gyldehall]

327.52 Japan—Foreign relations. Eastern question (Far East)

"Here is a study of the relations between Japan and the rest of the world from the viewpoint of a military and political realist who has lately given to the problems of the Western Pacific involved in those relations intensive study upon the spot. General Golovin won distinction in the Russian Army in the period following the Russo-Japanese War. He was prominent among the fighting forces on varied Russian fronts during the World War and after the Bolshevik revolution and the breakup of the army he lived in obscurity in Odessa for several years. Afterward he was associated with the ill-fated efforts of Admiral Kolchak and General Denikin. Following the close of the war he spent many months in Siberia, Japan and other parts of the Western Pacific shores, and this book is the result of his study of the situation there."—N Y Times

Reviewed by H. C. Emery

Lit R p263 D 2 '22 720w

"General Golovin's book presents a clear exposition of present conditions, and, from the standpoint of the military theorist, it is cogently argued. But from the viewpoint of ordinary common sense and humanity it does not seem quite conclusive."

+ — N Y Times p24 D 17 '22 1300w

"This remarkable work is of the highest importance not only to students of the Far East, but to all who are interested in world-politics—that is, to everybody. Its main theme is the extremely strong position of Japan vis-à-vis the Western Powers, particularly the United States; it goes so far as to declare that Japan now occupies an impregnable position, and is unconquerable by America, even were the country aided by the British Empire."

+ Sat R 134:16 Jl 1 '22 1200w

Spec 129:89 Jl 15 '22 150w

"We must find much food for thought in this severely practical analysis of this absorbing world problem. The moral which the writer draws is that if nations refuse to remove the causes of war, they must revert to the ancient doctrine of the Balance of Power to render it impossible for their policy to be successfully challenged."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p386 Je 15 '22 2250w

GOOD, ALFRED A. Ford car, truck and tractor repair. 229p il $2 McGraw 629.2 Automobiles—Repairing 22-9750

"Attempts to explain 'the mechanical and electrical action of every unit of these machines.' The author was formerly director of the Ford Motor Company's Service School."
—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"To those who are their own worst mechanics the book will be valuable, with its detailed chapters, each one of which concludes with questions and answers."

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 2 '22 190w

"For the thousands who are inclined by nature to tinker or forced through circumstances to do their own repair work it has much information that will be of value. A careful study of this book will give the reader a greater respect for his Ford than he has had and far more pleasure in its proper maintenance than he is likely to get through experience. The facts that are necessary for a man to know who would repair or overhaul a Ford are given clearly and in a form that makes it easy to find what one is looking for."

+ Lit R p796 Jl 8 '22 130w

N Y P L Tech Bks 7:35 Jl '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:415 O '22

Pratt p20 winter '23

St Louis 20:213 S '22

GOODSPEED, THOMAS WAKEFIELD. University of Chicago biographical sketches. v 1 393p il $3 Univ. of Chicago press

920 Chicago university. Chicago—Biography. United States—Biography 22-10622

The book contains short sketches of the donors of the various funds, endowments, scholarships, etc. of the university and incidentally much about the early history of the city, as the subjects of the sketches were Chicago men vitally related to the beginnings and marvelous de-

GOODSPEED, THOMAS WAKEFIELD—Cont. v. 1. Development of Chicago. Contents: Marshall Field; William B. Ogden; E. Nelson Blake; Sidney A. Kent; George C. Walker; Charles J. Hull; Silas B. Cobb; Gustavus F. Swift; Charles Hitchcock; Joseph Reynolds; Nathaniel Colver; La Verne Noyes; Eli B. Williams and Hobart W. Williams; Joseph Bond; Frederick A. Smith; Hiram W. Thomas; John Crerar. Index.

Reviewed by F. L. Paxson

Am Hist R 28:170 O '22 320w

Boston Transcript p6 My 31 '22 980w

"Mr. Goodspeed has rescued from oblivion materials that would soon have been lost through the death of old men and women who remember the careers of these figures; and he made the most of the romance of the days when fortunes were being created from the virgin prairies and lakes. His biographies abound in illuminating anecdote. . . This volume is more than a contribution to the history of the university—it is a decided contribution to the history of Chicago and the Middle West and to the economic history of the country."

+ Lit R p860 Ag 5 '22 850w

"On the score of first-hand acquaintance with his material, Dr. Goodspeed was pre-eminent the man to undertake this task. But he is not an illuminating biographer. There is an accumulation of uninteresting detail which makes a conscientious study of the book a tedious operation. At the same time, a reader who has learnt the art of skipping will find this a really fascinating volume. It has a value of its own as a portrait gallery of the different types of men who built up the industrial greatness of the capital of the Middle West."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p526 Ag 17 '22 1100w

GOODWIN, CARDINAL LEONIDAS. Trans-Mississippi West (1803-1853): a history of its acquisition and settlement. 528p $3.50 Appleton

978 West—History. United States—Territorial expansion 22-13911

A history of the half century of acquisition and settlement of the territory west of the Mississippi, from the Louisiana purchase in 1803 to the Gadsden purchase from Mexico in 1853. The intervening chapters relate to the American fur trade, the occupation of Texas, early claims to Oregon, explorations in the Northwest, early American settlements of Iowa and Minnesota, the opening up of the Oregon country, the acquisition of Texas, Oregon diplomacy, the settlement of the Great Salt Lake basin, and the settlement of California.

"The author has undertaken a big task in an undeveloped field and has given it a scholarly and comprehensive treatment. In spite of some unevenness it is the best book on this period of Western history that has yet appeared." P. C. Phillips

+ Am Hist R 28:330 Ja '23 700w

"It is a history for careful and exhaustive reading, and as such is a merited success. Only it seems a pity that it weighs the facts so closely, and concerns itself so little with human elements and the spirit that made the west."

+ — Bookm 56:356 N '22 120w

Cleveland p95 D '22

"A scholarly and accurate but conventional narrative of the political and diplomatic incidents involved." H. E. Barnes

+ — New Repub 32:sup22 O 25 '22 860w

Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 40w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:523 N '22

"He has covered the ground in a somewhat journalistic fashion, bringing out the picturesque and colorful phases of the story and at the same time holding the reader's attention to the economic and political aspects of westward expansion. To the younger generation of readers, growing up in the trans-Mississippi States, such a book as this is a real boon."

+ R of Rs 66:335 S '22 100w

St Louis 21:17 Ja '23

"The reader will find the story in its historical setting, carefully sifted and truthfully told, with references to the accessible sources for further reading."

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 25 '22 240w

GORDON, MARY DUKE. Penal discipline. 238p 2 il $3 Dutton [7s 6d G. Routledge]

364 Crime and criminals. Prisons

The book is the result of an English physician's thirteen years of experience as prison inspector. She records her observations with the calmness of the scientific investigator and in summing up her findings pronounces the prison system as a social curiosity, a gigantic failure, that far from deterring the criminal from crime consigns him to it. She would put the doctor, the man of science, the student of the whole man and the educator in charge of a problem that we have so far utterly failed to solve. Working chiefly among women prisoners she treats of the petty offender and her discipline in prison, the inebriate vagabond, the prostitute; of the streaks of character in far-gone cases that could be used as levers for reclamation and of the psychology of crime and imprisonment.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 20 '23 800w

"The book is well written and interesting to read. Dr. Gordon's remedial and substitutional measures do not appear so definite as is her condemnation of the present prison system."

+ — Nature 110:692 N 25 '22 1100w

"She has left the beaten track in her manner of writing on a subject that is usually treated in a statistical and uninteresting vein. At times she borders on sentimentalism, but this is plainly because she feels her subject keenly. She has the enthusiasm, the non-discriminating fervor of the crusader, but she succeeds in painting a vivid picture of the conditions under which men and women live in the punitive Borstal system."

+ N Y Times p12 F 4 '23 1550w

"Miss Gordon's mind has a certain Latin crispness and decisiveness, her thought is never sloppy, her statements are terse, but her knowledge of the world and of the human heart is too deep to allow her to dogmatize, and she has the happy faculty denied to the authors of English Prisons To-day of writing with balance and temper without abating one jot of her indictment of things as they are."

+ Spec 129:403 S 23 '22 1400w

GORE, CHARLES. Belief in Christ. 329p $2.25 Scribner [7s 6d Murray]

232 Jesus Christ

"This volume is an attempt to take a critical estimate of all the evidence which concerns the person of Christ, and to show that the belief about Him which really grows out of the evidence, taken all together, and which best accounts for all the facts, is just the traditional belief in the incarnation. . . The argument of this volume does not begin at the beginning. It presupposes the conclusion of the first volume on Belief in God."—Preface

"It is a most interesting and instructive work though a trifle confusing to the plain man, with its arguments and counter arguments. Nevertheless, it proves conclusively that the world cannot settle down to regard Jesus as nothing more than the best of men or the greatest of spiritual teachers." L. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 23 '22 600w

"Dr. Gore has studiously avoided both technicality of expression and the appeal to the authority of the Church. He presents a plain, straightforward plea to an open court, and he backs it by a knowledge of the subject which is unsurpassed. . . He sees in black and white, and makes little attempt to find elements of good in the views which he rejects. Nevertheless, his most unyielding adversary must recognize the fearless sincerity of his thought."

+ — Sat R 134:839 D 2 '22 800w

Spec 130:62 Ja 13 '23 1300w

"Taken as a whole, it is one of the most notable contributions to modern Christian apologetics. Many will find their conception of the central fact of Christianity clearer and their hold on it more certain as the result of a careful reading of this work, and those who can accept neither Bishop Gore's premises nor his conclusions will at least admit that they are set out with frankness, fairness and ability."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p832 D 14 '22 1000w

GORE, CHARLES. Belief in God. (Reconstruction of belief) 300p $2.25 Scribner [7s 6d Murray]

231 Faith. Christianity. God

"Dr. Gore has read modern philosophical writers with attention. He is also aware of the main tendencies of modern scientific research, while modern Biblical criticism has long been one of his main interests. With these studies he combines a special knowledge of Christian theology and the work and needs of the Church of England. In addition, he is a forcible writer, alive to modern life and its demands. All this gives him special qualifications for such a task as he here essays, which is to offer, as far as may be without assumptions, an ordered and reasoned statement of his faith as a Christian."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 18:140 F '22

"The candid inquiring mind in the first part of the book becomes an apologetic defender of traditional views in the latter portion."

+ — J Religion 2:221 Mr '22 70w

"For such a task as this the scientific temper is an absolute prerequisite; nearly every contention of Mr. Gore is in sharp conflict with the settled convictions of responsible thinkers trained in historical and scientific methods."

C. A. Beckwith

— J Religion 2:320 My '22 650w

"Bishop Gore has written with his usual straightforwardness and frankness. It will be a relief to some that his conclusions are in strict line with current orthodoxy, his argument essentially conservative. Others will regret that so much of what is contained in this volume is nothing but a restatement of old matter already threshed out to weariness in recent apologetic literature."

+ — Lit R p6 S 9 '22 640w

"What 'belief' is it that Dr. Gore wishes this far-strayed society of ours to take to its bosom, so that in truth it may become Christian again? A doubtful chain of historicity, forged with long-broken links, such as the Johannine authorship of the fourth Gospel, and even of the Apocalypse. A theory of miracles that the modern mind cannot accept, if it would. A non-natural Jesus; a faith of mystery, almost magic. And how sad to see the frustration proceed from the pious heart and richly stored mind of Dr. Gore!"

— Nation and Ath 30:590 Ja 14 '22 1250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:538 D '22

Pratt p8 summer '22

St Louis 20:204 S '22

Sat R 132:690 D 17 '21 1200w

"No English bishop is as generally or more deservedly respected; though his influence was, perhaps, greater ten years ago than now. . . While the merits of the book are the writer's, its limitations are those of the school which he represents. Renan compares a Liberal theologian to a bird whose wings have been clipped. It appears to be able to fly; but, when it attempts to do so, the failure is manifest. Bishop Gore's Liberalism is of this type."

+ — Spec 127:862 D 24 '21 1800w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 21 '22 120w

"The writer's description of the causes which have led to the breakdown of tradition is balanced and luminous. . . The least satisfactory part of the book in our judgment are the chapters which deal with the New Testament. We discern no new arguments in this part of the book, and those who are interested in the question will find little reason to alter the views they already hold. But it will lead to the highest results if those who disagree with Dr. Gore, as well as those who accept his conclusions, will endeavor to imitate his attractive sincerity and persuasive frankness."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p22 Ja 12 '22 1000w

GORKI, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVICH PYESHKOFF); KUPRIN, ALEXANDER IVANOVICH; and BUNIN, IVAN ALEXEIVICH. Reminiscences of Anton Chekhov; tr. by Samuel Solomonovich Koteliatsky and Leonard Woolf. 110p $1.50 Huebsch

B or 32 Chekhov, Anton Pavlovich

21-21415

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:187 Mr '22

"Together, they present a very sympathetic picture of a great artist and of a man greater than his art."

+ Bookm 54:588 F '22 90w

Boston Transcript p6 F 21 '22 1000w

"The sketches are too brief and too discursive; they deal with incidents that are too trivial and commonplace; yet their combined effect is to make Chekhov as real as a skillfully portrayed character of fiction."

+ — Dial 72:219 F '22 60w

Reviewed by Alexander Kaun

Freeman 4:593 Mr 1 '22 950w

"The traits of his extraordinarily attractive personality—candid, shy, sensitive, valiant, modest—are revealed with salient anecdote and luminous comment in Gorki's sketch which is as remarkable for its completeness as its brevity. Nothing essential remains for his other friends, Kuprin and Bunin, to add." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Nation 114:400 Ap 5 '22 450w

Reviewed by Francis Hackett

New Repub 30:23 Mr '22 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:514 N '22

"The three records of Chekhov do him credit as coming from his friends, they are without affectation, simple and direct, tender and courageous; and there is no nonsense or pious twaddle heaped up by them around his memory."

+ Theatre Arts M 6:169 Ap '22 680w

GORMAN, HERBERT S. Barcarole of James Smith; a volume of poems. 123p $1.75 Putnam

811

22-20672

"The title is taken from one of the fifty poems that make up the volume. He draws vivid portraits of men and of women, portraits of the inner creature that hides behind eye and mouth. He paints scenes of city or of country seen through moods, and matches rain and the mystery of humanity in his verse. Several of the poems are long, like 'The Son of Dawn,' or 'Ninon Plucks the Last Rose.' The inspiration of the writer swings from today to yesterday without effort."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:152 F '23

"The worst thing about Herbert Gorman's poetry is this: almost half of the work is frankly imitative. Gorman, it is evident, has worshipped at the dissimilar shrines of E. A. Robinson and T. S. Eliot, and a great part of his book is a record of his efforts to join both gods—and free himself from them. . . The credit side of the ledger shows a decided balance in Gorman's favor. Here is something positive—a lyric strength coupled with an intellectual intensity that is the poet's own. 'The Barcarole of James Smith' has in it the power as well as the performance of poetry. And, in spite of its patent borrowings, it promises greater achievements." L: Untermeyer

GORMAN, HERBERT S.—Continued

+ — Bookm 56:494 D '22 480w

"There is irony, there is humor, a trifle grim sometimes but tinged with a comprehending and brooding sympathy; there is a clean intelligence which carries a crowded conference of symbolic ideas, in these poems, which is in the soundest tradition of the poetic spirit, making the art a criticism of life through the instrument of beauty and music. This collection signals the progress of a career that should go very, very far." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p7 O 21 '22 1400w

Dial 74:106 Ja '23 160w

"The first volume of a young American poet whose obvious talent promises much for his future work. He is by turns intellectualist and emotionalist; he combines with considerable dramatic power and an ability to externalize emotions, a curious capacity for turning pure ideas into pictures. It is notable that Mr. Gorman writes naturally and with ease in the old verse forms, and that he achieves through them many of the effects, such as the hard clearness and the immediacy of sense impression, which are claimed as the peculiar properties of the new." Lloyd Morris

+ Int Bk R p88 D '22 400w

"Here is a young man of intellect, of curious and sombre reflections, of imagination at once grotesque and beautiful; here is a young man who can think even better than he can write, springing up in a blank day where the contrary is the fashion and the rule. As an artist he has skill and precision shot through with a wild and invaluable thread of extravagance; as a living and thinking man, clothed in the garment of his art, he gives promise of princely thew and stature far beyond that of his present growth." Elinor Wylie

+ Lit R p316 D 16 '22 1100w

"Mr. Gorman gets somewhere because he is led by a living man. In so far as he was wise to imitate, he was wise to imitate Edwin Arlington Robinson. Here are sardonic quatrains, melancholy and abstracted, here are concise portraits of mysteriously defective souls, here is relentless play with the skull and bones of passion, here, to match Mr. Robinson's great poem on Shakespeare, is a poem on Marlowe, here is intelligence, here is diligence, here is unquestionable superiority. Yet these lack the final force." Mark Van Doren

+ — Nation 115:530 N 15 '22 150w

"These poems show a wide range of topics and treatment. There is a decided verve and eagerness about them all, however, for whatever strikes along the brain of the author comes sharp and clear into words, without hesitation or fumbling." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p19 N 5 '22 250w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 17 '22 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p731 N 9 '22 150w

GORNSTON, MICHAEL H. Operating engineer's catechism of steam engineering. 428p il $4 Van Nostrand

621.1 Steam engineering 22-6016

"A collection of 1300 questions and answers on practical problems in the steam power-plant. There are few recent books of this type, and the present one is decidedly above the average in logical arrangement, clarity of expression, and indexing of material."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:349 J1 '22

GOSSE, EDMUND WILLIAM. Aspects and impressions. 300p $3 Scribner [7s 6d Cassell]

821 Literature. James, Henry A22-1376

A volume of literary portraits and appreciations reprinted mainly from the Edinburgh Review, London Mercury, Modern Languages Review, and Fortnightly Review. Mr Gosse is usually more interested in the personalities of his subjects than in their works and he is often able to add some personal reminiscence to his studies. The longest essay, a biographical study of Henry James, contains scarcely any literary criticism. Some excursions into French literary history are included. Contents: George Eliot; Henry James; Samuel Butler; A note on Congreve; The first draft of Swinburne's "Anactoria"; The Hôtel de Rambouillet; Malherbe and the classical reaction; The foundation of the French academy; Rousseau in England in the nineteenth century; The centenary of Leconte de Lisle; Two French critics; Emile Faguet—Remy de Gourmont; The writings of M. Clemenceau; A visit to the friends of Ibsen; Fairyland and a Belgian Ariosto; Some recollections of Lord Wolseley; Index.

Booklist 18:323 Je '22

"He still tries to be urbane and succeeds in being only official; at his most characteristic and terrible moments today he no longer knows who is talking—himself or the British Empire. The identification of the two in his own mind is complete. . . . To Mr. Gosse, in brief, art is not an expression and so a manifestation and form of life, but a cultural discipline of the mind and taste and the weighty adornment of a stately and static civilization." Ludwig Lewisohn

— Bookm 55:526 J1 '22 560w

Boston Transcript p6 My 3 '22 620w

"He is not, like certain other veterans of the intellectual life, an august figure, but he is without a trace of the bitterness, the narrowness, the querulousness that more frequently characterize old age; and if he can not be thought of as a great critic, since he neither communicates the ecstacy of literature nor elucidates the laws that underlie it, he has perhaps no equal as a constantly intelligent, felicitous, picturesque, and open-minded essayist."

+ Freeman 5:262 My 24 '22 1450w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:560 Je 24 '22 160w

"Mr. Gosse's genius lies in painting social portraits of men of letters. In this delightful kind he is our finest essayist and our finest literary biographer." J. M. Murry

+ Nation and Ath 31:90 Ap 15 '22 2150w

"He would be a rash prophet who should pronounce any book of Mr. Gosse's the last, but it is difficult to conceive anything from his pen more mature than Aspects and Impressions. If Mr. Gosse had undertaken to select from his ample storehouse, essays to illustrate his method of criticism, to summarize his activity during so many fruitful years, he could not have made a more significant collection." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 31:337 Ag 16 '22 1150w

"In his particular genre he is unsurpassed by any writer of our day. He is a master of the art of easy and familiar discourse. Talk flows from him—reminiscence, anecdote, incidental criticism—with a copious facility that never degenerates into garrulity. This new volume contains notable things, perfect in their several kinds. Its most perfect pages are those in which Mr. Gosse recounts, with a tenderness that is never uncritical and with an irony that is never untender, the chief events in the career of his friend Henry James."

+ New Statesman 19:74 Ap 22 '22 1250w

Review by R: Le Gallienne

N Y Times p20 J1 30 '22 2550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:362 J1 '22

Pratt p24 autumn '22

St Louis 20:247 O '22

"Mr. Gosse never shows off. He never has the appearance of seeking rather to impress the reader than to elucidate his theme or to develop his thesis. He never wishes to show you, all at once, what a number of sights he has seen and places he has been to, and books he has read. . . . He is a master of irony in all its strengths, so to speak, from the irony which is used as a lethal weapon of offence to the irony which smiles affectionately at a foible of a friend, a foible as dear as a virtue. He may use it in indignation or use it in affection, but it is in the texture of his writing, almost always visible to the discerning eye."

+ Sat R 133:314 Mr 25 '22 1300w

"The most interesting study in the book is certainly that of George Eliot. The reader will feel that here Mr. Gosse has said the last word upon a writer who suffered from over-appreciation during her life and subsequent under-appreciation. Mr. Gosse is neither bored nor impressed by her disguising portentousness, but in his analyses strips her of this mantle and contemplates the real virtues and shortcomings beneath."

+ Spec 128:500 Ap 22 '22 700w

"Like Matthew Arnold [Mr. Gosse] always sees in literature a reflex of life. As the years pass, his interest in life deepens and he becomes an abler critic because a closer and more sympathetic student of men."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Ja 26 '23 650w

"Mr. Edmund Gosse has the subtle art of discourse; in these literary essays he seldom loses intimate touch with his audience. He neither meditates aloud nor pontificates; he talks, and his amiable readers gather round him. And then, there is in the waters of this author just a trace of acidity, a malicious sparkle, which gives them their individual flavour."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p181 Mr 23 '22 1350w

GOUDY, FREDERIC WILLIAM. Elements of lettering; text composed by Bertha M. Goudy in types designed by the author. 49p $5 Kennerley

745 Lettering

22-21557

"This manual has been prepared in response to many requests for some plain letterings that would illustrate a sufficient variety of styles to enable a craftsman to select just the kind of letter he requires for the particular work he may have in hand. It aims only to present clearly (from the viewpoint of an actual worker in the craft) the fundamentals and essentials of letter-forms—not how to draw them, but to consider what they are—their esthetic character rather than the story of their origin or progress. In the examples shown the writer has intended to provide typical letter-forms only, showing old-style, modern and italic types, black-letter, stone-cut inscriptions, etc. Each alphabet is shown in a size which exhibits clearly any peculiarities or subtleties of form in the individual letters."—Preface

Booklist 19:150 F '23

"Mr. Goudy's 'Elements of Lettering' is remarkable in two respects. In the first place, it is the only book in any language which formulates the fundamental principles of the art of designing types. In the second place, it furnishes examples of more original letter-models of the author's own designing than has been given by any single designer since the art of printing was invented." T. S.

+ Freeman 6:478 Ja 21 '23 300w

"This is a beautifully printed manual for the use primarily of the art student, craftsman, and architect. . . Mr. Goudy, although preeminent as a printer and type designer, is by instinct more of a decorator than a printer, and if this work has any fault it is that in an attempt to perfect the beauty of individual letters he sacrifices a little in legibility."

+ Lit R p270 D 2 '22 360w

Pratt p24 winter '23

GOULD, CHARLES W. America; a family matter. 196p il $3 Scribner

901 Civilization. Immigration. Race problems 22-18948

To prove his belief concerning the direct influence of race purity upon race life, and in particular, the menace to American civilization of the influx of alien races the author examines the race stories of the Egyptians, Greeks and Romans and the decline of these peoples thru race amalgamation. Either, he maintains, we must guard the purity of our stock or we shall repeat history and invite calamity. In the interest of our native-born, of the "old stock" which he reveres, we must alter our immigration and naturalization policies.

Bookm 56:639 Ja '23 130w

Boston Transcript p11 O 14 '22 700w

"The motif swells to a strident finale on the last page of the book, which suggests that Mr. Gould, in spite of his many footnotes and other invocations of erudition, has been writing not a scientific treatise—a sort of ethnical interpretation of history—but has been manfully and vehemently defending the threatened prestige of his own caste."

— Lit R p135 O 21 '22 340w

"As a piece of workmanship it is admirable, especially in the somewhat unique method of presenting the notes. Altogether the book is a notable one and should make a deep impression." Madison Grant

+ N Y Times p1 N 12 '22 2000w

GOULDING, EDMUND. Fury. 295p $1.75 Dodd

22-24225

A sea story and a story of primitive passions. Boy Leyton passed a loveless childhood and youth on board ship with his captain father who nursed the wrong inflicted by a faithless wife and her betrayer. Boy's environment is one of hatred, both suppressed and active. His father is bent on killing every tender, yearning feeling for the unknown mother, and the first mate emanates a sinister hatred of his own for both father and son. But in spite of the savage and drunken fury that surrounds and hardens him there persists a tenderness in his heart that reaches out and finds Min, the orphan girl from the sailor slums of London, and later his mother, now a drunken, lonely cast-away on the water front of Leith. The emphasis of the story is on the primitive simplicity of man as a "creature of truth, love, hate and fury" and rings out on the strongest note—love.

"The author has a poetic imagination strongly touched with a whimsical or a mocking tone, and sandwiched into the narrative are many vividly beautiful bits about the sea that have a salt tang in their unique viewpoints and the originality of their phrasing. He could have gained the romantic climax he desired without descending into pages of sentimentalism of excessively Dickensian flavor."

+ N Y Times p14 D 17 '22 640w

GOURMONT, REMY DE. Book of masks; tr. by Jack Lewis; introd. by Ludwig Lewisohn. 265p $2 Luce, J. W.

840.4 French literature—History and criticism. Symbolism in literature 22-3136

"Enshrined in the imperishable amber of Remy de Gourmont's wit, 'The Book of Masks' presents to us half a century of French literature. Here are collected for our delectation some fifty poets and novelists, the chosen intellectuals of the epoch which began with the Second French Republic and ended with the Fashoda incident. Too recent to be classicized, too remote to be novel (the latest volume cited was published twenty-five years ago), it is a literary period almost unknown in this country." (Lit R) Contents: Maeterlinck; Verhaeren; De Rénier; Viel-Griffin; Malmarmé; Samain; Quillard; Herold; Retté; De l'Isle-Adam; Tailhadé; Renard; Dumur; Eekhoud; Adam; Lautréamont; Corbière; Rimbaud; Poictevin; Gide; Louys; Rachilde; Huysmans; Laforgue; Moréas; Merrill; Saint-Pol-Roux; De Montesquiou; Kahn; Verlaine; Translations from the text.

"Not least of the critic's charms is his quiet sense of humor. For that matter, de Gourmont is never loud. . . Brave, sincere words, worth all the dogmatic utterances upon literature heaped together." I. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 3 '21 780w

GOURMONT, REMY de—Continued

"A gracefully translated book of criticisms on the French symbolists which differs from most books of criticism in that, at the time of its appearance at least, it dealt almost exclusively with rare or unknown contemporaries."

+ Dial 72:217 F '22 130w

"It is a common error to look upon critical articles as parasitic growths, important only in so far as the things criticised are significant in themselves. This book is an admirable corrective for such a point of view. Few of the writers here brought to our attention are acknowledged men of genius. Gourmont wasted no time in trying to help those who could help themselves. He did not batten on achieved reputations. His interest was in the coming men, and his greatest joy was to discover a new and charming talent, and proclaim it to the literary world. . . . Ludwig Lewisohn's preface is admirable in every respect. One could not ask for a better introduction to the works of the great French critic." J. S. Newberry

+ Lit R p526 Mr 25 '22 1500w

"It is an impressionistic interpretation, and fragmentary history, of the symbolist movement, written by the critic best equipped by sympathy and information for such a task. It holds a significant place in the complete edition of Gourmont's work; but, since the individual studies of which it is composed are devoted, in many instances, to poets whose names are wholly strange to the ears of American readers, it was a dubious act of judgment to bring it to this country in the van of its author's books." B. R. Redman

+ — Nation 114:sup438 Ap 12 '22 650w

"The critical facility of De Gourmont was enormous. Probably better than any contemporary of his he could hit off the essential characteristics of a writer in a few beautiful phrases."

+ N Y Times p30 F 12 '22 290w

GOURMONT, REMY DE. Decadence, and other essays on the culture of ideas; auth. tr. by William Aspenwall Bradley. (European lib.) 231p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d G. Richards]

844 Philosophy, French 21-15491

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:229 Ap '22

"With a razored intellectual scalpel, Remy de Gourmont operates on modern thought to remove the growths which hamper clear reasoning. Nor is there any anesthetic administered to lessen the pain. For this reason, the operation is apt to be serious, even dangerous, on those whose conventions are the thickest."

+ Bookm 55:77 Mr '22 70w

"Such labor as Gourmont's is predestined to comparative isolation. It is the product of a spirit who sought whatever illusion of free thought this life conceded and wrote down his findings in a beauty of expression which is but an aspect of the thought itself. . . . The essential de Gourmont is here; the pagan esthete as opposed to the Christian ethicist, the enemy of fixed principles, of pigeon-holing, of everything that may impede the free play of personality; the whole man living in the vital present ever curious, never sated, eternally young in the realms of thought." I. Goldberg

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 28 '21 2000w

"In Remy de Gourmont, right or wrong, the air is salted with adventure." O. W. Firkins

+ Ind 107:326 D 24 '21 900w

"He is the latest of the illustrious critics of France and, to us, the most necessary and inspiring." L. L.

+ Nation 114:99 Ja 25 '22 1100w

"It furnishes the best introduction to Remy de Gourmont's thought now available in English." B. R. Redman

+ Nation 114:sup439 Ap 12 '22 120w

Reviewed by Padrale Colum

New Repub 29:315 F 15 '22 1150w

"Beyond the pleasure to be derived from listening to any witty argument between clever people there is not very much to be gained by reading this book."

— Sat R 133:265 Mr 11 '22 530w

"He is essentially and above all the spirit that denies. Of his intellectual honesty there can be no question. He is as honest as he is subtle. It is seldom that one finds it possible to contradict him, even when one feels that he is wrong."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p169 Mr 16 '22 700w

GOW, COLIN CLARENCE. Electro-metallurgy of steel; with a preface by Donald F. Campbell. (Treatise of electro chemistry) 367p il $7.50 Van Nostrand [27s 6d Constable]

669.1 Steel—Electrometallurgy

(Eng ed 22-3541)

"The electro-thermic processes of steel making have been studied more especially in their relation to arc furnaces, although the electrical, constructional, and metallurgical features of induction furnaces are treated also. Discusses the historical development of electric steel furnaces and summarizes the present knowledge of their use for the metallurgy of steel."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:500 N '22

GOWING, SIDNEY. Joy of living. 355p $1.75 Putnam

22-3494

When Aimée, the irrepressible daughter of an arch-deacon, the Very Rev. Viscount Scroope, was to be sent to Jervaulx Abbey, to her pious spinster aunt Erythea, to have her too exuberant spirits toned down, she took the bit between her teeth and bolted, substituting her cousin Georgina for herself. In her mad rush for freedom she encounters Billy, an American from the far West, and inventor of the "Flying Sphinx" motor cycle. Aimée becomes Billy's partner, and together they fall in and out of a series of side-splitting and hair-raising scrapes. Altho confusion worse confounded follows in their wake, the tangle finally unravels itself to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Booklist 18:330 Je '22

"We feel that Mr. Gowing has done a very clever piece of writing, a first rate adventure story, with character drawing which is so definitely good that we welcome new arrivals into the story, instead of becoming 'all muddled up' by their intrusion. Light it may be. Nevertheless it is positively convincing, immediately absorbing, and delightfully entertaining. We congratulate Mr. Gowing." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 18 '22 380w

"Aside from its improbability and breathlessness 'The Joy of Living' will prove adequate entertainment for many readers. It is clean, pleasant, and written with a nice touch of humor."

+ — Lit R p494 Mr 11 '22 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:261 Je '22

"It is comedy of the most delicious sort. The story moves with motorcycle speed, but leaves no darkbrown smell behind it nor deafening chug-chug."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 14 '22 180w

GRAHAM, FRANK DUNCAN. Audel's engineers and mechanics guide; a progressive illustrated series, with questions, answers, calculations, covering modern engineering practice. 8v 4100p il $12 Audel

621.1 Engines. Steam engineering 21-19050

Contents:

- v 1 Engine principles.—Valve setting.—Pumps.
- v 2 Corliss, uniflow, pumping, contractors' engines.
- v 3 Locomotive, marine, turbine engines.—Indicators.
- v 4 Gasoline, oil engines.—Producers.—Aviation.

- v 5 Steam.—Fuel economy.—Boiler construction.
- v 6 Firing.—Oil burners.—Stokers.—Repairs.
- v 7 Pipe fitting.—Heating.—Refrigeration.—Elevators.
- v 8 Wiring and electrical reference.

Booklist 18:315 Je '22

Heating and Ventilating Magazine p61
Ap '22 1/3 col

"These 8 limp-bound 'pocket-books' contain 4346 pages and 8754 illustrations. Salient information is given concisely and clearly in large type and elaborated in smaller type. A surprising amount of detailed information is packed into small space."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:3 Mr '22
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:415 O '22

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. Europe—whither bound? (Quo vadis Europa?) being letters of travel from the capitals of Europe in the year 1921. 224p $2 Appleton [10s 6d T. Butterworth]

914 Europe—Description and travel 22-1017

The title seems to imply a book of prophecy. It is not that, but rather, as the author describes it, "a series of true reflections and verbal photographs of swirling humanity at the great congregating places." The capitals from which Mr Graham has observed European conditions are Athens, Constantinople, Sofia, Belgrade, Budapest, Vienna, Prague, Warsaw, Munich, Berlin, Rome, Monte Carlo, London and Paris. He relates what he saw and heard, describes the influences for good and for evil which he observed, the state of mind of the various peoples and the confusion of passions left by the war.

"Upon the whole this is not a weighty book, but it repays perusal. It is informing in an impressionist way, adding to one's stock of intimations and opinions rather than to one's store of precise facts. It deals with conditions more or less ephemeral, and will be read with greater interest to-day than to-morrow. But it is the kind of a book that helps a layman to interpret what he learns about Europe from other sources, and it entertains while it instructs." V: S. Clark

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '22 480w

Booklist 18:185 Mr '22

Cleveland p87 N '22

"He discourses more or less sagely upon many things ranging from passports and Bolshevism to paper money and Baliev's minuet." C: A. Beard

+ Freeman 5:332 Je 14 '22 150w

"A keen observer, a seasoned traveller, and a man of broad and human sympathies, his description of Europe in the grip of post-war depression makes not only interesting but even entertaining reading." Amy Loveman

+ Lit R p426 F 18 '22 500w

"Mr. Graham enables you to walk the streets of the European capitals with him, and all who know his power of visualization, and admire his skill in discovering the inner meanings of the ordinary sights he sees, will find this the most attractive of all his published works. . . . It is more amusing than most novels, and it throws a brilliant light—it is like an electric torch, flaming and sparkling—on conditions which more ponderous writers have failed to illuminate." M. F. Egan

+ N Y Times p7 Ja 22 '22 2400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:178 Ap '22

St Louis 20:96 My '22

"He cannot travel without seeing a great many things which other people would not see or note, and after he has seen them he puts them before us in a very attractive and stimulating way. All the same, the book is by no means one of his best efforts, for it leaves no very definite impression."

+ Spec 128:52 Ja 14 '22 1100w

"The reader will get an enormous amount of true entertainment and a clear picture of what Europe is thinking about today. Rarely are education and information presented in such palatable form."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Mr 27 '22
520w

"Though it can only be a book of snapshots, its value is that they are all from the same hand, and from the hand of such a traveller as Mr. Graham. Europe is no place now for those leisurely, enchanting journeys that he used to make, for his long tramps by unknown roads, and his gentle talks with people in the hidden corners of the world. One may count it as one of the things we have lost that Mr. Graham can no longer go travelling in Europe as once he did."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p707 N
3 '21 1400w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. Tramping with a poet in the Rockies. 279p il $2 Appleton [8s 6d Macmillan]

917.8 Rocky Mountains. Lindsay, Vachel.
22-10556

The poet was Vachel Lindsay whom the author describes as a poetical vagabond. Vagabondage was their common ground. "He is an old-fashioned hiker of the tramping parson type. He leaves home to post a letter, and does a thousand or so miles. He made a rule once to travel without money and he recited his poems to the farmers for a night's lodging. . . . I for my part hardly believe in tramping for tramping's sake, but in living with nature for what that is worth." The two met at Springfield, Illinois, went by train to St Paul and from thence thru Glacier National park and the Canadian Rockies. The account of the trip is as carefree and easy going as was the tramp, with a poem at the end of each chapter and illustrations by Vernon Hill.

"The book is not one that the virile, red-blooded reader to whom publishers so earnestly address their wares is bound in self-respect to shun. Indeed he, no less than the old-fashioned gentle reader, should enjoy it." A. S. Pier

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ag '22 470w

Booklist 18:359 Jl '22

"These letters have in them the tang of the woods, the spaciousness of open heavens, the pictorial splendor of our greatest geographical boast—the Rockies—all mellowed by the genial philosophy of the Briton and vitalized by the electric personality of the Springfield poet."

Bookm 55:649 Ag '22 110w

"As with all his books of travel, Mr. Graham makes this record as interesting as an interesting novel. He is conspicuously alive to the place of man in the part of the world he visits, and to man's influence upon nature as well as the influence of nature upon man. Unfortunately, however, his latest volume is marred by a series of meaningless and foolish illustrations that are evidently intended to be original. They succeed merely in being silly." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '22 1100w

Cleveland p74 D '22

"It is an informal and whimsical piece of work, with a dash of genius in it, a vast deal of buoyancy and high spirit, and a remarkable freedom from pretentiousness."

+ Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 60w

"If we are unable to take seriously the loose-jointed and amorphous body of opinion which Mr. Lindsay offers his companion, still it is an important element in the very engaging portrait that Mr. Graham gives us." E. T. Booth

+ Freeman 5:596 Ag 30 '22 580w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Lit R p770 Jl 1 '22 1000w

"I suspect that neither the mountains nor the poet of Mr. Graham's version is very accurately rendered, but it has variety and spirit and good humor and not too much mystical doctrine, and it has as well thirty-eight beguiling emblems by Vernon Hill." Carl Van Doren

+ Nation 115:sup377 O 11 '22 70w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN—Continued

"Taken all in all this book is a sad book. It shows two men, one of real talent, one of a genuinely cultivated mind, with their skins off, so to speak. It is not fair to believe from the pale pulpy flesh which is exposed that Lindsay is dying. Rather let us believe that Mr. Graham did not genuinely enjoy his trip and that he was enough of an artist to be unable to make his record of it a living thing in the face of constant objections raised by his imagination." Raymond Holden

— New Repub 32:79 S 13 '22 340w

"Mr. Graham's enterprise in making copy out of a holiday in the Rockies with Vachel Lindsay will do not a little injury to his own reputation, while it is hardly likely to increase the vogue of Mr. Lindsay's poetry in England. Doubtless the tramp over the Great Divide from the Montana side into Canada was an exhilarating experience. It has tempted Mr. Graham into recording the rollicking open-air talk of his companion; but no excuse seems quite good enough for the preservation of Mr. Graham's contribution to the festa."

— New Statesman 19:592 S 2 '22 520w

"Will prove a disappointment to any reader who is desirous of excellent style and literary values, for it is apparent that Graham wrote it in a hurry. But those other readers who will enjoy a charming running account of the wanderings of two men, both of them always sensitive to the impressions of beauty, will find much in the volume to cause them to forget the armchair and the fan."

+ — N Y Times p11 Je 25 '22 180w

N Y Tribune p8 O 15 '22 210w

"Tramping with a Poet in the Rockies" falls down, not so much for what is or isn't in it, but because of the way in which the material is handled. The result is a book which, although it moves along in chronological order, does not hang together, is often imperfectly conceived and executed, and is frequently dull and inconsequential."

— + Outlook 122:726 D 20 '22 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:519 N '22

Pratt p30 winter '23

St Louis 20:251 O '22

"We confess ourselves a little tired of the deliberate ardours and frightening endurance of Mr. Stephen Graham. He plants himself somewhat too emphatically upon the book-composing path... The real value of this book lies in its unconscious appraisal of Mr. Vachel Lindsay. He is displayed as an earnest, naive and robust man, full of wise saws and poetic instances. He must have been uncommonly good company."

— + Sat R 133:634 Je 17 '22 880w

"It is a charming book, and written with great good taste. Mr. Stephen Graham is to be congratulated upon a most charming, readable, and, above all, adroit and good-humoured book."

+ Spec 129:404 S 23 '22 1100w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 27 '22 70w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 22 '22 480w

"If we find his treatment of nature a little too diffuse and of Mr. Lindsay somewhat sketchy, it is perhaps the emblems Mr. Vernon Hill has attached to each chapter head which in their thrifty and pointed drawing offer too exemplary a pattern of reticence and significance to the script. They certainly add greatly to the charm of a very readable book."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p358 Je 1 '22 900w

Wis Lib Bul 18:184 Ji '22

GRAINGER, MAURICE J. Amateur radio; how and why of wireless; with complete instructions on operation of receiving outfits. 160p il $1 McCann

651.6 Radio telephone

22-9719

"Author was formerly with the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company and the United States Navy."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Contains considerable timely information but I should hardly call it 'the only complete radio book,' even with the customary advertising license. Here is unmistakable evidence that a valiant and successful attempt was made to fill 158 pages." Pierre Boucheron

+ — Bookm 55:641 Ag '22 270w

Reviewed by T. L. Masson

N Y Times p27 Je 11 '22 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:497 N '22

Sat R 134:926 D 16 '22 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p751 N 16 '22 10w

GRANT, ALLAN, pseud. See Smith, A. D. H.

GRANT, DOUGLAS, pseud. See Ostrander, I. E.

GRANT, JOHN E. Problem of war and its solution. 384p $5 Dutton [12s 6d Allen & U.] 172.4 War (Eng ed 22-6928)

The purpose of the book is to refute the doctrine that war is inherent in human nature and that it presents a problem for which there is no solution. The author examines the problem from a biological and an historical aspect. He shows that war is practically non-existent among animals and that the rare instances of atrocities committed by them can be explained as aberrations of instinct due to the animals finding themselves in the unnatural surroundings provided by captivity. The inference from this is that captivity is likewise the cause of human wars, for which the cure is freedom. The historical retrospect points out the various ways in which humanity is enslaved, and book three. From the old to the new world, offers suggestions for the attainment of freedom.

Am Pol Sci R 17:142 F '23 50w

Boston Transcript p4 S 16 '22 750w

Reviewed by F. W. Garrison

Freeman 6:44 S 20 '22 1100w

Survey 48:124 Ap 22 '22 40w

Survey 49:sup205 N 1 '22 220w

"This is an ambitious volume, covering a great deal of ground, showing a good deal of varied knowledge, and often making acute observations. But Mr. Grant unfortunately has not the power of co-ordinating his matter, of stressing the points he wishes to make, and building up his thesis into a coherent structure; and he too often confuses oburgation with argument."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p143 Mr 2 '22 450w

GRANVILLE-BARKER, HARLEY. See Barker, H. G.

GRARD, CHARLES ALBERT MARIE. Aluminium and its alloys; their properties, thermal treatment and industrial application; tr. by C. M. Phillips and H. W. L. Phillips. 184p il $5 Van Nostrand [17s 6d Constable] 669.7 Aluminum 22-5538

"Metallurgy is scarcely considered, the book being about equally divided between study of physical properties and discussion of alloys." —Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Aviation p635 My 29 '22 2/3 col

Chem News p158 Mr 24 '22 3/4 col

Cleveland p78 S '22

Engineering p385 Mr 31 '22 1 1/2 col

Engin and Mining J Press p1061 Je 17 '22 1/4 col

Foundry p428 My 15 '22 1/2 col

"The book is largely a collection of test data relating to the physical properties of worked and heat treated aluminium, cast light aluminium alloys, and worked and heat treated alloys of the duralumin type and of aluminium bronzes. Collected by Colonel Grard during the late war in connection with the production of aircraft in France, the test data in themselves are exceedingly valuable, but the arrangement and make-up of the book are exceptionally bad." R. J. Anderson

+ — J Ind and Engin Chem 14:664 J1 '22 400w

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:6 Mr '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:285 Je '22

Pratt p19 autumn '22

Sheet Metal Worker p324 Je 9 '22 121.

GRAS, NORMAN SCOTT BRIEN. Introduction to economic history. (Harper's historical ser.) 350p $2.25 Harper

330.9 Economic conditions. Economic policy 22-16051

The object of the book is to give the basic facts in the economic development of man from primitive savage to modern man with a view to pointing the way to an economic interpretation of history. Without confining itself to any one country the book nevertheless stresses American and English development. It is shown how from the earliest collectional economy, progressive stages are marked by cultural nomadic, village, and town economy, to culminate in the metropolitan economy of today in which large cities become the organizing nucleus for the economic relations of the country—markets, industry, transportation and finance. The book is adapted to class use by an analytical table of contents, topical headings, diagrams, class exercises and problems and biographical notes at the end of each chapter. Index.

"This volume has some pretension to originality in addition to its unquestionable merit as a text-book. In the discussion of metropolitan economy there are stimulating suggestions and fresh viewpoints worthy of more elaborate treatment than the author could give them in so compressed a space. It is an excellent classroom aid for both economics and history courses; and its last two chapters, embracing nearly half of the text, will repay the attention of the mature economist." V. S. Clark

+ Am Hist R 28:345 Ja '23 450w

Booklist 19:37 N '22

"It is of undoubted value to the college student, but will not appeal to the average human—to whom it is recommended by the publishers—who desires an insight into economic processes. Van Loon might have made of it a thrilling pageant of interest to all."

+ — Bookm 56:770 F '23 130w

"A highly original and commendably synthetic survey of economic development."

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 9 '22 450w

"Primarily designed for students of economic history, its breadth of perspective and almost astonishing mass of historical detail render it valuable to all those interested in the development of mankind. The magnitude of the field covered by the book requires a nice sense of judgment in a choice of the details to be included, and if it is felt that occasionally the author has been too complete in his treatment of conditions which might be dismissed with a more cursory comment, it does credit to his worth as a scholar that he leaves no statement unproved." S. T. Beach

+ Lit R p108 O 14 '22 660w

GRAVES, CLOTILDE INEZ MARY (RICHARD DEHAN, pseud.). The just steward. 587p $2 Doran

22-23722

A mid much romance and adventure the story bears a symbolic burden. Part one, The seeking, takes the reader back to Alexandria in the early days of the Christian era and of persecution. A high Egyptian official, Philoemus Fabius, has been martyred for his faith in Christianity. His foster son, a devout Jew, having placed his ashes in a Christian shrine and carried out his benefactor's wishes with regard to his young son, vows his family's eternal allegiance and succor to the house of Fabius. The other parts of the book deal with the branches of both families that have drifted to England, where the Christian branch is established as Scottish gentry while the Jews are playing a part in the London business world. During the World war a message comes from Alexandria to John Hazel, English offspring of the ancient house of Hazaël apprising him of his ancestry and of the pledge, and bringing him into communication with the Scotch family of Forbis at a time when Katharine Forbis has need of a champion. On the far eastern battlefields John has occasion, in heroic fashion, to prove himself worthy of the trust and the end of the story links itself to the beginning by revealing, in a transcendent vision, the affinity between pure Judaism and pure Christianity.

Booklist 19:159 F '23

"This thing of ink and parchment is a vital force. Not even for the exquisite delicacy and the furious movement of its language! It is the spirit within it which makes it a glorious book!" I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 22 '22 980w

"Long drawn out but interesting on account of its romance, picturesque detail and mystic atmosphere."

+ Cleveland p91 D '22

"A romance of the good old-fashioned school in which the development of the dramatis personae is frankly made of less importance than the adventures in which they take part. . . If you are in search of a number of absorbing hours you cannot do better than to devote them to [this book]."

+ Lit R p160 O 28 '22 450w

"The book, though written in an old-fashioned, stilted style, has a certain degree of timeliness. There is some good adventure stuff in it, which better handling could have made really thrilling."

+ — N Y Times sec7:6 O 8 '22 240w

"Richard Dehan has drowned 'The Just Steward' in a deluge of philosophic mysticism and an infinity of words. The book stutters from an infirm ecstasy of style burgeoning into monumental capital letters and grandiose references to the Ineffable." A. D. Douglas

+ — N Y Tribune p25 D 10 '22 950w

Springfd Republican p7a N 12 '22 200w

"It must be owned that Richard Dehan's exuberant and over-ornamented style finds truer scope in depicting the splendours of Roman Alexandria than in reproducing our drab modern existence. To read of Hazaël's journey with Florens through the haunted desert, and his encounters with satyrs, hermits, and tempting fiends in female shape is like turning the pages of a Doré album. Yet once grant the author's assumptions, and the passionate conviction of the whole narrative sweeps cavils away."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p780 N 30 '22 650w

GRAVES, ROBERT. On English poetry; being an irregular approach to the psychology of this art, from evidence mainly subjective. 149p $2 Knopf

808.1 Poetry. English poetry 22-11543

The author, who is one of the youngest of the English poets, explains that these note-book reflections are not intended as a philosophy of poetry. The reflections are based on the rules which govern his own work at the moment and have been suggested by particular problems in the writing of his last two books of poetry. He claims for his ideas no universal application and presents them, not as a consecutive argument, but in disconnected sections varying from a few paragraphs to several pages in length.

Booklist 18:356 J1 '22

"Arranged in hodgepodge fashion, it nevertheless contains much that is wise, cleverly said, concerning men of genius." J. F.

+ Bookm 55:634 Ag '22 250w

"Perhaps the strangest and the most fascinating book on English poetry, that has been written in our day." W. S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 24 '22 1850w

Cleveland p69 S '22

Dial 74:105 Ja '23 60w

GRAVES, ROBERT—Continued

"The book is interesting and readable; but I, for one, wish that its author had elected rather to confine himself strictly to one single line of argument, one main issue, rather than start on half a dozen different topics, and to dismiss each one of them as airily as if it could be dealt with in a paragraph. One consequence of Mr. Graves's unfortunate manner is that his book will please no one but the poets themselves; and even many of these will be frightened away by its author's boyish dogmatism on points of scansion and by the publisher's ridiculous announcement on the cover that 'this volume is a literary landmark of importance.'" J. G. Fletcher

— + Freeman 6:187 N 1 '22 1200w

"In this charming, irresponsible, and often penetrating little volume Mr. Graves handles some big subjects very debonairly. Mr. Graves's book should be read by all who are interested in the various attempts to reinvestigate poetry in the light of the new psychology." J. W. Krutch

+ Lit R p868 Ag 12 '22 1300w

"Mr. Graves, himself a clever poet and a good one, has written one of the few useful books on poetry that exist. There is not a spot of platitude in his pages, or, as he would say, not a wad of putty. Each of his sixty or more brief essays goes straight to a proposition, drives it into a corner, and takes it by the throat—or nose. This is partly because he is a poet, and cannot tolerate untruth about his trade; partly because he has humor and a sense of impudence; partly because his aim happened to be practical—to describe his own experience of how poems get written." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 115:214 Ag 30 '22 650w

"Even if we judge Mr. Graves's book by the most lenient standards, it is disappointing. It is incoherent; Mr. Graves seems to have composed it by pinning together scattered leaves of his notebook; and the incoherence of the whole is not compensated by any great lucidity of the parts. Many of them—and those among the most important—are unintelligible, apparently because Mr. Graves has himself not mastered his theory." J. M. Murry

— + Nation and Ath 31:797 S 16 '22 880w

"The plain facts are that the book is thoroughly bad, and not merely bad in the sense of being mediocre, but offensively bad. One can forgive the errors of the industrious, the bigotries of the zealot, the ignorance of the young. But Mr. Graves is neither industrious, nor a zealot, nor wholly young, and one finds no excuse for his extraordinary compost of adolescent egotism and pseudo-science. The tone of his book is simply—one cannot help saying it!—juvenile." Conrad Aiken

— New Repub 32:340 N 22 '22 800w

"It is essentially a manual for beginners in the art of appreciating poetry and enjoying life, but much of it is so ingeniously and concisely put that others, too, and even poets, may very well enjoy reading it. It won't take them long; and no restatement of anything so important, in whatever terms, it is made, can be altogether a waste of time." O. B.

+ New Statesman 19:668 S 23 '22 780w

"What there is in Mr. Graves's opinions to provoke more than a mild, and rather bored, interest it is hard to understand. There is little or nothing that is new, and what there is expressed, for the most part, in a tiresomely whimsical fashion, non-humorously 'humorous,' and the only feeling aroused is merely irritation with the author's complacency." R. Le Gallienne

— N Y Times p3 Ag 27 '22 2800w

Reviewed by Llewelyn Jones

N Y Tribune p4 Jl 16 '22 580w

Pratt p26 winter '23

St Louis 21:11 Ja '23

"Certain critics have objected to this volume for its lack of system. They have been blankly ignorant of the privilege Mr. Graves has conferred on them by allowing them to share the secret processes of the poet. There is undoubtedly an inconsequence in this volume, but it is the fine inconsequence of poetry itself. There is a brood of futilities and affectations with regard to poetry which this book should exterminate."

+ — Sat R 131:639 O 28 '22 850w

"Mr. Robert Graves's book is one of the most remarkable works on pure Aesthetics that has appeared for a long time. Here it seems to me lies the chief value—the essential contribution to poetic thought—of a remarkable book. It is the first serious attempt made by a 'working poet' to give us a subjective analysis of the actual processes of inspiration. The book is full of such excellent workshop hints, which will make it as delightful to the apprentice poet as it is to the amateur of poetry. Poetry is a subject that grows periodically stale and dusty. Mr. Graves's is a book as profound and revitalizing as it is entertaining." A. Williams-Ellis

+ Spec 129:184 Ag 5 '22 1300w

"A book stiff with correctness is dull company; and Mr. Graves has the courage not only of many excellent aphorisms, but of opinions the more seductive for his own contradictions of them. He loves common sense. When he cannot hop, he skips; and when he wearies of skipping, he jumps."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p580 S 14 '22 3350w

GRAY, JOSLYN. Newcomer in Penny lane. 214p il $1 Scribner

22-17039

The newcomer was Monica Smith, adopted daughter of Mr and Mrs William Smith. Monica was a very happy little girl until the children at school recalled to her that she was only adopted. Then Monica did wish she could find one other child of the adopted class; she was sure it would help. Quite by accident she found that Joe Langly, her little playmate, was also of the despised class. But Joe was a very, sensitive child and the discovery would have led to a tragedy, except for Anna Miller, of "The other Miller girl."

"The book is not a thriller, but sometimes, when something else is supplied to take the place of the thrills, their absence might be a relief even to children."

+ Lit R p208 N 11 '22 110w

Reviewed by Vivian Radcliffe

N Y World p66 O 22 '22 70w

GRAY, JOSLYN. Other Miller girl. 224p il $1.60 Scribner

22-8710

Her name was Anna, and she was a younger sister of "Rusty Miller." (Book Review Digest, 1919) With her golden hair and sunny disposition, Anna deserved a better fate than to be called "the other Miller girl," but small towns have their prejudices and Anna worked hard before she gained her recognition. The minister's wife had been a self imposed invalid for many years, and with youthful enthusiasm Anna set about to right matters. Little by little, and very tactfully, Anna drew the selfish woman back into active life. But that was only one of her many philanthropic acts, and slowly but surely "the other Miller girl" was changed to "Anna Miller."

"A very readable and interesting book for young girls."

+ Lit R p763 Je 21 '22 200w

GRAYSON, DAVID, pseud. See Baker, R. S.

GREEN, GEORGE HERBERT. Psychoanalysis in the classroom; with an introd. by William McDougall. 272p $1.75 Putnam [7s 6d Univ. of London press]

150 Psychoanalysis. Psychology, Educational 22-2893

The book does not aim at covering the entire field of psychoanalysis but only such portions as will meet the special needs of the teacher and parent. It contains illuminating chapters on day-dreaming, on repressed desires, on the interpretation of dreams and instinctive fears, on the problem of arousing a child's interest. Always it is the normal child that the author has in mind, not the pathological case. Many illustrative cases are cited in the text and there is a bibliography and an index.

"Here, at last, is a book which can safely be placed into the hands of the general reader, untrained in technical terms and aspects. It is such a sensible book. It seizes upon and states briefly yet clearly and simply most of what is considered sound in the way of contribution to psychological fact." J. H. S. Bossard

+ Ann Am Acad 103:146 S '22 520w

"Contains some of the finest thinking, some of the clearest exposition, and by far the finest spiritual overtone of any book of its kind we have seen. For the seeker after the truth about children, and how to handle them, the author should be an incomparable guide. Every parent and every teacher should read him." Ruth Hale

+ Bookm 55:302 My '22 500w

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 29 '22 270w
+ Cleveland p52 Ag '22

"A clear and simple statement of analytical psychology. Mr. Green's discussion of the subject is based upon a large number of children's cases, and it adds to the clarity of his work that the greater part of these cases is within the realm of the normal; or rather, within such variations from the normal as indicate no irreparable mental lesion. One rises from this book with a clearer insight into the mental life of the child, and, incidentally, into that of the adult who grows out of the child." L. C. M.

+ Freeman 6:263 N 22 '22 150w

+ St Louis 20:264 N '22

"An excellent little book whose perusal would prove particularly interesting to elementary school teachers, whose large classes make their work so difficult."

+ Spec 127:82 J1 16 '21 120w

"One of the most lucid and most practical books that have appeared in this popular field of psychological speculation. The defect of the book is that the author has not sufficiently modified certain of the stock theories of psychoanalysis."

+ Springf'd Republican p9a F 26 '22 300w

GREENBIE, SIDNEY. Pacific triangle. 402p il $4 Century [18s Mills & B.]

919 Eastern question (Far East). Hawaiian Islands. Philippine Islands. South Sea islands 21-18395

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Reviewed by P. N. Stone

+ Bookm 54:584 F '22 140w

"The descriptive chapters, amply illustrated, combine fact and observation with anecdote; the conclusions drawn from these elements, however, are for the most part generalizations which take many things—the inner motives of political governments, for example—too much for granted."

+ Dial 72:219 F '22 80w

"When he drops the meditative tripper's role and takes to Japan and the Japanese, with whom he has lived and whom he understands, he is on ground safer to himself and more profitable to his readers. He is a shrewd student of things Japanese but a very thin philosopher." Nathaniel Pepper

+ Nation 114:537 My 3 '22 850w

"He is a shrewd and sympathetic observer, and when he forgets that there is such a thing as American journalism, he has a considerable power of drawing a picture in words. . . Mr. Greenbie, who is a student of society as well as of the beauties of nature, is continually occupied with these social and political problems, and what he has to say about them is always worth reading."

+ New Statesman 18:740 Ap 1 '22 440w

Spec 128:178 F 11 '22 1450w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p63 Ja 26 '22 70w

"Mr. Greenbie's observations are always entertaining, but naturally they are more valuable when he is dealing with countries such as Hawaii, New Zealand, and Australia than when he is turned loose in Pacific groups, such as Fiji and Samoa. . . On the wider Pacific problems especially those concerning New Zealand and Australia, Mr. Greenbie is worth reading."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p84 F 9 '22 850w

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:29 Ja '22

GREENE, EVARTS BOUTELL. Foundations of American nationality. v 1 614p il $2.60 Am. bk.

973.2 United States—History—Colonial period 22-12973

The first of a two-volume history of the American people, covering the period to 1789. It is intended to serve both as a college text and as a manual for the general reader. The history provides not so much a balanced narrative of events as an account of the movements and forces which left permanent impress and developed an independent and united nation. Each chapter is followed by bibliographical notes and there is also a general list of references. There are portraits, twelve maps and an index.

"The historical student cannot but set on this book the seal of approval, approval of what it has achieved. The object of the author has been fully attained—absolute adequacy within comprehensive limits."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 520w

"Professor Greene's book conforms so closely to accepted canons of historical work that it is difficult to give it anything but commendation. It not only summarizes concisely and accurately the fruits of current scholarship, but embodies the results of the writer's own researches. Praiseworthy balance is maintained in treating economic, political, constitutional, and social topics. Church history receives unusual attention, and no previous book of general scope has laid equal stress on westward expansion and its influence. The whole is well-knit, making a clear, readable, and attractive, if not spirited, account." H. C. Hockett

+ Educ R 64:448 D '22 300w

"A well-balanced survey, which, while not unduly iconoclastic, is prepared to sacrifice many of the old traditional legends. The account of the War of Independence is at every point fair, and, in particular, he does reasonable justice to the Tories who stood by Great Britain in the crisis. The book is well written and has some excellent illustrations. It deserves to be widely read in this country."

+ Nation and Ath 32:24 O 7 '22 200w

"He has set out his sound and liberal views in a most pleasant manner, and has appended useful bibliographies to each chapter."

+ Spec 129:1014 D 30 '22 130w

"It is a book which will be quite as useful on this as on the other side of the Atlantic; perhaps, indeed, even more so; for the author has devoted a large part of the space available to a description of those aspects and periods of American life with which we are least familiar."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p564 S 7 '22 1800w

GREENE, LEON SHERMAN. School shop installation and maintenance. 100p il $1.25 Manual arts press

621.7 Machine shops 22-9943

"Elementary information on what might be termed 'millwrighting' in manual training shops. Covers arrangement, installation of equipment, and adjustment and repair."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

+ Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:494 N '22

GREGOR, ELMER RUSSELL. Spotted Deer.
240p il $1.75 Appleton
Indians of North America—Fiction

22-6161

Another of Mr Gregor's Indian stories, in which not a single white character appears. Spotted Deer was a young warrior of the Delaware tribe. Returning one night from a hunting trip he was overtaken and captured by a party of Shawnees, who bound him and marched him away to their village. Altho carefully watched he managed to break off a few twigs and drop his hunting knife as a guide in case his people tried to trace him. In a few days his friend Running Fox, with a party of young Delaware warriors, found the knife and followed the trail of broken twigs to the Shawnee village. Running Fox knew better than to try to enter the village, but stayed nearby, and, after wily planning with the help of an old medicine woman, succeeded in rescuing Spotted Deer.

Booklist 18:337 Je '22

"In this tale technicalities do not exist, the author does not bore with long and languid descriptions of tribal customs, and on the other hand, his tale has ample and excellent background."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '22 200w

"To live in Indian land within the mind and body of Spotted Deer will tickle any boy's sense of adventurous romance as thoroughly as his love for the real feel of things. And it should act as his introduction to that best white guide on Indian trails, Cooper."

+ Lit R p726 Je 10 '22 220w

"Interestingly set forth. It should be in great demand among boy readers."

+ Springfd Republican p7a My 28 '22 140w

GREGORY, ISABELLA AUGUSTA (PERSSE), lady. Image; and other plays. 253p $2 Putnam
822 22-6250

In the title play some rustics are discussing what is to be done with the proceeds of the oil of two whales washed ashore by the tide. They decide to put up a statue to some great man. Next they wrangle some more about the man to whom the statue is to be erected and decide upon an unknown name they have heard from a half-witted mountaineer. The climax comes when they learn that Hugh O'Lorrrha never existed except in an old folksong and that, while they were talking and wrangling, the oil was extracted from the whales by the people of another district and the whales were washed back into the sea. The other plays are: Hanrahan's oath; Shanwalla; The wrens.

"There is a depth in all the characters and a joyous lilt in their talk." J. W. D. Seymour
+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Jl '22 540w

Booklist 18:323 Je '22

Cleveland p68 S '22

"Her comedies make an anthology of phrases, partly traditional, partly improvised, of the Irish countryside. But no phrase is left sticking out. All are used as if they had never been on a collector's pages. The speeches are delightfully entertaining, but the Irish voice is needed to give the proper flow, intonation, and rhythm." Padraic Colum

+ Dial 73:572 N '22 550w

Reviewed by F. L. Birch
New Statesman 20:360 D 23 '22 100w

Reviewed by L. R. Morris
N Y Times p6 S 24 '22 550w

Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 90w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:232 Je '22

St Louis 20:220 S '22

"The ineffectiveness and whimsicality of the Irish peasant are handled by Lady Gregory with a beautiful sense of humour and the deepest tenderness."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p723 N 9 '22 1250w

"Everywhere through the book there are flashes of that fine, gay humor which is Lady Gregory's own."

+ Theatre Arts M 6:260 Jl '22 220w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Everlasting whisper.
375p $1.75 Scribner [7s 6d Hodder & S.]
22-2312

Gloria Gaynor is a spoiled child of luxury, with city-bred admirers galore, when she meets Mark King, her father's best friend, a man of the forests and the mountains. In comparison with her city friends he is the real man and she thrills to him. But when, to save herself from the consequences of a mad-cap prank, she marries him off-hand and rides into the mountains and into untold hardship with him, her mood changes. She disillusiones his love to such an extent and shows herself so completely unreasonable that he turns into the primeval male bent on breaking her will. Not until she has been reduced to the last extremity of desolation and fear and Mark has been brought to the door of death, is a new Gloria born and a new love for both.

"Of course, the villains are very, very bad and the capricious heroine very, very beautiful and, except for her pride and imperiousness, wonderfully fine. However, we expect that and are glad to acknowledge 'The Everlasting Whisper' to be, within its limitations, an exciting and stirring tale." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ap 29 '22 780w

Cath World 115:844 S '22 90w

"The plot as a whole is somewhat antediluvian. However, the book is rather better than this comment might imply. Throughout there is a genuine feeling of the woods, the big outdoors, and some very good description turns up here and there. It is fairly good melodrama."

+ Lit R p474 Mr 4 '22 300w

"This is a most exciting tale, and, after the opening chapters, which drag a bit, one gobbles it eagerly from cover to cover. It is the sort of book that, once started, one gallops eagerly and absorbedly through, hating to put it down until the final page."

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 5 '22 350w

"The first part of the story has excellent character work; the latter part piles up the sensations too high."

+ Outlook 130:434 Mr 15 '22 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:149 Ap '22

"It is not only the best work he has done, but places Mr. Gregory in the forefront of the makers of pseudo-Nature 'Western' fiction, of which Zane Grey is the conspicuous leader."

+ Springfd Republican p13a F 12 '22 400w

"A rigid economy in the use of superlatives would enable Mr. Gregory to write with greater effect."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p246 Ap 13 '22 250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 Jl '22

GRENDON, FELIX. Love chase. 494p $2 Small 22-10768

"The Love Chase' is a novel of Bohemian life in New York, but this time for a change the subject is not Greenwich Village, but the smaller and less advertised colony of artists and radical intellectuals which is scattered over the East Side in the Thirties, Forties, and Fifties. The story is centered in a young woman who flees from the rigors of a puritanical home in Brooklyn to the free and easy atmosphere of the radical colony, takes a flier in free love, and being converted to matrimony by this experience, finally settles down with the right man. Some large-scale operations in diamond smuggling and an international spy complication are thrown in—for what reason it is difficult to see.”—

Lit R

“Bits of the book are almost brilliantly written; other patches are veritable deserts of dry words. Too much does Mr. Grendon make his characters mouth creeds and catechisms; far too much has he padded. As the book stands it is overlong, its material has been spread and spread thin over nearly five hundred pages, the characters are too many, the scenes and situation crowd one another.”

— + Boston Transcript p6 My 17 '22 200w

“Mr. Grendon is the one novelist who has succeeded in depicting the background of the young restless generation whose ideals and tendencies he fully understands. On almost every page there is a rapid fire of brilliant dialogue concerning modern ideas, movements, attitudes and personalities in which the unexpected, the witty, the piquant have the right of way.”

+ Freeman 6:46 S 20 '22 200w

“The picture which it presents of these assorted Bohemians is lively and keenly analyzed, and any one who is interested in the habits of this species can probably learn something about them from this book. The individual characters, too, are lifelike and interesting, a great deal of the time. But they have a habit of standing around declaiming about women's rights and free love and the medieval institution of marriage and the relations of the sexes generally which grows wearisome to the reader who is not so preoccupied with these subjects as the writer evidently is.”

— + Lit R p890 Ag 19 '22 250w

“If the book were half as long it would be, say, four times as good—and that would be good indeed. Mr. Grendon's gifts are neither epic nor melodramatic; they are the gifts of an observation which is at its best when concentrated and of an understanding which appears at its best when ideas not actions are on the carpet. Movement, flexibility, glitter—these he lacks; steadiness, seriousness, conscience—these he has. Meanwhile he has added a new district to fiction and an authentic document to the times.”
Carl Van Doren

— + Nation 114:749 Je 21 '22 220w

“The adventures and misadventures of the heroine will hold the interest of most readers, although it must be admitted that Mr. Grendon's style is rather commonplace.”

— + N Y Times p18 My 14 '22 110w

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 9 '22 190w

GREW, DAVID. Beyond rope and fence. 240p
$2 Boni & Liveright

22-19018

A story of the life of wild horses in the northwest prairies of Canada, and in particular the exciting history of Queen Dora, the buckskin mare, who escaped her corral, wandered farther and farther away from the ranch, and for some years evaded her owners. Tho she was obliged to be always on the alert against her enemy man, she enjoyed the wild, free life of the open, and the companionship of other horses. But at last she was caught by her pursuers, branded and put to work in the fields, made to endure a life which was slavery and torture to her. Then once more she escaped and, following the trail of the moose, led her herd to liberty across the frozen Saskatchewan.

Cath World 116:571 Ja '23 180w

“This is sentimentalized, highfalutin animal fiction with its animal psychology humanized to an nth power. Nevertheless, it is a stirring narrative, and if one can discount the sentimentality of it, there remains a pleasantly picturesque quality in the descriptions.”

— + Lit R p71 S 30 '22 140w

“The difficulty in telling a tale of this sort is to convince the reader that animals have the same feelings and emotions that human beings have. There are, perhaps, individuals whose insight into animal psychology is sufficiently keen to enable them to do this. To such persons David Grew's story will appeal.”

N Y Times p22 S 17 '22 370w

“The author is a capable narrator, who relies upon a plain tale told in sober English, without sentimentality or exaggeration. . . . He has achieved the truest and most graphic picture of the open country of the Canadian West that has ever been put on paper.” Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 3 '22 850w

Wis Lib Bul 18:271 D '22

GREW, SYDNEY. Art of the player-piano; a text-book for student and teacher. 333p $5
Dutton [12s 6d K. Paul]

786 Player-piano

The author says of the player-piano that it “is no dead mechanism. The force it requires to actuate it is no heavy physical force. It is not to be driven by unimaginative effort, but moved by artistic inspiration.” Altho the more subtle refinements of musical performance remain outside the art of the player-piano, it can be made to express everything that is necessary in an intelligent, personal, and complete performance. It is all a matter of pedaling, tempo control and the development of a rhythmical consciousness. The contents of the volume afford a complete course in musical appreciation. There is an index of musical compositions and a general index.

“Mr. Grew has lucid intervals, and in them he makes full amends. He is practical, erudite and playful. We recommend the book with one reservation. The reader must go no further than Chapter XII. Thenceforward Mr. Grew embarks upon a highly controversial and obscure exposition of prosody.”

+ — Spec 129:sup26 O 21 '22 220w

“There are obviously two special inducements to become a ‘player-pianist.’ One is the desire to be able to handle the instrument finely, to make the most of it; the other the wish to be able to reproduce at once some music in which one takes a special delight. Mr. Grew's carefully thought-out volume addresses itself to the first. He has devised a complete system of musical education for the ‘player-pianist,’ a course in ‘player-panism.’”

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p10 Ja 5 '22 460w

GREY, KATHARINE. A little leaven. 304p $2
Lippincott

22-6313

The story of a Kentucky mountain girl whose beautiful voice brings her fame and the means of helping her mountain people. In the meantime she has married a young lawyer from the city and left him because of misunderstandings. But he is enabled later, without her knowledge, to finance her musical education abroad, to watch her triumphs, and finally to clear up the misunderstandings which had kept them apart and to help her in her good works for her people.

Booklist 18:330 Je '22

“The story, though trite, is well knit and moves steadily ahead. It is told with ease and occasionally shows glimpses of a real emotion. But her characters are stiff and a little rusty—like old tintypes; and throughout the book we are conscious of a musty, warmed-over flavor.”

+ — Lit R p725 Je 10 '22 200w

N Y Times p9 Ap 30 '22 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p650 O 12 '22 30w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 Jl '22

GREY, ZANE. Day of the beast. 351p $2
Harper

22-15849

Daren Lane returns from the war wounded and gassed with but a short span of life remaining to him. He is deeply conscious of the changes the war had wrought in the soul of the soldier and he sees equal changes in the people that had remained at home. He finds them dominated by the instincts "engendering the day of the beast." But his greatest depression comes from changes in the women—their wild free life with men, slangy talk, indecent clothing, smoking and drinking, vile dancing and joy-riding. He determines to devote his remaining days to reforming his native town and to opening the eyes of all who are willing to see.

GREY, ZANE—Continued

"There can be no question but that in this honestly conceived and carefully written novel Mr. Grey has attempted to make a deeper, firmer, more understanding book than any to which he recently has set his hand. . . . He falls just short of having written an altogether distinguished novel because he is not quite sure of the exact location of the line between sentiment and sentimentality." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '22 900w

"Mr. Grey is tremendously worked up over the manners and morals of our younger people. He has set out to show them up, and, as was to be expected, has done the job with more of vigor and warmth than of calm judgment."

— Lit R p34 S 16 '22 190w

"In justice to the author, it must be said that Mr. Grey's purpose in this new novel is good and fine, quite commendable in every way. But, in equal justice to the reader, it must be admitted that his performance is not commensurate with his motive. In none of the factors of fictional excellence does it compare favorably with his previous work."

— + N Y Times p17 Ag 27 '22 420w

"Zane Grey, it is greatly to be feared, will for once disappoint his multitude of admirers. Mr. Grey has tackled a job that is rather out of his line." W: Harris

— N Y Tribune p4 Ag 27 '22 100w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 5 '22 330w

GREY, ZANE. Tales of lonely trails. 394p il $3 Harper

917.8 West—Description and travel. Hunting 22-18521

"Stories of Zane Grey's hunting, camping and exploring trips in the wild and desolate parts of the West. Three of the five narratives are lively tales of adventure. 'Colorado Trails' is the story of a camping trip in the Rocky mountains, sprinkled with trout fishing and bear trails. 'Roping Lions in the Grand Canyon' is the thrilling account of capturing mountain lions alive on a wild and beautiful plateau at the edge of the Grand canyon. 'Tonto Basin' is the story of the camping trips in Arizona, on one of which he took his little son, Romer. Many exciting bear hunts filled his days in Arizona with adventure. The most impressive stories in the book, however, are the first and last, both of them short. The first is the story of his visit to Nonnozoshe, the great natural bridge in southern Arizona, known for many decades only to the Indians. It is in an almost inaccessible place and has been visited by very few white men. His last article is the account of a trip to Death valley in Arizona."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 19:80 D '22

Bookm 56:642 Ja '23 100w

"Heartily, exciting, refreshing as his stories often are, these cañons and mountains call Mr. Grey to untrammelled opportunities of simple and unaffected description, and he feels no call to even approach grandiloquence. It makes us believe that the writing of this book at this time, the getting down to descriptive 'hard pan,' combined with the author's recent experiment in the field of serious social fiction, will do more for Mr. Grey's next Western novel than all the admonitions of all the critics who ever trod the pavements of Grub street." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 11 '22 450w

"Mr. Grey appears to advantage in these 'true tales of real adventure.' It is a much more attractive incarnation than that of Mr. Grey, the maker of very popular but very raw fiction. Even his diction here is immensely better than in his novels; it has a direct, simple, unaffected sincerity, not without crudities of expression but making, often, a finely colored picture."

+ Lit R p116 O 14 '22 300w

"Zane Grey knows his Arizona as few writers do. He knows the desert, and he knows the men who spend their lives there. In 'Tales of Lonely Trails,' he has produced a book which describes the country and some of its men as they really are."

+ N Y Times p16 D 17 '22 1800w

"Zane Grey in these pages keeps his readers' pulse-beats going fast."

+ Outlook 132:304 O 18 '22 50w

Pratt p30 winter '23

R of Rs 67:112 Ja '23 100w

St Louis 20:274 N '22

"The glamor of romance and the thrill of adventure play just as prominent a part in Zane Grey's 'Tales of Lonely Trails' which purport to be true stories of his own adventures, as in any novel that he has ever written. For those who admire or pursue the active out-of-doors life, this book has charm and appeal."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 360w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p848 D 14 '22 60w

Wis Lib Bul 18:273 D '22

GREY, ZANE. To the last man. 310p il $2 Harper [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

22-1457

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

Booklist 18:189 Mr '22

Bookm 55:201 Ap '22 80w

Dial 73:113 Jl '22 60w

"It is a swiftly moving tale, skilfully concocted and well written."

+ Lit R p473 Mr 4 '22 320w

"Somewhat above the level of the average stereotyped Western novel." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p15 Ja 15 '22 840w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:149 Ap '22

"Admirers of Zane Grey will find much diversion in this dramatic tale. The author strips the narrative of non-essentials, and tells it as if he had been an eye-witness."

+ Springf'd Republican p13a F 12 '22 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p110 F 16 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:74 Mr '22

GREY, ZANE. Wanderer of the wasteland. 2 419p il $2 Harper

23-796

Adam Larey, a boy of eighteen, is dominated by his selfish and vicious brother, Guerd, and lured by him into the gold fields of California. Here, in a fight, Adam kills Guerd and flees into the desert. For over a decade he wanders about in the wasteland, sometimes lost and sometimes near death, rescued by Indians with whom he lives for many months, braving all the dangers and inspired by all the beauties of the desert, always exploring and sometimes half-heartedly scratching the earth for gold, an avenger of wrongs, a knight-errant to the helpless, growing a soul. The book teems with descriptions of desert scenery and magic and philosophic reflections. Even the desert is not without its temptations to the man in him but always the consciousness of his crime debars him from linking his fate with a woman. At last, after he has fled from his greatest ordeal, he learns that he is not a murderer and that Guerd is still alive.

"There is a fundamental simplicity about Mr. Grey's novels. They require all the attention of the reader, because of the excitement of the plot, but they do not leave him with any problem to consider. Undoubtedly Mr. Grey has found the secret of his own success to lie in his appeal to the child qualities in the minds of grown men and women. He asks them to give him their attention but he does not ask them to think for themselves." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '23 1300w

"'Wanderer of the Wasteland' is a typical Zane Grey story, and will no doubt appeal to its author's many admirers."

N Y Times p19 Ja 7 '23 1050w

"It is told with a certain ingenuity and narrative skill. Except for his irritating 'literary' device of inverting the normal sentence order Mr. Grey writes well. He has a fine descriptive gift; he has mastered suspense. But do Mr. Grey's readers believe in the existence of such people as Mr. Grey depicts; do they accept the code of conduct implicit in Mr. Grey's novels?" Burton Rascoe

— + N Y Tribune p19 Ja 21 '23 2650w

GRIMSHAW, BEATRICE ETHEL. Conn of the coral seas. 336p $1.75 Macmillan [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

22-929

Deirdre Rose contracted a "student marriage" while at college in Dublin, in order to get control of her money and be free to go whither she would. Too late, after she had experienced the barrenness of life without love, she found that she had gained a delusive freedom. In her wanderings over the earth she finally drifted to the New Cumberland group of the Coral Islands. On these islands, which are still unattached to any of the powers, lawlessness and cannibalism still flourish. The white inhabitants, with few exceptions, are human wreckage. This is the weird background of Deirdre's romance with Stephen Conn, the most prominent figure on the islands, because of his indomitable personality and his riches—gained from a secret source. The greed and jealousy of the white riff-raff and the complications of Deirdre's nominal marriage, make a stormy voyage for the lovers, in a unique setting, before they reach port.

Booklist 18:238 Ap '22

Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '22 900w

"The tale moves swiftly, with plenty of color and excitement. Beatrice Grimshaw, whose home is on an island in the South Seas, knows the country whereof she writes, and gives us many interesting descriptions of life in the outer islands, in the days when Edward was King in England."

+ N Y Times p14 F 12 '22 600w

"Here are romance, adventure, danger, and a bit of realism. The tale, once fairly begun, will not be left unfinished and it is not mere raw sensationalism, but skilled story-weaving."

+ Outlook 130:434 Mr 15 '22 40w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:198 My '22

Pratt p35 Ap '22

"A good story of island life. But the familiar sentimentality of the love affair will doubtless, in the opinion of many, lend an additional attraction to this picturesque novel."

+ — Sat R 133:637 Je 17 '22 600w

Springfield Republican p9a F 26 '22 100w

"Her story is not a very realistic love tale, with plenty of sentiment and sensation, and her characters do not differ very much from the rather artificial figures common to popular romance."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p310 My 11 '22 170w

"The best adventure story of many months."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:74 Mr '22

GROVES, ERNEST RUTHERFORD. Rural mind and social welfare; with foreword by Kenyon L. Butterfield. 205p $2 Univ. of Chicago press

630.1 Social psychology. Country life 22-14359

The book is an analysis of the social experiences of country people. It brings together such psychological knowledge, especially from the rapidly developing science of social psychology, as is likely to prove useful to an understanding of the problems of rural life. Beginning with a study of the psychological influences of primitive agriculture, the author analyzes the causes of city drift, the basic human instincts in relation to country life, rural recreation, the country church and the rural mind, and the psychology of rural organization. There are bibliographical references at the end of each chapter. Index.

"A particularly keen exposition of the fact that the solution of the rural problem depends on a clear perception of the fundamental causes involved. The book should be read by all those seeking a sane basis for an attack upon the rural phase of our social problem." J. W. Clarkson, Jr.

+ Ei School J 23:150 O '22 640w

"Sane and sensible."

+ Nation 115:531 N 15 '22 30w

"Groves presents the best reasoned statement of the psychological factors [of the rural problem] that I have seen. The quotations in The Rural Mind are selected with rare insight and they cast brilliant light upon an area illumined hitherto only by the economist. This book will be welcome to the student." W. H. Wilson

+ Survey 49:525 Ja 15 '23 280w

"The author sometimes seems to use words in the manner of algebraic symbols and sometimes suggests the contorted efforts of one wrestling with a half-mastered language. This obstacle surmounted, the English reader will find much to interest him in the book."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p564 S 7 '22 1050w

Wis Lib Bul 18:214 O '22

GRUENER, HIPPLYTE WASHINGTON. Chemistry: the science of matter and its changes. 384p il $3 Harper

540 Chemistry 22-18135

A popular treatise which emphasizes the fundamental principles of the subject and their application to daily life. An outline of general chemistry is followed by sections on organic and inorganic chemical industries, sanitary chemistry, agricultural chemistry and the chemistry of nutrition.

Booklist 19:111 Ja '23

"A readable, logical exposition of a big subject. The definitions are good, the text matter generously illustrated. The book is essentially modern, such current topics as Madame Curie's lectures on radium, the widely discussed questions of food adulteration and preservatives, and much advertised matter of vitamins all receiving attention. The glossary and various tables of elements add decidedly to its value as a work of reference."

+ Bookm 56:357 N '22 140w

"All sorts of 'everyday people,' from cooks and housewives to business men and manufacturers, are indebted to Professor Gruener for the skill with which he initiates them into the science that underlies the needs and activities of daily life."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 260w

"We cannot imagine that a student would select this book when so many better are available, and would fear that the ordinary reader would not get far in it without becoming discouraged or falling asleep. It is not attractively written, it tries to tell too much in the space, and is altogether one of the poorest works on chemistry we have ever seen."

— Lit R p232 N 18 '22 110w

GUBBINS, JOHN HARINGTON. Making of modern Japan. 316p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

552 Japan—History

"An account of the progress of Japan from pre-feudal days to constitutional government and the position of a great power, with chapters on religion, the complex family system, education, etc." (Subtitle) The opening chapters are devoted to the early history of Japan and the dual character of her government after which the various changes are traced that accompanied the opening of her ports, the coming of Christian missionaries, the dawning of imperialistic aspirations, with a complete history up to date, political, religious and cultural. Index.

"Mr. Gubbins's volume, concise, short, with not a word too much or too little, is more than the title suggests, for it gives in the opening chapters a concrete tabloid history of Japan. It is fair in judgment and interpretation without either gushing or patronizing. It is written with symmetry, proportion and measure. The book belongs on a workaday shelf between Buckle and Guizot, and doubtless by the end of the year its pages will be very much thumb marked." Achmed Abdullah

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 12 '22 330w

"Mr. Gubbins writes well and with careful attention to detail, but somewhat lacks vision. Long a diplomat in Japan, and able therefore to deal at first hand with much of his matter, he suffers, it may be, from not seeing the wood for the trees."

+ — Sat R 134:680 N 4 '22 210w

GUEDALLA, PHILIP. Second empire. 457p il $5 Putnam [16s Constable]

944 France—History—Second empire, 1852-1870. Napoleon III, emperor of the French 22-22780

This history, written in a manner suggestive of Lytton Strachey and with an irony equal to his, covers a longer period than the title implies, since in following the involved fortunes of the Bonaparte family and in setting the stage for the history of France in the Second empire the historian is obliged to go back to the beginning of the nineteenth century. The book is also a personal narrative of Napoleon III from his birth in 1808, and follows his career as prince, president and emperor. The history is introduced by a study of Bonapartism and the growth of the Napoleonic legend.

"As a piece of literary workmanship, it is exceedingly brilliant. Mr. Guedalla has the power of vivid narration, of picturesque description and penetrating phrase. . . . Whatever its scholarly shortcomings, [the volume] is infused with that appealing quality, constructive imagination." W. C. Abbott

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 700w

"There is a precision of detail, combined with a colorful, vivid quality that makes it a thing of today; a style that will please the most meticulous literary judge; an omnipresent sense of humor that sharpens every phrase. Added to which, Mr. Guedalla has a fine sense of dramatic values, making the most of romantic gesture and tense situation."

+ Bookm 56:775 F '23 120w

Boston Transcript p8 N 18 '22 1850w

"The considerable bibliography and internal evidence show that the author has read widely; but his object is epigram rather than new material. Most of his sparkling sayings are smart, some are statesmanlike. If he presents no new facts, he treats amusingly of a well-known episode in French history." W. M.

+ Eng Hist R 38:152 Ja '23 80w

"The period and its chief figure, as well as a host of major and minor characters, are presented in a manner that is amusing, clarifying and masterly. It is a really flip-top book, brilliant to gaiety, learned without a hint of pedantry, amazingly interesting." Hildgarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p37 D '22 70w

"Mr. Guedalla has achieved something both brilliant and satisfying in 'The Second Empire.' He has assimilated all the voluminous literature on the subject and recreated it into a smoothly flowing narrative embellished with his own scholarship and with a characteristically ironic humor."

+ Int Bk R p48 F '23 1250w

"Guedalla's 'Second Empire' is usually sound history and always good literature." F. M. Anderson

+ Lit R p337 D 23 '22 950w

"It reads like a solemn trifle, an elaborate piece of brilliant fooling, rather than a picture of a great drama. It has brilliance without balance, and color without proportion. If Mr. Guedalla could forget alike his mannerisms and the foibles of the hour, he might write a book of importance. But he would have to approach his task in a different way and for very different purposes."

+ — Nation and Ath 31:685 Ag 19 '22 1000w

"Mr. Guedalla's book will often be pronounced 'brilliant,' and perhaps this word alone sums up both its merits and its defects. Sometimes perhaps the wit and the recondite allusion seem to serve no other purpose than to reveal the author's competence in such matters; but more commonly the purpose is the legitimate one of making vivid the personalities of past times, of creating an 'atmosphere.'" Carl Becker

+ — New Repub 33:125 D 27 '22 1250w

"Mr. Guedalla is arresting, entertaining, quick, but he is like a stage manager who has spent so much labour on the properties that there is no room for the play. Out of so many jokes many are bound to be mechanical. Napoleon fails to live before us because we are blinded by the glitter of Mr. Guedalla's conversation. He has many qualifications for a biographer, an enquiring mind, a quick eye, a sense of humour, and a sympathetic personality. But of these gifts we will not reap full advantage, till he has learned 'to moderate his brilliance.'" F. B.

+ — New Statesman 19:517 Ag 12 '22 1350w

"A book mildly informing and immensely diverting. In the new history and in the new type of biography we escape boredom—and many facts." C. J. H. Hayes

+ — N Y Times p3 N 26 '22 2450w

"Mr. Guedalla's style, which is one of the outstanding features of his book, is curiously uneven. At its best it is extraordinarily brilliant and effective, and at its worst it is pretentious and inept. Mr. Guedalla is capable both of genuine wit and of a labored and tedious facetiousness, and in his efforts to arrive at the one he frequently relapses into the other. But both the merit and the defect of Mr. Guedalla's style lie in his epigrammatic facility." Esther Murphy

+ — N Y Tribune p9 N 5 '22 1250w

"We had no deep, abiding interest in Napoleon III, until Guedalla took him in hand, but now the period seems to us among the most absorbing in history. Indeed, Guedalla touches no happening without making it as spirited and engaging as high comedy. To us he has all the elegance of Strachey and rather more fire." Heywood Brown

+ N Y World p11 D 2 '22 350w

"The author is a stylist as well as a historian, and his pages scintillate with striking but unforced phrases that make his subject glow with interest. His knowledge is exhaustive but is not obtruded; his narrative flows easily along; and yet is restrained within reasonable limits; and his judgments are often novel but always worth pondering. This is an exceptional book and it will give a host of readers a new interest in history."

+ Outlook 132:533 N 22 '22 130w

"The Second Empire' is a tribute by the author to his own brilliancy, wit and reading. He might almost as well have chosen any other period of any other characters. The book is not quite history, it is not at all biography; it is mainly a bag of literary tricks."

— + Sat R 134:385 S 9 '22 900w

"We have to thank Mr. Guedalla for his admirable book. His style—that of the epigram at any price—may annoy the more fastidious of his readers, but it should not blind them to his historical width of view and power of presentation."

+ Spec 129:242 Ag 19 '22 1200w

"There is no fine writing, no daubing on the colour, in these pages. All the work is restrained and delicate, recalling the fine lines of the miniaturist. . . Mr. Guedalla is more than a skilful word-painter. He is a critic and historian of shrewd and balanced judgment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p455 JI 13 '22 1800w

GUEST, LESLIE HADEN. Struggle for power in Europe, 1917-1921; an outline economic and political survey of the central states and Russia. 318p $4.50 Doran [16s Hodder & S.]

940.5 Europe-Politics and government. Reconstruction (European war)—Europe. Near East (Eng ed 22-5834)

Before making this "attempt at a general survey, which will act as a guide to the main lines of change in Russia, Central and South-Eastern Europe and indicate the new forces which are striving for mastery" the author states that his feeling of solidarity with the working population makes him most keenly alive to everything human and democratic in the present world situation. It led him to discover, underneath the terrible physical distress and privation, a vigorous new growth everywhere; signs that the democracy of Europe has begun the building of the new order. He describes conditions in Russia, Poland, Czechoslovakia and other states from the standpoint of one within the country concerned, looking for signs of progress and constructive growth rather than for the evil aspects of politics and reactionary influences. There are a number of maps.

Reviewed by A. I. Andrews

Am Pol Sci R 16:372 My '22 310w

"Dr. Guest is not alone a thinker, but an observer; not a theorist but a man of practical understanding, who has studied a problem at first hand and shows it forth simply but comprehensively and with an eye single to the needs of humanity." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 4 '22 1100w

"Informing book, which although a bit optimistic in tone, is full of facts about the economic life of eastern Europe—indeed an important work." C. A. Beard

+ New Repub 30:144 Mr 29 '22 50w

"What he has to say about the countries he has visited is something more than the gossip of the fleet-footed journalist. He has no axe of his own to grind and no mandate to make a case for a party or a people. Moreover, his practical experience as a doctor and his sympathy with the common man drive him always to look for the realities below surface forms of government and the doings of prominent personages. Some of his chapters are slight and some of his conclusions may be doubtful, but he is generally stimulating and suggestive."

+ — New Statesman 18:598 F 25 '22 930w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:208 My '22

Pratt p30 autumn '22

St Louis 20:225 S '22

"It is a curious blend of sober fact and Socialist rhetoric."

— + Spec 128:118 Ja 28 '22 400w

"It is a useful and thoughtful work comprising much which is interesting, especially the account of a conversation with Lenin. The book is agreeably free from the unbalanced pessimism of many similar works."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p795 D 8 '21 2150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:179 JI '22

GUILDAY, PETER. Life and times of John Carroll, archbishop of Baltimore (1735-1815). 800p $5 Encyclopedia press

B or 92 Carroll, John. Catholic church in America 22-10425

"First cousin of the American patriot, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, who signed the Declaration of Independence, Irish by descent, an ex-Jesuit (for the Society of Jesus was suppressed in 1773) John Carroll was not only the first Roman Catholic Bishop in the United States, but also incarnated in himself the spirit of his co-religionists throughout a long life spent in the service of his Church. It is rightly claimed, therefore, that the life of John Carroll is the first chapter in the history of the Church in the United States, and is the story of the origin of conditions as they are to-day." — The Times [London] Lit Sup

"It is a pity that in a work of great merit like this, which will surely be a source-book for the history of this period, a more rigorous critical method was not employed. Arguments, reduplication, and irrelevant matter removed, the volume would lose half its size and gain twice its value."

+ — Am Hist R 28:325 Ja '23 750w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 10 '22 1100w

"In this monumental biography of Archbishop Carroll, a chapter is devoted to the 'Mission to Canada.' The chapter contains some extracts from Father Carroll's letters, and a few other items from private sources; but it does not throw much light on the course of the committee's negotiations in Canada, or on the reasons for the breakdown of the negotiations."

+ — Canadian Hist R 3:364 D '22 180w

"It contains a thorough description of the founding of the earliest dioceses and of the extension of the Church in America. And there are many pictures of the life in those periods and glimpses of the leaders in State and Church."

Lit R p762 Je 24 '22 220w

"The book is a monument of industry and is not likely to be superseded. It will always be indispensable to the Church historians of America."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p434 JI 6 '22 980w

GUISE, A. V. L. Six years in Bolivia; adventures of a mining engineer. 246p il $7 Dutton [21s Unwin]

918.4 Bolivia—Description and travel

The author is a mining engineer who went to Bolivia as the representative of an English mining syndicate. He was employed first in managing a tin mine on the high plateau in the district of Oruro and later, in putting together a dredger that was to extract gold from the Kaka river. Throuth his six years' experience the author lived with the people and he tells much about native customs and conditions. He also carried a camera and made numerous pictures.

"A book which is a model in its way, authoritative, readable, finely illustrated. It is not saying too much to place it among the finest of recent volumes which can be classed under the general head of travel."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 28 '22 290w

"A straightforward and extensive account."

+ Ind 109:215 O 14 '22 40w

"Facts stick out everywhere throughout this book and it must prove a valuable addition to any travel library as well as a comprehensive handbook for those who have investments in Bolivian mines or who intend to invest in its mineral development."

+ N Y Times p7 D 24 '22 170w

"Mr. Guise writes competently; his incidents and anecdotes are chosen with the skill of a man of letters." Kenneth Fuesle

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 19 '22 920w

GUISE, A. V. L.—Continued

"A well-written book. The author has a keen eye for the picturesque and a clever knack of describing it. An abundance of personal incident makes the book exciting reading."

+ Outlook 132:534 N 22 '22 30w

Spec 129:600 O 28 '22 1100w

"Mr. Guise's straightforward story of his adventures in Bolivia is interesting not only because the life that he describes with intimate knowledge is strange and novel, but also because he is a type of the Englishman who has a passion for banishing himself to out-of-the-way places in the hope of making two blades of grass grow where there was one before."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p563 S 7 '22 1000w

GULL, CYRIL ARTHUR EDWARD RANGER
(GUY THORNE, pseud.). City in the clouds.
299p $1.75 Harcourt [8s 6d Hurst & B.]

22-3962

Gideon Morse from Brazil and his daughter Juanita are the lions of the London season. The wealthy scientist Morse, however, seems to be shrouded in mystery. The colossal towers on Richmond Hill are a product of his brains and money, and puzzle the owner of the London paper who has already fallen in love with the beautiful Juanita. After many exciting events it is discovered that Morse, fearing assassination by a political secret society, has built this veritable city in the clouds to safeguard himself and his daughter. Finally the menace is removed by the instrumentality of Juanita's lover and his many friends, and the story is brought to a happy climax.

"If you desire an absorbing story and your brain is depleted by la grippe or overwork try this one! This book is a magnificent proof that all the impossible plots have not yet been corralled, and that intelligent men and women can still be enthralled by masterly accounts of things that could not possibly happen." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 25 '22 340w

"Told with an element of suspense, the story as a story, while not especially convincing, moves with a minimum of drag and a maximum of action, notwithstanding that its chief villain is mostly conspicuous by his absence. The story as a whole, however, is cut from a very obvious pattern of romance and derringdo, with the sole exception of the basic idea, which, while entirely unconvincing, detracts little, if any, from the story as a story, judged purely as melodrama."

+ Lit R p534 Mr 25 '22 240w

"If the novel had ended fifty pages before it does, the story would have been better, but, at that, it is an excellently fashioned bit of work and quite unusual in its way."

+ N Y Times p27 My 28 '22 210w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p646 O 6 '21 150w

GUMMERE, RICHARD MOTT. Seneca the philosopher, and his modern message. 150p $1.50 Jones, Marshall

578 Seneca, Lucius Annaeus 22-14144

The book is the first volume in "Our debt to Greece and Rome" series, edited by George Depue Hadzits and David Moore Robinson. It gives a brief account of Seneca's life, shows how extensive has been the influence of his style and thought and searches the references to him in European and American literature from the time of his death to the present day. Notes, bibliography, index of authors and titles.

Booklist 19:75 D '22

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 12 '22 650w

"That Mr. Gummere is filled with enthusiasm for his task is evident throughout. The style is clear and spirited. This slender volume will bring home to the general reader the vital appeal made by Seneca's philosophical writings as they have come down the ages to the modern world with a message of universal brotherhood and steady courage." H. C. Lipscomb

+ Class Philol 17:374 O '22 780w

"This latest work is the readable exposition of professional enthusiasm which books of this type should ideally reveal. The reader of humane tastes will enjoy Mr. Gummere's book." D. R. Stuart

+ Ind 109:313 N 25 '22 720w

"On the whole a creditable piece of work, the faults of which, if they are faults, may not offend many readers, and the virtues of which will appear, it may be hoped, to a wide circle." P. E. More

+ Lit R p918 S 2 '22 660w

"The treatment is frankly eulogistic: the reader will perforce make his own reservations, but will confess at the end that Gummere makes out a good case for statesman, philosopher, and man. Scholarly but not academic, the treatise is particularly suggestive in the chapter on Seneca's appeal to the church and that upon his modern influence." A. H. Rice

+ Natlon 115:sup644 D 6 '22 320w

"The editors' luck failed them in Mr. Gummere. The title promised us Seneca and his Modern Message. The book gives us very little of Seneca. As for the 'modern message,' there is none, if we must accept Mr. Gummere's findings." Alvin Johnson

— New Repub 33:sup10 N 29 '22 600w

New Statesman 20:390 D 30 '22 230w

"He does not stifle us with the dust of arid erudition; he makes us see Seneca as he lived and he brings out the value to us today of Seneca's utterances more than eighteen centuries ago." Brander Matthews

+ N Y Times p2 S 10 '22 1000w

Pratt p28 winter '23

"Dr. Gummere has done his work exceedingly well, and with astonishing fullness, considering the size of his volume. His book, in truth, is not a rough sketch, but a miniature or a medal in which, though the scale is tiny, everything essential is minutely recorded." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 129:401 S 23 '22 2400w

Spring'd Republican p6 Ja 22 '23 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p461 Jl 13 '22 300w

GUNNARSSON, GUNNAR. Guest the One-eyed; tr. from the Danish by W. W. Worster. 340p $2.50 Knopf

22-4433

"A chronicle of an Icelandic family in three generations. The chief characters are Orlygar, the arbitrary but beneficent ruler of the country-side; Omarr, his son, who becomes a citizen of the larger world but returns in middle age to resume the vigorous life of rustic Iceland and take his father's place in the community; Kittill, Omarr's selfish and unscrupulous brother, who disappears anathematized by all, and returns years after as a wandering saint and seer known as Guest, the one-eyed; and Orlygar the younger, illegitimate son of Kittill and Omarr's ward."—Cleveland

Booklist 18:238 Ap '22

"A story remarkable for its strong, simple character drawing and vivid picture of the Icelandic scene."

+ Cleveland p27 Ap '22

"By the contagion of enthusiasm it manages to convey something of the beauty of that sombre, silent country which it is unable to express in words, but never did any author, with better intentions, sentimentalize and emasculate life, or advance his plot by more astonishingly inept inventions than Mr Gunnarsson employs."

+ Dial 72:536 My '22 120w

"Behind the story, the sombre beauty of the country which has moulded and influenced the characters is sketched with richness and understanding." L. B.

+ Freeman 5:598 Ag 30 '22 150w

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield
Lit R p715 Je 10 '22 550w

Reviewed by Edith Rickert

— New Repub 31:194 Jl 12 '22 250w

"So clearly are the thoughts, emotions and acts depicted that each character seems living, and the reader seems to be sitting or standing, as the play of emotions demand, peering into the life of this town in Iceland—watching life unfold its quota of joy, sorrow, hate, love. If the author wished to give this impression when the last page of his book had been read, he admirably succeeded."

+ N Y Times p14 Mr 19 '22 550w

"There are imagination and thought in the writing."

+ Outlook 130:558 Ap 5 '22 40w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul. 27:149 Ap '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:133 My '22

GURNEY, LYDIA MARIA. Things mother used to make. 110p 75c Macmillan

641 Cookery

A small and practical cook book containing not more than two hundred recipes for some old-time, tried and favorite dishes, simple for the most part, and inexpensive. A twenty-page appendix contains useful household hints.

"The inexperienced housekeeper in search of information as to the preparation of simple dishes will find here presented instructions for the making of such foods as meet the needs of a modest but well ordered table. The book, inexpensive itself, is well worth possessing."

+ Lit R p513 Mr 18 '22 90w

GWYNN, STEPHEN LUCIUS. Garden wisdom: or, From one generation to another. 143p il $2.25 Macmillan [6s Talbot Pr.: Unwin]

824

From these essays one can picture the author as one who, having passed his prime and retired to the seclusion of his garden, passes his days in gardening, writing, philosophizing and reminiscence. The result is a blending of all these things with mellow, genial good sense and wisdom of readjustment to post-war conditions and the oncoming of a new generation. With the exception of the last essay, "All eighteenth century gardener," recording the impressions made upon the author by a purely literary personality, Horace Walpole, the book contains personal recollections of notable people. "The ageing of a poet" refers to W. B. Yeats; "An artist and his work" to the painter, Walter Osborne; "A poet under a cloud" to Stephen Phillips; "A lover of justice" to Mary Kingsley; "A scholar" to the author's own father.

"Mr. Gwynn writes very interestingly about the late work of Yeats, in which he enjoys 'a savor, a tang of maturity from which the early freshness has passed, yet which has not felt the mellowing touch of age.' If the title of these essays is rather ill chosen, the contents of the book will repay the reader who is weary of the slick journalism of so many works of this kind."

+ Lit R p568 Ap 8 '22 180w

"There is a true, if old-fashioned, charm in these essays, which are made to 'hang together' in a rather original fashion. . . Mr. Gwynn's book is good to read throughout, and its manner betrays no sign of the ageing about which he has so much to say."

+ New Statesman 18:398 Ja 7 '22 440w

Pratt p26 autumn '22

H

HACKETT, FRANCIS. Story of the Irish nation. 402p il $2.50 Century

941.5 Ireland—History

22-10261

The story goes back to the beginnings of history, to legend and the Gaelic past of Ireland. With the Norman and English conquests, the English confiscations and misrule up to the land war in modern times, the coming of Sinn Féin and the Irish Republic, the story is one of continuous turbulence, misery and suffering. There are numerous illustrations by Harold Toksvig, a list of books consulted, a census chart and an index.

Am Pol Sci R 16:728 N '22 20w

Booklist 18:326 Je '22

"If one cannot agree entirely with the exhortations of England, he yet can find much that is instructive and wholly delightful in this brief history of a romantic people whom all, save possibly Britons, find it easy to love."

+ Bookm 55:534 Jl '22 70w

"There is no question as to Mr. Hackett's ability to touch the heart, when he writes of the 'Irish Nation.' But since we cannot live by heart alone, we regret that a little more cool commonsense has not been infused into the last fourth of the book." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p9 My 13 '22 780w

"Written in not much more than three weeks, this book does not of course claim to be a work of erudition, and it is not one; but back of the writing lay many times three weeks' and several times three years of thought about the Irish character and the Irish problem. The result is something fresh, stirring, interpretative, valuable."

+ Nation 115:286 S 20 '22 50w

Reviewed by M. F. Egan

N Y Times p8 Je 18 '22 2600w

"Mr. Hackett would probably not put in a claim of scientific, dispassionate impartiality for his own work. He is frankly and passionately sympathetic with the Irish people in their long struggle for nationhood, and his book is primarily a sympathetic interpretation of this struggle. He simply reverses the emphasis which one finds in the works of British historians who are eager to justify the maintenance of the imperial connection. However, Mr. Hackett's sincerity and good taste keep his work free from the gross exaggerations and unpardonable suppressions which appear in many British and Irish histories." W. H. Chamberlin

+ N Y Tribune p8 My 7 '22 600w

"Mr. Hackett writes with sustained brilliancy and great compactness of expression. Some of his word-pictures are likely to leave a lasting impression on the reader. His characterizations of Cromwell, Pitt and Gladstone are penetrating and essentially correct, while he has grasped the trend and significance of Parnell's policy as few who have written of him. To O'Connell he is unjust. There is an occasional touch of superciliousness that repels the professional student of history; but the latter, after all, has to put up with a good deal in these days of the 'new history.'" C. E. McGuire

+ Pol Sci Q 37:527 S '22 900w

Pratt p21 autumn '22

"A gifted Irishman's readable and entertaining version of the dramatic record of his own people. It goes without saying that Mr. Hackett's history is sympathetic, but at the same time it is based upon authentic sources, rather than tradition, and it aims at something more permanent and worth while than mere dramatic effect."

+ R of Rs 65:671 Je '22 70w

St Louis 20:225 S '22

"Make what allowances we will, a history loses much of its power to convince when it is written in an argumentative spirit. Mr. Hackett wields a pungent pen, and after finishing his admirably-written but violently denunciatory work, one is bound to think it more successful as controversy than as history."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Je 14 '22 240w

Wis Lib Bul 18:155 Je '22

"On the whole, the 'Story' is brilliantly and eloquently written, except for occasional lapses of taste, bits of abusive, and overwrought sarcasm, making the subtle flavor overstrong in spots. While there are comparatively few actual misstatements, the impression conveyed is that of a persistent jeremiad, with the aim of keeping alive every possible grievance." A. L. Cross

+ Yale R n s 12:430 Ja '23 650w

HADLEY, HERBERT SPENCER. Rome and the world today; a study, in comparison with present conditions, of the reorganization of civilization under the Roman empire which brought to a war-worn world two hundred years of peace. 362p il $3 (19s 6d) Putnam

937 Rome—History—Empire, B.C. 30—A.D. 476 22-20663

The author compares the situation that existed in the last half century before the Christian era with the breakdown of European civilization resulting from the World war. He finds something for this day to learn from the way in which peace and prosperity were then restored to the world and maintained during two hundred years. In particular he studies the works accomplished under the leadership of Augustus Caesar.

Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 30w

"Mr. Hadley, carrying the ideas of Ferrero further and with more knowledge of America than the Italian philosopher possessed, has, if nothing else, introduced a new and extremely interesting, indeed a most important, point of view into the present great discussion. For that reason, if no other—and there are others—his book deserves much reading and reflection."

+ Lit R p302 D 9 '22 350w

"The political, economic and moral regeneration which Augustus accomplished is certainly one of the most amazing in all history, and Mr. Hadley has described it well. There are a few slips in scholarship or typography, and the book does not read as smoothly as it might; but he knows his subject and he presents it with the studied and successful intention of making everything as clear as possible to the American reader who has never heard of Rome before. This is the way America must learn ancient history, if it is to be done at all."

+ N Y Times p3 Ja 7 '23 2450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p846 D 14 '22 110w

HAGGARD, ANDREW CHARLES PARKER. Madame de Staël; her trials and triumphs. 2nd ed 295p il $5 Doran [16s Hutchinson]

B or 92 Staël-Holstein, Anne Louise Germaine (Necker) baronne de

The author, who has written a series of French memoirs, in this biography of Madame de Staël dwells especially on her love affairs and her long duel with Napoleon which resulted in her exile from France and the suppression of "De l'Allemagne."

Bookman 56:230 O '22 250w

"Quite apart from Germaine's life story, this volume is a brilliant essay on a quarter century of French history. And it has one more merit. It will be of the greatest comfort, vicariously, to those who deride the youth of today."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '22 580w

Lit R p890 Ag 19 '22 580w

"We are puzzled about this class of book. People interested enough in the work of Mme. de Staël to have made themselves familiar with her career are not likely to need it, and it would not seem probable that those to whom she is not more than a name will be attracted by the title. Her story is treated in this book as rather a jolly adventure."

Nation and Ath 30:302 Mr 28 '22 240w

Reviewed by I. Anderson

N Y Times p16 Je 25 '22 300w

"An entirely commonplace book. Colonel Haggard has compiled a great deal of information about Madame de Staël's career—which he presents in a very bald and slipshod fashion." Esther Murphy

— N Y Tribune p4 Jl 9 '22 750w

St Louis 20:303 D '22

"The recital of Mme de Staël's lovers becomes a little boring. There were so many of them. They partake of the nature of a catalogue. Colonel Haggard adds to that impression by suppressing nearly all the romance, the passion, the moonlit nights, the extravagant setting, the Chateaubriand atmosphere. Half-scandalized, half-patronizing, his terre-à-terre style masks but does not conceal considerable knowledge of the documents."

— Sat R 133:305 Mr 25 '22 1300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p126 F 23

'22 130w

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER. Virgin of the sun. 294p $1.75 Doubleday [7s 6d Cassell]

22-11445

Hubert of Hastings, the valiant hero of this tale of romance and adventure in the days of Richard II of England, is helped in all his exploits and perils by his mighty sword Wave-Flame which had belonged to a viking ancestor. For about a third of the story his adventures take place in his native England, then, when he is forced to flee from home, wind and chance carry him to Peru, along with Kari, the mysterious stranger whom he had rescued one day from the London docks. Kari proves to be the heir of the Incas. The beautiful lady of the story is Quilla, daughter of the moon, who was forced to become the "virgin of the sun" and so to be cut off from human love. About her the latter part of the plot revolves. In the end, Hubert rescues her from the temple and makes her his bride, though to secure her release he is forced to fight the Inca himself.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '22 960w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"Altogether, just such romance as Rider Haggard knows how to handle better than any one else."

+ Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 220w

"The tale has the vigor and freshness we might expect from an initial effort. There is only one serious fault we can find with it; which is, that in it we hear nothing, not even a single word, about our dear old friend, Allan Quartermain."

+ N Y Times p13 My 28 '22 860w

"The story is as good as any the author has ever written except half-a-dozen of the very best, and no romance reader will willingly close the book till he has finished it."

+ Sat R 133:124 F 4 '22 260w

Spec 128:310 Mr 11 '22 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p59 Ja 26 '22 680w

HAIGHT, ELIZABETH HAZELTON. Italy old and new. 230p il $2.50 Dutton

914.5 Italy—Description and travel 22-14603

These are not tourist sketches, but essays in appreciation and interpretation of Italian life and art and literature. They are concerned rather more with the old Italy than with the new. Contents: A piazza in Rome; Due cuori, una capanna; The joys of an Orario; The Madonna of Pompeii; A visit to ancient Ostia; Italian crowds and their temper; Tea-drinking in Rome; The aspirations of Italian women; La bella Zara; Epic days; Spring in Sicily and the carrying off of the maid; Re-reading Catullus in Sirmio; The Rome that Horace knew; Slabsides and the Sabine farm; Ovid in Sulmona; Vergil as a guide in Italy.

Booklist 19:80 D '22

"A travel book of real invitation. Dull histories and Baedeker have given us Roman records and obvious Italy, but this author shuns the tourists' delights and offers happily fresh intimacies."

+ Bookm 56:517 D '22 80w

"Gratefully discursive are these travel-essays. Yet none of the most 'statistical' could give a clearer idea than they of the social, political and economical condition of 'New Italy,' and of the strength of the influence upon it of 'Old Italy.'" F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 12 '22 1000w

Cath World 116:105 O '22 400w

Cleveland p94 D '22

"It is at once the merit and the defect of this book of travel that it reads like letters: the merit, because it is natural and unpretentious; the defect, because it is negligé, loose, wordy, trite." Norman Foerster

+ — Freeman 6:164 O 25 '22 560w

"While her enthusiasm is genuine, it never runs away with her. The reader is not left breathless and gasping. The chapters on Rome, upon the Rome of Horace, and the one called 'Re-reading Catullus in Sirmio,' are especially good." E. L. P.

+ Ind 109:48 Ag 5 '22 160w

"Miss Haight has perhaps injected a little too much of the purely individual into her appraisal on occasions, but on the whole she has selected and commented with discrimination and understanding, and the visitor to Italy who wanders about at the behest of her likings will find himself well repaid for the effort."

+ Lit R p812 J1 15 '22 230w

"The somewhat commonplace title of this book fails to do justice to the lively, imaginative, and pleasantly learned style of the author. Her book is full of the joy of the devoted lover of Italy and of the famous characters of Roman and later Italian history. The book will be a delight to discriminating visitors to Italy."

+ Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:30 Ja '23

St Louis 20:274 N '22

HAINES, ALICE CALHOUN (MRS JAMES NOBLE BASKIN). Flower of the world. 286p $2 Dutton

22-17146

The heroine is a beautiful little waif with gypsy blood in her who is rescued from drowning by Philip Cortwright, a young California sculptor. He makes Lisa his ward as well as his model, arriving at fame and fortune thru the series of child studies for which she poses. But tho she dutifully poses for Cortwright she never learns to love him and finds her happiness in her little comrade Michael. When Cortwright's young ward is grown up he persuades her against her will to yield to his love without marrying her. Soon after she re-encounters Michael, now coming into fame as a violinist. For the sake of her own love and Michael's, she disappears, joins a band of gypsies and wanders from place to place in Mexico dancing, a slave to the gypsy leader. Rescued again, this time by an American rancher, she escapes to Los Angeles where she learns the truth about her parentage and finds her lost Michael.

Booklist 19:85 D '22

Cleveland p91 D '22

"In the opening chapters Miss Haines's heroine is an alluring little figure; the situation is fertile. There is a chance to show the intricate reactions of environment and heredity on a primitive and artistic temperament. . . Up to Part II the book has interest. . . We might have been spared the subsequent saint's progress."

+ — Lit R p93 O 7 '22 370w

"The story moves swiftly from beginning to end. Its picturesque scenes and dramatic situations suggest screen possibilities which are well worth considering."

+ N Y Times p28 Ag 13 '22 370w

HALDANE, RICHARD BURDON HALDANE, 1st Viscount of Cloan. Philosophy of humanism; and of other subjects. 302p $4 Yale univ. press [12s Murray]

110 Metaphysics. Humanism. Einstein theory

In his "Reign of relativity" (Book Review Digest, 1921) Lord Haldane expanded the theory of relativity into a metaphysical principle capable of universal application. The present volume is a continuation of that process of interpretation. "The philosophy which Lord Haldane advocates is a modernized form of Hegelianism, and in this volume he is concerned to show that, rightly interpreted, many results of modern science support the claims of Absolute Idealism. After explaining his general standpoint, which he calls humanism, and presents as a distrust of abstractions, he discusses successively physics, biology, and psychology. In all of them he shows wide reading and an instinct for the important novelty." (Nation and Ath)

Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 1000w

Reviewed by J. S. Mackenzie

Int J Ethlcs 33:112 O '22 450w

"The book is throughout interesting, and admirable as regards style. It is characterized by Lord Haldane's beautiful urbanity, which it is easier to admire than to emulate. The breadth of knowledge displayed is truly remarkable; and those who share Lord Haldane's philosophy have reason to be grateful for the support of so lucid and persuasive an advocate." B. R.

+ Nation and Ath 31:796 S 16 '22 1150w

Reviewed by H. W. Carr

Nature 110:471 O 7 '22 420w

"The difficulty with Lord Haldane is that he is not really open-minded; his feet are firmly set upon the 'pathway to reality,' and he merely uses Einstein's doctrines as additional paving stones without inquiring whether they are really suitable for the purpose." R. B. B.

— + New Statesman 19:445 J1 22 '22 720w

"As a metaphysician, Lord Haldane's bedside manner is not comforting, at least to the layman. He has taken a comparatively arid subject and made it bone dry. The interest of the general reader simply cannot rise above the boring point." Will Cuppy

— N Y Tribune p9 N 26 '22 1450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:6 Ja '23

Sat R 134:17 J1 1 '22 1400w

"As a thoughtful and thought-provoking study of some of the applications of the principle of relativity the book is to be strongly recommended."

+ Spec 129:80 J1 15 '22 700w

"In investigating the categories used in the various sciences he has set himself one of the most useful tasks open to the philosopher at the present day. And the attempt to exhibit the place of modern science within a wider body of knowledge should prove interesting to men of science as well as to philosophers."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p453 J1 13 '22 1550w

HALE, GEORGE ELLERY. New heavens. 88p il $1.50 Scribner

523 Astronomy

22-7665

The book explains and illustrates the latest apparatus and experimental devices at the service of astrophysical research. The new one hundred inch telescope at the Mt Wilson observatory is described in detail. The book consists of three essays originally printed in Scribner's magazine; The new heavens; Giant stars; Cosmic crucibles.

Booklist 18:351 J1 '22

Cleveland p75 S '22

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:498 My '22 70w

"The entire book is written for the reading of the layman, and it is hard to conceive of a better layman's primer to converseance with modern astronomy." W. R. Benet

Lit R p700 Je 3 '22 570w

Nation 115:22 J1 5 '22 20w

"No one is more competent than Prof. Hale to survey this great territory of which he is the leading pioneer explorer, and his account of the methods used to examine it and the rich store of new knowledge gathered from it, makes as fascinating a scientific story as ever was told." R. A. G.

+ Nature 110:2 J1 1 '22 920w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:485 N '22

Pratt p15 autumn '22

St Louis 20:241 O '22

Spec 129:217 Ag 19 '22 490w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 21 '22 330w

Wis Lib Bul 18:151 Je '22

HALL, AMANDA BENJAMIN. Heart's justice. 316p $1.75 Doran

22-20538

"Muffet and her lovable, impractical father, who had never quite succeeded, lived in an old home on the outskirts of the town, where he was an humble employee in the Engine works, founded by his father. Into his life and hers comes Rolf Sterling, the last word in efficiency. He is the new manager of the works. Muffet marries him without much love, but her love and devotion to her father, who needs her so, never vary until an accident reveals to Rolf that there is something more than efficiency and to Muffet that her husband, in his helplessness, needs her love and help."—Cleveland

"Miss Hall has ability. She can create lovable characters and charming scenes. Her novel is promising, but she is still, we feel, far from having reached her artistic maturity." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 N 25 '22 800w

"The Heart's Justice' appeals to us as the most charmingly written American novel since 'Monsieur Beaucaire.' The pace of the story is somewhat uneven, too leisurely in some of its minor episodes and much too fast at the end, but important scenes are realized vividly, with a fine command of reserve strength. The average reader will like it much better than the average novel he reads. But a more discriminating taste will find here a charm and grace that are unique."

+ Lit R p247 N 25 '22 300w

"Miss Hall's book will please the many who delight in old-fashioned love stories and are not avid of the modern psychological method. Moreover, it is a thoroughly clean story and might be read by the young without fear of evil effects."

+ N Y Times p5 N 5 '22 450w

"A quite readable and entertaining novel, one that proceeds consistently from a definite beginning to a definite end without any distressing hitches, and will take most readers willingly along with it." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 22 '22 360w

HALL, GRANVILLE STANLEY. Senescence, the last half of life. 518p $5 (21s) Appleton. 612.67 Old age 22-9380

The object of the book is to arrive at a better and more correct understanding of the nature and functions of old age, to find out its status, estimate its powers, its limitations, its physical and mental regimen in the hope that thereby "not only the old may be helped to better realize their estate and their responsibilities and duties in the world of today but that those just emerging from middle life . . . may be better fitted to meet old age when it overtakes them." The information aims to be encyclopedic, giving the author's own impressions of himself in old age; the effect of age on various eminent men; old age as seen thru the pages of history and thru literature; speculations on the increase of longevity thru civilization, medical and scientific knowledge; the general attitude of the aged towards life and the psychology of death.

Reviewed by E. B. Reuter

Am J Soc 28:483 Ja '23 230w

"Rich in scholarship and personal experience, is a comprehensive review of the sum of human knowledge on this subject. . . All students of human nature will feel that this text is the gift of a mature mind to those who would struggle wisely to meet the problems of advancing age." H. W. Hess

+ Ann Am Acad 103:154 S '22 800w

Booklist 18:352 Jl '22

Bookm 55:650 Ag '22 100w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 10 '22 910w

Freeman 5:572 Ag 23 '22 1500w

"A captious or absolute criticism could discover here the old follies of incoherent omniscience, the old malapropian exuberance of pseudo-scientific verbiage, the stiff persistent sex-obsession, and the inevitable misprints, misquotations, and misapplications of classical allusions and tags. But why be absolute? Much of the book is quite readable, and a clever journalist with more space than the column at my disposal could find suggestion and matter here for more than one entertaining review." Paul Shorey

+ — Ind 109:314 N 25 '22 600w

"Such a book has long been needed, for the study of dotage has too long been limited to the literary and medical accounts of pathological cases. Presenting the various opinions, the dilemmas and the situations of senility as now on record serves to expose a lack of scientific data concerning age and ageing, and Senescence should serve as the beginning of a really scientific study of the latter half of life, its approaches, duration and terminal." H. L. Hollingworth

+ J Philos 19:525 S 14 '22 1550w

Reviewed by H. B. Fuller

Nation 115:150 Ag 9 '22 1350w

New Statesman 19:592 S 2 '22 550w

"It can be taken up at intervals and reread with new interest and enlightenment. It is anatomical and melancholy. And it is a precious volume of quotations. It is synthetic rather than analytical, and, though it should be on the shelves of every old man, in order that he may be stimulated to think of himself, yet it should be kept out of the hands of youths, for fear that they should vainly imagine that old age has terrors but no compensations." M. F. Egan

+ N Y Times p7 My 28 '22 2300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:347 Jl '22

Pratt p17 autumn '22

St Louis 20:212 S '22

"It is a volume of notes, it seems to us, for a possible future study rather than the finished study itself."

+ — Sat R 134:181 Jl 29 '22 360w

Springf'd Republican p8 My 6 '22 100w

"Senescence' ought to transform many a man's thought from fear to hope, from ennui to increased and interested vigor. It is likewise a valuable contribution to the discussion of the subject of the future life and personal immortality."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 2 '22 620w

"The whole book is tremendously interesting and much of it is consoling and reassuring to one who has come near to the jumping off place. But, alas that we must say it, this long book with its hundreds of quotable passages, to which its owners will want to refer again and again, has no index." Alexander Johnson

+ — Survey 48:627 Ag 15 '22 700w

"Replete with thought and learning. Dr. Hall's literary style, however, may deter many readers."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p383 Je 8 '22 140w

Wis Lib Bul 18:178 Jl '22

HALL, HOLWORTHY, pseud. See Porter, H. E

HALL, JENNIE. Buried cities. 171p il $2 Macmillan

913.37 Pompeii. Olympia. Mycenae. Excavations (archaeology) 22-19308

As a teacher in the Francis W. Parker school of Chicago, Miss Hall had told these stories to many boys and girls, and they proved such favorites that it was decided to print them. They tell of the cities of Pompeii, Olympia and Mycenae, of their fall, and of the excavations made on the site of each and the wonderful treasures recovered.

Booklist 19:127 Ja '23

"Here is a book that will lead children not only to a better understanding of material seen in museums but also to a further interest in reading about ancient times in the world's history. Especially interesting and valuable is the text descriptive of the illustrations."

+ Lit R p209 N 11 '22 110w

"So vivid, so simple and inspiring is this little handbook that the usual tale of treasure-trove pales beside it." M. H. B. Mussey
+ Nation 115:sup620 D 6 '22 100w

"This picture-book and story-book combined will send more young folks trooping to a museum than all the textbooks in the world. The book deals with a reality of long ago as real as anything today."

+ N Y Times p4 N 12 '22 170w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:36 Ja '23

HALLET, RICHARD MATTHEWS. Canyon of the fools. 409p il $2 Harper

22-6937

In the Canyon of the Fools on the borders of Mexico where gold is supposed to be so plentiful, May Gowdy seeks her fiancé Jim Harper. She meets "Bobolink" McCarty and together they have many adventures. A mine that is supposed to be exhausted suddenly yields gold again and General Terrazas and Robert Swasey are the arch schemers in a plot to defraud the rightful owner. They almost succeed but the courage of May and McCarty win the day. Jim Harper's disappearance is explained and his utter worthlessness proven. McCarty is presented with a quarter of the gold and of course marries May.

Booklist 18:330 Je '22

"Those who assert that 'there is nothing new under the sun' in the way of 'Wild West' stories, are advised to read this tale. The usual ingredients of a story of its kind are not lacking. But so novel is Mr. Hallett's method of combining these elements, that the result is surprising—and amusing. . . Beneath the blythe hyperbole of incident and narrative runs a silent commentary upon various methods of modern 'romantic-adventure' fiction as shrewd as it is daring."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '22 260w

"Indeed, one suspects that the jocosely satiric quality that gives the careless fillip to every page of this story—its chief charm—means that R. M. Hallett not only knows the real stuff, from the roamer's adventures credited to him in the publisher's note, but is himself much realer stuff, than this romantic book allows him to be!"

+ Lit R p627 Ap 23 '22 250w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 Jl '22

HALSEY, FRANK DAVIS. See McAlister, F. A., pseud.

HAMILTON, COSMO. Rustle of silk. 326p il $1.90 Little

22-9186

The heroine of the story, Lola Breezy, the daughter of a London shopkeeper, obtains a position as lady's maid in Arthur Fallaray's house. Fallaray is Home secretary of England, an idealist above the usual politician's games. Lola, who has seen his picture in the papers, falls in love with him and by many subterfuges plans to win his love. She has beauty and manner and succeeds in her scheme, but realizing that Fallaray is needed by his country for great things she returns to her home in Queens Road, Bayswater, and to the faithful Ernie Treadwell. Vital problems confronting a post-war England are woven into the fiction of the book.

"The Rustle of Silk' ought by all rights to prove a very sordid story or a very humorous one. It happens to be neither. Mr. Hamilton, by a strange and unexpected twist, turns it into romance, with more than a touch of sentiment and idealism." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 3 '22 870w

"It is a light and pleasant little story, written without any particular regard for the probabilities of life, but frankly intended to please one certain type of reader. No doubt it will succeed admirably. As a fairy tale for grown-ups this is agreeable enough, but it should not be given to friends with psychoanalytic tendencies."

+ Lit R p706 Je 3 '22 340w

"The theme is as old as the hills, but it is done with a certain gusto, an evident sophistication and knowledge of the world and humanity, and with a careful eye for the dramatic situations. But, at that, the book is not particularly noteworthy."

+ N Y Times p19 My 7 '22 260w

"Mr. Hamilton's power of make-believe is strong enough to carry away any reader who is willing to allow himself to be carried away."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p509 Ag 3 '22 220w

HAMILTON, DOROTHY M. Primer of cooking. 177p $1.50 Century

641 Cookery

21-18592

A brief, practical little book about the selection, serving and cooking of food in the ordinary home of average means. Thruout the book general principles and directions are laid down and the recipes, which are for simple dishes, are in the body of the text. While intended especially for the beginning housekeeper, the book is full of suggestions for the experienced, and economy of time as well as of money is kept in mind thruout.

Pratt p18 Ap '22

"Easy reading, with information conveyed in a sort of conversational style, although not at all like certain juvenile books on the subject."

+ Springf'd Republican p11a D 25 '21 210w

HAMILTON, SIR IAN STANDISH MONTEITH. Soul and body of an army. 303p $5 Doran [18s E. Arnold]

355 Armies. Military art and science

22-8721

In this brilliantly written book the author charges the people of England with ignorance of their army even now, after the war. He then proceeds to enlighten them about the model army as he conceives it, its organization, its discipline, its training and the three other factors that go into army-making: numbers, genius and patriotism. The last three chapters are on the application of his theories.

Booklist 18:311 Je '22

"This is a brilliant book by perhaps the most brilliant of British generals. The author's style is easy, colloquial, and even slangy at times, but not seldom he rises into real eloquence, and he has the gift of vivid description." J. B. Walker

+ Lit R p721 Je 10 '22 960w

"Sir Ian Hamilton is probably the most gifted writer in the British army. . . His latest book is very pleasant to read. It is breezy and full of generous sentiments, like the author himself."

+ Spec 127:670 N 19 '21 2100w

HAMILTON, LEICESTER FORSYTH, and SIMPSON, STEPHEN G. Calculations of quantitative chemical analysis. (International chemical ser.) 196p $2 McGraw

545 Chemistry, Analytic—Quantitative

22-14440

"Attempts to present the subject in a form that will enable the student to compute and interpret results quickly and correctly."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:555 D '22

HAMILTON, WILLIAM HAMILTON. John Masefield; a critical study. 155p $1.75 Macmillan [7s 6d Allen & U.]

821 Masefield, John

22-15332

This is the first book to be devoted to a critical view of the writings of John Masefield. It is not biographical. Separate chapters are devoted to Masefield's early verse and prose,

HAMILTON, W. H.—Continued
his novels, his plays, the "Everlasting mercy" and the long narrative poems, the sonnets and shorter poems, "Gallipoli" and the war works. The author critically examines these as to quality and workmanship, reviews current estimates of Masefield's work and tries to show what in his art is essential and lasting and significant.

Booklist 19:45 N '22

"It is the work of an almost complete sympathizer with the Masefield point of view, the work of a Masefieldian champion, and it is un-subtle and even, in passages, strikingly obvious." W: R. Benet

— Lit R p850 Ag 5 '22 1050w

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren
Nation 115:149 Ag 9 '22 2050w

"Mr. Hamilton, as if determined not to be regarded as an adulator only, slips in frequent objections to the work he examines, but his criticisms are as wide of the mark generally as his enthusiasms are noisy."

— Nation and Ath 31:858 S 30 '22 310w

"The chief trouble with the critic's approach to his subject is that Mr. Hamilton not only knows so remarkably little of Mr. Masefield's personality and life—less, certainly, than many of his friends and readers in this country—but also that he feels the lack keenly and tries to justify it by building up a tottering theory that criticism is juster when unbiased by knowledge of the author." L. T. Nicholl

— New Repub 32:78 S 13 '22 480w

"Mr. Hamilton's is an interesting handling of an intriguing but difficult subject; and, apart from teaspoon tempests of indignation with his author for borrowing plumes in youth and parodying parsons later, he leaves an impression of fairness as well as sincerity." F. L. Lucas

— New Statesman 19:489 Ag 5 '22 2900w

"He deals too much in superlatives, is somewhat too naively impressed with the magnitude of his contemporaries for one who would write 'a critical study.' His standards are not sufficiently 'central.'" R: Le Gallienne

— N Y Times p5 J1 9 '22 2750w

"An aid to the immortality of Mr. Masefield that by turns embarrasses the admirer of his art with its unrestrained hyperbole and gratifies him with an occasional flash of acute insight. In interpretation and discriminating criticism much of the book is almost wholly deficient; it is saturated with enthusiasm that one could wish more finely tempered by intelligence."

— Outlook 132:120 S 20 '22 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:25 Ja '23

Pratt p28 winter '23

St Louis 20:219 S '22

"We cannot help wishing that Mr Hamilton, having carefully blotted his last page, had put his manuscript away for ten years. It is true that he would have lost his priority in the field. But, at the least, as fresh material was developing, he could have been revising and improving his own haphazard language."

— Sat R 133:vi Ap 29 '22 1000w

"It is a pity that Mr. Hamilton has rather marred his pleasant and really informing monograph by the style in which he has written it." A. Williams-Ellis

— Spec 128:598 My 13 '22 520w

"To be required to justify a passion is a superfluous and revolting labour, and when one is compelled at the same time to be discriminating the effort is hardly tolerable. The double burden is almost more than Mr. Hamilton can sustain; and we believe his purpose of communicating his enthusiasm for Mr. Masefield's work would have been more readily accomplished if he had cast away discretion altogether instead of intermittently. His really interesting and far-sighted observations are too widely separated by criticism of detail."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p257 Ap 20 '22 1150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:215 O '22

HAMILTON, WILLIAM PETER. Stock market barometer: a study of its forecast value based on Charles H. Dow's theory of the price movement. 325p $3 Harper

332.6 Stock exchange. Business conditions. Speculation 22-11892

The financial history of America shows that cycles of prosperity or depression have passed over the country at regular intervals. The stock market has proved to be an unfailing barometer of these cycles and this theory of the swings of the market which forecast business conditions was worked out by Charles H. Dow, first editor of the Wall Street Journal. The present study of the forecast value of the stock market barometer is based on Charles H. Dow's theory. The author analyzes the market and its history since 1897 and shows how to read it, so as to predict, some distance ahead, the development of the business of the country.

Booklist 19:37 N '22

HAMLIN, ALFRED DWIGHT FOSTER. Text-book of the history of architecture. (College histories of art) 479p il $2.50 Longmans

720.9 Architecture—History

In this revised edition and fifteenth printing of the book the following changes have been made: the type has been completely reset; errors have been corrected; the more recent conclusions of archeologists and historians on matters regarding which new light has led to new views, have been recorded; a number of topics, in the chapters on the medieval styles, have been rearranged; bibliographies have been brought up to date; some of the lists of monuments at the end of chapters have been abridged to avoid repetition; a few paragraphs have been wholly rewritten and a moderate amount of new matter added, where new achievements and discoveries, the havoc of the Great war or the filling up of obvious gaps seemed to require it. Slight changes have also been made in the illustrations.

"As Professor Hamlin designed his book for the instruction of those unfamiliar with the history of architecture, it will not be impertinent for me to testify that his is the cleverest, the sanest, the soberest and the most illuminating volume on this theme that I have ever had occasion to examine. It is written with restraint; it contains no purple patches of 'fine writing'; it is free from the flamboyant rhapsodies which dazzle and distress us in the pages of Ruskin and his fellow-rhetoricians." Brander Matthews

— N Y Times p2 Mr 12 '22 1050w

St Louis 20:124 Je '22

HAMMOND, EDWARD K. Broaching practice. (Machinery dollar books) 122p il $1 Industrial press

621.95 Drilling and boring machinery 21-4411

"A treatise on the commercial application of the broaching process including different types of broaching machines, the design of broaches and examples from practice illustrating broaching methods."—Subtitle

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:565 D '22

HAMSUN, KNUT. Wanderers; tr. from the Norwegian by W. W. Worster. 321p $2.50 Knopf [8s 6d Gyldendal]

22-5371

The present volume contains, under the common title "Wanderers," the two stories "Under the autumn star," and "A wanderer plays on muted strings." They both present the musings of a literary, nature-loving tramp—Knut Pedersen from the Northlands—and gradually unfold the tragedy of the married life of the Falkenbergs, to which the tramp's own love for Fru Falkenberg lends an added touch of sadness. The book has an introduction by Edwin Björkman in which he calls attention to the autobiographical element in the stories and their great importance as psychological documents.

"'Wanderers' is not so great a work as 'Pan' or 'Growth of the Soil,' but the hand of a master has passed over its pages nevertheless. It breathes a charming, melancholy calmness like autumn dusk over silent waters." I. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 22 '22 1550w
Cleveland p27 Ap '22

"Has characteristically a rare mellowness and a rich savour of earthy things." H. K.

+ Freeman 6:382 D 27 '22 130w

"A book to be read in the woods at autumn. It is the sighing of the autumn woods made articulate. It is the broken rhythm of stripped branches, the reminiscent rustling of the yellow leaves blown here and there by the wind. . . The translation is excellent, though some of the original prose melody of the book is lost." E. H. Cahill

+ Lit R p803 J1 15 '22 450w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch
Nation 114:572 My 10 '22 450w

"I am not saying that 'Wanderers' is a masterpiece: it is imperfect enough; the second part was, I suspect, an afterthought, and rather spoils than helps the effect of the first; but at least here is a novel from which all machinery has been banished, in which we are unconscious of any 'arrangement,' in which not an incident is falsified or strained." Forrest Reid

+ Nation and Ath 30:866 Mr 11 '22 1000w

"A series of roughly joined adventures. There is too much pattern to give the conviction of life, too little for the dynamic symmetry of a work of art." Edith Rickert

— New Repub 31:194 J1 12 '22 250w

"This is, in its way, as wise a book as 'Growth of the Soil,' though it is not so tremendous. It has that same special quality of sagacity about development. Knut Hamsun knows that people change. He knows also how they change. He can tell how this or that soul will weather, just as if he were a man and they different sorts of stone. He is one of the wisest of the great Europeans." Rebecca West

+ New Statesman 19:97 Ap 29 '22 1950w

"If this had been the first book of Hamsun's to be published in this country it would probably have been the last as well. There is no reason in the world for publishing it except that it comes from a writer whom we have learned to prize. . . It has in it, true enough, poetry and imagination, and character drawing. Everything he writes has these things. But it is also weak, sickly. It possesses something of the tone of a man on his sickbed." Hildegard Hawthorne

— N Y Times p13 Je 4 '22 1350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:261 Je '22

Pratt p35 autumn '22

Sat R 133:122 F 4 '22 500w

Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 26 '22 350w

"If [it] were the work of an English or an American novelist we should not hesitate to describe it as a bad book. The narrative is incoherent; the psychology trivial; the characters are indistinct. But it is hard to tell with whom the fault lies. The critic can do no more than state that this particular English version possesses for him none of the qualities that he would expect to find in the work of a writer with so considerable a reputation."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p59 Ja 26 '22 340w

HANKINS, ARTHUR PRESTON. Heritage of the hills. 307p $1.75 Dodd

22-5604

When Oliver Drew's rich father died he left to Oliver only five hundred dollars in cash, a horse and saddle and a worthless bit of land high up in the Sierras—a region inhabited by a gang of dangerous outlaws. With the will went the cryptic request to solve a puzzle that had bothered the old man for thirty years and the answer to which was to be either yes or no. The mysterious quest brings Oliver into a deadly feud with the gang, causes his acceptance by and initiation into a tribe of Indians, and, with his final answer, no, assures him of the love of Jessamy, step-daughter of the leader of the gang. The question itself is an ethical one, involving a matter of keeping faith with the Indians.

Booklist 18:366 J1 '22

"The story has a humanness which somehow does not fail of its appeal. If it is not, by any means, a great story, it is an exceedingly entertaining one."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 29 '22 400w

"In spite of the skill with which the background is drawn and the entertaining style in which the story is told, the book contains little that will commend itself to the seeker after literary values."

— + Lit R p587 Ap 15 '22 130w

"A tale that never flags in interest."

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 9 '22 150w

"Out of every half-dozen stories of mining mysteries and other Western 'movie stuff' about one or two have something more than thrill and jump. This is one of the small minority. It is an original tale in its incidents, and it is also told with ability and graphic power."

+ Outlook 131:216 My 31 '22 40w

Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 200w

Wis Lib Bul 18:218 O '22

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM, pseud.). Lady Bountiful. 265p $1.75 Doran

22-3938

The book is a collection of sparkingly humorous Irish sketches. In the title sketch it is shown that old Sir Tony Corless of Castle Affey had not been a fool when he married his cook, altho he lost his social caste thereby. Not only did she take upon herself the entire management of his estate and make him more comfortable than he had ever been before in his life, but when the new unemployment law was enacted she devised a scheme whereby everyone employed in the household and about the estate, without a change in status, became entitled to receive unemployment pay. There is an equally ludicrous dénouement, characteristic of Irish wit, to all the other stories.

Booklist 18:366 J1 '22

"It is useless to analyze Mr. Birmingham's stories. They will not bear close critical scrutiny. They are very much of a piece, dealing with such peculiarities of the rural Irish as their mingled simplicity and shrewdness, their determination to get the better of their rulers no matter whether their laws are made in London or Dublin, their politics and religion, their love of ease, their fondness for dirt, and the sharp distinction in spite of their comradeship and friendliness between the upper and lower classes, the professional people and the peasantry." E. F. E.

Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '22 1000w
Cleveland p51 Ag '22

"The author manages to squeeze humor out of the most threadbare situations and to conjure up amusement from the most ordinary material. Indeed, it will scarcely be possible for the reader to complete the volume without having had many good laughs; the book is to be prescribed as an antidote for the 'blues.'"

+ Lit R p707 Je 3 '22 190w

"The author's style is as agreeable as ever, and he shows his usual ability for seeing and presenting that comic side which even the gravest events almost invariably possess."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 1 '22 150w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN—Continued

"His people have time to laugh. Or else they have the qualities to stir laughter in others." E. W. Osborn

+ N Y World p13 Je 21 '22 180w
Outlook 131:387 Je 28 '22 30w

"There is a roguishness about Mr Birmingham's humor that may escape the confirmed reader of best-sellers, but for the person with some taste for humor that is 'overheard' rather than emphasized with much back-slapping, this volume will prove a treat. As has been hinted, there is very little plot to be discovered among these tales, and not a single one of them ends with that 'punch' so constantly recommended by our editors, yet they are by no means formless, for they have unity of effect,—and that effect is almost invariably agreeable."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 16 '22 260w
Wis Lib Bul 18:219 O '22

HANSEN, ROBERT. See Anker, J., pseud.

HARDY, THOMAS. Late lyrics and earlier, with many other verses. 288p $2.50 (7s 6d) Macmillan

821 22-13045
 "The 'Apology' which precedes the poems is a defence against the charge of pessimism and a meditation upon the state of poetry, and of the human mind, at this moment. Mr. Hardy writes prose as well as ever he did; as for poetry, it is of all his periods in this book. Half of it, he tells us, was written lately. Of the rest, some is older and some quite early. Of the last he says, 'A freshness now unattainable seemed to make up for their inexperience and to justify their inclusion.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 19:12 O '22

Reviewed by W: S. Braithwaite
Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '22 1800w

"Sentimentally its interest is very great. Critically, its interest is somewhat less, for despite the fact that its author has displayed an intellectual vitality superior to that of most of his successors in the field of English poetry, it is not to be expected that a man of eighty-two will break new ground. There is the same moving organ-music, fashioned out of old ballad-lilts and strange, uncouth, daringly dissonant words. But the whole is now touched with a bright, bitter-sweet serenity." J: G. Fletcher

+ — Freeman 6:139 O 18 '22 1100w
 Reviewed by H: S. Canby
Lit R p84 O 7 '22 500w

"The present volume, though like the others it is imperfect, in no important sense betrays a falling off. . . . An Ancient to Ancients, possibly the finest thing in the book, already has achieved the fame of a classic farewell." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 116:125 Ja 31 '23 700w
Nation and Ath 31:345 Je 3 '22 1300w

"In the annals of English literature the instances are not many of a great poet issuing a new volume of verse after passing the age of four score years. If in Late Lyrics there are no poems of quite the perfection of some in earlier volumes, the average of excellence and interest is about the same, the technique is identical, and the range is not much narrower. . . . We note the power displayed once more in narrative verse. Matter for a new Wessex novel or at least for a new short story of the Wessex people is again and again condensed within a few lines." S: C. Chew

+ New Repub 31:226 Jl 19 '22 1150w

"If he uses unmusical words, he uses them musically. If he is especially sensitive to the tragic irony of things, he writes of it with an artist's exultation. His pity is a passion, and his irony springs from it. He is a lover of life—of dance, of song, of love—and his poetry is the poetry of one of the sons of joy, though one who has bowed to sorrowful destiny. . . . We may differ as to whether we like the work of the early Hardy or the middle-aged Hardy or the later Hardy best; but we cannot but be amazed by the rich harvest of verse that this man of genius has gone on producing right up to his eighty-third year." Robert Lynd

 + New Statesman 19:240 Je 3 '22 1700w

"These 'Late Lyrics, and Earlier,' are uniform in character with those of his collected poems with which we are already familiar, and show by their side no slightest diminution of vigor or lack of those peculiar qualities for which we value their forerunners. There is no sign of age withering Mr. Hardy's gift." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p4 S 24 '22 2800w

"A sharp analysis of Hardy's last book would, I think, show that his virtues have been transcended and his faults have been minimized. In other words, he is in sure control of his instrument, and 'Late Lyrics and Earlier' becomes his best book of poems." H. S. Gorman

+ Outlook 133:36 Ja 3 '23 1050w
Pratt p26 winter '23

"Late Lyrics and Earlier are almost all more or less the raw materials of poetry; poems might be made of nearly all of them, but they have not been made. The verses remain for the most part direct statements of some emotion, and there is nothing in them beyond what you can see before you; no depth, no richness." A. Williams-Ellis

— Spec 129:54 Jl 8 '22 600w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 12 '22 150w

"Mr. Hardy, like Wordsworth, is remarkable among poets for his choice of themes interesting in themselves, and for his power of heightening their interest by a treatment detached yet poetical. He has not Wordsworth's music, but, being a novelist, he can tell a story better, and he has, more completely than any other English poet, turned this novelist's skill to the uses of poetry; he has heightened his prose into poetry without losing its prosaic virtues."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p359 Je 1 '22 1800w

Wis Lib Bul 18:252 N '22

HARRIS, CHARLES. Creeds or no creeds? a critical examination of the basis of modernism. 385p $6 Dutton [15s Murray]

230 Modernism. Theology

In the course of his critical investigation of modernism the author comes to the conclusion that the modernists' rejection of the Apostolic and Nicene creeds and their advocacy of freedom of opinion in matters of Christian doctrine is entirely subversive of historic Christianity and the church universal. He attempts to prove the inadequacy of their arguments and conclusions.

"This book may well be read by thinking people of non-theological connexions and activities. From it they will learn a great deal worth knowing about the present situation in Christendom, and they will see from a new and interesting angle attitudes towards abstract truth and its ethical consequences, which have lately been derided as obscurantist." B. I. Bell
Freeman 6:452 Ja 17 '23 900w

Reviewed by B. W. Bacon
Lit R p177 N 4 '22 2000w

"The temper of this book is essentially controversial. Its effect is that of a creed composed entirely of damnable clauses."

— Spec 129:83 Jl 15 '22 1550w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 26 '22 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p415 Je 22 '22 50w

"A solid treatise defending the traditional theology of the Church might claim a welcome from reasonable men of all views. Conservatives would be glad to have their convictions fortified, and Liberals could hardly shrink from the probe of criticism. That the volume under review will win such a favourable reception it would be rash to hope. What was needed for that was a book more accurate in detail, less confident in assertion, and less aggressive in tone."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p438 J1
6 '22 1900w

HARRIS, CORRA MAY (WHITE) (MRS LUNDY HOWARD HARRIS). Eyes of love. 317p $1.75 Doran

22-14577

A southern town is the setting for an old fashioned story of love and sentiment. When the visiting Betty Marshall appeared at a ball one night, in all her lovely radiance, every man there thought he saw in her the embodiment of his ideal. All loved her, but it was the brilliant and temperamental young lawyer, Windham Cutman, on whom her "eyes of love" rested. They were soon married. Betty needed all her love and understanding to manage her impulsive and unstable husband, but her love never failed nor her ingenuity. She managed Martin Puckle too, her husband's law partner, who for her sake stood loyally back of Windham and proved his friendship in more than one critical situation.

Booklist 19:21 O '22

"Except for its serious but not unhappy ending, one might be tempted to call this naively sophisticated little story an 'extravaganza,' so whimsically amusing its analysis of human nature. But by whatever name it be called, it were equally delightful."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '22 380w

Cleveland p91 D '22

"A clean light little love story. While the story is rather without form, it is written with a sincere interest in the little details of life which makes it convincing and which holds the reader in the belief that it must be all about something important." C. B. R.

+ — Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p2 F 4 '23 250w

"Her sympathy for and interest in her persons are not selective enough. This story of half a dozen assorted characters in a Southern city is pleasant, though slight."

+ — Lit R p763 Je 24 '22 280w

"Excellent writing, with a plot that is well worked out and that always holds the interest, and with a deal of authentic characterization."

+ N Y Times p19 My 21 '22 50w

"There are several interesting characters, rounding out a complete and colorful tale of the little village of Millidge."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 10 '22 250w
Wis Lib Bul 18:217 O '22

HARRIS, WALTER BURTON. Morocco that was. 333p il $4 Small [25s Blackwood]

964 Morocco—History (Eng ed 22-443)

"Morocco's last years as an independent nation are here described by a man who, by his long residence in the country and by his intimate association with natives of all classes, is well qualified for the task. The book does not pretend to be a history. It is rather a rambling narrative and the author has a way of jumping suddenly from one period to another which is at times somewhat disconcerting to the reader. But he throws many interesting sidelights on the customs and character of the Moors, and gives a very clear picture of the conditions which made it necessary for the European powers to intervene and establish a protectorate."—N Y Times

N Y Times p12 F 12 '22 2000w

"No Englishman knows Morocco better than Mr W. B. Harris, and his new book, mainly about Mulai Abdul Aziz, Mulai Hafid, and Raisuli, is most entertaining. Mr. Harris devotes a long and interesting chapter to the brigand chief Raisuli."

+ Spec 127:84 J1 16 '21 200w

"A series of arabesques depicting people—fantastic people in a sun-lighted country. Few Europeans can have had his opportunities of knowing either."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p401 Je
23 '21 1050w

HARRISON, ELIZABETH. Unseen side of child life for the guardians of young children. 179p $1.25 Macmillan

136.7 Children—Management and training. Moral education 22-2225

Civilization depends on three mighty forces, says the author: inherited ability, the right kind of environment, and the development of will-power in man. "The purpose of this book is to show that much may be done to free children from many of the limitations of inherited traits and too confined an environment, and to give to each young life some of the joy of the inner growth of will-power, as well as the muscular control of the body, both of which rightly belong to the realm of childhood." (Introd.)

Booklist 18:211 Ap '22

Cleveland p52 Ag '22

"Under Miss Harrison's somewhat mystic and sentimental terminology there is real common sense and understanding of children. Her illustrations are so simple and show so much good sense in the handling of children that her fundamental message may get over in spite of the tone of the book." Evelyn Dewey

+ — New Repub 33:257 Ja 31 '23 500w

St Louis 20:86 My '22

Springf'd Republican p8 J1 5 '22 140w

HARRISON, FRANCIS BURTON. Corner-stone of Philippine Independence. 343p il $3 Century

919.1 Philippine Islands—Politics and government 22-4089

The writer was governor-general of the Philippines for seven years. The object of the book is to describe the islands and their inhabitants as he has found them to be, to state what the Filipinos have done with the self-government granted them in 1916; to show that they have fulfilled the requirements of the Jones act—established a stable government—that they are now desirous of and ready for complete independence and that the time has come for the United States to redeem its promise to them.

"A valuable contribution to our present thinking on colonial policy quite apart from any political differences of opinion." Phillips Bradley

Am Pol Sci R 16:334 My '22 500w

Bookm 55:427 Je '22 110w

"No one need go away hungry from this feast. In fact, there is too much. Many of the chapters might easily have been omitted or else abbreviated and combined with others. Withal, though, the book is full of interest and exceedingly worth while reading. The style is clear, simple, often witty, always dignified." G. St Clair

+ — Lit R p870 Ag 12 '22 750w

"Governor Harrison must, of course, have been bound by many personal and official obligations which unavoidably limited his scope of expression. In spite of such difficulties, the book is in sundry sections remarkably and unexpectedly frank, and in others sufficiently so to permit the reader a glance behind the scenes." H. P. Willis

+ New Repub 32:103 S 20 '22 780w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:243 My '22

R of Rs 65:556 My '22 40w

St Louis p126 Je '22

Springf'd Republican p10 S 29 '22 450w

HARRISON, FREDERIC. Novissima verba; last words, 1920. 207p $3 Holt [10s 6d Union] 824 (Eng ed 22-5092)

These notes, originally published month by month during 1920 in the Fortnightly Review, are a running commentary on life, literature and politics, the final reflections of a very old observer and critic of current events.

Bookm 55:427 Je '22 80w

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 5 '22 680w

Cath World 115:832 S '22 250w

"Singlarly interesting and valuable." W. M. T.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p9 F '22 310w

"The conservatism of advanced age has crept upon Harrison's sturdy liberalism, so that it wabbles badly at times. Age, too, accounts for the alarm with which Harrison views the march of events."

— Dial 73:459 O '22 130w

Freeman 5:381 Je 28 '22 250w

Lit R p532 Mr 25 '22 250w

"The pen, it seems, which has been industrious for so long has begun to falter a bit. Mr. Harrison was not wont in the days of his 'Positive Evolution of Religion,' 'The Meaning of History,' and 'On Society' to reveal to us a mastery of the sententious phrase, or to shake at us in this wise the chiding, grandfatherly finger." G. H. Carson

— Nation 115:192 Ag 23 '22 640w

"We do not believe these to be the last words of Mr. Harrison. While he retains the gift of delivering impetuous judgments with measured words, he will never refrain from its rejuvenating exercise. He is as interested as the youngest in the passing show, and his comments upon it are often as wrong-headed as a youth's. He still pleases us with the range of his scholarship and the youthful vigor of his diction."

— + Nation and Ath 30:662 Ja 28 '22 300w

"At ninety years old a man is pardoned if he remains contentedly aloof from public affairs; he is pardoned if his general mental attitude betrays the impatience of age rather than the wisdom of experience. So we pay special tribute to the alertness and vigour of Mr. Frederic Harrison, who brings to bear on the problems of our time an intelligence far freer and more radical in outlook than that of many publicists who are less than half his age."

+ New Statesman 18:484 Ja 28 '22 560w

Sat R 133:41 Ja 14 '22 320w

"Spirited and thoughtful comments. They deserve careful reading as the views of a veteran student and an old-fashioned Liberal."

+ Spec 127:793 D 10 '21 90w

Springf'd Republican p6 D 31 '21 460w (Reprinted from The Times [London])

Lit Sup D 15 '21

"This makes good miscellaneous browsing, but hardly provides a square meal for the reviewer or for anybody else. Perhaps there are only two general points of view from which it can be examined, only two things which bind these notes together. One is the personality of their author; the other is the year in which they were all written."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p835 D 15 '21 820w

HARRISON, HENRY SYDNOR (HENRY SECOND, pseud.). Saint Teresa. 456p $2 Houghton

22-8212

A story of the difficult, passionate days preceding the entrance of the United States into the war. Teresa De Silver, the unforgettable heroine, is a superwoman. She has youth, beauty, brains, astounding business ability and a reputation for quixotism and social unsoundness. An uncompromising pacifist, she acquires controlling interest in the Whitestone steel company and against terrific pressure of public opinion refuses to turn it into a munitions plant. Dean Masury, a young man with a will as strong as hers and opposite opinions, becomes her efficiency manager, approaching his job with some prejudice against his chief and no attempt to conceal his purpose of turning the company's output into shells. A terrible battle of wills ensues, fought with strict honor on both sides and for the most part with mutual respect, reaching its climax in an actual knock-out fight, with Saint Teresa the winner. But hate which had reached such proportions was dangerously near the love with which the story inevitably closes.

"There must be diverse opinions about the book. It does not openly advertise itself as a sex novel, but it is more wholly and continuously concerned with sex problems than any novel we have read in a long time. Because of the manner of their presentation the reader may be for a moment deceived, but this is at heart the sum and substance of the matter. It is moreover an intensely cynical book. It makes little difference how you interpret the story, you must find a potent cynicism in it." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 5 '22 1300w

Cleveland p34 My '22

Dial 72:648 Je '22 110w

Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 40w

"The book is very powerful, it is remarkably well done, and yet it is a disappointment as a successor to 'Angela's Business.'"

+ — Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p7 Ap 23 '22 540w

"I can read, and have read, 'Saint Teresa' with a certain enjoyment as a yarn. Mr. Harrison has a good yarn to spin, and he spins well, deliberately covering his romantic machinery with a plausible garb of reality. He is a skilful writer, has the use of words, knows how to convey the illusion of character. But the product is simply a very clever piece of claptrap. There is no honestly real or honestly romantic scene here: wartime America is a setting for the author's convenience, that is all." H. W. Boynton

+ — Ind 108:376 Ap 15 '22 350w

Lit D p55 Je 10 '22 700w

"The style of this rather wild story is exceedingly good, often rising to heights of distinction; it is, in fact, so well written as to be a creditable addition to contemporary literature. The groundwork of the plot will surprise those who remember Mr. Harrison's previous work: the people and the incidents are as different from those in the former three novels as could well be imagined. Even the tone is so strange that it sounds like another voice; if he had not given his name with it, I should never have guessed it. But it is a remarkable piece of fiction, a well-wrought work of art, and it makes me more curious than ever to see what he will do next." W: L. Phelps

+ Lit R p623 Mr 25 '22 1200w

Nation and Ath 31:512 Jl 8 '22 500w

"Mr. Harrison has written an exciting, and, what is better, an interesting novel; therefore, he is worth quarrelling with on the subject of style. He should not dot his pages with stray words in inverted commas—words such as diplomacy and morale."

+ — New Statesman 19:338 Je 24 '22 380w

"The new novel has but little, if any, of the whimsical quality which has characterized so much of Mr. Harrison's work. It is well and carefully written, earnest and conscientious, if sometimes a trifle laborious. Contains much that is interesting and a number of cleverly worked out scenes." L. M. Field

+ — N Y Times p14 Mr 26 '22 1050w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:261 Je '22

"As interesting in detail as it is concentrated in plot."

+ Spec 109:151 Jl 29 '22 40w

"The story does not escape artificiality and sensationalism, but shows spaciousness and mastery of a complex theme."

+ — Springf'd Republican p13a Mr 26 '22 940w

"A remarkably fine book. It is a long novel, but the dramatic interest is never side-tracked. The secondary characters are developed no farther than the rôle allotted to them demands. . . It is also intensely exciting, and proves that the novel of Wall-street can be every bit as romantic and exciting as the most lurid costume drama."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p362 Je 1 '22 340w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

HARRISON, MARY ST LEGER (KINGSLEY) (MRS WILLIAM HARRISON) (LUCAS MALET, pseud.). Da Silva's widow; and other stories. 356p $2 Dodd

22-12971

Nine short stories, each one of which holds a moment of tense drama. Contents: Da Silva's widow; Boy's love; The higher education of Mr. Besley Wright; The privet hedge; The birth of a masterpiece; Julia's marriage; On the boat deck; How they met again; The pill-box.

Booklist 19:53 N '22

"The volume, although almost entirely written in an abnormal plane, about people acting peculiarly under peculiar circumstances, is nevertheless done with an exquisite delicacy, an all but old-fashioned fastidiousness, wholly at variance with the mood and quality suggested by the title." L. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 16 '22 1100w

"Lucas Malet is the victim of that vicious style which scatters adjectives and unnecessary adverbs broadcast, and she suffers from the delusion that one can achieve dramatic intensity by punctuating inaccurately."

— New Statesman 19:424 J1 15 '22 270w

"Their genuine sophistication, their comprehension and finesse in dealing with the various types of men and women they portray are in striking contrast to the somewhat crude, 'direct action' kind of tale with which we are all so excessively familiar. . . They are tales at once charming and dramatic, showing in style and development the grace and dignity of a mellowed art, a broad perception, tolerant and sympathetic." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p21 J1 9 '22 1000w

"In all these tales, refinement and right feeling triumph, or the issue is left veiled in a decent dubiety. Almost every episode is tragic, but the tragedy is never without the mask and stilted cothurnus." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p4 Je 25 '22 300w

"In each of the nine tales are depths and poignancies such as ordinarily are revealed only in the conventional story of many chapters. What our author seems to have is the gift of making one word carry by suggestion the meanings of half a dozen words." E. W. Osborn

+ N Y World p13 Je 21 '22 350w

Outlook 131:465 Je 12 '22 30w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:533 D '22

"Her dialogue is often artificial, her general form of expression is apt to become at times too Corinthian in taste, but she has much of the essential gift of enchantment, the veil of poetry that obscures minor faults."

+ Sat R 133:660 Je 24 '22 300w

"She has kept her eye so close on the telling that she has let the stories slip out of sight. But we remain grateful to her for some of her ideas."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p411 Je 22 '22 380w

Wis Lib Bul 18:219 O '22

HARROW, BENJAMIN. Glands in health and disease. 218p $2.50 Dutton

612.4 Glands, Ductless 22-11793

The book describes the functions of the ductless, or endocrine glands; the enormously important part they play in health and disease, as shown by recent research; and the various therapeutic experiments that are being conducted to correct their abnormal development. It also points out the possible relationship between vitamins and hormones and does not over-emphasize the therapeutic successes so far achieved. The book is indexed and has a full list of references to the literature on the subject.

"It is interestingly written, and in a style easily digestible by the average reader."

+ Bookm 56:230 O '22 120w

"Very sane and reliable explanation of this new and fascinating field of research."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 1 '22 200w

"It is a most welcome addition to the literature on internal secretions because it actually describes the situation as it is and does not indulge in impossible flights of imagination that can only do harm. The book is intended for lay readers only; however, it will serve as a good, readable exposition for scientific and medical men as well."

+ Lit R p774 J1 1 '22 600w

"A popular yet scientific statement of the actual status of this new, important, and fascinating field of medical research. A thoroughly readable presentation which enables the lay reader to separate fact from fancy."

+ Nation 116:47 Ja 10 '23 60w

"Dr. Harrow's book presents an admirable, connected account of the subject and may be thoroughly recommended to all who wish for a critical statement of the problems which are attracting so much attention at the present time." W. M. Bayliss

+ Nature 110:658 N 18 '22 750w

Reviewed by Van Buren Thorne, M. D.

N Y Times p18 Je 4 '22 2350w

Pratt p17 winter '23

St Louis 20:267 N '22

HART, FRANCIS RUSSELL. Admirals of the Caribbean. 203p il $3 Houghton

972.9 West Indies—History. Caribbean Sea. Drake, Sir Francis. Morgan, Sir Henry. Vernon, Edward. Rodney, George Brydges Rodney, 1st baron 22-13530

Sketches of Sir Francis Drake, Sir Henry Morgan, Edward Vernon, George Rodney and other admirals whose lives cover three centuries of adventure in the Caribbean Sea region and help to an understanding not only of the history of the West Indies but of the North American colonies as well. The illustrations are from old prints and engravings and the end-paper is from a French map of 1705.

Booklist 19:82 D '22

"This eminently scholarly volume will serve to inform those college students 'required' to read it: it can hardly attract the adventurer in belles lettres."

+ Bookm 56:230 O '22 150w

"The book will serve well those who are looking for a comprehensive account of the early history of the Spanish Main and its principal figures. The excerpts from old manuscripts are interesting and the book is beautifully printed and contains some excellent prints and maps."

+ Dial 73:580 N '22 190w

"Those who delight in narratives of naval exploits will find much to interest them in 'Admirals of the Caribbean.' Since four of these chapters had been written separately for historical publications, each had to contain such introductory matter as would enable it to stand alone, and not all of this has been removed in combining them; so there is some repetition. The chapter on Drake is an example; it is interesting, but is simply an enlargement upon points made in the first chapter. That on Morgan is very lively." J. L. Tynan

Freeman 6:236 N 15 '22 600w

"A book for which printer, designer, illustrator, and binder deserve thanks as well as author." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:106 S 2 '22 150w

HART, FRANCIS RUSSELL—Continued

"While losing none of their air of legendary romanticism, these stories at the hand of Mr. Hart gain an added force and effectiveness from the conscientious setting down of the darker, uglier aspects of the careers and practices of the great sea captains, discoverers, soldier-admirals and buccaneers." Archibald Henderson
 + N Y Times p4 N 26 '22 1400w

"Though in no way a complete history of the Spanish Main, Francis Hart has succeeded in writing a clear, interesting account of the men concerned with one of the most romantic spots on earth." Milton Reason
 + N Y Tribune p8 O 1 '22 600w

"The chapters are scholarly, well considered, and readable."

+ Outlook 132:32 S 6 '22 40w

R of Rs 66:446 O '22 140w

Springf'd Republican p6 O 30 '22 400w

HARTLEY, GEORGE INNESS. Importance of bird life. 316p il $2 Century

636.6 Birds—Economic value 22-19463

Birds, says the author, are the most efficacious guards of the balance of nature. Their chief mission is to check the spread of insects. They hold the spread of vegetation within bounds in one place while they promote it in localities where it is needed. They limit the enormous shoals of fish and restock barren pools. They reduce the number of crop-destroying rodents and act as food for other animals and man. Successive chapters are devoted to each of their various uses with a chapter on game laws and one on conservation. Index.

Booklist 19:111 Ja '23

"It is a valuable treatise on the subject, and the subject is broadly treated, the various values of wild birds being considered from all points. The intelligent reader will gain new information and be disabused of old prejudices if this book is considered as written and offered."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 30 '22 1000w

Int Bk R p48 F '23 300w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 6 '23 100w

Wis Lib Bul 18:271 D '22

HARTMAN, GERTRUDE. Child and his school; an interpretation of elementary education as a social process. 248p $3 Dutton

370.1 Social education. Education, Elementary. Psychology, Educational 22-3207

The basic contentions of the book are that the old educational order is passing; that the new order is in process of transition in the hands of experimenters; that the essential requirement of a new order will be its realization of the social aim of education. Originally undertaken as a bibliography, at the request of the Bureau of educational experiments, it has grown into a guide book, a working hypothesis for experimental procedure, giving extensive quotations from modern biology, psychology and sociology as the backgrounds of a progressive educational philosophy. Part one gives the scientific basis of education; part two the educative process and part three the bibliography of sources for subject matter.

Booklist 18:215 Ap '22

Cleveland p74 S '22

"The book is a successful attempt to present the worth-while materials from the fields of biology, psychology, and sociology. It renders a very distinct service to the general student of education by giving him a handbook of selected data upon which to construct his thinking about the important problems in elementary education. The book will be an invaluable help to superintendents and supervisors in selecting material for supplementary reading in the schools." H. W. Nutt

+ El School J 22:628 Ap '22 500w

Lit R p608 Ap 22 '22 200w

"It is a pity that much valuable matter should be buried beneath so much pedagogic verbiage. The book as it stands is a valuable guide to teachers and others inured to getting needed information via the road of excessive tedium, but scarcely attractive to laymen." Agnes de Lima

+ New Repub 31:168 Jl 5 '22 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:481 N '22

Pratt p12 summer '22

St Louis 20:239 O '22

"It is an excellent contribution to the thoughtful side of educational experimenting." J. K. H.

+ Survey 48:83 Ap 15 '22 120w

Wis Lib Bul 18:180 Jl '22

HARVEY, MARION. Mystery of the hidden room. 312p $1.75 Clode 22-19472

"The title divulges a part of the plot. Who killed Philip Darwin and escaped through the hidden room is the mystery. A complicated murder problem is presented and eventually solved through the clever work of a private detective, McKelvie, after the police are satisfied that they have the murderer safely behind the bars, awaiting trial."—Lit R

Boston Transcript p4 D 9 '22 130w

Lit R p229 N 18 '22 160w

"It is an ingenious tale with a very big surprise in store for the reader when he comes near the end of it."

+ N Y Times p22 N 12 '22 350w

"Toward the last it is what you might call pretty thick. Well, who wants a wishy washy, watery detective story? The thicker the better, till it stands up by the sheer weight of its improbability. This one does." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 26 '22 350w

HAUGHTON, PERCY DUNCAN. Football and how to watch it; with an introd. by Heywood Broun. 211p il $3 Jones, Marshall

797 Football 22-20286

"The most famous American football coach has been on the gridiron for many years, and writes of the game with all the vim of a boy of twenty-one. He believes in football, obviously; he defends the sport against the criticism most frequently heard. The incessant battle between the offence and the defence spread over a quarter of a century and issuing in the present system of rules which with minor changes have lasted since 1912 he narrates skillfully and accurately. A valuable feature of the volume is the diagrams with explanatory text intended to make clear to those unskilled in the game the strategy of the chief plays, and another is the profusion of large photographs from actual games between the leading Eastern teams, with extended descriptive comment."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 19:73 D '22

"It is a high testimonial for the game of football that it should require players with brains and attract grown up men with brains, and that one of the great coaches of the game should write almost as well as he worked." C. P. Taft, 2nd

+ Bookm 56:764 F '23 650w

"The book contains many sentences packed with the wisdom of a veteran who has made football a life business." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 11 '22 360w

"No one better than Mr. Haughton can guide us through the phases of this remarkable game, strip it of lath and plaster, and show us the bare beams of its structure. He also takes us entertainingly through the history of rule making and its balance of attack and defence. He shows us the introduction of various improvements in the play down through the whole gamut of innovations, and finally makes an excellent plea for the game itself and the great qualities it inculcates in the player." Walter Camp

+ Lit R p222 N 18 '22 700w

"His book is brightened by an easy, straightforward manner, by a congenial acquaintance with human nature, and by a remarkable array of photographs from a collection used at Harvard for coaching purposes. By his sanity and good faith plus an expert knowledge and unusual love for the game, Mr. Haughton has made a notable contribution towards restoring a proper balance between football and the public."

+ Outlook 132:579 N 29 '22 500w

Pratt p25 winter '23

Spring'd Republican p7a N 12 '22 330w

Wis Lib Bul 18:271 D '22

HAUPTMANN, GERHART JOHANN ROBERT.
 2 Phantom; tr. by Bayard Quincy Morgan. 224p
 $1.50 Huebsch

23-470

The story, told in the first person in autobiographical style, shows the influence of strong emotion on a suppressed psyche. The narrator is a young man of exemplary habits, clerk in the town hall, a model employee and devoted son, but without spirit, ambition or sense of beauty. One day he sees a beautiful girl, still a child, in the street. The impression she makes upon him is catastrophic. He is a changed man. He creates a world of delusions, tries to play a part in a social world hitherto unknown to him, and becomes obsessed with the idea that he is a literary genius. Falling in with evil companions, he becomes a criminal and is finally involved in a plot which results in the murder of his rich aunt. His six years' term in prison marks another transformation. He returns to the world a normal man, chastened and uplifted by his suffering and bitter experience, still cherishing the picture of the girl who had loosened the demons in him but who has now become a symbol of the utmost purity and grace.

"Hauptmann has been charged with lack of humor, and so he does lack the light humor which pleases and reassures. But of deep sardonic humor, a flaying touch so deft that he seems but to have stroked his fleshly victim, he is master. In this spirit, rather than a mood of solemn Freudian analysis, 'Phantom' seems to offer itself to the imaginative reader." H. W. Boynton

Ind 110:27 Ja 6 '23 700w

"The simplicity and sincerity with which this rather phantastic material has been presented have contrived to render 'Phantom' a powerful and convincing work. In the elaboration of his theme Hauptmann has exhibited an almost naturalistic delight in detail, and in the detonation of the nuances of Lorenz's psychical derangement he has displayed a consummate artistry. In his literary eclecticism and stability Hauptmann is peculiarly and preëminently the child of his epoch. He is a perfect exponent of a nervously deranged, cruelly disrupted and sadly perplexed era, of a generation which has oscillated capriciously between the extremes of materialism and spiritualism." H: Brennecke

+ — Lit R p411 Ja 27 '23 2000w

"It may safely be predicted that this short novel of Hauptmann will, in most quarters, be held to be a painfully disagreeable one, of doubtful taste, and more than doubtful moral flavor. It is, on the contrary, a story of the utmost significance, of the utmost tragic force, in which the elements of both physical and moral ugliness are used with a deliberate purpose that is both artistic and philosophical." L. L.

+ Nation 116:46 Ja 10 '23 800w

"The whole tale, though quite conceivable, and perhaps scientifically accurate, seems thin and unrelated to any ordinary emotions. It is interesting rather than moving. For Hauptmann's hero we feel only the remotest form of pity, hardly more than the cold curiosity of the asylum doctor." Raymond Mortimer

+ — New Statesman 20:432 Ja 13 '23 800w

Reviewed by Beatrice Sherman

N Y Tribune p22 Ja 14 '23 820w

Spring'd Republican p7a F 11 '23 660w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p874 D 28 '22 40w

"It is an austere written and disagreeable story, whose value depends upon its psychological truth and the ethical moral which the author clearly wishes its readers to draw from it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p11 Ja 4 '23 700w

HAUSMANN, ERICH, and others. Radio phone receiving. 179p il $1.50 Van Nostrand

654.6 Radio telephone

22-12833

"When such scientists as Pupin, Goldsmith, Morecroft, Hazeltine, and Hogan can be induced to write of radio, we may rest assured of scientific accuracy, an essential lacking in many of fifty-odd books recently published. However, the treatise will be somewhat above the average citizen even though we are told that 'this book presents the fascinating story of radio interestingly in a manner easily understood by the beginner and yet accurate enough for the trained expert.' This happy medium is not possible in technical instruction. A radio book must either be designed for the absolute beginner or it must be a technical treatise to instruct further the well versed amateur or student."—Bookm

"An authentic book on radio if ever there was one written. This volume is perhaps the first of the many satisfactorily to treat radio in technical fashion without resorting to the use of mathematical formulas or other involved explanations. It should prove an excellent treatise to the general amateur and to the high school and college student." Pierre Boucheron

+ Bookm 55:639 Ag '22 180w

"A mine of lucid information for persons in search of accurate exposition freed of abstruse technical terms." Dudley Nichols

+ Lit R p741 Je 17 '22 680w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:352 Jl '22

Pratt p18 summer '22

HAWKER, PETER. Instructions to young sportsmen in all that relates to guns and shooting; ed. with an introd. by Eric Parker. 340p il $4.50 Lippincott [15s H. Jenkins]

799 Hunting. Game and game birds

This reprint of a sporting classic first published in 1814 omits some pages made obsolete by improvements in gun-making since the author's day and some references to game laws now repealed. Col. Hawker had in his day a great influence on the sport of shooting. He was not only a good shot himself but knew how to teach others to shoot. Nearly half the book is devoted to the shooting of wild fowl, and there are chapters on guns and gunmaking, accessories, angling, dogs and their training, canoes, punts, and gunning afloat. There is also a chapter of advice on health and comfort, and one on game laws.

"Should certainly go straight to the heart of every boy worthy of the name. And not merely of every boy. Anyone at all interested in sport, who has never been lucky enough to meet Colonel Hawker in his earlier editions, will find these pages packed with tid-bits of information and observation and brimming over with hints on most conceivable methods of taking game."

+ Sat R 132:408 O 1 '21 480w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p550 Ag 25 '21 40w

"So thorough is Hawker that he includes a picture of a mad dog and a list of ruses by which 'gentlemen poachers' may get the better of gamekeepers."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p819 D 8 '21 300w

HAYDEN, MARY TERESA, and MOONAN, GEORGE ALOYSIUS. Short history of the Irish people from the earliest times to 1920. 580p $7 (20s) Longmans

941.5 Ireland—History 22-442

"The early Christian period and the social system of the time are fully examined, and a succinct account is given of the ancient system of land tenure, a complicated matter, which lies, however, at the basis of the whole Gaelic polity, whose return the prophets of Sinn Fein have called for. The Anglo-Norman settlement, the gradual assimilation of the settlers, and the peculiar features of Gaelic feudalism are clearly expounded. Education, commerce, and the arts also receive attention, and the literature of each period has a section to itself, thus providing an outline of Irish literature from its origin to the present time. The purely political narrative terminates with the triumph of Sinn Fein at the general election after the armistice in 1918."

—Lit R

"Accurate, well written, and, while staunchly national, it is impartial. Enlarged to a scale that would give fuller scope for detail in the treatment, the work would become a lasting treasure for the historical student." J. J. Fox
+ — Am Hist R 27:783 J1 '22 1300w

"A scholarly and comprehensive account. Although written from a national point of view the authors have made every effort to present an accurate and unbiased narrative, and the book stands out in contrast to the usual melodramatic stories of Ireland's heroes and Ireland's woes."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:728 N '22 80w

"In a word, the volume may be recommended to those who have other histories of the Irish people on their shelves and desire a book of ready reference. It contains a little about many things, not much about any one thing except the literature of Ireland, and not quite enough about that."

— + Cath World 115:544 J1 '22 300w

Ind 108:359 Ap 8 '22 50w

"It actually does provide what has hitherto been lacking, a reliable history of Ireland."

+ Lit R p422 F 11 '22 350w

"Would be memorable, but, unfortunately, there is little grace of style. The English of the book cannot receive higher praise than the adjective 'workmanlike'; there are many sentences incoherent and even ungrammatical. The paragraphing is likewise none too sure. Such defects prevent a book, admirable for sincerity and enthusiasm, from being literature as well as history." N. J. O'Connor

— + N Y Times p2 Ja 7 '23 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:299 Je '22

St Louis 21:16 Ja '23

"As fair-minded a history as can be expected at the present day, given the implications of the authors. They give us excellent historical maps, plenty of genealogical tables and summaries, a full index, a useful account of Irish literature, which is too often in the early part confined to literature in Irish, and avoid much of the foolish over-statement which makes most writers on the Nationalist side a by-word among historians."

+ — Spec 132:744 D 31 '21 440w

"Taking it as a teachers' book, concise, clear, and fitted for class instruction, the work may be warmly welcomed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p20 Ja 12 '22 1000w

"Out of 580 pages of fine print in this volume, 450 are devoted to the period previous to the Union in 1800, while the history of the last seventy years is crowded into 50 pages, and recent events, from 1900 to 1920, are disposed of in a chronological summary of seven pages. We are assured by the two authors that, 'while writing from a frankly nationalistic standpoint,' they 'have made every effort to attain accuracy and to avoid prejudice.' Handling a hotly controversial subject and conscious that they will be subjected to the fiercest scrutiny from the extremists among their own countrymen, they have fulfilled their promise reasonably well. Actual misstatements of fact are happily negligible." A. L. Cross

— + Yale R n s 12:428 Ja '23 1300w

HAYNES, GEORGE EDMUND. Trend of the races; with an introd. by James H. Dillard. 205p il 75c Missionary educ. movement

326 Negroes. United States—Race question 22-15670

The author, a Negro sociologist and the secretary of the Commission on the church and race relations of the Federal council of churches, contributes this home mission study book in the interest of better relations between the white and black races in America. He writes in a spirit of moderation of the Negro's sixty years of progress, economic, social and educational, since his emancipation; of his mental and spiritual capacity; of his record in the wars this country has fought; of the contact of the two races and their attitude toward each other. The concluding chapter discusses the principles underlying the necessary adjustment of these relations. Bibliography.

J Religion 2:659 N '22 40w

"Dr. Haynes's vigorous and lucid style, his accurate knowledge of the nuances of feeling among white people, both North and South, toward the Negro, and his profound knowledge of the Negro and the Negro's reactions toward white overtures for cooperation, make this book invaluable for the work it is designed to promote." Worth Tuttle

+ New Repub 32:259 N 1 '22 180w

"Mr. Haynes in this book surveys without passion or bias the progress of the American Negro in the last sixty years and adds to his already high reputation as an interpreter of scientifically collected and arrayed facts. Withal his book is so interestingly written that it is likely to do much good in arousing a wider public to the race problem which America must resolutely face in a spirit of fairness and common sense. The tone of the book is decidedly optimistic."

+ Survey 48:531 J1 15 '22 80w

HAYWARD, WALTER SUMNER, and WHITE, PERCIVAL. Chain stores, their management and operation; with chapters by John S. Fleek and H. MacIntyre. 411p il $3.50 McGraw

658 Chain stores 22-15461

"Many magazine articles and pamphlets have been published on phases of chain store operation, but this is the first general work of real importance on the subject. Its purpose is to set forth the principles of chain store operation, organization, and control."—Administration

"Written by men of no personal experience in chain store work, it is probably the broader and the more instructive for that fact. Its authors are research engineers, and the work is an excellent example of the principles of business research applied to the study of a specific class of business enterprises." T. Conynkton

+ Administration 5:231 F '23 1100w

Pratt p22 winter '23

HAZLITT, HENRY. Way to will-power. 159p $2 Dutton

159 Will

The book treats many abstruse questions in a practical, common sense way. Starting out with the startling revelation that the will does not exist, that it is nothing but the presence of a predominating desire, the author points out the wisdom of carefully considering whether we are willing to pay the price for our predominating desires. On this basis all his advice for developing will-power is built up and the book becomes a manual for character building. It takes in the making and living up to resolutions; success with a capital S; the breaking up of old and the forming of new habits; the scale of values; the controlling of one's thoughts; concentration; the daily challenge to will-power in everyday living; moral courage; the "Energies of Men" as demonstrated by William James; and a critical review of psychoanalysis as related to the will.

Booklist 18:346 J1 '22

Boston Transcript p5 My 10 '22 180w

Cleveland p72 S '22

"While it in no sense covers any new ground, this is a straightforward, helpful little book, told with the intimacy of a conversation between two friends."

Lit R p844 J1 29 '22 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:325 J1 '22

Pratt p6 autumn '22

"In simple language the author presents sound psychology in a commonsense way, and the most desultory reader cannot but be impressed with its truthfulness."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Je 13 '22 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p671 O 19 '22 60w

Wis Lib Bul 18:250 N '22

HEAD, MRS R. E. Lace and embroidery collector. (Collectors ser.) 252p il $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d H. Jenkins]

746 Embroidery. Lace 22-26237

The book is designed for the collector of small means. After an introductory chapter on the development of lace, the laces of various countries are described, with their uses in relation to costume and instructions for the identification of old laces. Embroideries and needlework are chiefly considered chronologically with a special chapter on samplers. There are illustrations of all the laces described, with a glossary of terms, appendices and an index.

Booklist 18:227 Ap '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p717 N 3 '21 30w

"Mrs Head writes for the small buyer and collector. It summarizes her experiences as a collector, but relies for all research upon certain well-known books of reference. The illustrations are few and not well selected."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p804 D 8 '21 200w

HEARN, LAFCADIO. Pre-Raphaelite and other poets; selected and ed. with an introd. by John Erskine. 432p $2.50 Dodd

821 English poetry 22-19987

These chapters selected from Hearn's "Interpretations of literature," 1915, "Appreciations of poetry," 1916, and "Life and literature," 1917, bring together some of his best criticism in the field of English poetry. Given originally as lectures to Japanese students in the University of Tokyo, the criticisms are peculiarly clear, simple and detailed. The poets considered are Rossetti, Swinburne, Browning, Morris, Meredith, Robert Buchanan and Robert Bridges. Individual poems are taken up, one after another, analyzed, summarized and paraphrased. Words and phrases are explained and new meanings brought out.

"For clarity of expression combined with keenness of insight and critical common sense the lectures are unrivalled. . . In a word or phrase Hearn goes directly to the soul of things, he searches the poet's idea to its depths and makes it clear where it is obscure or definite where its meaning is clouded by a profusion of images." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 21 '22 1350w

"This simplicity is indeed classical; it expressed the dignified ease of the master."

+ Lit R p270 D 2 '22 330w

"Hearn was a careful and conscientious critic and the evidences of his meticulous study of his subject is evident in every line of his lectures.

He was blessed with a clear, freely flowing method of narration, and under his lucid exposition the poems (some of them difficult at a first reading) clarify and become beautifully simple." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p7 N 5 '22 1600w

"It is my conviction that these studies are the most thoroughly informative critical writings ever written." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 5 '22 360w

Wis Lib Bul 19:23 Ja '23

HEARNshaw, FOSSEY JOHN COBB. Democracy and the British empire. 206p $1.75 Macmillan

321.8 Democracy. Great Britain—Politics and government. Great Britain—Colonies and dominions (Eng ed 21-7280)

The professor of history in King's college, London university, brings together six lectures delivered at different universities, in which he applies to problems of the British empire the same faith in democracy which he defined in his "Democracy at the crossways." (Book Review Digest, 1919) He traces the development of democracy at home and in the Dominions and holds that there is nothing incompatible between representative government and British imperialism. Contents: The terms "democracy" and "empire"; The growth of the British empire; British and American democracy; Democracy in the Dominions; Problems of the present and the future; Conclusion: direct action versus democracy; Index.

Am Pol Sci R 16:524 Ag '22 110w

Lit R p242 N 25 '22 380w

"The failure of the book as an essay in applied political science is due to the fact that the Professor treats the decade from 1909 to 1919 as if it had not been."

— Sat R 131:240 Mr 19 '21 950w

"A deeply interesting study of the problems which a democracy has to face when it is governing distant countries and backward peoples. He shows a sureness of touch and a lucidity of expression which ought to commend the lectures to a large number of readers."

+ Spec 126:109 Ja 22 '21 1500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p862 D 16 '20 170w

HEARNshaw, FOSSEY JOHN COBB, ed. Mediaeval contributions to modern civilisation. 268p $3.50 Holt [10s 6d Harrap]

940.1 Middle ages. Civilization 21-17309

To this series of lectures, delivered in 1920 at King's college, University of London, Ernest Barker contributes a preface, and the editor, F. J. C. Hearnshaw, the introductory lecture. Professor Hearnshaw points out that the truth about the middle ages lies somewhere between the gloomy depreciation of the modern rationalists and the fantastic over-glorification of certain young idealists who maintain that this period is an integral and essential part of the evolution of the modern world and cannot be neglected by those who would penetrate beneath the surface of things. He gives a survey of the entire period known as the middle ages, and sums up its contributions to modern civilization in the various fields of knowledge. Contents: The middle ages and their characteristic features, by F. J. C. Hearnshaw; The religious contribution of the middle ages, by the Rev. C. Jenkins; Philosophy, by H. W. Carr; Science, by C. Singer; Art, by the Rev. P. Dearnier; The middle ages in the lineage of English poetry, by Sir I. Gollancz; Education, by J. W. Adamson; Society, by H. Johnstone; Economics, by E. R. Adair; Politics, by J. W. Allen.

"The lecturers all show power and learning and their work indicates that the university has solid ground for pride and hope in its new Institute of Historical Research. The dogmatic

HEARNshaw, F. J. C., ed.—Continued
 flavor of the book, taken as a whole, is probably the by-product of unavoidable brevity." G. C. Sillery

+ — Am Hist R 28:86 O '22 950w

Booklist 18:359 Jf '22

"Save for the fact that it has no index we can unreservedly praise this book, and most strongly commend it to all who desire to grasp the meaning of the Middle Ages. A most interesting and valuable book."

+ Cath World 115:686 Ag '22 310w

"Regarded as lectures, most of the papers are admirable, but whether it was wise to publish all of them in their present form, without more editorial supervision is open to question. The book lacks unity and, in spite of the range of subjects, comprehensiveness. The general impression given by the book is casual, desultory, even capricious and perplexing." F. M. P.

+ Eng Hist R 37:461 Jf '22 350w

Reviewed by R. C. Nemlah

Lit R p790 Jf 8 '22 300w

Reviewed by E. F. Humphrey

Nation 115:75 Jf 19 '22 200w

"Prof. Hearnshaw has produced a volume of a valuable type which is happily becoming more and more common. The range is comprehensive. One feels that the choice of contributors might with advantage have been somewhat more comprehensive also."

+ — Nature 108:34 S 8 '21 780w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:243 My '22

"Necessarily in such a course as this some contributions stand out more prominently than others. That on science by Dr. Singer, though it shows the lamentable gaps still to be filled up in our knowledge, is by far the best general account of the subject we have."

Sat R 131:526 Je 25 '21 1000w

"Very readable book. Professor Dearmer's enthusiastic discourse on mediaeval art contains fierce diatribes, in the manner of Ruskin, against the Renaissance and modern architecture; it is amusing but not helpful."

+ — Spec 127:117 Jf 23 '21 250w

"It is a book of power and stimulation rather than of detailed information. The reading of it leaves one with many a question renewed or started, and is likely to kindle zeal for further investigation."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p380 Je 16 '21 1400w

Wis Lib Bul 18:183 Jf '22

HECHT, BEN. Gargoyles. 346p $2 Boni & Liveright

22-18299

A series of rapid impressions of the emotional life of George Basine, a Chicago lawyer, from the Sunday morning when as a young man he is unashamedly emerging from a house of ill-fame thru the twenty years in which he climbs to a United States senatorship. Trapped thru his own phillandering into a loveless marriage, he has found other outlets than love-making for his sensuality. He becomes chairman of a vice commission and later, during the war, devotes himself to making passionate speeches, describing German atrocities. The frailties of Basine and his sisters and friends are analyzed not sympathetically but with a sustained sarcasm.

"As compared with 'Erik Dorn,' it is less mannered, less wilfully unintelligible, and shows less the author's stagefright; but in its diffusion of interest over a large group of characters it provides nothing so absorbing as certain incidents in the former book, where Mr. Hecht allowed himself enough pages for each character to give them a sort of life." Floyd Dell

+ — Bookm 56:347 N '22 280w

"Any one possessing a moderate knowledge of half a dozen iconoclastic philosophers and epigrammatists will find Mr. Hecht's work entirely sterile; little lives in it and nothing alive can come out of it." Gilbert Seldes

— Dial 74:100 Ja '23 560w

"A rambling, incoherent, formless string of incidents, unworthy of the name of story, bristling with innumerable pewter imitations of the steely satire of Masters, Mencken, Sinclair Lewis and Sherwood Anderson." G. W. J.

— Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 Ja 21 '23 600w

"My grudge against the book and most other books of this school is that it is a poor novel. We never get away from the author's mood and opinions, to lose ourselves in the reality of his people, and of the action in which they are embodied." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 109:241 O 28 '22 310w

"'Gargoyles' is not 'a devastating novel,' as its cover announces it; it is an immature effort to shout 'Boo!' at the flappers." E. L. Pearson

— Ind 109:346 D 9 '22 110w

"Vulgar, pedantic, humorless, and monotonous. Yet there are moments when the author looks, at life." Mark Van Doren

+ — Lit R p143 O 28 '22 750w

"The title is a misnomer. Gargoyles are grotesque but they have a meaning. And they are of stone, not of putty."

— New Repub 32:202 O 18 '22 110w

N Y Times p22 O 1 '22 540w

"It is all told in the simplest, most lucid, most exact and most concise manner. Mr. Hecht had determined to show that he could write well and powerfully without making epigrams and brilliant phrases and using strange and arresting metaphors. He has shown, too, that his versatility is such as to be cause for fear among his admirers that he may dissipate his gifts in too many genres. The artistic fault with 'Gargoyles' lies in the fact that too often Mr. Hecht resorts to editorial comment in character delineation instead of revealing character through action and dialogue. For that reason it is almost as much of a psychological essay as it is work of fiction." Burton Rascoe

+ — N Y Tribune p7 S 24 '22 1550w

"Hardly worth all the fuss that is being made about it. The title appears like a rather weak, last-minute excuse. Look at the sun too long and everywhere you look you see sun blots. Ben Hecht has been looking too long at sex."

— Springf'd Republican p7a N 19 '22 360w

HECHT, BEN. A thousand and one afternoons in Chicago. 288p il $2.50 Covici-McGee

818

22-23936

A collection of newspaper sketches, few of them more than a thousand words in length, originally contributed to the Chicago Daily News. They are a reporter's "human interest" stories, running the whole gamut of a city's life.

"Beneath the colorful surface of the narratives there are hints of gray pathos, traces of black tragedy; there are poignant glimpses of the dark and unsounded depths of life, illuminating flashes that open up vast, unexplored vistas. Unfortunately these are only glimpses and flashes; unfortunately Mr. Hecht's work has the quality of the snapshot rather than of the finished painting; but, in spite of his limitations, and in spite of the fact that his sketches can hardly be said to rise to the dignity of literature, there will perhaps be few who will deny him the credit for a high order of journalistic attainment."

+ N Y Times p2 Ja 21 '23 1000w

"There is no newspaper writer in America who can touch him in imaginative and literary treatment of police court happenings, hospital cases, street curb incidents—all the multitudinous events of city life. He is a poet; he is a wit; he is clever; he has feeling, and he has a sense of drama." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p17 Ja 11 '23 980w

HEERMANCE, EDGAR LAING. Chaos or cosmos? 358p $3 Dutton

304 Social ethics. Sociology. Civilization

22-16052

The argument of the book rests on the working hypothesis that the universe is an ordered cosmos of which Christianity and the teachings of Jesus are the theoretic expression. The author holds that the most important event in recent scientific thought is the passing of materialism, that modern physics is entirely consistent with Jesus' theory of a spiritual universe, that the gulf between science and religion has been bridged by a reformulation of the idea of God. He illustrates his thesis that God is a spiritual presence who fills all the world, from the external universe, from the relation of man to the universe, and from the morality of the universe as seen in individual, industrial and national relations. Appendices give the scientific material of the discussion in more detail. Index.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 26 '22 380w

"A suggestive interpretation of the world in which we live in terms of dynamic divine immanence directing the process of evolution to its culmination in man."

+ J Religion 2:657 N '22 60w

"It is in the main, not merely vigorously, sensibly and attractively written, but it is the product of a mind well nourished in all the humanities and sciences, and versed in all the problems of the modern world, social, international and inter-racial. . . In his enthusiasm for his idea Dr. Heermance sometimes writes in a strain distastefully smacking of the popular preacher, rather than a scholar." R: Le Gallienne

+ — N Y Times p3 Ag 13 '22 2750w

No Am 216:571 O '22 600w

Reviewed by J. K. Hart

Survey 49:sup191 N 1 '22 500w

HEFFERN, ANDREW DUFF. Apology and polemic in the New Testament. (Bohlen lectures, 1915) 411p $3.50 Macmillan

239 Christianity—Evidences. Bible. New Testament. Church history—Primitive and early 22-3830

The book studies the progress of Christianity thru the early period of controversy and its methods of defense against attack and perversion. Thru the connected view it gives of the Judaistic controversy and the gnostic movement the book helps to an understanding of the Apostolic age and of disputed points in the New Testament writings.

"The book is everywhere marked by uncommon learning, and by a quality of sound judgment which is much more rare. Dr. Heffern seems to have missed nothing in theological literature which had any important bearing on his subject." E. F. Scott

+ J Religion 2:647 N '22 800w

Reviewed by J. E. Ward

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 23 '22 540w

HEILNER, VAN CAMPEN. Adventures in angling: a book of salt water fishing. 233p il $3 Stewart Kidd

799 Fishing 22-10693

The book deals with the big game fish of the ocean—"fish that when they strike can actually snatch you out of the boat if you are not prepared, fish that weigh anywhere from one to one thousand pounds and are the living incarnation of savagery, strength, and gameness, fish that rival the rainbow and sunsets themselves for coloring and make you wonder if such things really exist." Partial contents: In turquoise seas; 'Neath southern skies; Barracuda on black-bass tackle; Diary of an offshore angler; Clemente swordfish; The tarpon of Channel two; Death struggle with an alligator. Illustrations in color and black and white; appendix explaining tackle.

Booklist 19:11 O '22

Bookm 55:645 Ag '22 100w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '22 360w

"Has interest even for those who do not fish."

Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 30w

"Too often the best fishermen are not the best writers, and interesting memories suffer in the writing down. This is not the case here. Mr. Heilner has a vivid pen."

+ Lit R p764 Je 24 '22 80w

R or Rs 66:112 J1 '22 80w

Springf'd Republican p6 Je 26 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:181 J1 '22

HELLER, ABRAHAM AARON. Industrial revival in soviet Russia; with an introd. by Charles P. Steinmetz. 241p $1.50 Seltzer

330.947 Russia—Economic conditions.

Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-

22-23364

The author has travelled extensively in Siberia and Russia, coming in contact with the peasants in the villages, workingmen in the industries, and political and industrial leaders and managers and his verdict is: "The soviet industrial house is being set in order, industries are slowly reviving, production and transport improving and the economic life of the country is being gradually re-established." (Preface) The author reviews the work and the experience of the first years of socialist Russia, of success and failure, of troubles and advancement, and the spirit and intelligence of the Russian people lead him to expect great results.

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 13 '23 520w

"Mr. Heller undoubtedly saw through rose-colored spectacles. He carried with him the bias of socialism. He talked with all sorts and conditions of men. He found almost everywhere great optimism and hope, signs of practical wisdom learned by sad experience and accompanied by vast loss of life." N. H. Dole

N Y Times p26 Ja 7 '23 700w

HENDERSON, HUBERT DOUGLAS. Supply and demand. (Cambridge economic handbooks) 181p $1.50 Harcourt [5s Nisbet]

330.1 Economics. Supply and demand

22-9864

The intention of this series of Cambridge economic handbooks, of which J. M. Keynes is general editor, is to convey to the ordinary reader and to the uninitiated student some conception of the general principles of thought which economists now apply to economic problems. In this first volume of the series, the laws of supply and demand which are the cornerstone of economic theory are enunciated, the forces behind them examined and the applications explained.

Booklist 18:348 J1 '22

"A clear, well-written exposition of accepted British theory as developed by Marshall."

+ Nation 115:443 O 25 '22 30w

"Both scholarly and modern in the sense of being based upon actualities."

+ Survey 49:259 N 15 '22 30w

Wis Lib Bul 18:213 O '22

HENDRICK, BURTON JESSE. Life and letters of Walter H. Page. 2v 436/437p il $10 Doubleday

B or 92 Page, Walter Hines. European war —United States. United States—Foreign relations—Great Britain 22-21330

Walter Hines Page, 1855-1918, was appointed ambassador to Great Britain by President Wilson in March, 1913. Beyond the first hundred pages sketching his early career as journalist and editor, these volumes relate to the five years of his ambassadorship during which he established himself as one of the great line of Americans at the London embassy. He was a brilliant and tireless letter-writer and thruout the trying time when he was playing such an important diplomatic part he wrote full and frankly outspoken letters home—to his family, his friends, and the President, with whose policy, tho he was his friend and admirer, he strongly differed during the years before our entrance into the war. These letters are full of the most vigorous opinions on men and policies. The opening chapters are supplied by the editor who also fills in connecting links between the letters. The appendix contains some scraps from Page's unfinished diaries. Index.

HENDRICK, BURTON JESSE—Continued

"The letters are obviously those of a man possessing a rare endowment of intellectual and moral force, together with a correspondingly rare capacity for affection. . . . These letters will always constitute an important element in the personal and diplomatic history of the 'Wilsonian Era.' In that history, as in the larger annals of his country, the typically American figure of Page will stand forth with a special distinction of largeness, charm, and vigor." M. A. De W. Howe

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 680w

Booklist 19:82 D '22

"Mr. Page has in these graphic, expressive, and appallingly frank 'Letters' shown himself to be a master of literature." M. F. Egan

+ Bookm 56:628 Ja '23 350w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p5 N 11 '22 1250w

Cleveland p96 D '22

"There is little chance that any book on public affairs more important and more interesting will be published this year, or for many a month to come." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:204 O 14 '22 750w

Ind 109:247 O 28 '22 50w

"The most interesting book of the year." R. S. Baker

+ Int Bk R p8 F '23 2800w

"Letter writers honest and felicitous, who have momentous things to say and write them as they feel, and feel them with the full force of personality, are rare in our day. Mr. Page was such a man and the publication of his letters is an event. . . . All who knew Mr. Page will be stirred by the accent of the man himself in what his pen so untrillingly wrote at every interval of business throughout the war years. It is an achievement as remarkable as it was unlabored." H: S. Canby

+ Lit R p125 O 21 '22 600w

"Mr. Hendrick's sure and sparing hand has sketched in the indispensable background. His unobtrusive editorial touch draws significance from order and selection. Otherwise the portrait is self-drawn, and a vigorous portrait it is. The correspondence is so varied, vivid, and spontaneous that it leaves an incomparably complete and realistic picture. A stranger who has read these two volumes feels that he has known Page." R. M. Barrington-Ward

+ Lit R p449 F 10 '23 1900w

"The voice of a man is heard in these letters: a genuine, wholehearted, enthusiastic, charming man; of facile rather than of profound intelligence, of that comfortable mentality that can reach an absolute conclusion and shape a course accordingly untroubled by conflicting testimony. To many of Mr. Page's opinions one cannot subscribe, but disagreement with his views does not carry with it a denial of the interest and historic importance of the letters which he wrote during his ambassadorship at the Court of Saint James." S: C. Chew

+ Nation 115:502 N 8 '22 2400w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 32:225 O 25 '22 1450w

"Mr. Page's letters are exceptionally good letters; he writes with dignity, ease and force."

+ New Statesman 20:278 D 2 '22 300w

"The public is under great debt to Mr. Hendrick for bringing these letters together into what is the best life that could be written of one who had a genius for writing letters that Walter Page had." J: H. Finley

+ N Y Times p8 O 22 '22 2350w

"A book of great distinction. As a document of democracy, as the unfolding of a career constituting a complete and inspiring definition of Americanism, this book must appeal to thoughtful people all over the world, and as a colorful, graphic picture of men, atmosphere, events, and social conditions in the two great English-speaking democracies under the strain of war it is an invaluable contribution to history." E. A. Alderman

+ Outlook 132:444 N 8 '22 3050w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:515 N '22

Pratt p33 autumn '22

St Louis 20:275 N '22

"One of the ablest and most readable contributions yet made to the diplomatic history of the Great War."

+ Sat R 134:757 N 18 '22 850w

"It is not merely the record of a great man. It is one of the most eminently readable books of the time. Page's letters describing London and the British Isles generally during the War will live as one of the great things of epistolary literature. A great moment in human history, a man who knew everything—no secrets were kept from Page—and the happy accident that the man thus placed had a genius for vivid description in the moral and intellectual sphere, have combined to make one of the few great books of the Great War." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 129:765 N 25 '22 1700w

"The world is fortunate in falling heir to such an autobiography which Mr Hendrick has skillfully if somewhat uncritically compiled. His great fault is a too ready acceptance of his hero's position at every point." P. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 12 '22 1600w

"The work of Mr. Hendrick in the preparation of these volumes has been adequately done. The thread of narrative is sufficient, if at times it will commend itself more to American than to English readers. But it is the letters themselves which make the book. They are delightful reading, and they mirror a fine mind and even finer character."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p715 N 9 '22 2450w

HENDRYX, JAMES BEARDSLEY. Snowdrift.
381p $1.75 (7s 6d) Putnam

22-3497

"The hero is a blue-blooded Southerner who goes to the gold fields a bit ahead of the rush and makes a strike that clears him millions, but the temptations of drink and gambling are too much for him and he loses his money and his reputation in short order. His regeneration is thorough and convincing, as is his idyllic romance with Snowdrift, the most beautiful girl in the Yukon. She is the daughter of a Scotch pioneer, but she was adopted and raised by a squaw, and she believes herself to be a half-breed. That produces complications, but the end is altogether satisfactory for all concerned."—Lit R

"What is not here, and what one does not, in this sort of story desire, is finesse or delicacy. But when it comes to excitement, quick progress, event following upon event, one treading upon another's heels so fast they follow, we can certainly say that the author who endeavors, in a similar story, to keep up with Mr. Hendryx, will be trying to execute a rather large order."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 15 '22 250w

"A strong story, cleverly knit together, with a variety and range of incident that gather interest as it proceeds. It is full of action and boasts a large quota of thrills, so that if the winter winds keep the reader home from the movies he can have quite as pleasant an evening before his own fire."

+ Lit R p494 Mr 11 '22 300w

"The Far Northwest has many characters, but it seems that all have been drawn together in this story and cleverly portrayed, while the life, ambition, ideals, struggles, successes and failures of those who went in search of gold and the beauty, the treacherousness of the beckoning country are finely drawn in word pictures."

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 5 '22 240w

HENSHAW, NEVIL GRATIOT. Inheritance of Jean Trouvé. 391p $2 Bobbs

22-3893

"It tells, with a marked literary artistry, how a young American, disinherited by his grandfather, as had been his dead father before him, is befriended in his sore loneliness and need by Papa Ton and Le Bossu, hunters and trappers of Bayou Portage, in Louisiana. How with them, and Papa Ton's young daughter Toinette, he lives in the little hut on the shore of the bayou, learning from his uncouth but kindly companions not only of the lore of sea and of forest, but of the fundamentals of clean and brave living, which make even stronger his inheritance of honor and courage. 'Jean Trouvé' he calls himself when he is rescued by Le Bossu and Papa Ton. And Jean Trouvé he remains until at the end of the story, when the inheritance he has sacrificed out of loyalty to his humble friends of Bayou Portage and of Bois Berard whither at Papa Ton's death he and Toinette are taken into the home and heart of Madame Alcide, is given to him by a power even stronger than the will of his autocratic grandfather, General Marsh."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 18:238 Ap '22

"Like resting for a little in some tranquil place of leaves, after long journeying over noisy and sun-scorched highways is the reading of this gratefully quiet story, after many an arid 'adventuring' along the beaten paths of modern fiction. There is not a 'problem'—in the too-common meaning of that over-exploited word—in it. Hence its exceeding refreshment. Sorrow is there, of course, and unavailing effort, and for a time apparent defeat. But because sorrow is transformed into inspiration, the effort brave and unselfish, and the 'defeat' conquered, the story is as invigorating as it is appealing." F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 18 '22 340w

"A simple story as to plot, but filled with a quiet charm and with real skill in the drawing of character and the picturing of a locality. . . . A man who loves the good brown earth himself is writing. He knows these good and simple people with their Gallic humor and vivacity, their courtesy and kindness under rough clothes and circumstances. He has found delight in writing about them, and because of that he makes reading of them a delight. He has made a book of charm and truth."

+ Lit D p68 Ap 15 '22 850w

"Here is a very nice book which somehow does not engage one very deeply. Why? It is difficult to tell. The style is smooth, artistically conscientious, and not too pretty, the characters are romanticized but picturesque and appealing. There is much good local color, in New Orleans, among the marsh dwellers, and then in a big-woods' settlement. There is nothing cheap nor careless about the book."

+ — Lit R p512 Mr 18 '22 190w

"The story is by far one of the most interesting of its particular type."

+ N Y Times p11 Ap 9 '22 290w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

HERFORD, OLIVER. Neither here nor there. 165p $1.50 Doran

817

22-19978

Short humorous papers on such subjects as the etiquette of revolving doors, Bolshevism for babies, the lure of the "ad," and where match boxes go.

Booklist 19:114 Ja '23

"His whimsically retains its freshness amazingly; his informality never seems studied; his urbanity never oversophisticated. It is a deft little book, and a cheerful one!"

+ Bookm 56:641 Ja '23 80w

"Poor Mr. Herford has merely put down a few of those small reflections it amuses us to make to ourselves—rarely to outsiders—when we are convinced that we should be treating life with a greater sense of humor. In other words, they are laboriously whimsical, faintly fantastic. Our impulse is to take off our hat to the author for his courage in offering them to a jaded public." I. W. L.

Boston Transcript p5 D 2 '22 620w

"For all its apparent airy nonsense it is packed with real wisdom; it is exquisitely written, and while you laugh you'll think too." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p38 D '22 40w

"Mr. Herford seldom rises above the conventional variety of parlor pleasantry which amiably covers the absence of ideas in polite society." Lawrence Mason

— Lit R p363 Ja 6 '23 650w

N Y World p6e O 22 '22 70w

"Good-humored satire and engaging frivolity and whimsy characterize Mr Herford in this collection of papers. Follies and customs are engagingly ridiculed, traditions defended and criticized."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 O 24 '22 380w

HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH. Bright shawl. 220p $2 Knopf

22-19551

Havana is the scene of this story of a romantic American youth who threw himself with ardor into the Cuban struggle for freedom. Inflamed by a chance word about the oppression of Spanish rule Charles Abbott was off in a flash for Cuba, determined to stay till liberty was secured. He formed a warm friendship with Andrés Escobar and other young Cuban patriots, joined in the life of the cafés and soon became involved in the intrigues and violence of the revolution. Thru all flashed the bright shawl of the beautiful Spanish dancer La Clavel, a symbol of the color and youth and pattern of the times.

"Though the Bright Shawl, because of its brevity, may seem to some readers only an interlude between longer works, there is about it a charm that has enticed one reviewer back to it again and again. He had not been accustomed to associate tenderness with the name of the author, but tenderness is here, always controlled and mostly under the surface, but still felt, and with gratitude." R. M. Gay

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 550w

Booklist 19:86 D '22

"The Cuban background is as vivid and as exotic as the shawl of La Clavel, the dancer, who is the most vital portrait here drawn. Yet even this rich coloration fades to nothingness before the subtle interweaving of mood, whim, and fancy in the mind of Charles Abbott, the young American, who binds his soul to the cause of Cuban independence. . . . Mr. Hergesheimer's style is at its best." J. F.

+ Bookm 56:448 D '22 250w

"At heart, this is a profoundly pessimistic book. A better book than Cytherea, but even here we think that Mr. Hergesheimer has come far from writing the book he may some day write."

Boston Transcript p9 N 22 '22 1100w
Cleveland p90 D '22

"Written remarkably well, a straightforward, unpretentious and beautiful romance. The one flaw in the book is that Mr. Hergesheimer does not induce the young hero's sudden determination to die for the liberty of Cuba and for a long time takes no pains to make it creditable; he overcomes this by the extraordinary neatness of his narrative, by flashes of talent, by a certain solid belief in it on his own part."

+ — Dial 73:579 N '22 200w

"Is to be listed among books to be read purely for entertainment with no thought of mental stimulation. But it is magnificent entertainment for the reader who is a bit fastidious even about his literary amusements. It would be an excellent book wherewith to begin one's acquaintance with Hergesheimer." G. W. J.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 19 '22 500w

HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH—Continued

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Ind 109:278 N 11 '22 850w

Reviewed by Hildegarde Hawthorne
Int Bk R p70 D '22 60w

"Certainly is experiment. But it is as certainly not a study of very deep significance. Its composition has brought out all the romance in Hergesheimer, but it is one of his lesser literary adventures." W: K. Benet

+ — Lit R p103 O 14 '22 1400w

"'The Bright Shawl' offers no surprises but it does present an intensification of the characteristics which have been previously noted in his books, and no other of his major works is so purely concerned with decoration." J. W. Krutch

Nation 115:553 N 22 '22 1100w

New Repub 32:257 N 1 '22 180w

"It weaves quite definitely a new strand of color into the Hergesheimer pattern; it is a book of which America should be quietly but surely proud." Hugh Walpole

+ N Y Times p1 O 15 '22 1800w

"In manner, 'The Bright Shawl' is to be accounted Mr. Hergesheimer's highest achievement—he has therein perfected the idiom he has been experimenting with all along; in matter, one must admit, it is to be listed among his minor works." Burton Rascoe

+ — N Y Tribune p9 O 22 '22 1400w

"'The Bright Shawl' is pretty good. If Mr. Hergesheimer had dwelt less on character development and more on plot it would have been better. If he had cut out two-thirds of his psychological exposition, it would have made a good short story." F: E. Van de Water

+ — N Y Tribune p19 Ja 7 '22 1300w

"Most Hergesheimer fans regard 'The Bright Shawl' as one of his lesser works. Perhaps Mr. Hergesheimer does. To us the very unpretentiousness of the new novel increases its charm. This seems to us a book done largely for the fun of the thing. 'The Bright Shawl' moves along at an exciting pace. Things happen, and more than that, they occur in a setting which has been made vivid." Heywood Brown

+ N Y World p6 O 22 '22 480w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:533 D '22

"We have a story that is fragile, decorative, but restrained from sentimental excess by a mild pervasive irony. It is like a Ming vase or an ivory chessman, faintly exotic and magical and restful to contemplate." G: B. Dutton

+ Spring'd Republican p7a D 24 '22 350w
Wis Lib Bul 19:24 Ja '23

HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH. Cytherea. 371p
$2.50 Knopf

22-1720

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

"Only at the last, in the episode of Savina Grove's death in the dingy hotel of a filthy Cuban village,—as moving a piece of tragedy as Mr. Hergesheimer has ever contrived,—does 'Cytherea' mount for an exalted moment to the sphere of those transcendent realities which are above the scope and the touch of realism." Wilson Follett

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Mr '22 500w

Reviewed by Vivian Shaw
Dial 72:310 Mr '22 1100w

"It is Joseph Hergesheimer's finest bit of craftsmanship. . . It will be widely condemned because it makes a ferocious assault on sentimentality in some of its most blatant forms. 'Cytherea' will offend the moral sense of millions. It is designed to do that, for the author believes that the moral sense of millions is perverted and warped out of all symmetry, and therefore should be attacked." G. W. J.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 Mr 5 '22 860w

"Against all this unreality of interpretation the story-teller's careful style is powerless. . . The result is a figment, not an interpretation." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 108:86 Ja 28 '22 1300w

"The entire book is, upon the most sober consideration, of an importance not easily minimized. It is fine literature. But it is more than that. It renders gravely and searchingly a moment so desperate and difficult in the moral history of mankind and, especially, of America, that today and for a long period to come it will be more than art—it will be vision, clarification, support to the restless and the searching mind." L. L.

+ Nation 114:176 F 8 '22 900w

"Here we have all the elements of the six-cylinder novel, model 1922, assembled by a master craftsman. It is hard to explain why we get so little speed. Perhaps this excessively modern car is too heavy for the engine."

— New Repub 31:141 Je 28 '22 140w

"Mr. Hergesheimer is not a profound writer, nor a very careful one. But he has a good bright kingfisher of a romantic and inquiring mind." Rebecca West

+ New Statesman 20:142 N 4 '22 640w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:149 Ap '22

"Mr. Hergesheimer's merit is that he brings to bear on social problems an intellect at once lively and profound. His characters live, and he cares what happens to them." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 134:632 O 28 '22 700w

Spec 129:603 O 28 '22 680w

"Mr Hergesheimer's craftsmanship is superior to his subject matter."

+ Spring'd Republican p13a Mr 12 '22 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p650 O 12 '22 480w

HERVEY, ARTHUR. Saint-Saëns. (Living masters of music ser.) 159p il $2 Dodd [6s B or 92 Saint-Saëns, Camille 22-26485

An account of the life of the French composer, 1835-1921, and a study of his musical compositions. His operas are examined in detail, as well as his orchestral works, his chamber music and his choral compositions. The last chapter is devoted to his literary works and his opinions on music and musicians. A list of his compositions is appended and there is a bibliography.

Booklist 18:354 Jl '22

"The book is sound in its knowledge and criticism."

+ Bookm 55:645 Ag '22 80w

Boston Transcript p7 Je 3 '22 680w

Detroit News p11 Ag 13 '22 370w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:367 Jl '22

Pratt p34 autumn '22

R of Rs 65:672 Je '22 50w

"Mr. Hervey has done his work with admirable thoroughness. The biography, which has evidently been a labour of love, should become the standard English work on the composer."

+ Sat R 132:643 D 3 '21 270w

"Saint-Saëns as a composer is so well known that it would be absurd to expect some new and startling conception of his work; unfortunately, Mr. Hervey, without attempting any flights in this direction, has chosen to write in the arid manner of those biographical paragraphs in concert programmes, and his book is, for this reason, disappointing." C. H.

— Spec 128:49 Ja 14 '22 1000w

"Mr. Arthur Hervey is particularly well qualified to fill in the blank spaces in our knowledge of Saint-Saëns. He writes as a personal friend and one who has been in close touch all his life with that particular phase of French music in which Saint-Saëns has been the outstanding figure. He writes as an enthusiastic disciple and an advocate. He is determined to place him before us as 'the master,' and that leads him to occasional over-statement."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p853 D 22 '21 750w

HERVEY, HARRY. Caravans by night; a romance of India. 400p $1.90 Century

22-3894

This is a weird tale of the mysterious theft of fabulously valuable royal jewels of India and of the intrigues and maneuvers to recover them. A half-breed Hindu witch-woman, a Mongol prince, an English doctor and secret service man and an American girl are some of the dramatis personæ. The scene shifts from city to city: Calcutta, Indore, Delhi, thru Burma into Tibet and the very palace of the Grand Lama; thru a maze of mystery, adventure and danger, with many a description of native custom and religious ceremony. The American girl who came to India to satisfy her craving for romance and adventure gets her fill of both.

Booklist 18:330 Je '22

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 29 '22 650w

"Mr. Hervey's first book proves him a writer of ability. But why should mystery stories persist in being at least a quarter too long for our poor wits to follow without flagging? However, we will forgive Mr. Hervey his prolixity on the score of his merits."

+ — Lit R p514 Mr 18 '22 180w

"A trifle overwritten at times, it nevertheless manages to convey much of the glamour of the East, and its climax in the strange city 'Beyond the Moon' in unexplored Tibet is admirably conceived and set forth. A first novel, the book shows plenty of imagination and an ability to reproduce scent and color, to convey the thrill of romance and of mystery, which promises well for its author's future."

+ — N Y Times p11 Ap 9 '22 580w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 21 '22 110w

Wis Lib Bul 18:104 Ap '22

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY. Wiltshire essays. 234p $2.50 Oxford [6s 6d Milford]

824

22-12121

"I call these chapters 'Wiltshire Essays,'" says Mr. Hewlett, 'because they were all written in my county, and many of them are directly concerned with it.' The pieces—historical, descriptive, critical, political, sociological—are as miscellaneous as can be. None the less they fit into one another as if they had been shaped to form parts of a whole. It is not mere unity of place but a unity of spirit that binds these meditations together. They are properly called Wiltshire essays, not because some are about Wiltshire, nor because all may have been written in Wiltshire, but because in them Mr. Hewlett tells us what an old and sacred piece of English country has taught him to think about the world and its stirrings today."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The best of the literary essays is perhaps that on Ballads, in which Mr. Hewlett endeavors to show which of our ballads have a peasant origin, applying with great ingenuity a delicacy of touch that is much to seek in most higher criticism. There are essays in which his ironic humor has play. These are, however, but the sauce to a book which is full of sound thinking, real wisdom, and generous belief."

+ — Nation and Ath 31:279 My 20 '22 700w

"At their best these essays do occasionally flash a large, if not very inspiring, glimpse of the slow, unchanging vegetation of the English peasantry, although of personal sympathy there is scarcely a trace. The few purely literary essays in this volume are interesting and—it is scarcely necessary to add—learned and ingeniously written."

+ — New Statesman 18:740 Ap 1 '22 560w

"The book reviews and other newspaper contributions which were merely written in Wiltshire are rather insular in their outlook and rather lacking in individuality. But those which deal with the doings of Mr. Hewlett's neighbors are in different case; they have a flavor of their own." Brander Matthews

+ — N Y Times p2 Ag 27 '22 350w

"They are thoughtful, cultivated, observant essays, but they lack individual distinction. . . . You cannot find in them a distinctive quality making them authentic Hewlett, as one or more distinctive qualities make Lamb's essays authentically his. All that he writes of Wiltshire, of places and people, is good reading, finely observed."

+ — Sat R 133:178 F 18 '22 580w

"Mr. Hewlett takes a good deal of care to show that he has the right to speak for his county. Who could excel him in painting its scenery and atmosphere? He can give a name to all the ancient ghosts that flit by the wheels of your car as you drive on a foggy night across the hills from Wilts into Dorset; or put into our tongue exactly what the blackbird said to him in its own; or charm you with a cottage interior that might come from a Dutchman's brush."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p89 F 9 '22 1050w

HEXT, HARRINGTON, pseud. Number 87. 255p $1.50 Macmillan

22-3697

"Paul Strossmayer is the agent of Yugoslavia in England for the purpose of cornering the brilliant young English chemists. He announces at the Club of Friends, where most of the conversations of the story take place, that the success of the next war will lie with the nation which corners the best chemists. He shocks these loyal Englishmen by the suggestion that little Yugoslavia even might control affairs if she could buy up the chemists and control their discoveries. At first they are inclined to laugh at him, but scarcely has he done talking, when London is horrified and mystified by the murder of Alexander Skeat, the well known publicist. Close on the heels of this murder comes the mysterious destruction of the Albert Memorial, which is reduced to a heap of clean powder in a few moments while particles of this powder have undergone chemical changes which are strange to the chemists of England. It is Strossmayer alone who links these happenings. Most mystery stories are worked out by the untangling of one initial mystery. This on the other hand is a series of baffling mysteries, which lead the watchers in strange paths, most of which prove to be quite the wrong paths."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 18:330 Je '22

"'Number 87' is a distinct 'stranger' among mystery stories. One of the commonest pleas of our age is for 'something different.' Harrington Hext is clearly in a position to satisfy that normal craving." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p9 Ap 22 '22 680w

"The book is extremely well written and the various discussions held in the Club of Friends enlarge the interest beyond the mere solution of the mystery."

+ — Lit D p64 My 13 '22 500w

"This is a mystery story that stands head and shoulders above the average novel of its type. For the chief interest is not in the mystery itself; the book has an imaginative range and a philosophic insight that lends it a distinction not belonging to the mere 'thriller.'"

+ — Lit R p550 Ap 1 '22 230w

"One of the best thrillers I have ever read. . . . The book is evidently written by a man who is a past-master in handling fictional prose."

+ — N Y Times p2 Ap 9 '22 210w

"The novel is vividly written and is noteworthy not only for its narrative interest but for its philosophical background, for the thoughtful spirit in which it treats the workings of human nature under the stimulus of boundless power." S. A. C.

+ — N Y Tribune p8 O 8 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:198 My '22

Spring'd Republican p7a Jl 23 '22 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p749 N 16 '22 140w

Wis Lib Bul 18:218 O '22

HEYDRICK, BENJAMIN ALEXANDER, ed.
Types of the essay. 373p $1 Scribner
824 Essays 22-2523

This textbook for colleges and high schools is planned to awaken the interest of the student in the essay as a literary form, to show the different types of essay and to provide examples of the various types. There is an introductory chapter on the essay, by the editor, followed by twenty-six illustrative essays arranged in six groups: personal, descriptive, character sketch, critical, editorial, reflective. Most of the examples chosen are by the older English essayists. Each essay is prefaced by a biographical sketch of the essayist and a reading list of essays is appended.

Boston Transcript p5 Je 14 '22 400w

"The editor has rightly apprehended the importance of his task and he has skillfully achieved his purpose. The selection is judicious, although I must express my surprise and my regret at not finding anything from Lowell or Burroughs, Howells or James." Brander Matthews

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 27 '22 1100w

St Louis 20:300 D '22

"Should be found both interesting and workable for college students as well as upper classes in high school."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a D 3 '22 210w

HEYWOOD, DU BOSE, and ALLEN, HERVEY.
2 Carolina chansons; legends of the low country. 131p $1.25 Macmillan

811 South Carolina—Poetry. Folklore—
South Carolina 22-24847

In these poems two South Carolinians have tried to catch and put into verse the atmosphere and landscape of the Carolina low country, the coastal region in the neighborhood of Charleston. This country is haunted by legends and memories dating back to the earliest days of discovery and colonization. Notes are included giving the historical facts or background of legend upon which the poems are based. There is also a bibliography.

"'Carolina Chansons' stands alone. There is, to the best of this writer's knowledge and belief, no other volume of the sort in American literature. It is important as a book of folklore; it is one of the few successful attempts to follow Poe in the fabrication of tales of the grotesque; and all of it is good and much of it noble poetry." G. W. J.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p10 D 31 '22 1000w

"This is a book which well may set a fashion, and a good one. . . Charleston and its aura give [the book] a breadth of interest irrespective of absolute literary merit." H: S. Canby

+ Lit R p379 Ja 13 '23 450w

HICHENS, ROBERT SMYTHE. December love.
544p $2 Doran 23-472

The story is a character study of a London society woman who had been a great beauty, whose vanity had fed on the admiration she evoked and whose craving for love and power long outlasted her youth. At the age of fifty she had been caught off her guard by the apparent admiration of an unusually handsome young man and discovered her delusion after the theft of some valuable jewels. As a result she retired from society and lived a life of seclusion in frank acknowledgment of her age. At sixty a young man of half her age once more revives her old self; she girds herself for another love affair and enters into rivalry with an admiring girl friend, when events occur that awaken, altho rudely, all that is finest in her true character.

"The story is well worked out, once it gets under way, which it does tediously and with great difficulty. The style is often execrable." S. S. A.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 19 '22 750w

"As a result of his attempt to handle too large a group the interest and unity of his story are weakened and the style tends towards verbosity. The tale is saved somewhat by his appealing and rather brilliantly Phaedraesque, Lady Sellingworth torn by the relentlessness of a December love. What a pity that Hichens could not have kept his interest firmly anchored with her."

+ Lit R p131 O 21 '22 380w

New Repub 33:50 D 6 '22 220w

"The book is far too long; and it repeats itself. But the actual framework is a model of neatness, rather like that of a classical tragedy. . . The book is not dull, but there is a noticeable coarseness and lack of distinction in the style." Raymond Mortimer

+ New Statesman 20:333 D 16 '22 1700w

"'December Love' is a very interesting novel, despite the handicap of a lengthy, though necessary, retrospect, which shows us Adela Sellingworth's life from her sixteenth to her sixtieth year. That it is well written and thoroughly sophisticated are matters of course, and despite its more than 500 closely printed pages it has not a very great deal of repetition. It is clever, too, often very clever, but it is also something more; a skillful, clear-sighted, sympathetic study." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p22 S 24 '22 1050w

Reviewed by E: L. Donahue

N Y Tribune p7 O 8 '22 650w

Sat R 134:683 N 4 '22 600w

"The plot is fairly commonplace. There is a theatricality about many of the characters. . . Mr. Hichens has rediscovered his conscience; and, in consequence, December Love is the best novel he has written. The English of the novel is scrupulous; the dialogue is natural; and some of the minor characterization is excellent."

+ Spec 129:sup662 N 11 '22 500w

"'December Love' is an achievement of creative romance. Whether it will rival 'Bella Donna' is a question, although in some respects it is a more profound study of life." Lillian Whiting

+ Spring'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 900w

HICKS, FREDERICK CHARLES. Men and books famous in the law; with an introd. by Harlan F. Stone. 259p il $3.50 Lawyers' co-op.
340 Law. Lawyers 21-16742

"This book consists of a series of sketches intended, in the words of the preface, 'as illustrations of the appeal which law books have when considered as the product of human needs, experience, and environment.' Each study tells, impressionistically, the story of the writing, publication, and effect of one of the masterpieces of Anglo-American legal literature, with sufficient biographical and historical detail to show the relation of the work to the life of the author and his period and, in some instances, his debt to the labors of others. The principal writers discussed are Cowell, Littleton, Coke, Blackstone, Kent, Edward Livingston, and Wheaton."—Lit R

"This is a very interesting little book. It bears evidence of wide research, and is written in an excellent and attractive literary style." F. R. Mechem

Columbia Law R 32:195 F '22 450w

"Professor Hicks has succeeded very well in revealing the purpose that animated these men in the making of their books and the significance that lies beneath their dry formulation of rule and statement of case. The style is nontechnical, presenting no difficulties for the layman."

+ Lit R Ja 7 '22 150w

"Out of his full and intimate knowledge of the literature of our profession he has gathered and presented to us in most entertaining fashion the half dozen men, each of whom holds a somewhat unique place in the development of Anglo-Saxon law." V. H. Lane

+ Mich Law R 20:371 Ja '22 1150w

Pratt p31 Ap '22

HIGGINSON, NESTA. See O'Neill, M., pseud.

HIGH, STANLEY HOFSLUND. China's place in the sun. 212p il $1.75 (8s) Macmillan
915.1 China 22-2486

The book is a survey of China's human and material forces, of her civilization and the growth of her national consciousness, of her industrial and intellectual renaissance, of her religious condition, of the struggle the Chinese people are making to fit themselves for a position of leadership in international affairs, and of America's relationship to the problems of China's development.

Am Pol Sci R 16:330 My '22 150w

Booklist 18:232 Ap '22

Boston Transcript p10 Mr 11 '22 300w

"The whole discussion is well fitted to meet the needs of busy Americans who cannot take time for exhaustive research but desire fresh information that is well-balanced and free from partisan bias and sinister propaganda." S. L. G.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p7 F '22 150w

Lit R p372 Ja 6 '23 400w

"For those who want what college curriculums call a survey this book is useful. But it is without sign of critical sense. Mr. High has read widely but not well and he quotes extensively but indiscriminately." Nathaniel Puffer

+ Nation 114:537 My 3 '22 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:242 My '22

Pratt p27 Ap '22 50w

St Louis 20:223 S '22

Survey 47:901 Mr 4 '22 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p347 My 25 '22 60w

Wis Lib Bul 18:184 Jl '22

HILDEBRAND, ARTHUR STURGES. The parlor begat Amos. 323p $1.90 Harcourt
22-2603

It was the typical parlor in a New England mill town—horse-hair furniture, brass clock, crystal ornaments, rubber plant and piano. To its presiding spirits, the parents of Amos, it represented the all in all of safe and sound life, and from the cradle Amos was fitted and pressed into its mold. His is the story of a lonely boy, a stranger to his parents, to himself, to the world, full of wistful yearnings—he knew not for what—with the occasional futile, half-hearted attempts to escape from a certain doom. At the end his spirit was effectually crushed and there was another successful applicant for a vacancy in the mills, another sober and respectable wedding and another parlor on Elm Street.

Booklist 18:238 Ap '22

"An astonishingly mature first novel. It would be silly to call it a promising book. It is a good book." J. F.

+ Bookm 55:190 Ap '22 120w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 22 '22 460w

"Mr. Hildebrand has imbued his book with power. One wonders how—and why. 'The Parlor Begat Amos,' for all its irritating limitations, holds one faithfully to the end. It is an arresting piece of work, done, in part, with a competence that simultaneously delights and bewilders, and it may conceivably open the New England doorway to a new school." J. Black

+ Lit R p579 Ap 15 '22 650w

"It is hard to be as deeply moved as perhaps the author would wish us to be, but the book is diverting throughout and admirably restrained in its incidental humor in places where the popularity of the Main Street theme would tempt to broad burlesque." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 114:375 Mr 29 '22 160w

"The book is a cleverly written, often penetrating study of small town life, as well as of a certain familiar type of character. The people in the book are clearly drawn. Mr. Hildebrand avoids caricature showing a real gift for character portrayal, as well as for deft phrasing. There is something of sameness in the novel, but this would seem unavoidable in a realistic chronicle of such an existence as his. There is a good deal that is well worth considering, to be found in 'The Parlor Begat Amos.'"

+ N Y Times p15 F 19 '22 550w

"Will prove of interest to many readers."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:104 Ap '22

HILL, CHARLES EDWARD. Leading American treaties. 399p $3 Macmillan

341.2 Treaties. United States—Foreign relations. United States—History 22-2430

The book gives the historical setting and the chief provisions of fifteen of the leading American treaties, with a bibliography for each. Contents: The treaties with France, 1778; The treaty of independence, Paris, 1783; Jay's treaty, 1794; The convention of peace, commerce, and navigation with France, 1800; The Louisiana purchase, 1803; The treaty of Ghent, 1814; The convention of 1815 with Great Britain; The Florida purchase, 1819; The Webster-Ashburton treaty, 1842; The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 1848; The Perry and Harris treaties with Japan, 1854 and 1858; The Alaska purchase, 1867; The treaty of Washington, 1871; The treaty of Paris with Spain, 1898; The Panama canal treaties; Index.

Reviewed by G. G. Wilson

Am Hist R 27:827 Jl '22 420w

"While it might, perhaps, be wished that greater stress had been laid upon points of law in the discussion of the various treaties, the student of diplomacy and international procedure will welcome in the present volume the details given in regard to the steps in the negotiation of the treaties and the practical results accomplished by them. The work should prove useful not only as supplementary reading in courses on general American history where source material is not available, but it should be of special help in the courses now being widely given in the diplomatic history of the United States." C. G. Fenwick

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:330 My '22 340w

"Instead of the dry summing up one might expect from the title, his story is alive with incident and starred with great national figures."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 22 '22 450w

"It is an excellent book for one's library and an equally excellent introduction to American diplomatic relations." J. G. de R. H.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p4 Jl 23 '22 260w

"The book should be valuable for reference and supplementary reading in the study of American history, of one phase of which it is, in an oblique way, a useful and interesting compendium itself."

+ Lit R p610 Ap 22 '22 150w

"The book will be of value to the general reader as well as useful in the class-room. Professor Hill has incorporated enough of the humor and human interest of each situation to hold the attention of the average citizen, who should be more familiar with these bases of our national development. A healthy, but impartial, spirit of Americanism is evident throughout."

+ Pol Sci Q 37:721 D '22 350w

Pratt p10 autumn '22

"The book is eminently readable, with occasional flashes of incisive criticism thinly coated by the matter of fact tone of these accounts of once throbbing incidents in our national and international politics. Altogether, one may assess Dr. Hill's judgments, based as they are on a wide range of sources as honest and unbiased. There is no attempt to make the facts tell more or less than their real story,

HILL, CHARLES EDWARD—Continued
though, perhaps, the specialists in certain fields might find room for difference of opinion on the emphasis to be given various factors."
+ Spring'd Republican p10 Ap 19 '22 300w

HILL, HOWARD COPELAND. Community life and civic problems. 528p il $1.40 Ginn
342.73 United States—Politics and government. Social sciences 22-3101

A textbook in community civics which has grown out of the author's class-room experience. The underlying theme is man's responsibility toward and dependence on others, and it is developed in the same order in which the individual's social experience develops. Part one treats the chief characteristics of group life as they appear in the family, the school, the church, and the local community. Part two deals with the more important problems of community welfare—immigration, public health, police, fire protection, recreation, civic beauty, the care of the handicapped. Part three considers some problems of industry and part four deals with politics and government, local, state, and federal.

"Both as to organization and content, this volume is admirably conceived and ingeniously carried out." R. E. Park
+ Am J Soc 28:97 J1 '22 400w

Booklist 18:310 Je '22

"An unusual book of its kind. While intended primarily as a textbook for junior high and high schools, it should be equally valuable to any group or club contemplating the study of civic problems and desiring a book that will cover the ground thoroughly without being too technical."

+ Bookm 55:426 Je '22 110w

"This should be a stimulating book for high school pupils. The material is handled in an intelligent and original way. In every case a bibliography is suggested—for the most part very well chosen." H. W. T.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p5 O 28 '22 220w

"The book is copiously as well as carefully illustrated. The pictures are well executed, placed where they are needed, and are of sufficient size to be of real use to the reader. Mr. Hill, by avoiding the temptation to cover a multitude of topics very briefly, has had an opportunity to leave with the student a desire actively to participate in the solution of the problems which his community faces. The style and diction, which are well adapted to the junior high school level, should lead the pupil to read on out of pure interest and pleasure. The book meets an immediate need." Reid Stephens

+ El School J 22:555 Mr '22 490w

"To those who desire the extension of social intelligence, the appearance of such a text book as this is a sign of better times."

+ New Repub 30:233 Ap 19 '22 400w

"This volume is a good example of the new departure in civics textbooks. It is as far removed as possible from the old type of formal and dry dissertation on political structure."

+ R of Rs 66:111 J1 '22 100w

"The style is simple, direct, forward moving, and pleasing; the vocabulary is that of the average high-school student. Abstract terms and the summary form of statement have been avoided so far as possible. Concrete examples from the world of the child's experiences lend objectiveness, and sufficient details are included to give color and to illuminate meanings." M. G. Kelly

+ School R 30:232 Mr '22 480w

Spring'd Republican p7a S 3 '22 30w

"No striking originality is evident in this latest text-book on civics for elementary school use."

— Survey 47:801 F 18 '22 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p463 J1 13 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:251 N '22

HILL, JANET (MACKENZIE) (MRS BENJAMIN M. HILL). Up-to-date waitress. 184p il $1.75 Little 647 Waiters. Home economics 22-20715

New edition of a useful and popular book, thoroughly revised in conformity to the many changes in what constitutes good service and with much new material added to bring it up-to-date. It covers the care of the dining-room and pantry, the arrangement of the table, serving of meals, preparing of certain dishes, etc. It also includes instructions for carving and for the laundering of table linen.

Lit R p135 O 21 '22 150w

St Louis 20:298 D '22

HILTON-SIMPSON, MELVILLE W. Among the hill folk of Algeria. 248p il $6 Dodd [21s Unwin]

916.5 Algeria—Description and travel. Aurès mountains. Berbers 21-21410

"The Shawia Berbers of the Aurès Mountains in Algeria, often called the 'White Arabs,' are representatives of the white race who have remained almost unknown and unwisted, and still retain many customs that have wholly disappeared among other white peoples. The author of this volume gives an account of three winters' sojourn among these primitive tribes." (R of Rs) "The object of Mr. Hilton-Simpson's journeys was to collect specimens of their handicraft for one of the ethnological museums at Oxford. Also to gain information anent the daily life of this unique people, and especially of their practice of medicine and surgery, which scientists had long suspected had been carried on secretly in the Aurès for centuries. The author was the first European to examine these curious methods of Middle Age medicine and surgery."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p4 D 24 '21 700w

"It is a book by a real authority; there are but few people in the world who can dispute the author's statements about native life. By continued residence among them he has gained the confidence of the tribesmen and been able to collect much unusual information. . . . Students of Oriental poetry and folklore will regret that Mr. Hilton-Simpson has not used his opportunities to collect the literature of oral tradition that must be current among these tribes." C. E. Andrews

+ Lit R p636 My 6 '22 350w

Nation and Ath 30:696 F 4 '22 560w

"The most valuable chapter in his book is the account of Berber surgery, which is not easily studied, as the French apply to the Northern Sahara the law that a fatal operation conducted by a man who is not medically qualified is man-slaughter. His book is a valuable record of contemporary native life in the remote villages of the Southern Atlas."

+ Nature 109:336 Mr 16 '22 300w

R of Rs 65:224 F '22 70w

Sat R 132:564 N 12 '21 780w

"Well-written and attractive. The book is well illustrated."

+ Spec 128:406 Ap 1 '22 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p655 O 13 '21 1000w

HIND, CHARLES LEWIS. More authors and I. 302p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

804 Authors 22-26973

This continuation of a former book by the same author, "Authors and I," (Book Review Digest, 1921) contains fifty short sketches of authors, arranged alphabetically from George Ade to Israel Zangwill, which had previously appeared as weekly contributions to the Christian Science Monitor. Among the authors are: William Archer, Robert Bridges, Eugène Brieux, John Burroughs, Bliss Carman, George Eliot, Anatole France, George Gissing, Sinclair Lewis, Amy Lowell, Herman Melville, Coventry Patmore, Herbert Spencer.

Booklist 19:75 D '22

"Occasionally Mr. Hind reveals a flash of penetration. But for the most part his aim is to entertain rather than to instruct; to speak reminiscently of the literary adventures and encounters of a cultured, urbane personality—himself."

+ — Bookm 56:642 Ja '23 110w

Reviewed by H. B. Fuller
Freeman 6:357 D 20 '22 1050w

"This volume contains three hundred pages of literary small talk. Those who appreciate 'intimate and informing chats' will enjoy [Mr. Hind's] latest volume; to these readers it will be of little matter that the 'I' is more talked about than the 'Authors.'"

+ — Lit R p354 D 30 '22 280w

"Mr. Hind should be called the Ambassador for Authors. Upon the literary monoliths of our age he scratches his name and brings off the double event—making popular shrines and adding by association a cubit or so to his own stature." H. J. M.

+ Nation and Ath 32:57 O 14 '22 1000w

New Statesman 20:84 O 21 '22 260w

St Louis 21:15 Ja '23

"We sit down and read Mr. Hind's book from cover to cover and find ourselves being entertained the whole time, however we may deplore the way he contrives to ignore some fine opportunities for criticism."

+ — Spec 129:559 O 21 '22 1000w

"Bright and discerning—sometimes slight and scrappy—impressions written from the strictly personal point of view and in the personal manner."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p618 S 28 '22 70w

Wis Lib Bul 18:272 D '22

HINE, MURIEL. See Coxon, M.

HINGLEY, ROBERT H. Psycho-analysis. 190p $2.25 Dodd [6s Methuen]

130 Psychoanalysis 22-15906

The method of the book is both critical and expository. A faithful account is given of the Freudian doctrine and that of rival schools, pointing out their respective merits. After an explanation of what is meant by "new psychology" and a brief account of the origin of psychoanalysis, dream interpretation and the nature and control of the unconscious are elucidated with a view to giving the general reader a sufficient insight into the hidden processes of the mind to enable him to exercise a more effective control over his life. For this same purpose the uses and application of auto-suggestion are given. There is a glossary and an index.

"In his endeavor to tell the public all, and yet not too much, the author has stayed on neutral ground and said very banal things about what is now becoming rather, a time-worn subject. Dr. Lay says that this book is ably written. He adds that the chapters on educational, social life and religion are exceedingly interesting. That fact is true."

+ — Boston Transcript p7 Mr 18 '22 270w
Cleveland p52 Ag '22

"Mr. Hingley's book smacks more of the study than of the consulting room. The author, a 'research student of psychology at Edinburgh University,' lacks the nerve and assurance of the successful practitioner; he cares more for consistency and evidence. Having been much impressed by psychoanalysis, he wishes to prune off some of its obvious excrescences and so make it more acceptable from the scientific standpoint." R. S. Woodworth

+ Lit R p289 D 9 '22 360w

St Louis 20:264 N '22

"It is a sober, well organized treatise, with the Freudian bias. It discusses the subject rather more from the broad psychological point of view than most treatises of its kind."

+ Survey 49:397 D 15 '22 80w

HINKSON, KATHERINE (TYNAN) (MRS HENRY ALBERT HINKSON). Wandering years. 390p $5 Houghton [15s Constable]

B or 92 Ireland—Politics and government 22-27472

"In the fourth volume of her reminiscences, Mrs. Katherine Tynan Hinkson relates her life during the troubled years between 1918 and the truce of 1921, which led to the creation of the Irish Free State. Her book ends on the note of hope and happiness which that event very naturally inspired. In a postscript, however, she confesses that the circumstances have changed so tragically that she must reserve for a later occasion the account she would have published of the final phases of the Irish struggle for self-government. Consequently, the chapters which one would naturally expect to find in a book covering the period of intensive warfare between Ireland and England are missing. . . Mrs. Hinkson's mind was chiefly preoccupied with the Irish political situation during the years of which she writes, but they were 'wandering years' for her, and she has many things to relate of her movements in England, Scotland and Italy. . . Through all this garrulous chronicle runs the personality of a genial Irishwoman, sentimental and proud of it, Irish through and through despite the insinuations of political extremists, and never far away, at least in thought, from her own country."—Int Bk R

Booklist 19:119 Ja '23

"A rambling and talky piece of autobiography. Despite the charm of the writer it becomes very stiff going at times. This eminent Irishwoman is of all people the one to give us something tangible about the Irish character and situation, but she merely skirts about it in a vague and snatchy discussion."

+ — Bookm 56:769 F '23 130w

"The vein of memories has worn rather thin in 'The Wandering Years.' The book will attract the general reader who has any curiosity about Ireland rather because of the general impression it creates than for specific matters of historical or literary importance." Ernest Boyd

+ — Int Bk R p18 Ja '23 1450w

"'The Wandering Years' is a diary that has value as history. It is also of distinct value for its critical flashes, for its being the 'continued autobiography' of a woman and poet of taste and humor who met many distinguished people. Mrs. Hinkson's latest volume is indeed one of the outstanding books of reminiscence of the season."

+ Lit R p354 D 30 '22 360w

"Some things savage, some things beautiful, in a deflowered age, remain pressed within these pages; though the hand be withal a mere woman's. A repository at least of keen memories; modest, entertaining, authentic." L. C. Woodman

+ Nation 116:155 F 7 '23 800w

"A book with a pleasant flow—not as good a book as the first volume of Mrs. Hinkson's reminiscences, but an easy, good-natured, gossipy book."

+ — New Statesman 20:17 O 7 '22 250w

"There is much which some people would call trivial, but nothing is too trivial which is well done, and Mrs. Hinkson lights up everything whereof she discourses—her chance travelling companions, her experiences in the railway strike, her bewilderment in London traffic, what you will—with humour and fun and gaiety."

+ Sat R 134:510 O 7 '22 780w

"She meets with many agreeable and interesting people, and with many little adventures of various kinds. We have a sense that the latter are 'written up' out of nothing at all, but they are well 'written up' by a practised hand, and we like to read them."

+ Spec 129:sup536 O 21 '22 300w

"Her narrative is discursive, partly because she was travelling from place to place at the period she is describing, and partly because she is a lady who likes her liberty as a matter of temperament. The reader has no cause to com-

HINKSON, KATHARINE—Continued
plain—dogs, ghosts, a railway journey during the coal strike—one and all make good 'copy.'
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p608 S 28 '22 950w

HISCOX, W. J. Factory administration in practice. 214p $2.50 (8s 6d) Pitman
658.7 Factory management 22-10859

The book is devoted to British practice in factory management and is written for the works manager, the department manager and the factory administrative staff. The author is an exponent of the "progress system" of works management, a system originating in America, but so remodelled to suit the peculiarities of British manufacture that he regards it now as typically British. "The adoption of the progress system means the recognition in the workshop of the business man—a man expert in the art of organization and administration—who is prepared to give the mechanic every facility to produce by ensuring that every effort is effective."

St Louis 20:267 N '22

The Times [London] Lit Sup p717 N 3 '21 60w

HOBHOUSE, LEONARD TRELAWEY. Elements of social justice. 247p $2 Holt [10s 6d Allen & U.]

323.4 Social ethics. Sociology 22-8828

"Though written in continuation of a previous book on The Rational Good, the latest monograph by this well known British philosopher of liberalism is self-contained and provides a study of social ethics which is particularly timely in this period when the public mind seems to have become confused on what once were more or less self-evident principles of social living. Such conceptions as public welfare, natural rights, freedom of the individual, social justice, the rights and duties of ownership, democracy are subjected to a searching scrutiny and emerge in a general view of the relation between the individual and society which will be helpful to many."—Survey

"The major part of its conclusions are inductions from life itself, rather than judgments upon it. The whole is informed by an admirable poise and a calm serenity of outlook. Every student of social science has cause to be grateful for this suggestive survey of his problems."

Nation and Ath 31:227 My 13 '22 1000w

"His method is deductive, but he displays an Aristotelian deftness in elucidating his generalizations with concrete and familiar illustrations. Professor Hobhouse debates conflicting claims with an impressive patience and impartiality."

+ Sat R 133:122 F 4 '22 400w

Survey 48:628 Ag 15 '22 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p847 D 15 '21 50w

"A remarkably able book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p2 Ja 5 '22 1100w

Wis Lib Bul 18:213 O '22

HOBHOUSE, STEPHEN HENRY, and BROCKWAY, A. FENNER, eds. English prisons today; being the report of the Prison system enquiry committee. 728p $8.50 (25s) Longmans
365 Prisons—Great Britain 22-13762

"The work of the Prison System enquiry committee, has been to obtain and publish the facts, with such comments as arise out of a knowledge of the facts. To the two editors of the big volume before us credit is due, not merely for bearing the chief part in the collection and arrangement of the evidence, but also for presenting it lucidly, temperately and judicially. So dreadful is the suffering inflicted in English prisons, so inhuman are some of the practices, so high is the percentage of resulting madness and attempted suicide, that heated words of protest and compassion might not seem out of place in even the most carefully scientific consideration of the subject; nevertheless, the editors have preferred to let the facts do their own pleading. And they have been wise."—New Statesman

Booklist 19:70 D '22

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Irid 109:78 Ag 19 '22 270w

"Anybody who wants the facts on which to form a judgment may safely be recommended to the work of Messrs. Hobhouse and Brockway. Despite official secretiveness and obstruction, they have obtained first-hand evidence. They have had the available statistics, the bare results of the system, scientifically analysed. They have produced a work which will be found indispensable by the students of social conditions, by members of Parliament, ministers of religion—indeed, by all who take seriously the business of being citizens." G. G.

+ New Statesman 19:517 Ag 12 '22 1300w

Reviewed by Archibald Henderson
N Y Times p4 O 29 '22 1200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:472 N '22

Sat R 134:550 O 14 '22 580w

Spec 129:177 Ag 5 '22 1100w

Reviewed by S. A. Queen

Survey 49:116 O 15 '22 700w

HOBSON, JOHN ATKINSON. Incentives in the new industrial order. (New era ser.) 160p $1.75 Seltzer [4s 6d L. Parsons]

330.942 Industry and State. Government ownership (Eng ed 22-6930)

"Mr. Hobson's purpose is to answer the question how far a new industrial order is immediately practicable, and how far the substitution of a new system would destroy the 'incentives to industry' which operate under the existing conditions. His treatment of the subject is exceedingly cautious. He would nationalise certain vital industries, but he admits that public 'enterprise' is not likely to be very enterprising."—New Statesman

Boston Transcript p7 D 23 '22 160w

"The sanity and temperateness not only of Mr. Hobson's discussion of these questions but of his proposals as well, are impressive. In his own way, and with fewer preconceptions, Mr. Hobson is as relentlessly honest a thinker as the Webbs; and the similarity of many of their conclusions is notable." O. T.

+ Freeman 6:142 O 18 '22 350w

"As in all of Mr. Hobson's books, his impartial and penetrating analysis and knowledge of our social and economic system, and his awareness of the complexity of the problems involved call for close consideration of his message." J. E.

+ Int J Ethics 33:114 O '22 300w

"It is the capital merit of Mr. Hobson's work that he is always moderate and always well-informed. No publicist of the last generation, moreover, has displayed a temper more liberal, in the best sense of that word. . . . What is clear throughout Mr. Hobson's discussion is the serene equipoise of judgment that he retains."

+ Nation and Ath 31:94 Ap 15 '22 900w

"Mr. Hobson's little book, though it is full of acute analysis, unfortunately does not give him adequate room for proof or disproof."

+ New Statesman 19:104 Ap 29 '22 350w

"Unlike too many Socialists, Mr. Hobson is intellectually honest. He admits that if the incentives or motives at work in our immensely complicated industrial system were to be lacking or to be greatly weakened in a new system, and were to be replaced by new and powerful incentives, the experiment would fail."

+ Spec 128:339 Mr 18 '22 900w

"With a really masterly detachment Mr. Hobson analyzes the economic structure of today; its profit-making basis and its concentration of control. His handling of the problem carries us a stage further on the spacious road of economic thought opened out by R. H. Tawney in his brilliant treatise on the 'Acquisitive Society.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 1 '22 420w

"Mr. Hobson's book has distinct value in its formulation of ideals, standards toward which to reach, and as an indication of our general direction." J. H. Williams

+ Survey 49:526 Ja 15 '23 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p179 Mr 23 '22 1100w

HOFFMAN, ARTHUR SULLIVANT. Fundamentals of fiction writing. 243p $1.50 Bobbs 808.3 Fiction—Technique 22-15663

"Twenty years' experience as an editor, twelve of them as editor of 'Adventure,' stands behind Arthur Sullivan Hoffman's book on 'Fundamentals of Fiction Writing.' His book reads like a collection of compressed and slightly exasperated memos scribbled in fugitive moments by a veteran. The emphasis is all upon the reader. 'Your Readers,' 'Holding the Reader,' 'Pleasing the Reader' are some of the chapter headings. The editor of 'Adventure' shies at rules; he gives a few and then warns against all of them."—N Y Tribune

"An excellent book to serve as a postgraduate course in short story writing."

+ Bookm 56:519 D '22 150w

"Editorially Mr. Hoffman speaks; categorically too. You will be interested."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 8 '22 130w

Lit R p130 O 21 '22 300w

"The distilled conclusions of a veteran reader of manuscripts have a positive value; the reaction is faintly acid. It needs to be. . . Hoffman's book, intended, as he explains, for the average writer, is of more practical value to more persons than any other book on its subject I have ever seen." Grant Overton

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 1 '22 800w

HOGARTH, DAVID GEORGE. Arabia. (Histories of the nations ser.) 140p $2.50 Oxford [7s 6d Milford]

953 Arabia—History (Eng ed 22-15001)

"A history of Arabia, however short, must take account of the pre-Muslim times, of the rise of Islam, with the personality and life of Muhammad and the fates of his immediate successors. So 81 out of Mr. Hogarth's scant 131 pages must go before we reach the justification of his book, the history of Arabia after it—and the Arabs—ceased to hold the middle of the Muslim stage. These 81 pages are good and the often-told tale is freshly put. Seventeen pages must cover from the middle of the tenth to the last quarter of the eighteenth centuries, when modern Arabia began with the rise of Wahhabism. The last 31 pages are practically of our own time and tell of the Wahhabite rising, the intervention of Egypt, the Turkish restoration under the policy of Abd al-Hamid, the uniting of Arabia against the Turks in the recent war, and the breaking up again, which followed, into the old, essential elements."—Am Hist R

"In this little book the interest and value rise steadily from the beginning to the end." D. B. Macdonald

+ Am Hist R 28:161 O '22 450w

Boston Transcript p8 O 21 '22 320w

"A most scholarly and capable survey of a difficult subject."

+ Spec 128:663 My 27 '22 180w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 28 '22 400w

"We could ask for no one better than Mr. Hogarth to explain to us in brief the past history of Arabia and the present situation which has arisen out of that past. For not only does he see the past with the imaginative realization of a fine scholar who has wandered much in the East of to-day, but his own close connexion with the developments in Arabia during the war gives his account of recent events peculiar authority."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p146 Mr 9 '22 1200w

HÖHNZOLLERN, FREDERICK WILLIAM VICTOR AUGUST. See Frederick W: V: A.

HOLDEN, ARTHUR CORT. Settlement idea: a vision of social justice. 213p $2.50 (12s) Macmillan

331.85 Social settlements. Social work 22-939

Believing that the settlement idea offers an approach to a popular understanding of social problems and relationships and that it may be used for larger social ends than it serves at present, the author has attempted this interpretation. He takes a brief survey of the ideas of the founders of the settlement movement, its methods of work, its real or permanent benefits, the bases of administration and support, the problem of race and religion with which the settlement has to contend and the dangers that beset the worker. One of the appendices gives the chief items in the financial reports of some of the larger settlements. There is a bibliography.

Booklist 18:175 Mr '22

"Keenly analytical but as keenly sympathetic study."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 22 '22 440w

"His narrative is simple and concise. His opinions are balanced and without prejudice. The chief characteristic of the book is its honesty." E. H. Bierstadt

+ Lit R p45 S 23 '22 1700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:539 D '22

Pratt p11 autumn '22

Reviewed by Graham Taylor

Survey 49:253 N 15 '22 370w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p199 Mr 23 '22 180w

HOLDEN, RAYMOND. Granite and alabaster. 130p $1.25 Macmillan

811

22-21196

Nature poems and lyrics, some elegiac verse and two rather long dramatic narratives make up this volume of verse most of which is pitched in a minor key.

"Unquestionably one of the keenest and most distinguished first books put forward by the new generation of poets. It is, first of all, a book of genuine poetry in the sense that it is that rare fusion of the thing seen with the thing imagined; the incidents may not be real but there is no questioning the validity of the emotion that dramatizes them." L. Untermeyer

+ New Repub 33:232 Ja 24 '23 850w

"Raymond Holden would take rank as a poet of thought rather than a poet of imagination. His curiosity is primarily an intellectual curiosity. He sees with his mind rather than with his imagination. In 'Rock Fowler' and 'The Durhams' he has done noteworthy work."

+ N Y Times p6 Ja 7 '23 850w

"There is an air of make-believe about it. The everyday aspect of things does not satisfy him. He must have everything finer and more romantic. The diction is admirable; and the succession of solid four-square words keeps one reading even when one isn't sure what he means to say."

+ N Y Tribune p26 D 10 '22 560w

HOLDING, ELIZABETH SANXAY. Unlit lamp: a study of inter-actions. 334p $2 Dutton

22-18233

"In the first part of the story one follows the transition of Claudine from the happy and intellectually stimulating Mason family home on Staten Island to be the bride of Gilbert Vincelle in his Brooklyn home, where his mother rules in a hopelessly arid mental and social world. Gilbert is stupidly selfish; that Claudine manages to continue as his wife is testimony to the comparative indestructibility of marriage, even though the cement holding them together eventually is the natural one—children. Andree, their first born, a girl of unusual temperament, grows up in the uninspiring atmosphere of the Vincelle family, and herself marries surprisingly, over the violent objections of her parents; and the second half of the novel is devoted to

HOLDING, ELIZABETH SANXAY—Continued
getting this couple through the difficulties of individual adjustment to each other."—Lit R

Cleveland p85 N '22

"The characters in this story are clearly and strongly drawn; the power of one personality over another is tellingly developed, and the tragedy of Claudine's suppression of self in her marriage with Gilbert is poignantly real. It seems likely that the author could write a powerful analysis of a single character in a story where her main theme would not be confused with secondary ones, as in the present novel."

+ Lit R p156 O 28 '22 280w

"A brilliant and substantial novel."

+ Nation 115:555 N 22 '22 20w

New Repub 32:202 O 18 '22 180w

"The book is written in a crisp and vivid style, with much excellent phrasing. And along with her talent for portraying people Mrs. Holding has a talent for portraying the places in which they lived, the atmosphere surrounding them."

+ N Y Times p9 O 22 '22 480w

N Y Tribune p10 O 15 '22 480w

HOLLAND, BRYAN T. Vagrant tune. 263p
$1.75 Small [7s 6d Constable]

22-13396

"In a little town in England, a little town which is very much behind the times, live two old people in their happy little home. One is Miss Lavender and the other her maid, Euphemia. Miss Lavender is 58, and her maid has cared for her since Miss Lavender was a young girl. Neither had married; in fact, Miss Lavender has never had a proposal, yet the story is full of love—the love which a faithful servant has for a lovely mistress, and the love a mistress has for one who has lovingly served her for years. And, then, there is Bobby, the one to bring joy and youth to the home of these two old women—and Bobby's father, who comes for advice—and for comfort."—N Y Times

Booklist 19:21 O '22

"Can only be spoken of as an idyll, a delicate, slightly whimsical bit of English life. It does not compel but it does attract—within certain well defined limits. We are conscious in it of a lack of vitality which takes from it promise of the long life which has belonged to Cranford. Truly this book seems unique when we find it in the midst of our tempestuous and argumentative novels. It is a green oasis of restfulness which is a refreshing change, even giving us a keener appetite for the newer, more virile things of today" D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 1 '22 720w

Cleveland p80 S '22

"This is distinctly a summer book, gentle, with occasional bits of humor. The plot and atmosphere are thin. It might be more interesting to read Mr. Holland when he was attempting to live down to his contemporaries rather than up to his ancestor."

+ Lit R p858 Ag 5 '22 130w

"The book has a literary significance as well as a charm of its own—a charm none the less real for being faint and evanescent."

+ New Repub 31:365 Ag 23 '22 100w

"Not only is the book written well, but there is a plot, a delicate portrayal of the life of an old woman who has meant nothing in the life of any one except her maid, and the combination is very satisfactory."

+ N Y Times p21 My 28 '22 270w

"It would be easy to make fun of such a book, with its inevitable comments and well-tried philosophy, sometimes enforced by notes of exclamation, but only a brute would have the heart to do so. He would also be a fool, for new philosophies are cheap and old feelings are precious. The book gently breathes the spirit of a pleasant backwater, and we say good-bye to it with regret."

+ Sat R 133:209 Jc 25 '22 220w

"The author displays a considerable sense of humour. The latter half of Mr. Holland's book unfortunately degenerates into sheer crude sentimentality."

+ Spec 128:246 F 25 '22 1050w

"Good because he has a keen but gentle sense of humor, appreciation of the quiet aspects of existence, and ability to touch the sympathies and satisfy the taste at the same moment."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a J1 23 '22 150w

"It is a valid general criticism to say that Mr. Holland's characters suffer from an excessive simplification and from the frequency with which he plays upon them, as they move about the stage, with the limelight of pretty sentiment. Lacking his grandmother's [Mrs. Gaskell's] gift of tender irony, the author occasionally comes to grief in his narration by lapsing into platitudinizing, commonplace sentiment, or the humour that requires the signpost of an exclamation mark."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p91 F 9 '22 350w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 J1 '22

HOLLAND, RUPERT SARGENT. Lafayette for young Americans. 356p il $1.75 Jacobs

B or 92 Lafayette, Marie Jean Paul Roch
Yves Gilbert Motier, marquis de 22-17477

The life story of Lafayette told for older boys and girls. "Much of the material in this book has already appeared in the author's 'Lafayette, we come.' (Book Review Digest, 1919) This new volume omits the part that dealt with the great war and adds new chapters dealing with Lafayette's adventures in the United States from the arrival of the French fleet under Rochambeau to the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown." (Publisher's note)

"Mr. Holland's latest book is as concise and good a description, first of the American and then of the French Revolution, particularly such portions as those in which Lafayette took part, as could well be found. It would be a very good thing for anyone to read this book. It reminds one what the things we now have cost."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '22 400w

Lit R p206 N 11 '22 40w

Pratt p34 winter '23

HOLLIDAY, ROBERT CORTES, and VAN RENSSLAER, ALEXANDER. Business of writing; a practical guide for authors. 297p $2 Doran

029 Authorship 22-23086

"Mr. Holliday discusses at length ways and means—how to get at the editor, how to open the door of the publisher's sanctum, the value of a literary agent . . . how to prepare manuscript and correct it, what publishing frauds to avoid, and how not to publish your own book. The second part deals with the elements of getting plays taken and produced, simple little facts about royalties. There is also a section on the movies and one on book reviewing. Lastly there is a bit about bookshops and book-sellers."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 19:107 Ja '23

Boston Transcript p4 D 13 '22 700w

"Every aspect of the business of writing is touched upon, fully enough and succinctly and practically. Even the seasoned author will find much that is helpful. And in addition the book is extremely readable."

+ Lit R p420 Ja 27 '23 300w

"The discursive treatment and abundance of droll illustrations tend to transform the volume into a general essay on The Writing Urge. . . The account of the photoplay market is illuminating, and very helpful." B. L. Burman

+ Nation 116:125 Ja 31 '23 750w

"Although most valuable for any one in the writing 'business,' the book might often be more valuable by being more definite. Not the least useful section of 'The Business of Writing' is the admirable bibliography—a comprehensive catalogue of all recent books dealing with the preparation and marketing of manuscripts of all kinds—with which the volume ends.”

+ — N Y Times p5 Ja 7 '23 380w

“The present volume may honestly be recommended to any one writing, or wishing to write, for a living. It is simple, frank, and informative.” Kenneth Fuessle

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 26 '22 550w

“One will find here an abundance of knowledge about the business of authorship and, as in the comment on book reviewing, indications of real critical faculty and literary knowledge.”

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 18 '22 120w

HOLLINGWORTH, HARRY LEVI. Judging human character. 268p il $2 Appleton
658 Character. Mental tests. Employment systems 22-18792

The book, which is intended for the general reader, teacher, or student, for the business man or personnel worker, gives a survey of the principal methods of judging human character, namely, letters of application, photographs, applicants' own estimates of their characteristics, personal interviews, letters of recommendation and testimonials. Then follows a discussion of the sources of error in making judgments, of mental tests and their interpretation, and of the diagnosis of temperament. The appendices consist of a bibliography and of a series of laboratory exercises illustrative of the topics and methods discussed.

Booklist 19:107 Ja '23

“It is not for a casual reader, involving, as it does, much psychological mathematics; but for teachers, employment managers, and others whose business requires judgment of the other fellow's mental, moral, and social characteristics, it will prove thought provoking.”

Bookm 56:773 F '23 150w

Boston Transcript p4 N 1 '22 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bu 27:535 D '22

“Forms an excellent introduction to the subject.”

+ Survey 49:sup212 N 1 '22 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:271 D '22

HOLLOWAY, EDWARD STRATTON. Practical book of furnishing the small house and apartment. 296p il $6.50 Lippincott

749 Furniture. House decoration 23-955

The book treats of furnishings from the most simple to the most expensive for cottage, bungalow, house of fair dimensions, and every grade of apartment. It discusses the modern non-period mode and the liberal period furnishing, taking care that with every scheme presented the actual furniture appropriate thereto can be purchased in the open market today. Attention is given to form, color and textiles, and the reader is supplied with numerous examples of furnishing by noted architects, decorators, and householders of knowledge and trust. Illustrations in color and doubletone. Index.

Pratt p21 winter '23

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 26 '22 60w

HOLMES, EDMUND GORE ALEXANDER. Give me the young. 148p $2 Dutton [6s Constable]

377 Education of children. Youth

(Eng ed L22-4)

The book considers the essential factors in the rebuilding of a ruined world and is a plea for a thoroughgoing reform of education. The author does not believe that any scheme of economic reform, however disinterested the aim, will do effective work without a change of heart, a change in our standard of values and in our general outlook on life. The spirit of comradeship, of cooperation, of fellowship in devotion to a high ideal, must diffuse itself thru the world. The only hope of making a start lies in beginning with the young, by liberating the latent idealism and impulse towards good in the child not by any compulsory training or drill but by evoking the spirit of self-sacrifice to spontaneous expression. Benjamin Kidd's “The science of power” and the failure of compulsory idealism in Germany and in institutional Christianity furnish the bases of the author's arguments.

“This book is a stimulating discussion of a most vital problem. It is direct and clear in its presentation and should prove well worthwhile for teachers and educators in general. It should be helpful to the movement for reconstruction by awakening serious thinking on the part of the general public. It is a book for the layman as well as for the educator.” H. W. Nutt

+ El School J 22:792 Je '22 370w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 1 '22 100w

Survey 49:119 O 15 '22 100w

Survey 49:256 N 15 '22 260w

“What he has to say is always stimulating and admirably expressed.”

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p581 S 8 '21 50w

HOLMES, JOHN HAYNES. New churches for old: a plea for community religion. 341p $2 Dodd

261 Church. Community church 22-5820

This book breaks new ground in the field of religious discussion. Facing the alarming facts of declining church attendance, failing ministerial supply, and loss of ecclesiastical influence and prestige, the author is not satisfied to appeal to people to stand by the existing churches, to liberalize old theologies, etc., but calls for a wholly new statement of religion which shall work itself out into a new form of church organization. In place of the old churches based on sectarian theological beliefs, he pleads for new churches based on democratic social idealism. These churches, which he calls Community churches, would substitute for loyalty to the single denomination, loyalty to the social group; for a private group of worshippers held together by common theological ideas, the public group of citizens held together by common social interests; for restrictions of creed and ritual, the free spirit; for the individual as an object of salvation, the social group; for Christianity as a religion of special revelation, the idea of universal religion.

Booklist 18:306 Je '22

“This book is full of fallacies. But it is written by a well known preacher, whose idealism has inspired an enthusiastic following inside and outside of the Unitarian denomination.” D. F. G.

— Boston Transcript p8 Ap 8 '22 650w

Reviewed by H. F. Ward

Nation 115:338 O 4 '22 1100w

“Mr. Holmes's book has a certain volume and humanity, a generous and powerful impulse sweeping through it which are unforgettable. . . . Mr. Holmes has a tendency to be captured by whatsoever things are new. He surrenders to the intellectual fashions of the moment. He fails in particular to see that civilization absolutely depends upon a common tradition, by which each man can count upon certain responses in every other; and that social religion, which he so peculiarly prizes, depends similarly for the full development of its capacities upon a common faith.” D. S. Miller

+ New Repub 33:72 D 13 '22 2200w

St Louis p20:120 Je '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:178 Jl '22

Reviewed by H. S. Coffin

Yale R n s 11:875 Jl '22 1000w

HOLT, LUTHER EMMETT. Food, health and growth: a discussion of the nutrition of children. 273p $1.50 Macmillan

613.2 Children—Nutrition. Children—Care and hygiene. Food 22-12830

The book contains the Lane lectures given at the Medical school of Leland Stanford Junior

HOLT, LUTHER EMMETT—Continued
 university, in December 1921. The five lectures consider: (1) Nutrition in relation to growth, to mental progress and to resistance to disease; (2) Food requirements of children during the entire period of growth; (3) Conditions upon which are based the requirements for protein, fat, carbohydrate and mineral salts, and the percentage of the different food constituents in the diet of children; (4) Vitamines; (5) Practical means by which the nutrition of children may be improved. An appendix gives the caloric value of common articles of food. Index.

"A very practical and complete presentation of present-day knowledge on the subject. Dr. Holt's book will be of very great value."

+ Cath World 116:114 O '22 300w

"Told simply and clearly." C. B. Royster

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 25 '22 940w

"This book should prove a valuable addition to the household library, as well as to the libraries of school teachers, medical students and physicians, for in it Dr. Holt has put the subject of nutrition on a sensible and scientific basis."

+ N Y Times p15 D 17 '22 2550w

Pratt p17 winter '23

The Times [London] Lit Sup p846 D 14 '22 40w

Wis Lib Bul 18:271 D '22

HOOVER, HERBERT CLARK. American individualism. 72p $1 Doubleday
 323.4 Individualism

Individualism, says the author, has been the primary force in American civilization for three centuries. But he distinguishes between the old world individualism of laissez faire and our equality of opportunity, to which he would add an increasing measure of service and responsibility. In successive chapters he contrasts this American individualism with the present welter of social theories, discussing it on philosophic grounds and in its spiritual, economic and political phases.

"In intellectual content, if not always in precision and felicity of expression, this little book deserves to rank, and doubtless, will rank, among the few great formulations of American political theory."

+ N Y Times pl D 17 '22 2050w

"Herbert Hoover in this little book has given a short and sympathetic review of the [present world] situation, and, like some other great constructive thinkers, his English style is conspicuous for its brevity and distinction." Beatrice Washburn

+ N Y Tribune p24 D 17 '22 750w

R of Rs 67:221 F '23 110w

Springf'd Republican p12 D 12 '22 400w

HOPKINS, R. THURSTON. Thomas Hardy's Dorset. 255p il $3.50 Appleton [12s 6d Palmer]
 914.2 Hardy, Thomas. Dorsetshire, England
 A22-1413

This is a chatty book of ramblings in Dorset and its neighborhood and not, as the title implies, an attempt to search the home of the Wessex novels for the originals of the places mentioned by Mr Hardy. The author talks with Dorset rustics, reproducing their quaint speech, recounts some of the good stories they told him, explores old churches and churchyards, and tells the historic associations of the places he visits. A chapter is devoted to Thomas Hardy and William Barnes and a glossary of provincialisms is given at the end. The illustrations are by E. Harries and from photographs.

Booklist 19:49 N '22

"The one looking for a travel book will not be satisfied, for the places and the incidents are all too closely connected with something Hardy has written. But he who wants to learn of the country of which Hardy has told so much, will find a volume crammed with references and descriptions."

+ Bookm 56:228 O '22 60w

"Its matter is much superior to its manner, for Mr. Hopkins is obviously simply a notebook chronicler who is content to gather his material and set it in haphazard fashion on printed pages." E. F. Edgett

— Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '22 1000w

Cleveland p87 N '22

"It is written in the accredited style, an odd commingling of sentimentality, facetiousness and enthusiasm. . . Mr. Hopkins may be said to do the thing as well as it can be done by anyone who has not in his blood and bones the native appreciation, too deep to be articulate, of Dorset, Somerset, and Devon." Llewelyn Powys

— + Freeman 5:597 Ag 30 '22 1300w

Nation and Ath 31:315 My 27 '22 120w

"Mr. Hopkins's descriptions of the countryside, the towns, the old abbeys and the ruins are quite as entertaining as his outlines of the Dorset rustics. He manages to capture a deal of color, and never at any time does his book descend to the level of the mere guidebook."

+ N Y Times p27 N 12 '22 1000w

Pratt p28 autumn '22

"Mr. Hopkins has written a pleasant, chatty book about his wanderings in Dorset, and adjacent regions. He talks with the inhabitants; he hears old legends, and picks up quaint words which he uses with effect in his text, only to break down over them badly in his glossary."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p279 Ap 27 '22 250w

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN. She blows! and sparm at that! 361p il $2.50 Houghton

This sea yarn is ostensibly the account of a seafaring man's first voyage in the early 70's, told in a matter-of-fact manner without sensationalism. Tim Taycox, at the age of fifteen, suddenly heard the call of the sea and shipped in a whaler for the South seas. He had fallen in with a wise and kindly captain and a well-meaning kindly crew and the life he describes had many amenities altho whaling is full of hardship and rough work. Besides harpooning a whale and drying out the oil, the adventures include a fight on a coral island with natives and the mutinous crew of another whaler.

Cleveland p28 Ap '22

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:311 Mr 25 '22 130w

"Will he read with keen interest by those who enjoy an excellent story of action not lacking literary quality and balanced by information none too common. It was written for readers who are not whalemens; for those who relish a sea-yarn with a swing to it, which as a whole gives a stirring picture of days great and brave, now passed and all but forgotten." H. Root

+ Lit R p720 Je 10 '22 620w

"Mr. Hopkins's title suggests a book for boys, and so it is; he will be a very old boy who does not rejoice over it. Also, he will be a finished student of the subject who does not light on something he did not know, or was not quite certain about, in its pages. Without affectation he achieves vivid description; quite simply he gains the most telling effects. I doubt whether he has overlooked a detail of the whaleman's business—and it is rich in technicalities—yet not a page is dulled thereby." J. J. B.

+ Nation and Ath 31:716 Ag 26 '22 1000w

"A book in the reading of which a man may renew the happiest hours of his boyhood. . . There are bad men in his book—there are even mutineers, one of whom is shot dead in a most satisfying fashion by the ship's captain—but no art has been lavished on their portrayal, and their personalities never emerge."

+ New Statesman 19:614 S 16 '22 300w

"Sometimes a bit leisurely and garrulous, it is true, but gaining thereby in atmosphere and the seeming of reality, and while both younger and older readers will find in it much enjoyment and much accurate information about the one-time great business of whale fishing and the ways of sailing craft and of sea creatures, it is a particularly good story for lads in their teens."

+ N Y Times p11 Ap 2 '22 500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:321 J1 '22
R of Rs 65:446 Ap '22 100w

"It is a book well above the average of adventure stories."

+ Spec 129:sup810 D 2 '22 30w
Springf'd Republican p7a S 24 '22 180w

HORNADAY, WILLIAM TEMPLE. Minds and manners of wild animals; a book of personal observations. 328p il $2.50 (12s 6d) Scribner
591.5 Animals—Habits and behavior. Animal intelligence

"Of all the kinds of interest attaching to the study of the world's wild animals, there are none that surpass the study of their minds, their morals, and the acts that they perform as the results of their mental processes. . . . Yes, animals do reason. If any one truth has come out of all the critical or uncritical study of the animal mind that has been going on for two centuries, it is this." (Chapter I) The author's conclusions are based on his observations of animals both in the great outdoors and in the New York zoological park. He condenses his opinion as to which are the most intelligent animals in a table of estimates of some of the best known mammalian species. Contents: A survey of the field; Mental traits of wild animals; The baser passions. Index.

Bird-Lore p164 My-Je '22 %col
Booklist 18:316 Je '22
Bookm 55:536 J1 '22 70w

"Authoritative information and a delightful method of presenting it are combined. And perhaps never before has a naturalist of such distinguished rank compiled in a systematic and logical relation such a mass of information as this enthralling and rarely valuable book holds."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 17 '22 520w

"If a reader goes through the two pages of Mr. Hornaday's preface, it is ten to one that he will buy the book, read it, and urge it upon his children, if he has any, and if not, upon some one else's children."

+ Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 110w

"A fascinating volume." E. L. Pearson
+ Ind 108:524 Je 10 '22 150w

"Decidedly readable. It gives many interesting case reports of what particular animals did at the time of capture or later. Some of these reports make capital stories, and Dr. Hornaday tells them with spirit and humor." H. E. Dounce

+ Lit R p852 Ag 5 '22 750w

"His records of personal observation are so absorbing in themselves that they deserve to stand alone, without the conjectures and anthropomorphic parallels over which any critical reader is bound to stumble." Carl Van Doren

+ Nation 115:sup377 O 11 '22 100w

"This is a most amusing and interesting book. His book is full of stories and observations which throw light upon the intelligence and characters of wild animals."

+ New Statesman 19:646 S 16 '22 210w

"He has passed fifty years or more in the study and intimate association of animals, in carrying them through their difficulties, and without making any claim to the literary artistry of a Hudson or the supreme poetic logic of a Fabre, it does seem to the present writer that Dr. Hornaday, in this book, comes closer to settling more disputed questions than any other writer to be named. . . . Dr. Hornaday's unique contribution to animal literature consists in his leveling of all distinctions between man and animal." T. L. Masson

+ N Y Times p11 My 21 '22 2500w

"While this book contains no romancing, it may be said of it that, with all its accurate and authoritative detail, it recreates in the mature mind something of that intense interest in the animal world which children feel at the age when the idea that animals talk and act like humans is really credible. Thus, in a very specific sense, this matter-of-fact treatise is as interesting as a fairy tale."

+ No Am 216:288 Ag '22 230w

Pratt p16 autumn '22

R of Rs 63:672 Je '22 80w

"Mr. Hornaday's book is the pondered judgment of a practical man on a question of extreme mystery. It is both brilliant and careful, and it is an event in the literature of natural history. If one may make a criticism, it is a pity he did not gather together the threads of his thesis in a final chapter."

+ Spec 129:sup812 D 2 '22 1050w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 25 '22 360w

"We have seldom read a more disappointing book from a man who might have been supposed to make a real contribution to a subject on which he has had unusual opportunities of collecting information."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p415 Je 22 '22 400w

Wis Lib Bul 18:180 J1 '22

"Dr. Hornaday emphasizes strongly the capacity of wild animals to receive instruction, and this is perhaps the most suggestive thing brought out in the book. . . . The second part of the volume, which deals with the morals of animals and their so-called crimes, will not bear close examination." G. B. Grinnell

+ Yale R n s 12:437 Ja '23 1200w

HORNIBROOK, ISABEL KATHERINE. Drake and the adventurers' cup. 309p il $1.75 Little 22-9361

Another book about Lonney Drake, a boy scout. Drake is a senior in Maunsert academy and the scenes of the story are laid in Florida on Mosquito Inlet where the academy has its winter quarters. Drake and his two friends Deanie and the Rev play all kinds of boyish pranks and have adventures with alligators, bears, panthers and Seminole Indians. The tale of their experiences wins for Drake the adventurer's cup donated by an alumnus of the school to the senior who could tell the best story of life in which he himself had figured.

Lit R p208 N 11 '22 70w

HORTON, MARION LOUISE. Viewpoints in essays, an arrangement of books according to their essential interest. (Viewpoint ser.) 67p 60c A. L. A.

016.824 English essays—Bibliography.
American essays—Bibliography 22-16547

"An annotated bibliography with titles arranged under suggestive headings such as: Observations and reflections; Bed books; The masculine attitude; The eternal feminine; Youth and age; Out of doors; Gardens, etc., with author and title indexes."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 19:5 O '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:534 D '22

Pratt p6 winter '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:178 J1 '22

HOUDINI, HARRY. Houdini's paper magic. 206p il $2.50 Dutton

791 Tricks. Puzzles. Paper work 22-9564

The book contains the whole art of performing with paper, including paper tearing, paper folding, paper puzzles, and the paper tricks that play so important a part in the sleight-of-hand repertoire. Illustrated with diagrams.

Booklist 19:43 N '22

Boston Transcript p4 J1 5 '22 210w

HOUDINI, HARRY—Continued

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:455 My 13 '22 100w

"This is a book to delight the heart of the small boy. The book is well illustrated with clearly drawn diagrams, and is probably as adequate as a book can be as an instructor in this field of conjuring."

+ Lit R p727 Je 10 '22 190w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:507 N '22

Pratt p25 winter '23

St Louis 20:217 S '22

HOUGH, EMERSON. Covered wagon. 379p $2
Appleton

22-11082

This is a tale of a caravan of pioneers making their weary and dangerous way from Missouri across the western plains to Oregon, in 1848, just before Oregon was admitted as a territory and the year before the gold stampede for California. It tells of the hardships endured; of dissensions among the various companies; of romance and rival suitors for the hand of pretty Molly Wingate; of fights with the Indians; of the perils of fording swollen streams; of prairie fires; of veteran scouts and of born leadership; and how, on the last stretch of the pilgrimage lasting many months, the first tidings of California gold broke up the company so that only a few of the immigrants reached their initial destination, Oregon.

Booklist 18:366 J1 '22

"The book compares favorably with earlier attempts to embody the pioneer adventure in fiction. But it is not a masterpiece. The materials of which it is compounded never cease to be materials to the eye, nor is the machinery ever successfully hidden behind the fabric. In short, as with so much other fiction of the kind, its merit depends not so much upon the narrative as a whole, as upon the detailed descriptions of scene, type, and episode which is the sound fruit of the author's imaginative researches." H. W. Boynton

+ — Ind 109:206 O 14 '22 350w

Lit D p67 N 4 '22 580w

"Those persons who wish only pep and punch in Western romance will find a great deal to skip; they will not care for the log of the scenery nor for the narrative expositions of the American pioneer spirit. Nevertheless, plenty of adventure is woven in; at times it verges upon red-fire melodrama." E. L. Sabin

+ Lit R p787 J1 8 '22 880w

"The fictional part of Mr. Hough's book is negligible. Nor has the author's style much to recommend it, some of his phrasing being decidedly awkward. But the events which the novel describes are of such very great interest and importance, and the value of placing them in that fictional form which will, no doubt, cause them to reach so many more readers than would any other is so decided, that one does not feel inclined to find fault with the book because of its deficiencies, numerous and regrettable as these deficiencies are." L. M. Field

+ — N Y Times p26 Je 11 '22 500w

Outlook 131:465 Je 12 '22 70w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:461 N '22

Pratt p35 autumn '22

"A little too much love and rivalry are in it, perhaps, for the full dignity of a romantic drama of the great outwardwandering, a tremendous episode in the pageant of national expansion and Anglo-Saxon self-expression in America; but at least it sketches the great movement in its significant moods and situations, and there is no question of its readability." R. W. N.

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a J1 16 '22 230w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p430 Je 20 '22 130w

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 J1 '22

HOURLICH, ISAAC AARONOVICH. Immigration and labor; the economic aspects of European immigration to the United States. 2d ed rev 574p $6 Huebsch

325.7 Immigration. Labor and laboring classes—United States 22-26313

The first edition of this book appeared a little more than a year before the outbreak of the World war. (Book Review Digest, 1913) The war afforded an opportunity to test the effects of a cessation of immigration upon the condition of labor in the United States, and this subject is treated in a new chapter entitled "The lessons of the war." Mr Hourwich is an opponent of restriction and he finds in this experience of labor during a period without immigration confirmation of his theories concerning the effects of restriction. The reduction of the labor supply by means of drastic restriction of immigration will, he predicts, result in a reduction of the demand for labor and the diversion of American capital to the investment fields of Europe.

Reviewed by H: P. Fairchild

Am Econ R 12:524 S '22 320w

"Some of his criticisms of popular ideas are keen and worthy of attention. He weakens our faith in the balance of his judgment by his extreme antagonism to capitalism."

+ — Ann Am Acad 103:151 S '22 180

Freeman 5:478 J1 26 '22 220w

J Pol Econ 30:596 Ag '22 100w

Reviewed by H: P. Fairchild

Lit R p106 O 14 '22 550w

"One of the leading works on immigration."

+ R of Rs 65:448 Ap '22 50w

"Prof Claghorn of the New York School of Social Work, says: 'Anyone who wants to come out of the fog of emotion about immigration, and really think the matter through, in its relation to general economic development, will be greatly assisted in doing so by the careful study chapter by close-packed chapter of Dr Hourwich's scholarly and stimulating book.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 28 '22 120w

Springf'd Republican p8 Mr 25 '22 270w

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 30 '22 2650w

Survey 48:24 Ap 1 '22 60w

Wis Lib Bul 18:129 My '22

HOUSE on Charles street. 283p $1.90 Duffield
21-21547

"England in wartime is the theme. Sydney Lea, a young American girl just out of college, was traveling in Europe with a friend, and was caught in the mad homeward stampede of August, 1914. During her enforced delay in England, she came to realize that her place was not in enjoying the comforts and plenty of her own country, but in London, helping in any spot she could, doing the work that came first to hand. That spot happened to be an improvised hospital, and the work the humble one of checking supplies, answering the telephone and compiling a card catalog. But so calmly did she go about her duties in the midst of the chaos about her, and so efficiently did she drag order into her little office, that she attracted attention. Opportunity smiled on her, and she was well fitted to take advantage of it. She found herself a welcome guest in a social circle where few friendless American girls would have been able to penetrate, and first assistant to one of the most important powers in England."—N Y Times

Booklist 18:239 Ap '22

Cleveland p34 My '22

"This story is crowded. Not with details, nor in events, nor in control. The whole conception is simply that of an overvivid, tired mind. Yet there are bits that one remembers—of personal story, of description. This writer should rest—and then write more."

+ — Lit R p474 Mr 4 '22 420w

"There is a charm about this book that comes from the personality of the author. The plot is slim, the material has been worked over frequently in the past six years. But the grace, the urbanity and sane wholesomeness of the anonymous writer illumine every page. The publishers describe 'The House on Charles Street' as a 'thrilling story.' It is a pity to label this little novel so ineptly and with such scant justice to its real merits."

+ N Y Times p22 F 26 '22 580w

"Told in a leisurely, reminiscent style, with several exciting incidents. Shows a keen understanding of the English type of mind, and should interest a large group of readers."

+ Wis Lib Bul 18:104 Ap '22

HOUSMAN, ALFRED EDWARD. Last poems. 79p $1.50 Holt [5s G. Richards]

821

23-2168

This is the first book of poems Mr Housman has published since his "Shropshire lad" and he pronounces it his last, since "it is not likely that I shall ever be impelled to write much more." Most of the poems belong to the years 1895 to 1910, a few to the present year. The lyrics have the lovely singing quality of the earlier poems but an intensified note of sadness.

"The house of poetry has many mansions, and Last Poems is only a little book. Yet those who like perfection of phrase and sincerity of impression will find it a permanent abiding place." R. P. Boas

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf F '23 450w

Booklist 19:153 F '23

"The difference between 'A Shropshire Lad' and these 'Last Poems' is not the difference of art but of age; and it is emphasized in the power of 'youth and pride' which gave the 'lad' his courage and his fascination. But now he has grown up to 'the philosophical mind,' and would warn that youth will wear away and that pride is a delusion." W. S. Braithwaite

Boston Transcript p3 D 9 '22 1450w

Reviewed by R. W. Postgate

Freeman 6:331 D 13 '22 4000w

"The literary event of the year in English poetry on both sides of the Atlantic." J. Erskine

+ Int Bk R p23 F '23 1600w

"When a thing is perfect in its kind it is perfect. There is nothing further to be said." L. W. Dodd

+ Lit R p335 D 23 '22 400w

"Bright with romance from cover to cover, and the romance is not the dead echo of nineteenth-century incantations, but the old, authentic magic. It is the romance called poetry." O. B.

+ New Statesman 20:242 N 25 '22 920w

"All these 'Last Poems' are steeped in beauty—a beauty austere independent of ornament and haunted with 'the still sad music of mortality.' The peculiar quality of that music with which Mr. Housman is able to inform his simple meters is his own secret, the secret of a magic which, as always with the true poet, is the confusion of the prosodist." R. Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p2 D 3 '22 2400w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

Outlook 133:35 Ja 3 '23 1450w

"There will be those who will remonstrate with the 'Shropshire Lad,' saying: 'You produced one volume of flawless songs. Why not leave it phoenix-like on the sole Shropshire Tree? Why is Colin Clout come to London bearing his after-thoughts with him? We can only say how grateful we are to Mr. A. E. Housman for coaxing him out of his shy borderlands against the Welsh marches.'" R. L. Morris

+ Sat R 134:638 O 28 '22 600w

"These descriptions—so natural that the author no longer seems aware that he describes. Hardly perhaps that he writes—that is the impression that Mr. A. E. Housman's work probably gives to the unsophisticated reader. In almost each of the forty-one poems in this book he has achieved that complete fusion of rhythm, sound and sense which characterize a perfect work of art." A. Williams-Ellis

+ Spec 129:641 N 4 '22 1000w

Reviewed by Stanley Alden

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 14 '23 850w

"Here is the voice once more, in an accent as identical as one book may have with another. So swift, indeed, is the renewal that, if the older verses had not pretty well committed themselves to heart, we should imagine ourselves to be reading 'A Shropshire Lad' still. Again he beckons us into a land of radiance and sorrow, loveliness and briefness. Mr. Housman's verse, unmistakably individual in accent, should live because it has expressed some passionate moments with the last felicity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p662 Q 19 '22 1200w

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE. Angels and ministers. 150p $1.50 Harcourt [7s 6d J. Cape]

822

22-2774

The first three of these plays are episodes in the lives of Victorian worthies. In "The queen: God bless her!" Queen Victoria is shown in conversations with two of her favorites, first with her highland servant John Brown, and afterward with her prime minister, Lord Beaconsfield. In "His favourite flower," Lord Beaconsfield again appears, this time in his death sickness, confiding to his physician a terrifying prophetic dream about primroses. In "The comforter," Gladstone, at the end of his public career, has invited Lord Morley as one of his guests at dinner to break to Mrs Gladstone the news of her husband's retirement from the Liberal leadership. The last play is entitled "Possession."

"The plays are written with a simplicity of dialogue and structure characteristic of Mr. Housman's best work. Each play is merely an episode, which depends for its dramatic effect upon the rendering of aspects and moods. Not the least appealing note is the charm of atmosphere which Mr. Housman has given to his conception of Victorianism."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 22 '22 630w

"This little book is worth while; there are in it poetic insight, grace and a delicate handling which mark the real poet."

+ Cath World 116:117 O '22 250w

Cleveland p68 S '22

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:283 Mr 18 '22 150w

"Four shrewd, pungent, amusing plays."

+ Nation 114:473 Ap 19 '22 20w

"It is Mr. Housman's triumph that he makes 'These old characters young again, or not at least as though they belonged to another age.'" F. L. Birch

+ New Statesman 20:360 D 23 '22 130w

"Humor, as Mr. Housman's little book of comedies illustrates, is one of the most successful pathways to the past. In four brief episodes of the slightest texture he has succeeded in reviving the accent and the atmosphere of Victorian life. Implicit in them are moral, social and political values of the period; its resolute faith in the authority of the individual conscience, its comfortable reliance on the political tradition of the status quo, its sentimental allegiance to the convention of gentility. That Mr. Housman has given us not a historical reconstruction of the era but rather a subtle expression of its spirit indicates that he is the artist rather than the craftsman."

L. R. Morris

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 2 '22 1150w

Outlook 131:682 Ag 23 '22 180w

"The plays make up a bouquet of singular fragrance. They are written with the finest feeling and the nicest tact."

+ Sat R 132:537 N 5 '21 650w

"These short dialogues are beyond measure clever and attractive."

+ Spec 127:532 O 22 '21 750w

Springf'd Republican p8 My 1 '22 550w

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE—Continued

"There is nothing to bind the plays together but unity of atmosphere and treatment. Yet this unity is so marked that if they were all given in the same programme they would form a coherent as well as an agreeable entertainment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p625 S 29 '21 900w

"Mr. Housman's plays plant themselves in the memory." O. W. Firkins

+ Yale R n s 12:125 O '22 180w

HOW to make things electrical. 2d ed 427p il $2.50 U.P.C. bk.

621.3 Electric apparatus and appliances

22-9752

This is a book for the amateur which tells how to make all sorts of electrical appliances for pleasure or profit. It is written in plain English that anyone may understand. It is divided into five main sections: Simple electrical things for the home; New applications of electricity; Kinks for the practical electrician; Useful electrical devices; Electrical ideas for radio enthusiasts.

N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:47 O '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:487 N '22

HOWARD, FRANCIS MORTON. Happy rascals. 241p $2 Dutton

22-15204

Captain Peter Dutt's rollicking crew of the "Jane Gladys" are a band of humorous rascals full of the rough and cheery ways of the English sailorman, and their hatred for the crew of the "Raven" is one of their joys of life. The captain's wife and his sister-in-law elect to accompany the "Jane Gladys" on one of her trips. This causes trouble and the ladies decide to go ashore at the next stop. Mrs. Dutt strongly disapproves of the ways of the crew and Miss Park, the sister-in-law, strongly approves of Mr. Runnett, one of the crew, so they go home by different trains. The intense rivalry between the "Jane Gladys" and the "Raven" is only made worse by that case of tobacco which was to escape the vigilant eye of the custom official, and they go on being deadly enemies.

Booklist 19:123 Ja '23

"For fresh salt tang and rollicking humor, this volume has few equals in the literature of the sea." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 5 '22 1000w

"Mr. Howard handles his well inspired situations deftly, and with some real novelty of invention. His people are very definitely his own, clearly drawn from life with independent understanding. He is also bright and satisfying in his dialogue, a fact that makes his book a solid chunk of entertainment from cover to cover."

+ Lit R p747 Je 17 '22 170w

"From the first story to the last tale the reader will find himself absorbed in light, farcical material of the best sort. The situations are often extremely laughable, and the prose method of the author, with its quaint terms and amusing dialogue, adds much to it. The types which Mr. Howard creates ring so true that one is tempted to suggest that he knows intimately these old-fashioned sailormen who congregate on the London docks, have their squabbles, their practical jokes and love affairs."

+ N Y Times p11 My 21 '22 330w

"Mr. Howard's characters, happy, carefree sailor men, spend the greater part of their time in practical and impractical joking, mildly amusing at their best, always harmless, never tainted by reality; in short, such a crew as has sailed through many another book of pseudo-seafaring fiction." B. R. Redman

— N Y Tribune p5 Jl 30 '22 120w

"We have surveyed the course of Mr. Howard's narrative outfit and we are prepared to testify to a general prevalence of breeziness and ripples." E. W. Osborn

+ N Y World p13 Je 21 '22 180w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 131:264 Je 7 '22 40w

HOWARD-BURY, CHARLES KENNETH, and others. Mount Everest; the reconnaissance, 1921. 356p il $7.50 Longmans [25s E. Arnold]

915.4 Everest, Mount. Mountaineering. Tibet—Description and travel 22-13019

"A project worked out by the Royal Geographical Society and the Alpine Club, and backed by the Governments of Great Britain and India, resulted in what is called 'The Reconnaissance'—that is, in the preliminary exploration which had to be undertaken before an organized ascent could be considered. It is this which forms the subject of the book. The range of mountains in which the explorations were to be conducted is by far the greatest in the world. It extends from Afghanistan eastwards without a break for 2,000 miles; in the part of it called the Himalaya there are more than eighty peaks over 24,000ft.; and all of its country practically new to the mountaineer. Its general character, and especially the beauty and sublimity of the mountains, is brought out in the series of admirable photographs with which the book is illustrated."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 19:49 N '22

Boston Transcript p7 Je 17 '22 1550w

Cleveland p94 D '22

"As much of the region traversed was unexplored, the volume would possess value even if it were not for the impending fascination of Mount Everest. Incidentally those who are interested in such matters will find much valuable information about the natives of Tibet, and sidelights on the delicate diplomatic policy of the British Imperial Government in that region." R. L. Duffus

+ Freeman 5:596 Ag 30 '22 750w

"This record of the first expedition is one which any lover of nature will deeply enjoy, and which the seriously minded traveller, explorer, or mountaineer will read with the utmost interest and profit." Le Roy Jeffers

+ Lit R p718 Je 10 '22 1300w

"A very attractive book with its wealth of beautiful illustrations, and the interest is great." H. H. G.-A.

+ Nature 110:139 Jl 29 '22 1700w

"It is, if only because of the subject and the photographs of those gigantic heaps of rock and snow, an exciting and a fascinating book. Yet one had hoped for something better, for something as distinguished as Douglas Freshfield's 'Round Kangchenjunga,' something a little less matter of fact, less packed with not very necessary incident. Mr. Mallory, who describes the attack against Everest itself, is fortunately as good a writer as he is a mountaineer. With skill and clarity, varied all too rarely with brief bits of finely imaginative prose, he tells of the difficulties and disappointments, the terrors and beauties of those painful approaches up broken glaciers." Robert Littell

+ — New Repub 31:24 My 31 '22 1350w

Reviewed by Douglas Freshfield

New Statesman 19:297 Je 17 '22 1900w

N Y Times p14 Je 25 '22 2200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:371 Jl '22

Pratt p29 winter '23

Sat R 133:522 My 20 '22 1450w

"The descriptions of the Tibetan valleys carpeted with flowers, of the tame animals and the placid Buddhists who revere life so profoundly that they are distressed if a naturalist kills a butterfly, combine with the wonderful pictures to make this a most delightful book."

+ Spec 128:658 My 27 '22 880w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p301 My 11 '22 1900w

HOWE, MARK ANTONY DE WOLFE. Memories of a hostess; a chronicle of eminent friendships. 312p il $4 Atlantic monthly

B or 92 Fields, Annie (Adams) (Mrs James Thomas Fields) 22-19693

This book of literary reminiscence has been gathered together from the diaries of Mrs James T. Fields by her literary executor. For many years the Fields home was a center of hospitality to the eminent group of writers of old Boston as well as to distinguished visitors from across the ocean, and continued to be so after the death of Mr Fields, who was a member of the publishing firm of Ticknor and Fields and for ten years editor of the Atlantic. The period of these reminiscences is mainly the sixties and seventies of the last century and among the friendships chronicled are Dickens, Hawthorne, Lowell, Longfellow, Emerson, Whittier, Holmes, Aldrich, Mark Twain, Edwin Booth, Bret Harte and many others. The last chapter is given to Sarah Orne Jewett, the most intimate friend of Mrs Fields's widowhood, who for many years lived with her and shared her duties as hostess.

Reviewed by Willa Cather
Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 700w
Booklist 19:82 D '22

"Mr. Howe's pages are rich in these bits of humanization, so excellent for the memory of figures who are getting a little stiff and formal and forgotten on their lofty pedestals." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Bookm 56:633 Ja '23 310w

"A notable book of reminiscent literary biography." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '22 1450w
Cleveland p95 D '22

"Contains many reliable details and should have a secure niche in the archives."

+ Dial 73:684 D '22 150w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus
Freeman 6:429 Ja 10 '23 980w

"An entertaining and agreeable record; lively and pleasing."

+ Ind 109:247 O 28 '22 40w

Reviewed by Hildegarde Hawthorne
Int Bk R p36 D '22 70w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman
Int Bk R p49 Ja '23 1250w

Reviewed by Willa Cather
Lit R p173 N 4 '22 3250w

"He has sorted and arranged with no common skill, ordering the whole in such a way as to give a clear impression of a charming and generous-minded woman of the world." Stanley Alden

+ Nation 115:583 N 29 '22 450w

"With all its tolerant, appreciative attitude the book is full of vitality; and Mrs. Fields' criticisms of men and things are always pointed and fresh, combining the maximum of penetration with the minimum of unkindness."

+ New Statesman 20:388 D 30 '22 300w

Reviewed by Bliss Perry
N Y Times p1 O 29 '22 1750w

"The principal significance of her reminiscences lies in the information which they afford concerning the great figures of the New England Renaissance whom it was Mrs. Field's fortune to know so long and so intimately. Mrs. Fields has not told us anything very new or very important concerning them, but she has given us a finely drawn and sympathetic picture of these eminent men and the society in which they moved."

+ N Y Tribune p17 D 31 '22 1800w

Reviewed by Brander Matthews
Outlook 132:724 D 20 '22 1500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:596 D '22

Pratt p33 winter '23

R of Rs 66:670 D '22 240w

St Louis 20:303 D '22

"The book, put together by a capable and word-sparing hand, ought to have had a greater value than in fact can be attributed to it. It is commendably concise, easy to read, quite interesting, especially to those who are curious about Dickens in America, but leaves one with a sensation of having been nicely balanced between the excessively exquisite and the provincial."

+ — Sat R 134:993 D 30 '22 500w

"Mrs Fields's letters and diaries, bequeathed to Mr De Wolfe Howe, are a literary treasure-trove; but it rested with himself to transmute them into such vital and resplendent pages. The discriminating and literary skill with which he invests this work is a pleasure to contemplate." L. W.

+ Spring'd Republican p5a D 10 '22 1400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p765 N 23 '22 60w

"Record of trans-Atlantic Victorianism at its highest pitch of thought and feeling." The matter is often interesting, the manner is of the period —exuberant, assiduous, earnest."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p799 D 7 '22 1100w

Wis Lib Bul 18:253 N '22

HOWE, P. P. Life of William Hazlitt. 476p il $6 Doran [24s Secker]

B or 92 Hazlitt, William

"He begins his first chapter with a discussion of the origin of the name Hazlitt, mentions the family history which traces its members' movements in Yorkshire, Cumberland, Ulster and Scotland, records the birth of his subject at Maidstone on April 10, 1778, his parentage as the son of a Unitarian clergyman, and follows the family journeyings to Ireland and to America, where the youthful Hazlitt passed his years from the sixth to the ninth amid the rural scenes in and around Boston. The course of Hazlitt's career is closely followed by his biographer through his unsuccessful training for the ministry, his experiments in politics and painting until he settled himself in London as a journalist and friend of many of the literary celebrities of his day."—Boston Transcript

"Mr. Howe records the course of this life with painstaking exactitude. He knows the full value of the documentary evidence about a man, and he uses it unsparingly. His work is as much the work of the editor as of the writer and he shows skill at both. His picture of Hazlitt the man and Hazlitt the author is complete." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 6 '22 1450w

"We owe Mr. Howe an immense debt for having brought this master once more prominently to our consideration. We all read Hazlitt once. It is time that we read him again." R: Le Gallienne

+ Int Bk R p26 Ja '23 4800w

"The strictly biographical task which Mr. Howe set himself he has accomplished in a style to earn him the gratitude of every student of English literature and in particular of every admirer of Hazlitt." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Lit R p348 D 30 '22 1700w

"With patient industry, with entire candor, with excellent skill, Mr. P. P. Howe has gathered and set down the facts of Hazlitt's life. His book is full and final and a contribution of the first order to the history of Hazlitt and his period. But Mr. Howe, as was his right, has abstained almost wholly from interpretative comment. A sly little aside is all he ever permits himself." Ludwig Lewisohn

+ Nation 116:182 F 14 '23 2500w

"Mr. Howe has done one of those really valuable and unostentatious pieces of literary work which are, unfortunately, like virtue, their own reward. How much labor and enthusiasm he has lavished upon it, only those who have dug a little below the surface of one of the two greatest periods of our literary history can appreciate, for he does not suffer the evidence of his pains to appear. He has written a book that will last as long as our interest in that period; and that, we believe, will grow the farther we get from it." J. M. Murry

+ Nation and Ath 31:854 S 30 '22 1550w

HOWE, P. P.—Continued

"This is a full, if too friendly, biography which is not only worth reading but worth keeping. Here are the materials which everyone who wants to reconstruct the life of Hazlitt for himself will wish to have at hand. It is not critical, or an attempt to paint a portrait. It is in large measure a capable rearrangement of contemporary documents. It is, I think, the best book that Mr. Howe has so far written." Robert Lynd

+ New Statesman 19:663 S 23 '22 1850w

New Statesman 20:supxx D 2 '22 20w

"The book is one that every reader of Hazlitt, every one interested in the group to which he belongs, will hardly do without. It is likely to stimulate interest in a delightful writer, and it may lead to a fuller, more personal biography of an interesting and extraordinarily original man." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p13 Ja 28 '23 1900w

"There is not a particle of lift to it. Mr. Howe is a very sedentary chronicler." R. C. Holliday

— N Y Tribune p24 D 17 '22 1350w

"Mr. Howe has set himself the enormous task of giving us the facts, and he has succeeded to our admiration. Anyone who writes about Hazlitt in the future will inevitably be immensely indebted to him, for he has cleared the ground of all that thick undergrowth of half-truth, rumour, and sheer fiction which has obscured our view up to now. . . He has added a corner-stone to our English criticism, and everyone who loves letters must feel grateful to him."

+ Spec 129:sup519 O 21 '22 1700w

"Mr. Howe, for all his documentary method, is always on Hazlitt's side, when he can be; and we, as we read, are also on Hazlitt's side, even against our own judgment. And it is the merit of Mr. Howe's book that, by the presentment of all the facts he can discover, he works us into this state of mind about his hero."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p573 S 14 '22 3750w

HOWELL, GERARD CHARLES LISLE. Ocean research and the great fisheries. 220p $6.25 Oxford [18s Milford]

639 Fisheries. Marine biology

(Eng ed 22-9376)

"Dr. Howell's informing book on the subject of which he has made a life study will go far to lessen the gulf that still stretches between the eaters and catchers of fish. The 'great fisheries,' in this definition of them, take in the regions south and north of the North sea, the waters around Iceland, Barents sea, Faroe, north and westward of Scotland, the Bay of Biscay, the Portugal and Morocco areas, the Irish sea and the British channel. The statistics, mainly available only for the year 1913, list twenty-seven species of edible fish, with a yield ranging from 611,000 tons for herring, to 2400 tons for torsk. A few supplementary figures are given for 1920 in order to show a possible effect of the war on the fish supply."

—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p5 My 3 '22 520w

Reviewed by J. N. Nichols

Lit R p684 My 27 '22 760w

"Apart from a few errors, inevitable, perhaps, in a work of this kind, it is a trustworthy account of the material of the marine fisheries, written in a plain but very attractive manner, fortified with clearly constructed statistical statements, very well illustrated and beautifully printed." J. J.

+ — Nature 109:201 F 16 '22 510w

"The value of the book is enhanced by the inclusion of much valuable data and a profusion of comparative statistics and maps, and the author treats the biological side of his subject in a clear and interesting style. Mr. Howell's declared purpose is to induce Business and Science 'to talk things over' and if his book reaches the proper quarters, he will have taken an important step in advancing the cause which he advocates."

+ Sat R 113:sup32 F 11 '22 700w

"Mr. Howell adduces much interesting evidence from fishermen as well as from biologists and statisticians, and he gives many illustrations and several maps."

+ Spec 127:866 D 24 '21 1250w

"Unquestionably these 'notes' are for the general benefit. They form a book that is well documented, easy to read, and full of information of value both to fishermen and researchers. Even those of the general public who like to dip occasionally into unusual subjects will find statistics and the results of researches woven into a fascinating picture. Experts will be all the better for appreciating some of the shrewd criticisms made on their work and their methods."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p5 Ja 5 '22 860w

HOYT, HENRY MARTYN. Dry points: studies in black and white. 79p $1.50 Shay 811 22-22287

The contents of this book, divided into three sections, are made up of "Early poems, 1908-1911," "Poems written during 1920," and a one-act play in prose called "The master of the world." William Rose Benét contributes a biographical introduction entitled "Henry."

"The compilation of the small poetic output of Henry Martyn Hoyt was, we believe, an unhappy inspiration. For the line is often blurred with color, although these rhymed pieces are interesting and never strained. William Rose Benét in his reminiscence-colored biographical sketch of 'Henry,' imparts the flavor of the charming and vivid personality of this painter."

+ — Bookm 55:201 Ap '22 90w

"I do not seem to note any especial distinction in these verses. The workmanship is good and there is sometimes a bright quiescence of mood which seems to reflect a pure imaginative quality. The early poems have all the earmarks of immaturity, more so in substance and thought than in expression. From the poems written ten years later there is a firmer texture of thought and feeling and expression. The little comedy 'The Master of the World,' is, perhaps, the best expression of the poet's literary gifts. It is well done and amusing, with an undertone of thought that makes it more than a bit of trivial laughter at human nature." W. S. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Mr 18 '22 1050w
Cleveland p35 My '22

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 108:395 Ap 22 '22 60w

"The book is essentially a casual expression, the outpouring in words of a nature too rich to be contained, too impregnated with the perilous phases of beauty to lie dormant under shifting moods. The richer a nature is the more outlets for self-expression it must secure. Something tugs at the heart; something must burst forth in the medium nearest at hand. The one-act play, 'The Master of the World,' is surprisingly good." H. S. Gorman

+ Lit R p484 Mr 11 '22 390w

Reviewed by R. Le Gallienne

N Y Times p27 D 18 '21 340w

HUDSON, JAY WILLIAM. Abbé Pierre. 331p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton 22-8589

Old Abbé Pierre Clément, who tells the story, is the friend of all in the little Gascon village of Aignan. From his garden-house in his charming corner of the world he looks out with kindly and human eyes on the life of the village and reflects on people and events. Especially dear to him is nineteen-year-old Germaine Sance, his spiritual child, whose father had been one of his best friends. Since the war had taken away forever more than fifty of the best young men of the commune, there was no one left to aspire to the heart of Germaine, and when a handsome young American comes to Aignan and settles down for a while with an ailing sister, the Abbé is disquieted and fears the inevitable. David Ware seems to him ultra-modern and an intrusion. But David comes to him for French lessons and he learns to love the young man and to watch with equanimity the growing romance between him and Germaine. In the end he is even reconciled to seeing David take her away to America.

Booklist 18:366 J1 '22

"The beauty of its inception and the charm of its telling stirs in the heart of lovers of literature a sense of personal gratitude to him whose brain conceived it and whose artistry of technique gave it verbal fame."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '22 1150w

"Mr. Hudson has achieved a work of art."

+ Cath World 116:264 N '22 250w

Cleveland p84 N '22

"The whole effect is slow-paced, benign, and at certain moments, almost soporific. In the manner of its telling, the story meanders pleasantly, finding space for much interesting local colour, much tradition, and much rumination. All this is handled adroitly, recounted gracefully, and ultimately falls in with the main narrative, but a great part of it might equally as well have served as the foundation for a book of travel as for a work of fiction." L. B.

+ — Freeman 5:598 Ag 30 '22 150w

"A book like this is a real boon, for it gives to us a bit of the French soul and spirit as well as a picture of the lovely land and its old and new customs."

+ Lit D p57 Ag 19 '22 750w

"Mr. Hudson is frankly idyllic, but skilful enough to make a one-sided picture seem real. Presumably he is American or English but he writes a good deal like a Frenchman and he has succeeded admirably in reproducing the sun-soaked charm of Gascony." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 114:48 J1 12 '22 340w

"If Mr. Hudson has a taste for collecting folk-tales, he would be more in his element as a transcriber than as a novelist. He has no sense of character, and does not even seem to be interested in people as such—only as an excuse for what his Abbé believes to be philosophy."

— New Statesman 19:368 J1 1 '22 250w

"All is described with gravity, lightened by a gentle humor that is the Abbé's own. Indeed, this grave humor is typical of the whole book, of which it can be said, in one word, that it is fascinating. No other will do it justice."

+ N Y Times p13 My 21 '22 560w

"The little story is as perfect a piece of workmanship as we have had for many a long day. It gains our affection by its honest simplicity, its ever-present but restrained humor, and its unobtrusive sentiment—not sentimentalism." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:263 Je 7 '22 310w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:322 J1 '22

"Very pleasant reading."

+ Spec 129:248 Ag 19 '22 50w

"A charming story and a successful book. The book is both valuable and fascinating for the information given about peasant life and customs in Gascony."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Je 25 '22 740w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p366 Je 1 '22 140w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 J1 '22

HUDSON, STEPHEN. Elinor Colhouse. 157p $1.50 Knopf [5s Secker]

22-6311

"Elinor Colhouse" is, properly speaking, a prologue to the author's previously published novel "Richard Kurt." The two books form part of a projected series of five novels. This story tells how Richard Kurt, a young Englishman of wealth and position but little knowledge of the world, is skilfully and shamelessly maneuvered into marriage with a pretty and cold-blooded American girl who clutches at him as a means of escape from her poverty. It is a rather short story told with a skilled economy of words and leaves the young people a few days after their marriage. Kurt already has a dawning sense of Elinor's vulgarity, of his foolishness in walking into her net, and of the probable disaster in store for them.

Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '22 600w

"An unusually well-executed book, written with an intensity of observation, a frankness of delineation, and a sureness of speech that are quite exceptional." L. B.

+ Freeman 5:358 Je 21 '22 190w

"Mr. Hudson's knowledge of Americans is distinctly limited and his treatment of them does not particularly convince."

— Lit R p690 My 27 '22 90w

"The author of 'Elinor Colhouse' has stripped his story of unessentials until it is reduced to one hundred and fifty-seven small pages, but it is as rich and full in the implications of character as any number of pages could make it. The book leaves little for a critic to say because within its self-imposed limitations it is almost perfect." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 114:752 Je 21 '22 210w

"Mr. Hudson has made his theme thoroughly interesting by his subtle and economical treatment of it, a treatment that adds to our knowledge of life. His is one of the few modern novels which can be read by those who do not read solely for 'relaxation.'"

+ Nation and Ath 30:800 F 25 '22 310w

"It is a thoroughly competent survey of the situation, and yet it is not a work of art. 'Elinor Colhouse' fails because of the limitations of the old psychology which its author espouses. The fact is that it is dangerous to insist too much on the superficialities of life." Rebecca West

— + New Statesman 18:564 F 18 '22 600w

"Hudson employs a cruel objectivity in his portrayal of Elinor that will arouse but small sympathy in the readers for her. But it is clean-cut literary workmanship throughout."

— + N Y Times p16 My 28 '22 90w

"Slight and short as is this study of manners, it contrives to be unpleasant throughout."

— Sat R 132:695 D 17 '21 40w

"The characterization is vigorous, if crude, but there is little else in the book to redeem the ugliness of the story or to compensate for its unsatisfactory conclusion."

— Spec 128:24 Ja 7 '22 40w

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 2 '22 200w

"It might certainly have been more pleasant, but then its particular flavour would have gone. Mr. Hudson has taken an episode on its own merits and extracted all that it could give with an irony that makes no comments but is expressed through the facts. The result is arid in tone but by no means without amusement, for it has the lightness and swiftness of a story which has been told with a real art."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p787 D 1 '21 400w

HUDSON, W. H. Afoot in England. 309p $3.50 Knopf

914.2 England—Description and travel
22-12031

Never before published in America and long out of print in England this book describes rambles made without map or guide, spots in England, mostly remote from railroads or large towns, where the author has experienced keen delight. As we have learned to expect from his writing, there is little here of surface description, but much of sensation, mood and spirit, of atmosphere and human interest. He writes of little villages, of rural bicycle rides, of old roads leading nowhere, of following a river, of rambles down to the sea in East Anglia, of Roman remains, of cathedral towns revisited.

Booklist 18:360 J1 '22

HUDSON, W. H.—Continued

"The pages are loaded with reflections of the glory of a radiant world—from the joyful pen of a man who loves his earth. He makes England seem a paradise because he sees what ordinary eyes are blind to."

+ Bookm 55:645 Ag '22 110w

"A tour through its pages will be the next best thing to an excursion through the heart of rural England." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '22 1400w

"These sketches are compact with the peculiar and rare delight that Mr. Hudson can give in all his work. The quality of this delight may be hinted by saying that it is like the note of a song-sparrow heard in a June field, and, if one be pretty well fatigued by the delicious antics and clamour of most contemporary literature, like the clear call of the songster heard outside a circus tent during a lull in the ululation of saxophones and the racket of drums." E. T. Booth

+ Freeman 5:500 Ag 2 '22 1200w

Reviewed by Brooks Shepard

Lit R p42 S 23 '22 950w

Nation 116:47 Ja 10 '23 10w

"The book is a treasurable book, one that will live with you, and you will be content to have it, to turn to it to reread, to take it about with you on sojournings that promise leisure and relaxation. Here is a mind and a heart to know well, a personality deep and ardent, yet aloof in a kindly reticence, too." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times p27 Je 18 '22 1350w

Wis Lib Bul 18:184 Jl '22

HUEBNER, SOLOMON S. Stock market. 496p $3 (15s) Appleton

332.6 Stock exchange 22-2745

The book is a comprehensive, non-technical treatment of the services of the organized stock market, both to the investor and to business enterprise, and of the principles and practices underlying its operation. Part one deals with its services to the business community; part two with the scientific phases of organization and operation; part three with the fundamental factors which govern security prices; part four with the legal principles and usages governing the stock and bond market. Appendices give a classification and description of stock certificates: sample forms of common and preferred stock certificates; and of bond certificates; listing requirements of the New York stock exchange; sample of a corporation's report as issued by committee on stock list; tabular outline of tape abbreviations and their meaning; commissions charged on the New York stock exchange. Bibliography and index.

"The author is to be congratulated on his research. He is to be congratulated for his accuracy, so far as it was possible for him to be accurate. The book will be well appreciated by a few of the brokerage profession with academic minds, will, no doubt, be of some use in the advanced stages of teaching the subject of organized stock markets, but will hardly appeal to the broad public needing this information, because of the involved examples and the lack of human interest in presentation." R. L. Smtley

+ Administration 3:501 Ap '22 1300w

"This book, which is clearly a textbook on the stock market, deserves the highest commendation." W. E. Lagerquist

+ Am Econ R 12:499 S '22 1000w

"With this clearly written book as an authority, any moderately intelligent person ought to be able to manage his or her property. [The author] puts his subject before his readers in a logical and clear style, aiming to be understood by the laymen as well as the professional stock market manipulator."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 21 '22 350w

Cleveland p55 Ag '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:271 Je '22

R of Rs 66:561 N '22 110w

St Louis 20:88 My '22

"Full of detailed information, which is clearly set forth. The book will have a useful place as a description of methods. It was not necessary for the author to advise 'simpletons' not to engage in speculative buying. A professor of finance does not need to assume a didactic tone toward the 'uninformed.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p8 F 14 '22 120w

HUGGINS, WILLIAM LLOYD. Labor and democracy. 213p $1.25 Macmillan

338.9 Industrial laws and legislation. Kansas. Court of industrial relations 22-12740

"In this little volume the author has endeavored to discuss in plain and concise language the relations between government and modern industrial conditions, to point out some of the dangers to democratic institutions inherent in the present labor movement, to appraise the rights of labor, of capital and of the public, to suggest legal principles upon which remedial legislation may be based and briefly to give the first results of an experiment in adjudicating industrial disputes [Kansas Court of Industrial Relations]."—(Preface)

"Coming as it does from one who has been in the closest possible contact with the facts, the book throws a new and authoritative light upon a most interesting experiment in American government."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:759 N '22 100w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey

Nation 115:283 S 20 '22 350w

St Louis 20:237 O '22

"The book is simply and effectively written. It presents a clear elementary sketch of the underlying principles of the law and of its operation. The chief criticism to which the book is open is this: Judge Huggins does not appear to have learned from his experience as to the conditions and policies which may enable the court to maintain industrial peace successfully." Herbert Feis

+ Survey 48:627 Ag 15 '22 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p767 N 23 '22 110w

HUGINS, ROLAND. Grover Cleveland; a study in political courage. (Admirable Americans) 94p il $1 Anchor-Lee

B or 92 Cleveland, Grover 22-11298

A brief biography, the first in a series devoted to "Admirable Americans" who have died within recent memory. Of its ninety-four pages, sixty are given to a sketch of Mr. Cleveland's life and character. The rest of the book consists of quotations from his public addresses and his letters, with some anecdotes and estimates of his career.

"A small book which could be read with profit by every American citizen."

+ Am Pol Sci R 17:143 F '23 60w

"It is frankly a pamphlet and does not make any effort to pose as a final biography, but within its limitations it is excellently written. The material, which on the subject of Grover Cleveland is voluminous and difficult to gather, has been selected with care and intelligence." H. C. Pell, jr.

+ Lit R p117 Ja 27 '23 650w

"This book, small as it is, without pretension, without any attempt at display, is as free from prejudice, fuller of fairness and of a general desire properly to present Cleveland's character before the country than almost anything of its type that I have seen." G. F. Parker

+ N Y Times p10 Jl 23 '22 3000w

"This book is more of a handbook than a formal biography but, as such, it is usefully informing."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 19 '22 600w

HULL, HELEN R. The quest. 353p $2 Macmillan

22-20423

A father, once a college professor, losing grip on himself and his career under the jealous chiding and bickerings of his wife; a mother whose hysterical imaginings and complaints drive her husband down-hill into sordid business dealings and alienate her children—such is the family, headed for dissolution, into which Jean was born. With an uncommonly brilliant mind her lot is disillusionment. The guilelessness of her childhood is shattered by the disharmony between her parents and their lack of comprehension of her psychological development. Jean becomes a fighter, struggling for freedom from her environment, for light upon the road she must travel and against the weaknesses that assail her. We leave her with a sense of her growing powers, finding herself, her work and her love.

"Miss Hull's study of Jean Winthrop is keen and searching." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 18 '22 980w

"Written with disproportionate seriousness. One feels that the author has known her heroine very intimately indeed and has taken her too much to heart. The girl and her environment are authentic, but monotonous and repetitiously detailed. Nevertheless, the book indicates a fineness of feeling, a power of thought, and an ease in writing, which make it likely that Miss Hull will one day give us a piece of original and truly creative work."

— + Dial 74:210 F '23 90w

Int Bk R p59 D '22 720w

Lit R p355 D 30 '22 250

"Neither smart nor sardonic, it is neatly and always economically put; limited in ambition, but covering its aims with judgment, and always sustaining its flight; in a word admirable. Moderately planned, and dispassionately, almost humorlessly told, it is yet a novel full of life, and full of a feeling that grows in crescendo to an excellent climax." C. Trueblood

+ Nation 116:153 F '23 300w

"The story must be bracketed as a realistic novel, and nothing but praise can be accorded its careful handling. Plot there is none in the accepted sense of plot. But the book achieves what it sets out to do—to draw a full-length figure of a growing girl in regrettable surroundings and to do it with a psychological veracity."

+ N Y Times p24 N 12 '22 600w

"The book is written in an abrupt, detached style that at times gives the feeling of a strong breeze hurrying the reader along. Yet never does it seem sketchy or slighted—for each word pays its own freight. Without plot in the accepted sense of the word 'Quest' breathes the very essence of drama. It is a book to pick up the second time." Kathleen Field

+ N Y Tribune p23 Ja 21 '23 900w

Springf'd Republican p5a D 10 '22 310w

HUME, ETHEL. Judy of York Hill. 281p $1.75 Houghton

22-19043

A school story for girls in their teens. It tells of the year Judy Benson spent at York Hill school in Toronto, of the friendships she made, of her escapades, visits and all the jolly doings of school. To make the year even more enjoyable Judy was able to aid her favorite teacher to bring to a happy ending her romance, which had almost terminated in disaster.

Booklist 19:128 Ja '23

"Her adventures will make delightful reading for lassies in their teens."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 28 '22 150w

Reviewed by Vivian Radcliffe

N Y World p6e O 22 '22 60w

HUNEKER, JAMES GIBBONS. Letters; collected and ed. by Josephine Huneker. 324p $3.50 Scribner

1; or 92

22-19496

These letters, collected and edited by his wife, may be considered a companion to Mr

Huneker's autobiography, "Steeplejack." They show him, from a very human side, full of cordial good-fellowship and with great versatility of interests. The letters are concerned with music, art, literature, and the celebrities with whom he had come in touch both socially and in a critical capacity. Mme. Frida Ashforth, E. E. Ziegler, H. E. Krehbiel, Charles J. Rosebault, Walter Prichard Eaton, Benjamin De Casseres, Henry L. Mencken, Henry James, Jr. are among the people addressed. Index.

"The chief impression made by these letters is one of a gorgeous, splendid, fruitful hurry to get the utmost out of life. There are thousands of miles to be traveled, gallons of beer to be drunk, books to be read, plays to be seen, music to be heard, and above all thousands of words to be written about all these things. In this whirlwind of shifting sensation some persons of colder mood may feel a certain lack of anchorage, may ask for some slight scaffolding of theory or abstract reflection which shall give the fleeting show stability and permanence." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '22 450w

Booklist 19:82 D '22

Reviewed by R. C. Holliday

Bookm 56:629 Ja '23 1050w

"There is indeed much prolixity and more or less repetition in these hastily-penned letters, but they are very frequently lighted up by sentences worth remembering, by sound judgments on men and women who are or were in the public eye, both here and abroad, by vivid criticisms on books and pictures and musical compositions. They are the spontaneous utterances of a man who took life with a clever irony and yet with a seriousness that gives weight to many of his jocular flippancies." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 20 '22 1200w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:204 O 14 '22 120w

"This is perhaps the most delightful of all the Huneker books, for it holds so much of him, and so much of the whole literary and art life of his generation and ours." Hildergarde Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p35 D '22 70w

Reviewed by H. T. Fink

Lit R p147 O 28 '22 150w

"These letters are of no interest to any one who does not like the work of Huneker. To those who loved his work and his personality they are precious. These are the most fascinating letters to me, in existence. . . They sing and soar and weep. They are the daily telegrams to the world of the rarest thing in America—an individual." B. DeCasseres

+ Nation 115:582 N 29 '22 880w

"It's a very intriguing Bohemian that appears in these letters where he has for the moment quite forgotten the public. He is an eager lover of the things that are more excellent: versatile all the time, but some of the time an exact and exhaustive student; an overflowing spring of generous impulses, a sensitive and abiding friend; and a loyal lover." P. H. Boynton

+ New Repub 33:74 D 13 '22 1200w

"The letters are a constant witness to his insurgency—and to the rightness of his instinct for new values. But they are witness to something more, which the friends who urged Mrs. Huneker to their compilation, and for whom particularly they are published, will recognize as needful to fill out the character of the most brilliant, versatile and vivid critic of his time." J. Corbin

+ N Y Times p1 O 22 '22 2200w

"We can think of no collection of letters so worthy to be ranked with those of James—for richness and pungency of intellectual content, for sustained preoccupation with Ideas—as those of James Huneker. . . Buoyant, brave, delightful, letters; large-hearted, large-minded." Lawrence Gilman

+ No Am 216:813 D '22 3600w

HUNEKER, JAMES GIBBONS—ContinuedPittsburgh Mo Bul 27:597 D '22Pratt p34 winter '23

"Mr Huneker's 'Letters' have a savor of individuality and raciness of phrase that his more elaborate autobiography, 'Steeplejack,' possessed only in spots. The 'Letters' are not of equal value with the best part of that book. But they disclose the wit, vivacity, warmth-heartedness and essential boyishness of the man; moreover they show the freedom from egotism of a critic whose writings had a positive, assertive tone."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 D 8 '22 1000w

HUNGERFORD, EDWARD. Our railroads tomorrow. 332p $2.50 Century

385 Railroads—United States 22-11602

The author, who has been studying and writing about railroads for sixteen years here studies the railroad problem from the human angle, centering attention on the question of public service and showing what the railroads mean to the country, to the men who work on them and to all the people who use them. He begins with the era of the United States railroad administration and shows its value as an experiment, outlines the present situation, the main factor of the problem, the freight terminal problem, the possibilities of electrification, of more intelligent transportation salesmanship, and of regional railway operation. Finally he sketches such a regional plan, nationally organized, for the United States.

Booklist 18:348 J1 '22

"The book contains a good many facts and figures, some of which the discriminating reader will subject to scrutiny. Leaping lightly from high point to high point, Mr. Hungerford rather airily tells our ignorant railroad magnates what they must do to be saved, and he tells them a plenty." H: R. Mussey

Nation 115:130 Ag 2 '22 240w

"An up-to-date railroad book in every respect."

R of Rs 66:224 Ag '22 120wSt Louis 20:210 S '22

"Mr Hungerford's book has at least the power of stimulating thought by means of concrete suggestions. Its faults are a somewhat slapdash manner of arriving at conclusions and an overexuberant and overconfident style. Whether these faults outweigh the merits is a fair question."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 1900wWis Lib Bul 18:179 J1 '22

HUNGERFORD, EDWARD. Romance of a great store. 281p il $2.50 McBride

658 Macy, R. H., and company, New York. Department stores 22-3892

The store in question is R. H. Macy and company. Beginning with a sketch of its founder, Rowland Hussey Macy, and a description of the city of New York at the time of the founding of the store, the book traces its history from 1858, as a small fancy-goods store on Sixth avenue to its present status, including a vision of its future. It shows how its gradual expansion and continuous growth have come about and describes its internal organization and business methods.

Administration 3:762 Je '22 5colAdvertising and Selling p26 Ap '22 1/4colBooklist 18:316 Je '22Boston Transcript p4 Mr 22 '22 480wPittsburgh Mo Bul 27:284 Je '22St Louis 20:215 S '22

HUNT, FRAZIER. Rising temper of the East sounding the human note in the world-wide cry for land and liberty. 247p $2.50 Bobbs

327 Eastern question (Far East). Subject races. Nationalism and nationality 22-6843

"The writer of this book is an American newspaper writer, who has been travelling through the countries of the East, especially among subject peoples, to learn of the consequent effect upon them of the Great European War and of the political conditions among them." (Boston Transcript) "India and Gandhi, young China, Kagawa of Kobe, white Australia, Mexico, the Philippines, Haiti are drawn with a sympathetic vividness. Partly reprinted from Hearst's, The Century and Good Housekeeping." (Booklist)

"The book is intensely human and one of its most striking merits is that it emphasizes distinctly the difference between the national aspirations of the East and the so-called menace of the colored races to the white."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:722 N '22 100wBooklist 18:310 Je '22

"A thrilling story. It will not only interest the reader, but will undoubtedly help to a greater understanding of existing conditions."

+ Bookm 55:537 J1 '22 90w

"It is a cluster of wonderful stories, with much to attract the thoughtful." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 26 '22 840w

"The book is a valuable one, despite the fact that it omits probably the most vital feature of the entire situation. Mr. Hunt is seemingly surprised that all these countries should be on the point of revolt. There is nothing surprising about it."

— + Lit R p828 J1 22 '22 500w

"He has the defect of his qualities, however, and he may also be said to be a little sentimental and even more naive. One has more than a suspicion that he is a little self-conscious about liberalism. I could hardly recommend this book to historians as source material, or even to general readers as an all-sided judgment. Still, this is a minor criticism to make of a man who at least sees with his own eyes and hears with his own ears and can criticize the imperialism of his own country as vigorously and freshly as that of Japan and England. I wish there were some way of compelling all foreign correspondents under penalty to read this book twice." Nathaniel Peffer

+ — Nation 114:752 Je 21 '22 640w

Reviewed by J: Dewey

+ New Repub 31:286 Ag 2 '22 350w

"He has told his story of a billion discontented people in terms of simple, every-day humanity, not in the manner of the sociologist with a pet theory to expound or of the diplomat whose object is to camouflage the realities behind international intrigue. He found his story as a good reporter should, and he tells it very simply, very vividly, always in the concrete, with an unerring human touch. That is why his book helps us to realize the unrest in the East more thoroughly than scores of more ambitious works."

+ N Y Times p17 J1 9 '22 3150w

"Frazier Hunt is a better reporter than H. G. Wells, but when he deals in abstract conclusions about the common man he is not nearly so convincing nor as interesting as the Englishman." Boyden Sparke

N Y Tribune p6 Je 18 '22 580wSt Louis 20:206 S '22

"The book is written with the snap of a famous journalist."

+ Survey 48:123 Ap 22 '22 60wWis Lib Bul 18:179 J1 '22

HURST, FANNIE. Vertical city. 281p $1.90 Harper

22-5605

The title story is one of six sketches of the hazards of life in the skyscraper city. There is a daughter's heroic sacrifice and devotion to a drug-addicted mother in "She walks in beauty." In "Back pay" a girl who has thrown over a high-minded lover for money and led a life of luxury as the mistress of a war-profiteer, experiences a change of heart and turns her back on her gay life when she finds her true lover in a base hospital blinded and dying. "The vertical city" shows us a desolate background from which has grown a blithe young thing living her best against great odds. The remaining sketches are "The smudge," "Guilty," and "Roulette."

"To read Miss Hurst's short stories is to become acquainted with the very latest manifestations of American fiction. They are crude and chaotic in form, their language is the tongue of the sporting pages, the 'human interest' stories and the flashy news reports of yellow journalism. With a ready pen, a vivid imagination, a keen observation, she lets herself go without restraint, and we read her in the same state of mind that we listen to 'jazz' music or cast our eyes over the latest manifestations of 'free verse' poets. However much we may scorn her methods, we cannot deny that their results arouse our interest." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 22 '22 700w
Cleveland p35 My '22

"Miss Hurst's imagery is as lively and hard-hitting as ever, the floridity of her language does not droop, nor do the wells of her ever-gushing sentiment show any signs of drought. Her story-telling remains richly 'plushy,' as she might say, and 'bubbly' with tears. But the fare she provides is too filling to want to take much of it at once." N. P. Dawson

— Lit R p579 Ap 15 '22 600w

"All the stories are cut after the particular pattern which Miss Hurst has found popular; all are written in the peculiar style of hers which it is the fashion to call 'journalistic.' It is no mean achievement to write so exactly like one's self each time. All the stories, also, are concerned with themes a little unpleasant or a little morbid."

+ N Y Times p14 Ap 30 '22 640w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:262 Je '22

Spring'ld Republican p7a F 11 '23 180w

Wis Lib Bul 18:134 My '22

HURST, SAMUEL BERTRAM HAWORTH.
Coomer Ali. 248p il $1.75 Harper

22-3189

Coomer Ali, a devout Mohammedan Hindu, differs from his co-religionists in that he actually loves his wife and baby. When both seem to have perished in a tidal wave, he denies his God, with fanatical despair, and decides to go to Mecca to denounce him before the assembled pilgrims. The greater part of the story is taken up with the journey to and from Mecca and the criminal doings of the British sea captain Armit, addicted to opium, and the Indian half-breed Brown. At Mecca the ghost of his father dissuades Coomer Ali from his enterprise. Returning home, with grief renewed, he resolves to become a Christian. In the very act of doing so he finds his wife and baby and in his joy gives vent to the shout: "There is but one God and Mohammed is his prophet!"

"The jaded reader may approach it superciliously but we doubt if he can leave it in the same spirit. Perhaps there is no better test of a story of adventure than this."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 15 '22 360w

"It is a relief to meet a story of adventure in India and the East without an English or American heroine to get in the way. And one feels that Mr. Hurst has really something to say, though he is not wholly successful in getting it out. His people, especially the captain, are drawn from the living model, and unconventionally sketched; which is no small merit."

— Lit R p455 F 25 '22 420w

"Though on the whole well written, there are technical flaws in the book. But he has kept firm hold on the numerous threads of a very complicated plot, his people are real, and his psychology convincing, while his subject matter, if occasionally approaching perilously close to that of the great artist, Joseph Conrad, is generally novel, as well as particularly intriguing."

+ N Y Times p14 F 5 '22 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:198 My '22

Wis Lib Bul 18:186 Jl '22

HURT, WALTER. Truth about the Jews: with an introd. by Dr. Raley Husted Bell. 344p $3 Horton

296 Jews

22-7949

The thesis of the author, a Gentile, is that the characteristic qualities of the Jew are needed to build up our shattered society, that the time has come for the Jewish ideal to be transformed into reality, that world-peace cannot prevail until the ideal of Israel is realized, in other words that the "world is to be Judaized." In developing his plea for a universal acceptance of Jewish ideals the author studies the causes of race antagonism, the persecution of the Jew and the way it has effected their solidarity and racial characteristics. He considers also the revival of anti-Semitism, Jewish culture and achievement in finance and industry, the religion of the Jews, their record as revolutionists, Zionism, proselytism, and the attitude of Jews toward war.

"Clear-sighted, philosophic volume," Llewelyn Powys

+ Freeman 6:140 O 18 '22 1650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:328 Jl '22

HUTCHINGS, MRS EMILY GRANT. Indian summer. 296p $2 Knopf

22-15474

A full-size portrait of a woman taken in the Indian summer of her life. A wound to her pride made by the man she had expected to marry had been allowed to grow and fester till the high-strung, sharp tempered girl had become in middle life a morbid, malignant woman, finding grievances everywhere, visiting her restless unhappiness on husband and children and leaving a hurt on every life she touched. The author brings her character study to a ruthless but consistent finish. Contrasted with Lavinia Trench is the figure of her gentle and forgiving husband, and of the fine and gracious woman who comes to live next door and becomes a healing influence in the lives of all the Trenches.

"Here is no surface tale but deep insight, real simplicity and courageous candor . . . There is more than promise in Mrs. Hutchings' initial work, there is accomplishment."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 5 '22 500w

"It would take a 'Forsyte Saga' to adequately handle what this author has rough hewn into 'Indian Summer.' It is perhaps inevitable that first novels should have this fault. The indispensable instrument for the literary artist is the file. Once adept at its use, Mrs. Hutchings should write her name in the limited list of uncompromising depictees of men and women as they are." Clement Wood

— Lit R p64 S 30 '22 880w

"Mrs. Hutchings's execution is not altogether as good as her conception. The novel is rather under the usual length but it is desperately crowded with characters and incidents and as it draws toward its conclusion it strikes the reviewer as, in places, frankly incredible." J. W. Krutch.

— Nation 115:213 Ag 30 '22 500w

"A first novel, in which the rivetting is still rather apparent. It shows more familiarity with books than with people, and naturally is quite serious in intent. A fine display of tolerance reigns throughout it, tempered somewhat by moral precepts. As yet, the promise of this writer seems undefined." R. C.

— New Repub 32:76 S 13 '22 200w

"Lavinia Trench is a superbly made portrait, a vital addition to the gallery of fictional women. . . . The author does not talk about her characters. She lets them tell their own stories, paint their own portraits, by means of their conversations and actions—the direct and vital method of the author who has the story-telling instinct. In its portrayal of both life and character the novel is sincere and convincing, while as a story it holds the reader's interest from its beginning to its final climax."

HUTCHINGS, MRS EMILY GRANT—Continued

+ N Y Times p22 J1 30 '22 620w

"That Mrs. Hutchings has promise nobody can deny. Already she shows a vivid and original talent, but she shows also an extraordinarily chaotic mind. Her portrait of Lavinia Trench is a strange one and a strong one. But the story of her life proceeds by jumps and jerks, side leaps and tumbles. It is a trail hard to follow. I have seldom seen so good a book marred by lack of the narrative sense in the author's equipment, and this fault is a constant aggravation, considering her power and her free imagination." Hunter Staggs

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Ag 13 '22 750w

HUTCHINS, GRACE, and ROCHESTER, ANNA.
Jesus Christ and the world today 149p $1.25
Doran

261 Jesus Christ — Teaching. Sociology,
Christian 22-14834

A series of studies dealing with modern social applications of the teaching of Jesus, seeking in and thru His mind and experience a way that shall lead individuals, churches, classes and nations toward a solution of our present problems. Each chapter is followed by a suggestive list of questions for discussion which concretely and searchingly apply the principles set forth to questions met every day in our social and industrial relations. The appendix gives further suggestions for study groups.

"The altruism of the joint authors is great, not to say extreme. At times indeed to some readers it will even seem to err in liberality. Those for whom it was written, however, will find within it that guidance and inspiration they seek, presented logically and sympathetically."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 J1 8 '22 290w

"Excellent written book. The book would gain in usefulness for discussion groups if the question outlines at the end of each chapter were less formal and didactic and more provocative of original group thinking. Leaders who use the book will do well to work out additional questions with this end in view." F. E. J.

+ — Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p6
S 30 '22 460w

"The studies are searching and disquieting."
+ J Religion 2:659 N '22 50w

"If Christianity is to have a vital and positive influence in the making of a new world it will have to be the sort of Christianity which is here earnestly, persuasively, and courageously suggested."

+ Nation 115:22 J1 5 '22 50w

Pratt p8 winter '23

St Louis 21:4 Ja '23

Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

HUTCHINSON, ARTHUR STUART MENTETH.
This freedom. 372p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

22-26760

Mr Hutchinson's moral is that if woman is tempted to use her dearly bought freedom in the way of keeping up her business career after marriage, she will ruin her home and sacrifice her husband and children. Rosalie Aubyn, brought up in a man-dominated household, determines to have a career of her own and makes such a success of it that she sees no reason to give it up when she marries. The plan works splendidly at first. Her home is well ordered, a place of peace and rest which both Rosalie and her husband seek eagerly after the day's work. The three children are devotedly loved by their parents, provided with a perfect nurse, a competent governess and the best of schooling. The book might indeed up to this point be considered a strong argument for just the kind of home pictured, but Mr Hutchinson to point his moral, has all three children, now grown, overtaken by the worst disaster. A little granddaughter is saved from the ruins. To her Rosalie devotes herself, in expiation for her sins and shortcomings as a mother.

Booklist 19:21 O '22

"This Freedom' is an army with banners brought up for the growing woman. If anybody is taken in by it, and regards it as a genuine admonition to fly home lady bug, for her own good, that poor soul has all of Mr. Hutchinson's ignorance and none of his genius." Ruth Hale

Bookm 56:220 O '22 600w

"Mr. Hutchinson is not at all convincing as a propagandist of social theories, or in his plea for the maintenance of one form of family servitude. More amazing than anything else in the story are Mr. Hutchinson's affectations of style, his ecstatic and exclamatory paragraphs of a word or two, his nicknaming of his characters, and his none too infrequent English lapses." E. F. Edgett

— Boston Transcript p5 S 2 '22 1350w

Cleveland p85 N '22

"While we consider This Freedom an exceptionally ill-written book and one in which a moral thesis is violently rammed home at the expense of decent verisimilitude, our feelings towards it are of the mildest."

— Dial 73:460 O '22 1450w

"I cannot comprehend why the reviewers should be straining so many points to say something pleasant about it. I am particularly puzzled that several of them find this a book which will make people think. Its idea is absolutely on the surface, like a label, and you agree or disagree with it; but there is nothing to think about." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 109:168 S 30 '22 900w

"Of course this is a novel with a purpose and, as is often the case, the author has bent circumstances to his plan, but no thoughtful reader can deny the truth that underlies this story. But in spite of its pronounced ethics the book is extremely interesting, the story moves quickly and the lesson is carried by the incidents and not by undue moralizing."

+ Lit D p53 S 23 '22 900w

"In 'This Freedom' the wonder is that the cause which Mr. Hutchinson elects to discuss leaves untouched so much of his art. The old charm of the Tidborough story is here, the high vitality, the glinting characterization, the unique and ballad-like method of his rushing recital." Zona Gale

+ Lit R p63 S 30 '22 2000w

"The thing's too poignant for the words one has," Mr. Hutchinson says modestly somewhere. . . 'the thing' is never too poignant for the words Mr. Hutchinson has. Swarms of words, their swarms of words, the swarms of words of those swarms of words, and so on in snowball fashion. Just get going from the Heights of emotion, from the Peak of a paragraph, and the thing makes itself. I know why Mr. Hutchinson exalts and wrings hundreds of thousands of hearts. It is his dear, delicious, incomparable, quaint, extravagant, winning, eager, kind, and kittenish manner. He goes on, and you just stare—with damp but kindling eyes." H. J. M.

— Nation and Ath 31:683 Ag 19 '22 1050w

Nation and Ath 31:823 S 23 '22 1300w

Reviewed by Florence Haxton

New Repub 32:156 O 4 '22 340w

New Statesman 19:492 Ag 5 '22 900w

Reviewed by Burton Rascoe

N Y Tribune p7 S 3 '22 800w

"Criticism and comparison aside, this novel is sure to provoke discussion and will be read by every one who wants to keep abreast of the most important fiction work of the year." R. D. Townsend

Outlook 132:119 S 20 '22 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:461 N '22

Pratt p35 autumn '22

"He is sometimes ungrammatical and sometimes unintelligible. And the virus of the style infects the heroine. . . In spite of all this Mr. Hutchinson sometimes 'pulls it off.' He has passages that are not merely clever, but moving: passages in which the thought and emotion are made real to the reader. And that, let us hope, is the main, as it is certainly the best, reason for his success." Gerald Gould

— + Sat R 134:185 J1 29 '22 1250w

"Much of it is very well done. But to the present writer the last third of the book is a pure fairy tale. There is nothing inevitable in the deluge of tragedies, and though as a moralist he may approve, as an ordinary human being he is not convinced."

+ — Spec 129:215 Ag 12 '22 1100w

"The truth is, that, having begun his domestic analysis ironically, Mr. Hutchinson completes it sentimentally. The solid strength of the book is in its delineation of small but composite areas of social life and its sympathy with gracious human emotion. Mr. Hutchinson's style as usual, is supple, brisk and sensitive, but his trick of using words and phrases for sentences is overdone to the verge of jerkiness."

— + Springfld Republican p6 S 4 '22 780w

"Not the sturdiest supporter of the old ideas and methods, we believe, could mistake Mr. Hutchinson's story for good sense. It is a piece of violent ad captandum pleading; and no barrister with a hopeless case ever sobbed and moaned and 'carried on' to impress the jury so theatrically as Mr. Hutchinson is bound to do towards the end of this book. The English language goes to pieces under the strain. Mr. Hutchinson's often rather annoying affectations turn into cruel distortions of our tongue. Not to mention grammar, all good literature's rules for forcible writing—reticence, concentration, selection—have to be violated."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 J1 27 '22 390w

Wis Lib Bul 18:217 O '22

HUTCHINSON, HORATIO GORDON. Fort-nightly club. 304p $5 Dutton [12s Murray] 210 Philosophy. Evolution. Religion and science (Eng ed 22-14934)

"Mr. Hutchinson has invented the machinery of a debating club in order to discuss as easily and informally as possible a number of serious problems concerning the destiny and conduct of man, the existence of pain, altruism, instinct and reason, etc. One point that emerges is that men of science in these days hold theistic views, unlike the materialists of the last century. The views of Professor Soddy and other leaders of science or philosophic thought are effectively quoted. The book ends with an assertion of the value of spirituality, that is, of religious experience which is due to divine influence."—New Statesman

Boston Transcript p6 Je 24 '22 700w

"Mr. Hutchinson has a lively style, and he can set out his knowledge of natural history and other sciences with clarity and distinction."

+ Nation and Ath 31:232 My 13 '22 190w

"He does not write quite with his usual ease, but he has succeeded in avoiding generally the philosophic and scientific lingo which makes such inquiries unattractive to the ordinary public."

New Statesman 19:50 Ap 15 '22 270w

"As in all his books, Mr. Hutchinson shows himself to be an individual thinker and an entertaining writer. [It is] marked by lightly worn learning and ingenious thought."

+ Sat R 133:345 Ap 1 '22 550w

"Mr. Hutchinson has managed the argument with much skill and vivacity. [A] most suggestive and helpful book."

+ Spec 128:433 Ap 8 '22 1050w

"A book like this must be an experience as well as an argument if it is to be persuasive; and those who read Mr. Hutchinson's dialogue will have no doubt that he is writing of things which have been felt as well as pondered. You may agree or disagree with particular arguments, but you recognize that on a theme which can never be exhausted he has found many suggestive things, and many moving things, to say."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p184 Mr 23 '22 1700w

HUTCHINSON, HUBBARD. Chanting wheels. 293p $1.75 Putnam

22-5894

This is a "three-in-one" novel—sociological, musical and romantic. A young composer, always teeming with original ideas, finds that he can combine the necessity of making a living with a creative urge in music. He secures employment in the hot-press room of some hydraulic steel works where he makes friends with the workers and becomes a bridge between employers and employees. He organizes the workers into orchestral groups and studies the folk songs of the various foreigners along with the music of the wheels and rhythm of machinery, in order to discover the principle that is back of the folk songs and to find the secret of the music that will get into people's hearts. He succeeds so well that at a crisis, when the workers are about to succumb to an agitator and to go out on a fateful strike, his "Hot-press chanty," sung with an overpowering enthusiasm inspired by his personality, turns the tide and saves the works.

Booklist 18:331 Je '22

"It is new, possesses a different type of hero, a fresh kind of situation. If sometimes in the course of the story we are moved to wonder if actually things would work out quite as Mr. Hutchinson makes them, it does not detract from our interest."

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 20 '22 660w
Cleveland p50 Ag '22

"Worth reading because it is interesting, because its episodes dealing with the factory ring as true as experience, because music's influence is so clearly and cleverly shown in the lives of the characters, because there are flashes of excellent description in it." Robert Kelly

+ Detroit News p11 Ag 13 '22 720w

"He has worked out this theme—with variations—on a formula of his own resulting in some lovely passages, some harsh notes and a crashing finale. A little uncertain as it is at times, a little overdone at others, it is nevertheless buoyantly refreshing and an indication of future power." Ruth Stewart

+ — Lit R p635 My 6 '22 680w

"If the author could have made his characters 'just folks,' if he could have written with more spontaneity and sincerity, he might have created a work of high merit. As it is, he has given us a readable novel of considerable dramatic interest, with an excellent central idea, and with that we must be content."

+ — N Y Times p11 Mr 12 '22 400w

"There is a joyous feeling of freshness and youthful energy about 'Chanting Wheels' that catches and holds attention." R. D. Townsend

Outlook 131:351 Je 21 '22 170w

"'Chanting Wheels' is an honest book, seriously conceived, earnestly written with animation and with spirit, and with a real story recounted with due dramatic energy. Most readers of it will watch for the next novel under Mr. Hutchinson's name."

+ Springfld Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 350w

HUTCHINSON, VERE. Sea wrack. 322p $1.75 Century [7s 6d J. Cape]

22-16476

The fury of the sea begins and ends this novel, the scene of which is laid on the north-east coast of England. The hero is a gift of the sea. Wrapped in a bundle and lashed to a bit of broken spar he was rescued as a baby from some unknown wreck and brought up by the prosperous Farmer Swinsoo as a companion to his adopted and much loved son, Ayerst. Ayerst and the sea waif Andrew grew up to hate each other and to love the same woman

HUTCHINSON, VERE—Continued

Ayerst tricked Andrew out of his property and his love, leaving him a few acres of marshland to cultivate, but when his mud-beds prospered Ayerst grudged him even these. As a finishing act of revenge he opened the sluice gates and flooded Andrew's cultivated fields. But the fury of the sea swept away more than Ayerst had plotted. It freed Andrew of a tragic problem and put into his hands once more the possibility of happiness.

Booklist 19:54 N '22

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 27 '22 1000w

Cleveland p90 D '22

"What might have been a genuinely tragic tale is sidetracked into the baldest melodrama."
— Dial 73:681 D '22 70w

"A book that sticks in the mind long after it is finished." Hildegard Hawthorne
+ Int Bk R p70 D '22 40w

"Some of the characters are exceedingly well-drawn. The heroine is a bit unreal, but such is the all-too-frequent fate of heroines."
+ Int Bk R p60 F '23 250w

"It is no feeble imitation but a strong story, well written, and full of interest."
+ Lit D. p64 N 4 '22 700w

"A good story well told. One closes this book feeling that he has finished a ripping good story. If that alone will not content him, he has Andrew. [The author] has succeeded in creating at least one character of truly heroic proportions. And that is much, in a single novel."
+ Lit R p15 S 9 '22 330w

"It is a good story, absorbing in the emotional intensity of its slow development and strong enough to hold the attention of even a restless reader. And its people, especially the more important characters, are wonderfully real. The story is told in a style that adds much to the sense of conflict with which it is filled and is told also with poetic feeling and imagery and with a notable gift for the use of words."
+ N Y Times p17 Ag 27 '22 500w

"In spite of her borrowed style and furbished-up stock plot her story is not without originality and power. It is more a promise than a performance, but it is a promise worth keeping, worth listening to." Isabel Paterson
+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 27 '22 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:4 Ja '23

Spring'd Republican p7a S 24 '22 130w

"As there is no indication to the contrary, we are perhaps justified in assuming this to be a first novel. Certainly it has many of the characteristics of a first novel, good and bad. But it has a compensating freshness, that irrecoverable quality which most novelists sooner or later lose. Unquestionably Miss Hutchinson enjoyed the writing of her book, and her enjoyment is transmitted to the reader."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p326 My 18 '22 150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:274 D '22

HUTTON, EDWARD. Pageant of Venice. 246p
il $15 Dodd [42s Lane]

914.53 Venice—Description

(Eng ed 22-12541)

"A book tracing her history lightly through the ages and relating anecdotes of Venetian magnificence and dissipation. The volume contains excellent reproductions in colour of a score of Mr. Brangwyn's powerful and spirited drawings."—Spec

"A city with buildings of porphyry and serpentine, with floors of agate, lapis-lazuli, and chalcidony, just suits Frank Brangwyn; and with Edward Hutton to make the palaces intimate with anecdotes, then one has to confess that two guineas is cheap for a combination of the colors and mass of the artist, with the author's knowledge of Italian history."
+ Nation and Ath 30:565 Ja 7 '22 200w

N Y Times p11 Je 25 '22 200w

Spec 127:792 D 10 '21 80w

"In his pageantry of twenty colour-plates and his head-pieces and tail-pieces Mr. Brangwyn is at his best, sumptuous, romantic, mysterious, full of rhythm and motion. Between them, the artist and the author make a big book that is well worthy of its size."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p805 D 8 '21 140w

HUXLEY, ALDOUS LEONARD. Crome yellow. 307p $2 Doran [7s 6d Chatto & W.]
22-6512

Crome is an English country house to which Denis, an intensely self-conscious youth and would-be poet, goes to join a house party. Priscilla Wimbush, his hostess, dallies with the occult. Her husband has a passion for ancestral history and for the Italian primitives. The other members of the heterogeneous group of people there gathered are the host's niece Anne, with a doll-like beauty and a gift of irony; Mary, a girl of twenty-three, who babbles about psycho-analysis and is worried about repressions; Gombauld the artist; Scogan who talks endlessly about the universe; and the engaging Ivor. There is no action—only talk, the most modern kind of talk. The formless fabric of the story is somehow held together by poor lovable Denis, who is hopelessly and inarticulately in love with Anne.

"This is fine satirical writing, determinedly eccentric and unflaggingly delightful." J. F.
+ Bookm 55:191 Ap '22 150w

"'Crome Yellow' can not fail to be entertaining reading for anyone. The author writes extremely well and his capriciousness and choice of the amusingly outlandish in idea and action are peculiarly fascinating for us people who have any liking for that sort of thing."
+ Detroit News p17 My 14 '22 320w

"I doubt if he is a story-writer at all. He does not care to concentrate, to dig. All the time his fancy, which is monstrously alive, meanders into attractive side-paths, in pursuit of the 'amusing.' His sensitiveness to the atmosphere of a period or milieu would make him an admirable critic. But Mr. Huxley takes nothing seriously; least of all his own talents." Raymond Mortimer
— Dial 72:630 Je '22 1200w

"Has all those faults which make many people so glad to read a novel: it is unimportant and light, frivolous, frothy and impertinent; it is pretty risqué, and piquantly satirical. It has little in the way of a story." J. M.
— Freeman 5:214 My 10 '22 210w

"Whatever disappointment Mr. Huxley's admirers may feel in 'Crome Yellow' will not be due to any failure to amuse. Every page is sparkling and the preciosity of the style is always successful, but it opens no new field and it strikes no deeper than his former books. Indeed, it strikes hardly so deep. The gestures of his cynicism have begun to be somewhat stereotyped and the adventures of his soul to lack variety." J. W. Krutch
— + Lit R p464 Mr 4 '22 1350w

"Mr. Huxley has a literary skill which only sound learning coupled with ripe talent could produce. He strikes no note of his own; he does the accepted but in the heat of this literary moment almost forgotten thing superbly." L. L.
+ Nation 114:349 Mr 22 '22 880w

"Deliciously humorous. Its style has all the vigor, the skillful employment of words, the economy which we have come to look for in the modernist. If one might be permitted a ridiculous figure of speech, one might say that Mr. Huxley has written his latest book with utmost ease and with his left hand, while with his right he smoked a cigarette, and all the time he kept laughing up his sleeve. One wonders what he might do if he stopped laughing."
+ N Y Times p11 Mr 19 '22 840w

"'Crome Yellow' glitters. Its trivialities may lie, very well, upon the further side of wisdom. Why are we here, anyway? Nobody knows, except the ignorant. 'Crome Yellow,' however, isn't trivial at all." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p6 My 21 '22 650w

"All the characters are drawn surely and truthfully and with a crisp wit."

+ Sat R 133:18 Ja 7 '22 300w

"Not only is it intrinsically amusing and ingenious, but if due allowance is made for the slight formalization, concentration and exaggeration which are the right of the novelist, the book is a completely accurate piece of observation. Just so do such young people talk, and their reactions with various types of older people are capably portrayed. 'Crome Yellow' is a delightful book."

+ Spec 127:750 D 3 '21 800w

"Mr. Huxley's personages are drawn with an extreme verve of crispness; in fact the merit of his comedy is that it becomes always more amusing as it grows. The way in which Mr. Huxley manoeuvres his party, displaying them by adroitly contrasted little scenes, has a good deal of Anatole France's touch. Mr. Huxley suggests the same tone, too, by his rich converse with books, and by the 'direct action' of the younger members of the party, which puts ideas to rout."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p733 N 10 '21 550w

HUXLEY, ALDOUS LEONARD. Mortal coils. 223p $2 Doran [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

22-15215

Four short stories and a play whose reason for being seems to rest solely in the cleverness of the telling. The first, an ingeniously managed murder story, contains a complete picture of a sensualist, "Green tunnels" a pleasanter one of day-dreaming youth. The play "Permutations among the nightingales" is an unpleasant Italian fantasy about a group of amorists flitting about in the June evening and changing partners with wanton abandon. The last story is melodrama. Contents: The Gioconda smile; Permutations among the nightingales; The Tillotson banquet; Green tunnels; Nuns at luncheon.

"Aldous Huxley has again proved himself a wizard of irony. These humorous, skilful, bitter, brilliant stories are like glowing robes of satin lined with haircloth, shimmering yet irritating." J. F.

+ Bookm 55:632 Ag '22 260w

"They are the finished product of short-story writing; they are more than that from the point of view of human experience. They deal with certain matters in human nature and human conduct, in a suave manner that is as clean and glittering as a scimitar." W. S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p7 J1 1 '22 1500w

"'Mortal Coils' is a remarkably vigorous book, and, taken with the other works of this author, is fairly convincing proof that after Mr. D. H. Lawrence, to whom he bears no resemblance whatever, Mr. Huxley is the most important of the younger English novelists. . . His excellencies have little to do with his brilliancies or his modernity, in spite of what the reviewers have said; his distinguished qualities are his satire, pity and pessimism." M. M. Colum

+ Freeman 6:474 Ja 24 '23 1600w

"'Mortal Coils' shows something of him that his former books did not show; but even so it is in no way better than 'Limbo,' and is often not so good. Aldous Huxley has forgotten too much." G. Stevens

+ Lit R p771 J1 1 '22 300w

"In Mr. Aldous Huxley's present productions we are witnessing, of course, the youth of an artist. 'Mortal Coils' is an immense advance on 'Crome Yellow,' though many of the stories in this volume reveal that Mr. Huxley is passing through a transition stage, and that he has not yet wholly replaced the indiscriminating interest of youth by the selective interest of the artist." Rebecca West

+ New Statesman 19:156 My 13 '22 700w

"As he portrays it in this collection of short stories there is no romance in life, nor aspiration for any but material things, nor unselfishness, nor purity, nor innocence, nor spiritual beauty of any sort. It is wholly base, ignoble, obscene, repulsive. But he paints it with a wizard-like power and artistry of touch and color."

+ N Y Times p18 Je 25 '22 720w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p5 Je 25 '22 820w

"In nothing he writes can cleverness be denied Mr. Huxley. The pity is lest no other praise be added to him. The sheer mechanism of 'The Gioconda Smile' is consummate. But sheer mechanism is not enough. And even this is absent from the vicious Italian fantasy which follows it."

+ Sat R 133:471 My 6 '22 300w

"The present collection seems to be quite up to Mr. Huxley's high average, except perhaps the play, which does not appear to have any very definite point."

+ Spec 128:597 My 13 '22 900w

"All five tales are clever; four of them want matter worthy of the literary skill that has made them."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p275 Ap 27 '22 600w

HYAMSON, ALBERT MONTEFIORE. Dictionary of English phrases. 365p $5 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

803 Allusions. English language—Terms and phrases (Eng ed 22-8430)

The fourteen thousand terms and phrases entered in this dictionary include phraseological allusions, catchwords, slang phrases, stereotyped modes of speech and metaphors, nicknames, sobriquets, derivations from personal names, etc. Tho many of the phrases are of foreign origin, they have all been incorporated into the English language. The phrases are explained and in many cases exact references to their sources or early usage are given.

Booklist 18:356 J1 '22

Dial 73:459 O '22 60w

"Interesting and useful, but only indifferently up-to-date." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 108:395 Ap 22 '22 250w

"Compiled by an Englishman, it is better on the British than on the American side of the language."

+ Nation 114:698 Je 7 '22 90w

"Mr. Hyamson has produced a fascinating collection of phrases of all kinds in which everybody can find something new and interesting. His industry is remarkable, and there is much not to be readily found elsewhere. The book, however, must be used with caution. It is weak in some respects, and hardly, we think, as the publishers' notice on the paper cover indicates, 'checked by comparison with all preceding works of reference that have value.'"

+ Nation and Ath 30:867 Mr 11 '22 620w

"The book is really entertaining, but needs revision."

+ New Statesman 18:538 F 11 '22 740w

"A very useful book."

+ Outlook 131:216 My 31 '22 80w

Pratt p24 autumn '22

"It must be a sad heart that does not rejoice in this fascinating volume. Here you have catchwords, and clichés, nicknames and sobriquets, all the useful, amusing things that the serious dictionary is too grand to recognize. Here they are, each with a definition and if possible a historical statement of source. We do not recollect meeting with a previous work which covers exactly this ground, and we believe that Mr. Hyamson is justified in his boast that thousands of references are given which are quite 'new,' that is to say will be sought in vain elsewhere."

+ Sat R 133:67 Ja 21 '22 660w

HYAMSON, ALBERT MONTEFIORE—Cont.
 "Though one can think of many phrases which one feels ought to have been included, but which are not, and though there are a good many phrases included which the individual opinion regards as not worth having, the book before us is a very agreeable and efficient work of reference."

+ — Spec 128:307 Mr 11 '22 450w

Springf'd Republican p8 Je 20 '22 450w

"There are some 14,000 entries, making the work a useful reference book. Not all the explanations are beyond criticism."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p45 Ja 19 '22 170w

"To any intelligent reader this book cannot fail to be entertaining, [but] Mr. Hyamson is vague sometimes, if not wrong, in his glosses."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p136 Mr 2 '22 1600w

Wis Lib Bul 18:155 Je '22

HYDE, CHARLES CHENEY. International law chiefly as interpreted and applied by the United States. 2v $32.925p $25 Little

341 International law and relations. United States—Foreign relations 22-3437

"Professor Hyde's presentation of the subject has been with a view to impartial elucidation of each topic treated, in order that his criticisms, favorable or unfavorable, may be tested by the reader. The recent activities of the League of Nations and of other new agencies in international relations are presented in this manner throughout the two volumes. The source material indicated in the footnotes and elsewhere is always ample and recent and, while chiefly, is by no means always American. The international bearing of recent events in which the United States has been concerned, such as the Tampico incident, 1914; the pursuit of Villa, 1916; the relations of the Dominican Republic; the late doctrines of contraband, freedom of speech and the like are considered. The application of the Treaty of Versailles with its many ramifications is set forth. More than usual attention is given to conflicts arising in regard to the rights and duties of aliens and alien claims. Consideration is also given to the subject of reparations, which has grown in importance through the reluctance to use the word indemnities."—Am Pol Sci R

"These two volumes stand the fundamental test of general reliability, and they will without doubt take high rank as constituting a trustworthy and scholarly exposition of those rules of law which bind the member states of international society in their intercourse one with another." E. C. Stowell

+ Am Hist R 27:769 Jl '22 1500w

"Serious study, wide research and carefully reasoned conclusions are evident throughout this work, and all students are under deep obligation to Professor Hyde for this scholarly contribution to the field of international law." G: G. Wilson

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:328 My '22 520w

"Here is a thorough piece of work, a truly American interpretation of the Law of Nations. The author knows his American precedents and sources. Moreover, he is most discriminating; he does not hesitate to criticize questionable precedents and decisions. He is essentially judicial in attitude." P. M. Brown

+ Lit R p86 O 7 '22 390w

"He has done a thoroughly scholarly job; he has produced the great American treatise on international law. Admirably conceived, admirably arranged and admirably finished, his two volumes must at once become the indispensable companion of every student, every lawyer and every official who deals with international law." M. O. Hudson

+ New Repub 33:261 Ja 17 '23 1950w

HYSSELL, HELEN. Science of purchasing. 261p $2.50 Appleton

658 Purchasing. Business 22-10216

This handbook reflects the new developments in the science of purchasing; and provides a concrete manual for business houses and students of purchasing. Partial contents: Personal qualities necessary for successful purchase management; Knowledge of alm, plans and resources; Principles and policies; Cooperation and coordination between executives; Technical knowledge of requirements; Legal side of contracts; Ethical side of purchasing; Records and forms; Appendix Index.

Booklist 19:7 O '22

Cleveland p77 S '22

Reviewed by Hilary Rogers

Daily News Rec p9 Je 5 '22 430w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:498 N '22

St Louis 20:243 O '22

Springf'd Republican p8 My 20 '22 40w

Wis Lib Bul 19:22 Ja '23

I

IN the clutch of circumstance; my own story, by a burglar. 272p $2 Appleton

364 Crime and criminals 22-10248

A true life story of the career of a famous burglar. He sets forth in detail his environment and influences as a child, his coming to this country, alone, when a mere boy, after the death of his mother, his arrests for vagrancy, his various and many burglaries ending with the unsuccessful attempt on Mark Twain's house. This earned for him his second long term sentence, and proved the turning point in his career, for today he is a respected member of society.

Bookm 56:102 S '22 110w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 7 '22 130w

Reviewed by Austin Hay

N Y Times p3 Je 4 '22 1950w

"A narrative written with genuine simplicity and sincerity and presented without any apparent exaggeration or straining for effect. Considered sheerly as a story, it is interesting from cover to cover, even though the author is lacking in all the arts of the practiced fictionist; but it has a deeper value than that of the narrative, since it constitutes not only an appealing human document but a powerful indictment of the attitude of society toward crime and the criminal." S. A. Coblenz

+ N Y Tribune p4 Jl 2 '22 560w

Outlook 131:500 Jl 19 '22 80w

Springf'd Republican p8 My 6 '22 70w

Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 18 '22 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p41t Je 22 '22 350w

INGALLS, WALTER RENTON. Wealth and income of the American people; a survey of the economic consequence of the war. 321p $4 G. H. Merline co., 100 E. Philadelphia st., York, Pa.

331 United States—Economic conditions. Wealth 22-3100

"Mr. Ingalls's general position is that during the war period and the years immediately following there was no increase in the national wealth, but, on the contrary, he believes there were considerable losses. To support his contention he has taken the studies of Day, Stewart, Snyder, and King on production and added a number of independent estimates of the changes occurring from 1916 to 1920, which lead him to believe that the nation was poorer in 1920 than before the war. On the size of the national income and change therein he agrees in the main with the estimates of the National Bureau of Economic Research."—Lit R

Reviewed by A. J. Hettinger, Jr.

Am Econ R 12:679 D '22 1700w

"What will especially incline the economist to be critical of the scientific accuracy of Mr. Inge's work is his avowed determination to prove the fallacy of the 'quantity theory,' to demonstrate the iniquity of labor organizations, and to expose the menace of Socialism and Bolshevik theories and practices. While the author is entitled to hold any position he chooses on these subjects, their intrusion in a supposedly impartial study of economic conditions is at best an error of judgment and, as indicated, a reminder to others to look for bias in his whole study." L. K. Frank

— Lit R p854 Ag 5 '22 780w

Spec 129:502 O 14 '22 1200w

"Within limits, a valiant attempt to estimate and classify the tangible wealth of the nation with intelligent observations on intangible wealth. The prosecution of the task, however, is insufficiently detailed. A book of this kind should not descend into propaganda, and nothing is gained by superficial comparisons between socialism and capitalism, no matter how much to the disadvantage of the former they may be."

— + Spring'd Republican p8 F 28 '22 270w

INGE, WILLIAM RALPH. Outspoken essays; second series. 275p $2 (6s) Longmans

304 Social problems 22-20343

"The broad outline of his position is: That society cannot be held together without religion; that Christianity, as interpreted by platonic theologians, is true; that there is no reason to expect progress here on earth; that industrialism is a disaster, probably irremediable; that patriotism, as understood by English gentlemen, is good, but the German deification of the state introduced by Hegel is bad; that the white man is quite likely to be overwhelmed by the yellow man, chiefly because the latter is not afflicted with trade unions; that in civilized countries the best stocks are dying out, and degeneration can only be prevented by birth-control combined with eugenics; and that the Victorian age was, like that of Pericles and that of Elizabeth, a high-water mark to which we shall not soon attain again. He dislikes everything characteristic of a modern industrial community. He likes the public schools, Oxford and Cambridge, country life, learning, the liberal professions, and aristocracy. Aristocracy is the keynote of his conservatism."—New Repub

Booklist 19:68 D '22

Bookm 56:489 D '22 300w

"The book is another evidence of the fearless and profound mind of one of the greatest of English religious leaders." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 30 '22 800w

"These long, erudite studies in rather small print, will require careful search to discover anything sufficiently startling to explain the title."

Ind 109:284 N 11 '22 40w

"Every page of this volume is stimulating and informing."

+ J Religion 3:111 Ja '23 60w

"Dean Inge is one of the ablest and wittiest writers of our time; moreover he is a man of entire sincerity, willing to concede much that seems to go against his general position, and prepared to follow his beliefs wherever they may lead him. Although he is outspoken and often contemptuous, he is not irritating even when one most disagrees with him. What he has to say almost always deserves respect, but very seldom (in any case) commands agreement." Bertrand Russell

+ New Repub 32:309 N 15 '22 2500w

New Statesman 20:supxiv D 2 '22 50w

N Y Times p18 Ja 7 '23 600w

"Much of the fire is gone out of these later pieces, but there remains, if not much to put one's teeth into, a great deal of very good writing." Burton Rascoe

+ N Y Tribune p9 N 5 '22 120w

"The Dean of St. Paul's is not without limitations of sympathy and even of perception; he is capable of strange intermissions of Intelligence; he is curiously unable or unwilling to appreciate foreign types of mind; and he is an uncertain guide on æsthetic matters. But all this does not prevent him from exercising what we believe to be a salutary influence on public thought, over which he begins to wield an almost alarming authority. He is, without a rival, the most accomplished man of letters whom the Churches possess in this country at the present time, and this alone makes him a figure of outstanding importance."

+ — Sat R 134:679 N 4 '22 720w

Spec 129:969 D 23 '22 1300w

"The essays included in this volume are all worth preservation in book form."

+ Survey 49:259 N 15 '22 90w

"Dean Inge is both helpful and agreeable; helpful, because his severity is directed by the keenest perspicacity, and agreeable, because it is often when he is most violent that he shows most wit. . . . The profoundest and most arresting of the essays in the present volume is, naturally, 'Confessio Fidei,' the Dean's confession of faith."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p655 O 19 '22 2900w

INGE, WILLIAM RALPH. Victorian age; the Rede lecture for 1922. 54p $1 Macmillan [2s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

942.08 English literature—History and criticism. Great Britain—History—19th century (Eng ed 22-16890)

"Originally delivered as a lecture at Cambridge University, the brief address that has now reached a second impression in book form is an eloquent summary of the main trends of thought, intellectual, social, and religious, that made the Victorian age stand out with the Elizabethan as one, to quote Dean Inge, of 'the twin peaks in which English civilization culminated.' Incidentally, the address is a glowing tribute to the genius of Tennyson, 'the grandest and most fully representative figure in all Victorian literature.'"—Lit R

Booklist 19:45 N '22

Lit R p906 Ag 26 '22 220w

"Dean Inge is a most agreeable writer to those who love clearness and the frank expression of a powerful, rather than an original, mind." H. W. M.

+ — Nation and Ath 31:263 My 20 '22 1150w

"It may be questioned whether the Dean's obiter dicta are always as sound as they are brilliant. . . . If, however, we make due allowance for the characteristic foibles of the lecturer, the Dean's brilliant survey of the significant features of the time covered by the reign of Queen Victoria is both illuminating and instructive."

+ — Nature 110:104 J1 22 '22 1100w

"It is an admirable essay in the Higher Neatness. Plain in his meaning, unless we seek for meanings which will help us to pigeonhole him, plain in his mood, save for his deficiency in enjoyment, in his neatness Dean Inge is always perfectly plain." P. L.

New Repub 32:151 O 4 '22 1500w

Reviewed by R. E. Roberts

+ New Statesman 19:439 J1 22 '22 2300w

Pratt p31 autumn '22

"Where he is lacking is never in wit or stringency, but in sympathy. In glorifying the Victorian Age at the expense or our own, he carefully guards himself against any admiration of the literature, science or morals of today. He sits in ashes, a melancholy (but not inconsolable) Jeremiah in the midst of a ruined civilization. The remarks of the Dean on history and literature are always striking and often sound."

+ — Sat R 133:525 My 20 '22 650w

Spec 128:628 My 20 '22 450w

INMAN, SAMUEL GUY. Problems in Pan Americanism. (College of missions lectureship) 415p $2 Doran

327 Latin America. Pan Americanism. United States—Foreign relations 22-6532

The author deals with the whole question of relations, social and political, between the United States and the Latin-American republics. Beginning with a summary of Latin America's balance sheet, both her credit and debit side, he shows how the mutual desires of North and South America, in early days, for solidarity yielded to a suspicion started by the Mexican war, and developed into hatred by the Spanish-American war and the extension of North American control over Caribbean countries. Then he considers the Monroe doctrine, which has been the most powerful unifying force as well as the greatest cause of division and misunderstanding. The significance of the various Pan American conferences is discussed and the radical changes in inter-American friendship brought about by the World war. Finally, he points out a few practical steps that the United States might take to wipe out past mistakes and misunderstandings.

Am Pol Sci R 16:338 My '22 230w

Booklist 18:310 Je '22

J Religion 2:224 Mr '22 220w

"On the whole, it may be said of this book that while it conveys a real sense of the problems of Pan-Americanism, and while its author has very wisely treated these problems as largely psychological, its value is detracted from because the solutions which it offers are too much in the nature of happy verbal gestures and because Dr. Inman permits his reader to wander in the maze of what is really a wealth of information without furnishing him enough of those sign-posts of direction, factually documented arguments."

— + Lit R p602 Ap 22 '22 150w

"He has not only selected his material with admirable acumen, but arranged it in conclusive and convincing form. If in any respect his work is at fault it is in the fact that he emphasizes literary and student factors almost to the exclusion of social and economic considerations."

+ — N Y Times p15 Jl 23 '22 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:206 My '22

R of Rs 65:556 My '22 100w

St Louis 20:120 Je '22

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 7 '22 700w

"A well-informed, sympathetic and independent statement of the traditional and actual relations of United States statecraft to the progress of other American nations. Mr. Inman's contacts in South America are not only with diplomats but with persons of all classes; thus he is able to throw light on a public opinion which is frequently misunderstood here—with most dangerous results for the future."

+ Survey 47:801 F 18 '22 90w

Wis Lib Bul 18:179 Jl '22

IRVINE, ALEXANDER FITZGERALD. Carpenter and His kingdom. 247p $1.50 Scribner [7s 6d Collins]

232 Jesus Christ 22-4679

"The book is not a 'Life of Christ,' for important sections of the Gospels are unnoticed. Nor is it a study of the evangelic records in the light of Christian experience, for we are told but little of their testimony to Christ as the Son of God. We have rather an attempt to set out 'The Carpenter's' estimate of human life and its possibilities. Dr. Irvine shows how the example and teaching of Christ conflicts with the standards of modern religious, social, political, and industrial life, and he has much to say which needs saying in his challenge to the consciences of all professing Christians."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Cleveland p53 Ag '22

New Statesman 19:50 Ap 15 '22 220w

"Mr. Irvine, quite unconsciously, goes to the Gospels to find support for semi-Socialistic doctrines. That is the one fatal defect in what is in many respects a suggestive and valuable interpretation. . . . The world which Mr. Irvine describes is a real world; the people are real people; Jesus is the real teacher; his ideals are presented as real ideals. The book is almost as human as Renan's 'Life of Jesus,' though without Renan's charm of style and poetic and pictorial imagination." Lyman Abbott

— + Outlook 130:701 Ap 26 '22 900w

"A life of Christ written by a man with an amazing life's course that has made him the companion of newsboys, day laborers, miners, soldiers, Oxford and Yale students, publishers, ministers, labor leaders, psychologists and journalists. He has been all these things, and his book reads like the easy, earnest conversation of a man who knows all sorts of people and conditions and understands them."

+ Survey 48:123 Ap 22 '22 60w

"The work has force and insight, and if here and there it seems to be disproportionate and over emphatic, the author deserves our gratitude for his vivid presentation of aspects of Christ's life and teaching which are often ignored to the immense loss of the whole world."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p111 F 16 '22 290w

IRWIN, FLORENCE. Complete auction player. new and enl ed 382:77p $2 Dutton

795 Auction bridge 22-6139

This new and enlarged edition of the book contains a new special chapter, General outline of play, and a complete summary of all the points of the game condensed for quick reference, together with the laws of auction, the etiquette of the game, and the latest decisions.

Reviewed by Whidden Graham

Lit R p670 My 20 '22 240w

Springf'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 130w

IVES, SARAH NOBLE. Dog heroes of many lands. 277p il $1.75 Century

22-18091

Stories of dogs retold to make them interesting for boys and girls. The material for the stories was drawn from many sources, mainly from Our animal friends, Country life in America, and Littell's Living Age, but all are true. Contents: Tige the Goatherd, a dog of the Sierra Nevadas; Zip, a dog of the Northland; Sirrah, a dog of the Ettrick Hills; Dinky, a New Zealand dog; Byron, a dog of Scotland; Bum, a Brooklyn dog; Brakje, a Kafir dog; Ask-Him, an Indian dog; Jerry, a sea-dog of the California coast; Tom, a dog of the Eastern states; Bruce, a fire-dog of New York.

Booklist 19:91 D '22

Cleveland p96 D '22

"There are some beautiful stories, said to be true. And they sound true. The volume is worth buying. Further, this book has been written with some sense of style."

+ Lit R p207 N 11 '22 60w

"They are a noble company, they and their fellows who make up this remarkable collection, and their stories are most fittingly told." M. H. B. Mussey

+ Nation 115:sup620 D 6 '22 160w

Reviewed by Vivian Radcliffe

N Y World p7e O 22 '22 90w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 21 '23 80w

Wis Lib Bul 18:255 N '22

J

JACKSON, CHARLES TENNY. Captain Sazarac. 332p $1.75 Bobbs

22-15472

"Here is a romance of old New Orleans in the year 1821. It has to do with a fantastic plot to rescue Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena.

A ship had been bought and fitted out for the expedition. Dashing young blades, scions of the old French families, were to form the crew of the Seraphine. But when the Seraphine sailed it was upon quite another errand than the rescue of an Emperor. And instead of the perfumed dandies who had enlisted for the expedition, she carried a motley crew of ruffians from the swamps of Barataria. In command was one who chose to call himself Captain Sazarac, but who in other days had been known and feared as Jean Lafitte. Adventures aplenty befell these men, few of whom were ever to return to New Orleans. Amid all the carnage another struggle was taking place, [the struggle of three men for the love of Louise Lestron].—N Y Times

Booklist 19:54 N '22

"Vivid with the light and color of vanished days is this brave tale."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 26 '22 680w

"A first rate novel of romance and adventure."

+ Lit R p34 S 16 '22 190w

N Y Times p27 Ag 20 '22 350w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p5 Ag 20 '22 220w

"For a gen-u-ine pirate captain yarn, the central actor, Sazarac, too often gets forced into action rather than starts it intentionally. The book may be read however, for a picture of old New Orleans life in certain aspects just at the period when steam and commerce on the Mississippi were bringing the transition to the new, and American, social order."

— + Springf'd Republican p7a S 3 '22 240w

Wis Lib Bul 18:254 N '22

JACOBS, LEO. Three types of practical ethical movements of the past half century. 184p $1.50 Macmillan

170.6 Socialism, Christian. Social settlements. Ethical culture movement. Ethics—History 22-12265

The three ethical movements which are here analyzed and compared as to principles and traced as to their historic development are the Christian socialism of Maurice and Kingsley; the social ethical movement founded by Denison and Arnold Toynbee, which expressed itself in the activities of Toynbee Hall; and the Ethical culture movement of Dr Felix Adler. The emphasis of the first movement, the author shows to be religious, that of the second social, and of the last purely ethical.

JAKWAY, BERNARD C. Principles of interior decoration. 289p il $2.50 Macmillan

747 House decoration. Furniture 22-10101

This book, by a university extension lecturer in interior decoration, is an attempt to analyze and explain for the beginner the artistic principles which underlie sound work in the decoration of houses. In separate chapters the author studies line and form, color, texture, contrast, proportion, balance, light and shade, dominant hue, color harmony, ornament and design, and lays down for the housewife, the house furnishing worker and the teacher the principles which the artist applies intuitively. The illustrations are line drawings and simple photographs designed to emphasize the point under consideration.

Booklist 19:10 O '22

"In well-considered form he presents a mass of extremely helpful information, which will be welcomed by architects, teachers of design, as well as house-holders, who are conscious of the rapid recrudescence at the present time of genuine tastes in construction and decoration."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 2 '22 390w

Cleveland p29 D '22

"The style of presentation is simple and direct. Opening the book at almost any page the average woman will unconsciously be drawn into an analysis of her own home surroundings."

F. E. Winchell

+ J Home Econ 15:92 F '23 120w

"Upon the whole, the book is an excellent one, though somewhat dogmatic and professional in tone. Especial mention should be made of the illustrations, which are admirably adapted to the purpose of the author, and which serve most conveniently to elucidate his sometimes rather involved meaning."

+ Lit R p826 JI 22 '22 380w

"Without being especially original, this book presents in simple, orderly, lucid fashion the accepted canons of decorative art in their application to household belongings. It will prove extremely helpful to a host of seekers after light on the problems of home decoration. It is intended for such students rather than for the artist or the professional designer."

+ Outlook 131:314 Je 14 '22 50w

Pratt p21 winter '23

St Louis 20:216 S '22

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 28 '22 650w

JAMES, GEORGE WHARTON. Utah: the land of blossoming valleys. (See America first ser.) 371p il $6 Page

917.92 Utah. Mormons and Mormonism 22-9635

In treating of Utah the author attempts, according to the condensed summary on the title page, to give "the story of its desert wastes, of its huge and fantastic rock formations, and of its fertile gardens in the sheltered valleys; a survey of its rapidly developing industries; an account of the origin, development, and beliefs of the Mormon Church; and chapters on the flora and fauna, and on the scenic wonders." This summary is complete but for references to Utah's educational and literary interests, and her artistic development. The book is profusely illustrated, partly in color, and has a colored insert map of Utah, a bibliography and an index.

Booklist 18:360 JI '22

"Any account of the settlement and development of Utah must present in more or less detail a study of Mormonism. This phase of the story of Utah, Mr. James has examined carefully and with an open mind. And he presents his data with an admirable impartiality as far removed from any taint of 'propaganda' as it is from prejudice. In the chapter, 'Artists and Sculptors of Utah,' is a survey and an appreciation of the work of the Utah-born sculptor, Cyrus Edwin Dallin." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 3 '22 780w

"It is packed with information without being a guide book, very extensive in scope. To our mind, the background of fact and history, which such a book presents is of the highest value for tourists. It enables them to see, whereas a guide book merely tells them what to see."

+ Lit R p764 Je 24 '22 70w

"The matter is set down in a readable fashion, and the large number of excellent illustrations add much to its charm."

+ N Y Times p11 Je 25 '22 100w

Survey 48:413 Je 15 '22 30w

Wis Lib Bul 18:184 JI '22

JAMES, HENRY ROSHER. Our Hellenic heritage. v 1 408p il $2 (6s) Macmillan

938 Greece—History (Eng ed 22-6188)

"A new textbook of Greek history. Opening with general chapters on the gifts of Hellas, the Greeks and their land and their religion, it passes into mythology and the Homeric epos, telling the epic story of the beginning of Greek history in a vivid and dramatic style, followed by an account of the discoveries of Schliemann and others at Mycenae, at Troy and in Crete. The second part deals with the transition from Homeric to historical times in Greece with the rise of constitutional government, carrying the story down to the end of the Persian wars."—Springf'd Republican

"The object of this work is to preserve the content of the influences of Greek literature and Greek life on the formation of mind and character." Throughout the greater part of the volume this is accomplished with interest and ingenuity. However, the method of 'leaving out what is less admirable or not admirable at all,' has led to an excessive admiration for Greek culture that results in an unbalance of critical judgment when this merely pagan civilization is compared with civilization of the Christian Era. It leaves us ashamed of the comparative backwardness of Christianity."

JAMES, HENRY ROSHER—Continued

— + Cath World 114:832 Mr '22 260w

"This excellent little book . . . may well appeal to a general audience outside of any lecture room. Although the author, for intensive treatment, has seized upon two items only in the Greek legacy—and these two disparate in character—he does make clear the content of his subjects. He is not afraid to be detailed. He avoids the snare of pedantic allusiveness. He assumes an audience that does not know and he undertakes to supply the facts. Moreover, he takes pains to supply the necessary background." F. G. Allinson

+ Lit R p450 F 25 '22 1050w

Spring'd Republican p8 F 10 '22 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p692 O 27 '21 800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p598 S 15 '21 80w

JAMESON, MRS ANNIE EDITH [FOSTER]

See Buckrose, J. E., pseud.

JAMESON, STORM. The clash. 296p $1.90 Little [7s 6d Heinemann]

22-16332

This story of an English girl who, while her husband is away at the war, takes an American lover, purports to be a study of temperaments, English and American, and is offered according to its foreword as a help toward a better understanding between the two peoples. Readers will judge whether Jess Cornish, the American flying officer who fascinates Elizabeth Denman by his brutal power and vitality is typical of America and Texas. In spite of his "suppressed tigerish ferocity" and other cave-man qualities he is capable at times of such talk as this: "I am grieved that I have seemed to hold your body above the dear soul of you. . . I will gentle my desire of you." The lovers have not the courage to carry on to the end. Elizabeth breaks faith with her savage lover as with her aristocratic husband. She and Jess part with mutual vituperations and Elizabeth returns to her Jamie.

"In spite of crudities, in spite of exuberance, in spite of its understanding being superficial, and in spite of the useless violence it does to convictions which men and women cherish, 'The Clash' shows that Storm Jameson has a candle burning. Perhaps her next book may be violent enough to extinguish it. Perhaps the violence may drop somewhat away and the flame glow more steadily and quite as brightly." S. L. C.

— + Boston Transcript p5 Ag 26 '22 1250w

"On the whole, the value of the book is that less of a finished and mature work, either as story or as interpretation, than of a brilliant and ardent commentary on many aspects and interests of modern life." H. W. Boynton

+ Ind 109:110 S 2 '22 350w

Lit R p52 S 23 '22 180w

"In spite of its extreme silliness the book is much above the average in vitality. It is a pity that Miss Jameson did not disentangle her central theme from its surrounding absurdities. Where she concentrates for a moment on her heroine, torn between desire for her lover and desire to retain her self-approval, Miss Jameson shows that she possesses the almost incompatible gifts of honesty and tenderness. There is the spark of life in 'The Clash,' and it is sad to see the possibility of a living book lost in formless ugliness."

— + Nation and Ath 31:542 Jl 15 '22 600w

"The people in this book are drawn from melodrama, not from life; their talk has the smart flavor of a Wilde drawing-room. A host of casual characters make their brief, theatrical bows and withdraw. Much in the mass of episode is irrelevant. Consequently the theme occupies a curiously incidental position." R. C.

— New Repub 32:257 N 1 '22 150w

"The Clash suffers from a stridency of mind and imagination which prejudice the reader against recognising that there is some very fine stuff in this novel. Miss Jameson is a person of enormous horsepower, and she occasionally puts this extraordinary force into drawing the conventional figures of the worst sort of fiction. She is a writer without literary taste, and that is a defect which does not correct itself. But it looks in this book as if she was developing a curious emotional clairvoyance which would make her novels worth reading." Rebecca West

— + New Statesman 19:213 My 27 '22 500w

— N Y Times p11 Ag 27 '22 400w

"It would be a strangely unfeeling reviewer of 'The Clash' who would not confess that the book had moved him deeply and stirred him to admiration by numerous points of excellence. 'The Clash' is the best novel I happen to have read since 'Crome Yellow,' with which it has nothing whatever in common except a civilized author." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 5 '22 1100w

"Seldom, if ever before, one thinks, has so much silliness and so much intuition, of a sort, been so brilliantly packed into so short a tale."

— + No Am 216:570 O '22 480w

"Miss Jameson can render the nature of the actions upon each other of men and women with amazing rightness. She is like a volcano in eruption. Her style is molten and heady like her thoughts."

+ — Sat R 133:554 My 27 '22 450w

"The character of the heroine, Elizabeth, is cleverly delineated. When, however, in the section of the story which deals with the War a certain American air captain, Jess Cornish, makes his appearance, the book changes greatly for the worse. The title is appropriate, as ordinary English readers on finishing the story may well feel as if they had been listening to a loud and discordant brass band."

— + Spec 129:54 Jl 8 '22 120w

Spring'd Republican p10 S 14 '22 150w

"There is much clever writing in 'The Clash.' Then again she wastes pages on long descriptions without grace or point. Surprisingly uneven and imperfect as Miss Jameson's work is, it is never dull and always stimulating."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7a O 15 '22 550w

"Neither Elizabeth nor any of the characters are really natural, least of all the men."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p309 My 11 '22 180w

JUSTROW, MORRIS, jr. Song of songs: being a collection of love lyrics of ancient Palestine. 246p il $3 (12s 6d) Lippincott

223.9 Bible—Old Testament—Song of Solomon 22-1386

For descriptive note see Annual for 1921.

"Editorial insertions, needless repetitions and inversions have been removed by a critical study of the text. It is now in a more intelligible form, if indeed it is not in its original form. Professor Justrow takes the reader into his confidence and tries to guide him to an appreciation and a correct estimate of this precious little collection of old Palestinian love lyrics." F. R. Moulton

+ Lit R p110 F 11 '22 500w

"Dr. Justrow's version of the Song of Songs does not compare as poetry with that in our Bibles." R. Le Gallienne

— N Y Times p7 Ap 16 '22 2400w

"Dr. Justrow's rendering of the lyrics in free verse is spirited and attractive."

+ Spec 128:377 Mr 25 '22 100w

"The whole monograph makes a complete and scholarly introduction to the poems themselves, with which the book closes. Who can fail to enjoy these beautiful and age-old lyrics more for the knowledge of their history, their true nature and the effect they have had on people's minds through all these centuries?"

+ Springfd Republican p8 Ap 10 '22 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p15 Ja 5 '22 60w

Wis Lib Bul 18:153 Je '22

JEFFERS, LE ROY. Call of the mountains. 282p il $5 Dodd

917.8 Mountaineering. Rocky mountains. United States—Description and travel 22-18938

Mr Jeffers, who is manager of the book order office of the New York public library and librarian of the American Alpine club, describes in this beautifully illustrated book his mountaineering experiences in the Yellowstone and Glacier national parks, in the Canadian Rockies, Colorado, California, Utah and Arizona, and in some eastern regions noted for their scenery. A closing chapter is devoted to seashore recollections, especially that beautiful section of the Atlantic coast, the north shore of Massachusetts.

Booklist 19:49 N '22

"The book is illustrated with a hundred really fine halftones and a colored frontispiece of Mt. Rainier. These are certain to give joy to readers of whatever class. This otherwise excellent book is lacking in an index, a defect that one would not expect from a trained librarian like the author." W. S. Monroe

+ Bookm 56:496 D '22 680w

"Should take its place among the best American works upon this subject. In addition to the information which it contains upon mountain climbing in Canada and in the United States, it has the higher and better quality of infectious enthusiasm for one of the finest of all sports, one which has always had the strong appeal to men and women of intellect." E. L. Pearson

+ Ind 109:346 D 9 '22 60w

"Mr. Jeffers, in acquiring the experiences which he tells entertainingly, was equipped with the technical facility and daring of the Alpinist and with what is not always combined with the former, a deep capacity for appreciation of the beauty and majesty and of the spiritual effects upon man of the scenery of which he writes. . . The illustrations are notable and include the most striking aspects of the regions described, whether of mountain, canyon, desert, or surf line." R. H. Torrey

+ Lit R p126 O 21 '22 1000w

"Not only instructive for the mountaineer, but full of charm for the traveller who would learn the scenic beauty of these regions."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks 7:48 O '22

"Exceptionally well printed photographs of some of America's most beautiful scenic attractions accompany the interesting textual descriptions of this volume."

Outlook 132:304 O 18 '22 50w

"No one not a mere automaton can fail to inhale something of the spirit of the outdoors from the always interesting narrative and the remarkable illustrations. Mr Jeffers, though presenting his material as an intelligent adventurer rather than as a stylist, has given us a meaty book."

+ Springfd Republican p7a D 17 '22 1150w

Wis Lib Bul 18:253 N '22

JEFFERY, JEFFERY E. Escape. 325p $2 Seltzer [7s 6d Parsons]

22-21567

"Daughter of a veterinary surgeon who was fond of talking of the 'moral value of revolt,' and widow at 30 of a bank manager resident at Ealing, Mrs. Emily Mepsted wanted freedom, to live as she chose, to do as she chose, to bring up her child as she chose.' She had sought it unsuccessfully in marriage; she sought it again through affluence, becoming a partner in a business which prospered in a degree possibly beyond either her or its merits; and after a commonplace intrigue with a married man, she found it on her own testimony, in marrying a man she really loved."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Here we have a cover which far outdistances the book it encloses. We are introduced in the first pages of the story to the family of Mr. Sincock, cleverly and distinctly characterized for us by Mr. Jeffery's satiric pen. He does far more as the story moves forward; but the best writing in the book lies in those first two chapters. Some paragraphs are as tenderly, softly human as Dickens himself at his rare moments of sentimental restraint."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 28 '22 450w

"Deceptive both in its title, which indicates the theme of the book, and in manner. The first thirty pages promise well; but gradually it becomes evident that the easy reading offered is due simply to the absence of any turn of phrase one might care to pause over; and the pleasurable reticence of the narrative loses itself in repetitions."

+ Dial 73:682 D '22 120w

"A very fine novel, both from the craftsman's standpoint of construction, good character-drawing, apposite, meaty dialog, and also in the clever way he has incorporated discussions of the most compelling political and social problems which our post bellum world is endeavoring to solve. Even those who have little interest in these problems will not find 'Escape' unduly didactic." Drake de Kay

+ Int Bk R p33 D '22 650w

"A direct narrative, containing some excellent bits of character study, a pleasant style, and an interesting plot. But it does not do what it started out to do."

+ Lit R p229 N 18 '22 360w

New Statesman 19:424 J1 15 '22 110w

"One puts the book down with a keen sense of disappointment. In the first place it possesses so many marks of sound value, a good, easily flowing prose style, an adept hand at characterization, an engaging frankness and perception of modern ethical values. Really, more was expected from Mr. Jeffery than this begging of the question and treacly finish. The author is apparently a young man who knows life. He should put his knowledge to better use."

+ N Y Times p12 O 22 '22 900w

Reviewed by E. W. Osborn

N Y World p7e O 22 '22 250w

"Sensibly designed, and carried out without ostentation. It is obviously the product of a sympathetic and generous mind." Gerald Gould

Sat R 134:220 Ag 5 '22 420w

Spec 129:184 Ag 5 '22 80w

"Emily is a clever study, and her creator seasons her story with many turns of dry satirical phrase; but the reader is left with the feeling, as perhaps he is intended to be left, that her ambition and its fulfillment are equally inchoate and ineffective."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p414 Je 22 '22 100w

"The best chapters of the book, however, are certainly the business ones. Mr. Jeffery has taken the trouble to think out the machinery of such an agency as the L. M. C. A., and explains its success. We are indeed almost tempted to wish that the agency and not a man had been made the apex of the triangle. But it is unfair to blame an author for not doing a thing he never tried to do, especially when he has produced so sound a novel as 'Escape.' We can, however, express the hope, and also the belief, that one day Mr. Jeffery will begin to write the English novels of 'big business' which we have been without too long."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p143 J1 6 '22 640w

JENKINS, BURRIS ATKINS. The Bracegirdle. 311p il $2 (7s 6d) Lippincott

22-6026

This tale told by Richard Lovell of Staffordshire carries us back to the London of King William of Orange. The heroine, Anne Bracegirdle, is the idol of the London stage and her hand is sought by countless lovers, but Richard finally wins his reward after daring cavalier feats in which Anne's happiness is his only thought. The intrigues and plots so common to the times in which even the king is involved add interest to the book as do the familiar figures of Dryden, Congreve, and Lord Halifax.

"As a 'movie' its merits would bring instant reward. There is a commonplace quality in it. All virtues are as exaggerated as are the vices. The story is far too long. It is a pity to admit this. For Mr. Jenkins has worked faithfully to make the days of William of Orange interesting."

— + Boston Transcript p4 Mr 29 '22 160w

"The author has endeavored to reproduce faithfully the atmosphere and spirit of the day, and succeeds in this. There are some inconsistencies—but what's a romance without an inconsistency?"

+ — Lit R p514 Mr 18 '22 100w

"He has fashioned a merely pretty story where he might have made a brilliant one. 'The Bracegirdle' does not glow; neither does it sparkle. And in spite of bits of carefully elaborated local color and seventeenth century conversation, it fails in atmosphere."

— + N Y Times p26 Je 25 '22 580w

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 30 '22 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p382 Je 8 '22 40w

JENKINS, CHARLES CHRISTOPHER. Timber 2 pirate. 318p $1.75 Doran

22-19604

The scene is laid in the great northwest of Canada where the North Star towing and contracting company holds complete sway. The story involves a number of double-crossings and dual personalities, with the inevitable spice of romance. Acey Smith's mastery and his mysterious fight with the rival lumber company is sorely perplexing to Josephine Stone who goes thru many exciting and seemingly inexplicable experiences. She cannot tell whether Smith is angel or devil, enemy or friend, until events finally disclose the identity of J. C. X. and the part played by Smith in the whole game of the North Star's fight for its life.

"Mr. Jenkins knows well his great Northwest in the days of big timber. The tale is full of thrilling incidents, all of which ring true—and is well written."

+ Lit R p162 O 28 '22 70w

"Mr. Jenkins handles his theme in a vigorous manner and manages to inject a deal of thrill into it, although it should be pointed out that much better novels of the Great Northwest have been written."

+ — N Y Times sec7:6 O 8 '22 130w

JENKS, JEREMIAH WHIPPLE, and SMITH, RUFUS DANIEL. We and our government. (Am. viewpoint ser.) 223p il $1.50 Boni & Liveright

342.73 United States—Politics and government 22-23367

The aim of this book by two New York University professors is to explain simply and clearly what our government is—its necessity, its purpose, its methods, its powers, its limitations, its subdivisions. The text of the book is brief, but the frequent captions and more than 500 illustrations are in themselves a simplified and concise text which emphasize the important points in each chapter in the same way that a moving picture develops its theme. The book is especially adapted to young people and to readers whose English is limited. Most of the illustrations are from photographs secured from the Federal government and from the boards and departments of New York city.

"No more useful book could be found for continuation and evening classes in citizenship among those whose knowledge of the English language is somewhat limited, and it should also be helpful in the regular elementary and secondary schools as supplementary to a more detailed text."

+ Am Pol Sci R 16:723 N '22 120w

Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 190w

"The book will catch the attention and stimulate the interest of the pupil far more readily than the unattractive pages of the ordinary book. The vivid reactions which are aroused, not only by the illustrations, but also by the frequent headlines and inserts, would seem to have special value in such a field as civics. Excellent from the standpoint of both clearness and validity." G. T. B.

+ EI School J 23:232 N '22 350w

"It is an excellent book for the education of the foreign-born in the political implications and responsibilities of citizenship. It is equally good for young people's reading whether in connection with class work or not. The normal boy should fairly eat it up. For the average citizen it will be at once interesting to read and a useful book to have within easy reach on the shelves." J. G. de R. H.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p6 N 19 '22 400w

Lit R p164 O 28 '22 60w

"In all this exposition Professor Jenks manages skillfully not to take sides upon any of the issues of the moment. He does not 'write down,' he writes broad. He reveals an unusual insight into the minds of those whom he is trying to instruct. He is never condescending, never patronizing, never toplofty, never polysyllabic. As a result he has produced a book which could be read with advantage by not a few native sons of native parents." Brander Matthews

+ N Y Times p4 Je 4 '22 1850w

R of Rs 67:221 F '23 40w

Reviewed by W. G. Kimmel
School R 31:69 Ja '23 520w

Survey 49:sup203 N 1 '22 130w

Wis Lib Bul 18:270 D '22

JEPSON, SELWYN. Qualified adventurer. 333p $1.75 Harcourt [8s 6d Hutchinson]

22-8238

The hero, Peter Duff, as sub-editor of the Dalkeith House "Adventure novels," four of which he prepared each month for British youth, was an expert in adventure and "could tell you what should happen at any stage of any adventure you cared to take." He was therefore qualified for the adventures which befell when fate placed him on board a ship bound for China, with a commission to search for the buried treasure of jade stolen from the palace of the Manchus during the time of the Boxer rebellion. He was plunged at once into a startling variety of adventures, the rescues of the heroine being alone sufficient to keep him busy.

Booklist 19:159 F '23

"A very readable and entertaining story. [It gives] the reader a number of thrills, some laughs, and any quantity of subtle humor and display of keen wit."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '22 300w

"The book has a burlesque flavor that tickles the reader's palate and rescues the novel from the category of a mere 'thriller.' The chief fault one detects is that the vein of lightness and humor is not thoroughgoing enough; that the author has barely tapped the satirical possibilities of his story, and has apparently not perceived how delicious the tale might be if Peter Duff and his adventures were made to look a trifle more ridiculous. Even as it is, however, the book is highly entertaining and gains considerably in interest because not written with entire seriousness."

+ — Lit R p875 Ag 12 '22 310w

"It has all the excellent qualities of a good, swinging, rollicking tale of high spirits in search of lost treasure and, in addition, its touch of travesty and whimsicality inspires much smiling, no matter how absorbed the reader may be in the unfolding of its plot and its incident."

+ — N Y Times p18 Je 25 '22 450w

"A very successful story. It is well put together, shows some original observation and a light touch."

+ Sat R 132:622 N 26 '21 110w

"While the preparations are given with great minuteness, the crisis of the adventure is not a sufficiently important climax for the scenes that lead up to it."

+ — Spec 128:56 Ja 14 '22 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p717 N 3 '21 160w

Wis Lib Bul 18:218 O '22

JERSEY, MARGARET ELIZABETH (LEIGH)
CHILD-VILLIERS, countess of. Fifty-one years of Victorian life. 392p il $7 Dutton [18s Murray]

E or 92

The writer of these memoirs was an early Victorian, born in 1849. A daughter of Lord Leigh and the wife of Lord Jersey, she has had a full part in the life of her times, acquaintance with the leading figures of her day, and travel experiences in many lands. Her reminiscences close with the death of Queen Victoria.

Outlook 133:233 Ja 31 '23 30w

"Her interest in the sayings and doings of others has left no space in her pages for her own achievements. Nevertheless, quite unconsciously, the writer's strong personality is reflected in the book, a book abounding in experiences, rich in a portrait gallery of worthies, viewed, not infrequently, from unfamiliar angles, most notable perhaps—to use a modern phrase—for its 'thinking to scale,' and a thinking always shot with humour."

+ Spec 129:sup796 D 2 '22 1300w

"The Dowager Countess of Jersey practically confines her reminiscences to the period implied in her title, and the tranquil flow of her narrative and her apparently instinctive avoidance of all that is extravagant in diction or indiscreet in disclosure suggest the ordered Victorian society and her own assured position therein."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p758 N 23 '22 1050w

JESPERSEN, OTTO. Language; its nature, development and origin. 448p $4 Holt [18s Allen & U.]

410 Language (Eng ed 22-5091)

"The distinctive feature of the science of language as conceived nowadays is its historical character; a language or a word is no longer taken as something given once for all, but as a result of previous development and at the same time as the starting-point for subsequent development." (Preface) The first part of the book is devoted to the history of the science as such and gives accounts of the work of the most prominent researchers in that field. Book II gives the author's own observations on the way a child learns his mother-tongue and Book III the various causes operating to modify and change a language. Book IV is a scientific exposition of the origin and development of language. Index.

Bookm 56:356 N '22 120w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus

Freeman 6:141 O 18 '22 1200w

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin

Nation 114:47 Jl 12 '22 1100w

"Prof. Jespersen of Copenhagen, is one of the most accomplished of living experts in linguistics, and he writes throughout with a thorough knowledge of our language, in a style that everybody can understand. The book is refreshing in its independence and challenging of the dogmas of authorities."

+ New Statesman 18:652 Mr 11 '22 1200w

"Professor Jespersen's command of our energetic speech is remarkable; and it is only infrequently that we can catch him in a failure to be idiomatic. His style is straightforward and almost aggressively simple. This makes his book easy reading for those who are not masters of the technicalities of linguistics. And his simplicity is perhaps only another manifestation of his dominating characteristic—his abiding common sense." Brander Matthews

+ N Y Times p2 Jl 9 '22 1450w

"Dr. Otto Jespersen is one of the most learned linguists whom the nineteenth century produced, and what he has to say on the science of language must be received with great respect. The influence of children on the development of a national language is a subject peculiarly attractive to Dr. Jespersen, who devotes a large part of his book to a study of the way in which a child learns his mother-tongue."

+ Sat R 133:120 F 4 '22 700w

"Chief among Professor Jespersen's many qualities, we would place, not his erudition, vast as it is, but the lively imagination with which he plays upon the most unpromising of subjects and extracts from it its maximum of human interest. Valuable as his work is for the material it contains, it is so still more for its rich suggestiveness and the belief with which it is inspired that language, like any other human faculty, is a hardly conscious grouping towards a greater mastery."

Spec 128:340 Mr 18 '22 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p30 Ja 12 '22 120w

JEWELL, EDWARD ALDEN. Moth decides. 283p $2.50 Knopf

22-19484

"The long-drawn hesitations of the moth, Louise Needham, between various equally nice young men lingers as an inescapable reminder of the typical Trollope heroine. The scene of the moth's decision lies in and about a northern Michigan summer resort. Jilted in one engagement, Louise enters upon another with a serious young man come all the way from distant Arizona to claim his betrothed. With perverse indecision Louise cools to his modest ardor, envying her younger sister Hilda, who is now enjoying a legacy in the person of Leslie, a nice young man with lots of nonsense about him. In that darkest hour before dawn Louise comes to perceive the serious young man from Arizona as her true love, and at the last confesses that she doesn't want to belong to any one else." —N Y Tribune

"The story is a cross between 'Alice Adams' and 'This Side of Paradise,' with a dash of Stephen Benet—all diluted down to 4½ per cent."

— Boston Transcript p6 O 25 '22 360w

— Dial 74:103 Ja '23 70w

"He sees life whole, presenting his characters in three dimensions, but he sees it most jerkily. He sees around his characters, and he sees through them—so does the reader. The architecture of the novel is like that of the country house in which much of the story takes place—rambling, with additions patched on and a hole in the roof."

— Lit R p274 D 2 '22 300w

"They are real people, and their problems are such as thousands of others are facing every day."

+ N Y Times sec7:6 O 8 '22 420w

Reviewed by A. D. Douglas

N Y Tribune p9 O 29 '22 720w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 17 '22 180w

Wis Lib Bul 18:274 D '22

JEWELL, EDWARD ALDEN. White Kami.
326p $2.50 Knopf

22-7436

The heroine of the novel is a young girl of humble origin who pines for adventure and Prince Charming, while bored to tears with her prosaic clerk lover. The hero, Jerome Stewart, is this same prosaic young man, without ambition enough to advance in his clerkship. Fate so interferes with these young lives that Stella presently finds herself as Prince Charming's wife, living her honeymoon on a South Sea island, with her husband as superintendent of an opium plantation—the White Kami of the natives. Jerome Stewart, thanks to an accidental champagne supper, wakes up one morning in the cabin of a schooner dedicated to the uses of an itinerant opera troupe and bound for Honolulu. The adventurous life which he now follows makes Jerome over into a new man and when, over a year later, another accident lands him on Stella's island he is just in time to rescue her from extreme danger and despair and to witness her husband's death. Two wiser young people with a better sense of values return to San Francisco.

Booklist 18:367 J1 '22

"The whole novel has flavor, charm, and qualities of unusual distinction. The character drawing is good. We are swept so far from reality that we close the story with very genuine regret."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 26 '22 310w

"There is a prodigality of facile writing in the book; rich, exotic passages of description—and moments enough where one halts out of pure enjoyment. Mr. Jewell's sense of humor may, as a rule, be relied upon; it is not, however, held in such firm rein here. 'The White Kami' does not entertain so smoothly and consistently as did 'The Charmed Circle.' Mr. Jewell pursues, but fails to capture; promises but fails to fulfil."

+ Lit R p658 My 13 '22 320w

"The movement of the book has the exhilaration of a gallop; one wonders at the contrasted virility and value of Mr. Jewell's work." L. T. N.

+ New Repub 31:312 Ag 9 '22 250w

"The story is violent and melodramatic, but this is somewhat concealed by the really distinguished style which the author commands."

+ N Y Times p22 My 7 '22 220w

"Mr. Jewell brightens many an obvious situation by a whimsical point of view that merges, at times, into delicious satire. A fresh and vivid style distinguishes material that might better be left to the handling of less competent writers. It is in the delineation of character that the author does his best work. Here his touch is unerring." H. I. Young

+ N Y Tribune p7 My 7 '22 550w

"The story has ease of style which gives attraction to even the most repulsive chapters."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a S 3 '22 200w

JOHNSON, JULIA E., comp. Selected articles on social insurance. (Handbook ser.) 381p $2.40 Wilson, H. W.

331.25 Insurance, Social 22-18934

"The Handbook on Social Insurance, in keeping with the plan of the series, aims to present impartially general information and leading arguments pro and con on this important social question. In addition to an introduction and the material on the general subject, historical and otherwise, reprints are included on Workmen's Compensation, Health, Maternity, Old Age, and Invalidity Insurance, Benefits to Widows and Orphans, Mothers' Pensions, and Soldiers' and Sailors' Insurance; the aspects of compulsory and state insurance are also covered. A large selected, classified, and partly annotated bibliography is also given."—Explanatory note

Am Pol Sci R 12:673 D '22 40w

Booklist 19:69 D '22

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:547 D '22

Pratt p12 winter '23

R of Rs 66:561 N '22 110w

St Louis 20:295 D '22

"The reference material alone would make this book of value to all who want to inform themselves on the subjects under discussion. The case for and against each proposed form of insurance is given fairly and authoritatively."

+ Survey 49:sup204 N 1 '22 100w

Wis Lib Bul 18:250 N '22

JOHNSON, CLIFTON, ed. John Burroughs talks. 358p il $4 Houghton

B or 92 Burroughs, John 22-18205

Clifton Johnson made many visits to John Burroughs and each time wrote out a full report of his conversation from notes taken on the spot. The book is thus a faithful report of Burroughs's unconventional talk, arranged by the recorder according to topic and in its natural sequence. Much of his talk was reminiscent and thus, as here pieced together, it sketches in a somewhat desultory way his life story. He also talked freely of his friends and the reader is given keen appraisals of Whitman, Edison, Ford, Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson. Burroughs's interests as a naturalist stand out, of course, thruout the book, and his comments often run into the realms of politics, religion, philosophy, science and literature.

Booklist 19:50 N '22

"The author does not show any nice sense of discrimination; he revels in trivialities and commonplaces, and mixes them at random with an occasional weighty utterance. The book gives what some might term an 'intimate picture' of the life of John Burroughs; yet one cannot but feel that there is something at once inane and futile about the type of book, now unfortunately too common, which holds an autopsy over the undistinguished daily routine of the life of some distinguished person."

+ Bookm 56:517 D '22 140w

"An excellent example of the tendency to weave into book-form the insignificant details of the life of a man whose real work is significant. But it shows little if anything of the inner life of the man and casts no new light upon his theories or philosophy."

+ Dial 73:683 D '22 80w

"This new Burroughs book is quite unique and it is distinctly worth while. Interesting to the general reader, it will have its chief appeal naturally to the numerous friends and admirers of John Burroughs. In it they will see him from a different angle, and will learn much of him that doubtless they never knew before. Many, too, will probably find in Burroughs a new interest. Throughout one is struck by the essential simplicity of the man, his utter frankness, and his shrewd common sense." J. G. de R. H.

+ Greensboro (N.C.) Daily News p8 O 8 '22 900w

"The range of topics is wide, and Mr. Johnson has arranged the talks so that all that Burroughs said to him on any given subject is recorded as if it had been said at one time, although that was not actually the case. This arrangement makes the talks easier to follow than if they had been given verbatim."

+ N Y Times p6 O 1 '22 1500w

"Will be a valuable addition to the Burroughs shelf. May be commended with confidence to the many readers of the great naturalist."

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 15 '22 720w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:595 D '22

"These conversations with John Burroughs, recorded during more than a quarter of a century by Mr. Johnson, are more frank in their comment on contemporary personalities than any of the published works of Burroughs himself. Best of all, however, are the reminiscences of Burroughs' early life."

+ R of Rs 66:560 N '22 110w

St Louis 20:303 D '22

"An unusually 'convincing' volume—a biography of Boswellian method and thoroughly modern manner. The proof of its interest is the fact that he does not have to be especially interested in Burroughs beforehand to enjoy it."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 29 '22 250w
Wis Lib Bul 18:274 D '22

JOHNSON, GAYLORD. Sky movies. 170p il $1.50 Macmillan
523 Astronomy 22-14910

The book is a continuation of the author's "The Star People" and describes a series of curious contrivances by which Peter, Betty and Paul learn all about the phases of the moon. The aid of Puck and a fairy ring are called in and fact and fancy intermingle pleasantly to make the acquiring of knowledge interesting to the young.

"The author brings in assistance from the fairy world also, which, to our thinking, complicates things and makes them more difficult for the child mind to follow. However, even the adult mind, somewhat rusty, perhaps, on the relations to each other of sun, moon and earth, is quickened in reading 'Sky Movies' to the children."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 O 4 '22 160w

"The information conveyed is soundly scientific and deeply interesting, the manner, for the most part, adapted to the understanding and enjoyment of children. At times, however, the language is too grown-up, and the reviewer questions whether, at other times, the effort to meet the child mind is not overstrained."

+ — Cath World 116:121 O '22 250w

"Deals with réal astronomic facts and theories, many of which are illustrated in novel and ingenious ways." C. S. Brainin

+ Lit R p202 N 11 '22 70w

Springf'd Republican p12 D 12 '22 120w

JOHNSON, JAMES WELDON, ed. Book of American Negro poetry. 217p $2.25 Harcourt
811.08 Negro poetry 22-5816

This anthology of contemporary Negro poetry comes introduced by an essay by the compiler on the Negro's creative genius, in which the Negro's capacity for making original contributions to American art and literature is set forth. A historical survey of the achievements of Negro poets in the past—beginning as far back as 1750—precedes an appreciation of the poets represented in this anthology. Among these last are: Paul Laurence Dunbar, James Edwin Campbell, James D. Corrothers, William Stanley Braithwaite, James Weldon Johnson, Georgia Douglas Johnson, Claude McKay, Joseph S. Cotter, Jr. and Anne Spencer.

"Aside from the excellence of much of the verse, the most striking thing, even to the casual reader, is the versatility of these writers." W. F. White

+ Bookm 55:530 J1 '22 440w

"A unique collection of literature among the many anthologies that have been issued. Its contents show a performance of a high order of excellence and give a prophecy of larger things in literature from the Negro of America as he gets greater opportunity to exercise what the author calls in his admirable introduction, the 'transfusive quality' of his genius." G. E. H.

+ Com on Church & Soc Ser. Inf ser p10 J1 '22 240w

Dial 73:236 Ag '22 70w

"Interesting and valuable as the collection is, the actual poetical value of its contents is rather disappointing. It will indeed be interesting to compare this first anthology in its field with another made, say, ten years from now." Arthur Guiterman

+ — Ind 108:396 Ap 22 '22 220w

"The critical attitude is arresting, and founded on rock. The historical matter is fresh, interesting, persuasive." Clement Wood

Lit R p716 Je 10 '22 720w

"Mr. Johnson's book has its chief value—and this is said in no disparagement of the work of the poets he notes—in an admirable and well-written preface of some forty pages on The Creative Genius of the American Negro. In this he establishes in a manner that has not been done before the rightful place which the Negro occupies in American literature, and his contributions in folk-songs, ragtime, and folk-dances." W. F. White

+ Nation 114:694 Je 7 '22 700w

Reviewed by Robert Littell

New Repub 31:196 J1 12 '22 1300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 27:291 Je '22

St Louis 20:125 Je '22

"Few if any anthologies of modern American verse excel the one before us in the qualities that make for permanent value. Not everything in Mr. Johnson's collection is of equal merit; but no apology is needed on the ground of the social and educational status of the poets included in recommending this as a noteworthy volume. The one uniting character of these poems is their sincerity and, if one may say so, their inevitability. Dilettantism has no place in them; nor erudite search for the methods of old masters nor conscious search for eccentricity." B. L.

+ Survey 48:89 Ap 15 '22 520w

Wis Lib Bul 18:182 J1 '22

JOHNSON, MARTIN ELMER. Cannibal-land; adventures with a camera in the New Hebrides. 191p il $3 Houghton

919.34 New Hebrides 22-13553

This is the story of the adventures of the author and his wife on the cannibal island of Malekula, one of the New Hebrides, where they went to make a picture record of the natives and their customs. Great risks were run to secure the pictures and the twenty-five photographs here reproduced, chosen among the many both still and moving pictures secured, seem worth the risks encountered. The narrative includes an account of an exhibition of moving pictures to the cannibals themselves, a description of the dance of the painted savages, and of the art of head-curing.

Bookm 56:231 O '22 130w

"The narrative, plainly written, with no attempt at rhetorical effect, is followed by the reader often with exciting interest. Mr. Johnson, indeed, it is quite evident, is more familiar with the use of a camera than of a pen. Nevertheless, his descriptions of the hideous savages, and of the strange and remarkable occurrences which he and his wife encountered, are exciting and thrilling in the extreme." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '22 780w

Cleveland p94 D '22

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson

Ind 109:22 J1 22 '22 140w

"A very amusing and interesting book. He is neither sentimental about [the savages] nor foolishly censorious; at times he cannot help feeling most friendly towards them. His book is well worth reading."

+ New Statesman 20:22 O 7 '22 300w

"He is not primarily a writer, and perhaps this very fact has rendered the book more graphic. . . . The simplicity of Mr. Johnson's narrative is part of its charm; he does not attempt to be authoritative in an ethnological sense. He merely describes what he sees and he does it with an innate sense of values that, perhaps, reveals the showman but does not destroy the charm."

+ N Y Times p26 D 24 '22 1700w

Outlook 131:465 Je 12 '22 80w

R of Rs 66:418 O '22 60w

Sat R 134:548 O 14 '22 130w

"Both letterpress and pictures are intensely vivid, and some of the descriptions both of scenery and adventure are breathless in their interest."

Spec 129:sup674 N 11 '22 850w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p587 S 14 '22 280w

JOHNSON, OWEN MCMAHON. Skippy Bedelle, his sentimental progress from the urchin to the complete man of the world. 316p il $1.75 Little

22-20277

"Mr. Johnson returns to the scene of his early triumphs in 'Skippy Bedelle,' for it is at Lawrenceville, scene of the 'Varmint's' sufferings and joys that the many stirring incidents of the book take place. 'Skippy' and his roommate, 'Snorky,' survive many strange inventions, the fruit of the fertile imagination of Mr. Johnson's youthful hero; they fall in love, they wear their first dress suits, they quarrel and make up, and go through various other unfailingly amusing vicissitudes. Mr. Johnson rivals Booth Tarkington at his best in some passages of 'Skippy's' history, and the book belongs pretty close to 'Seventeen' on anybody's shelves."—Lit R

Booklist 19:86 D '22

"The language in which the tale is told and the style of its telling bear the imprint of good thought and finished workmanship. The story of Skippy Bedelle is one with which man or woman, boy or girl can spend a most delightful hour—to be followed by many smiling memories of boys we've known, giving place to surprising realizations that we have known them only in this book by Owen Johnson." L. H. G.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 4 '22 650w

"The book is rich in that spontaneous humor which made the author's earlier stories of school-boy life so delightful."

+ Int Bk R p59 Ja '23 420w

"It is a thoroughly amusing collection of stories, altogether of the sort to be classified as 'easy reading,' but no less grin-begetting because of that. If the fun in it is a bit boisterous at times, it never loses touch with reality."

+ Lit R p260 D 2 '22 300w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Lit R p308 D 9 '22 50w

"Although the boys who are its chief actors are all in their middle teens, the book is very much a story for adults. It would probably, indeed, grieve the heart of youth and cause the youthful nose to sniff scornfully, indignantly. And so this is a book particularly for men who can remember and laugh at the ridiculous poses and the absurd notions in which they indulged in their middle teens. Any one else with a sense of humor will find it entertaining also, for Mr. Johnson has made it quite as deliciously funny as were his previous Lawrenceville tales."

+ N Y Times p14 N 19 '22 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 28:5 Ja '23

Wis Lib Bul 19:25 Ja '23

JOHNSTON, SIR HARRY HAMILTON. Veneerings. 437p $2 Macmillan [8s 6d Chatto & W.]

22-5602

Once more the author takes certain Dickens characters, this time from "Our mutual friend" and continues their stories. Tho he has given his characters Dickens names, there is little else to connect them with Dickens. The Hamilton Veneerings and the John Harmons figure, with their respective children, Mr and Mrs Lammle, the Podsnaps, the Wrayburns and others. At the opening of the story in the 'sixties Alfred and Sophronia Lammle are continuing their career of shady finance in Paris, and John Harmon is entering into the business of manufacturing drugs on a large scale. The time covered is to the beginning of this century and the scenes are laid in many places—London, Paris, South Africa and the New York of 1885. The principal character is Hamilton Veneering's son Mervyn who marries John Harmon's daughter Hetty, and then, grief-stricken by her early death, finds consolation in her sister Elizabeth but is for some time prevented from marrying her by the operation of the deceased wife's sister law. The book closes with the repeal of this act.

Booklist 18:331 Je '22

Cleveland p34 My '22

Freeman 5:359 Je 21 '22 70w

"Not a novel to be read as a duty, but a treat to be anticipated and enjoyed." E. L. Pearson
+ Ind 108:311 Mr 25 '22 100w

"The people are not Dickens's people, and the action is the extreme of jogtrot. One must be an ardent and a patient explorer into the world of yesterday to read the book, through without skipping, or at least yawning." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 108:589 Jl 8 '22 620w

Lit D p69 My 13 '22 520w

"It is not in the least surprising that Sir Harry Johnston has been unable to invest his Veneerings and his Harmons with the same interest that he won for his Gay-Dombey family and their circle. It was the sweep and comprehensiveness of the picture that made the fascination of 'The Gay-Dombey.' In the present volume, in place of this comprehensive picture, we have detailed descriptions of the production and value of vegetable drugs, of the benefits to the world of antiseptic measures, and of the history of the deceased wife's sister act. The wonder is that the book is readable at all. That it is fairly readable is a tribute to the conspicuous gifts of style and characterization of Sir Harry Johnston." Stanley Went

+ — Lit R p803 Jl 15 '22 1000w

New Repub 31:141 Je 28 '22 140w

"Sir Harry Johnston has ticketed certain of his puppets Sophronia Lammle and Bella Wilfer, for instance; but apart from their names it would be impossible to recognize in them the two women Charles Dickens created. What there is of value in this volume has nothing whatever to do with any author save only Sir Harry Johnston himself."

— N Y Times p11 Ap 2 '22 650w

"Those who manage to put Dickens out of their heads will find this a clever and entertaining story, or less a story, let it be said, than a panorama of the last half of the nineteenth century. The author is distinguished for his achievements in many different fields; and his knowledge, versatility and varied experiences make 'The Veneerings' as attractive as a very good book of memoirs, although it is too amorphous and discursive to be a good work of art."

+ — Sat R 133:445 Ap 29 '22 430w

Spec 128:598 My 13 '22 80w

Reviewed by G. B. Dutton

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 2 '22 720w

"He carries with him a glamour to which he has no strict right. Yet there are passages in this diffuse and loosely-knit, but never tedious, never commonplace, novel that need no borrowed magic."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p259 Ap 20 '22 500w

Wis Lib Bul 18:185 Jl '22

JOHNSTON, MARY. 1492. 315p $2.50 Little

22-22437

"Hardly a novel. A careful sketch of the romantic days of discovery and exploration, and of the towering figure of Christopher Columbus. The story follows history closely from the first voyage ('til the admiral's death on Ascension Day. We see Columbus thru the eyes of one Jayme de Marchena (invented to tell the tale). Having fallen under the suspicion of the Spanish inquisition, Jayme sails under the name of Juan Lepe, and as some of the crew falls ill, his knowledge of medicine makes him 'Doctor' and 'Senor.' Thru Juan Lepe's eyes, Columbus moves before us, a living, imprisoned figure, splendid and generous in triumph, firm and high-hearted in adversity, a man of visions, a dreamer of dreams, unsuspicious, childlike, wholly noble."—Cleveland

"One cannot put one's finger upon a single passage that is out of drawing, on a single line that shows shiftiness or indifference. Miss Johnston writes as well as ever and yet she does not hold her readers as she did in bygone days. She still has her artistry of expression, but she has become timid in her enthusiasms." S. L. C.
+ — Boston Transcript p7 N 15 '22 1000w

Cleveland p91 D '22

"She has achieved the feat of breathing into the old tale a new breath of life. . . '1492' is a notable achievement in its dignity, sincerity, reality and richness. It is like an old manuscript which makes another age come close to us, glowing and bright. But the actuality of Columbus in the story is the chief accomplishment. He lives in it, to be admired and loved."

E. S. Taber
+ Int Bk R p57 Ja '23 800w

"'1492' is of those artistic interpretations of a national hero which posterity accepts as final."

J. J. Smertenko
+ Lit R p347 D 30 '22 1500w

"All this long and truly marvelous story is related in a style quaint, colorful, dignified as befits the supposed narrator, a gentleman of Spain. . . On her portrait of Christophorus Columbus, wanderer, Miss Johnston has lavished all the resources of her art." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p8 N 12 '22 950w

"The best novel she has ever written. . . This is a work of imagination, which is to say, it is touched with genius. Not that it is by any means flawless. On the contrary, it is full of faults, both of form and of style. It is sometimes heavy, sometimes ragged; generally shapeless. It moves to a staccato measure which at times becomes monotonous. But it is right in essence, in intention, in feeling; it has a vitality of its own. It shows you a living man." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 12 '22 1050w

"This book has in it such historical values, such colorful description, such literary charm, as to gain for it a deserved popularity. It is a useful contribution to history by its popularization of that eventful story of great adventure."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 14 '23 330w
Wis Lib Bul 19:25 Ja '23

JOHNSTON, MARY. Silver cross. 289p $2 Little 22-4980

"In 'Silver Cross' Mary Johnston swings back to pure romance and experiments with a purposely mannered style. She essays a painting of scenes from the sixteenth century and the telling in almost telegraphic phrase of a highly colored story that would be in many points suited to the swing and beat of an old ballad. The story is the story of rival abbeyes. Saint Leofric's had gained great fame for miracles. Silver Cross was losing place and attempted to regain it through the machinations of a venal abbot and a casuistic prior. In all this Morgen Fay, who 'had a house by the river and a fair small garden,' is dramatically involved."

—Lit R

Booklist 18:331 Je '22

"For the telling Miss Johnston has lapsed into an highly spasmodic prose, intensely modern, intensely futuristic. More than once it clutters and clogs the tale, more than once whole chapters of rhapsody lend nothing at all to progress or plot, the action is impeded time and again. . . So much of scraggly rhapsodic prose might well ruin many a tale, but despite it, 'Silver Cross' is still worth the reading."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 8 '22 250w
Cleveland p50 Ag '22

"The substance of this story is highly artificial, a romantic fable of medieval chicanery and superstition. It is not the kind of story to support a patent artificiality of style. The necessary artifice must conceal itself in apparent artlessness the task for a Hewlett; Miss Johnston is never quite equal to it." H. W. Boynton

— Ind 108:354 Ap 8 '22 330w

"The breath of true romance is in this book, and it should be a great while before Mary Johnston's hand falls of its cunning. Such work as 'Silver Cross' loses, of course, by comparison with the best historical romances, such as Hewlett, or even with writing like the late Bernard Capes's 'A Jay of Italy.' And it ranks below some of its own author's other work in moment. But its method is, in the main, engaging; its impressionism revivifies a type of novel not conspicuously aided to new life by Jeffery Farnol. Those addicted to period romance will enjoy it; poets should appreciate the rhythm and the color of its phrasing. It is the work of an artist, if not a work of art. In passages it moves like music, and its atmosphere is admirable." W: R. Benet

+ — Lit R p503 Mr 18 '22 780w

"Written in a new, vivid style which has now the pungency of imagism and now the stiffness of a manner not quite at ease with itself. Miss Johnston is working in a direction of growth which has important promise."

+ — Nation 115:131 Ag 2 '22 60w

"It is a curious book, curiously written, a fascinating compound of history and romance and mysticism. Its many characters are well individualized the numerous threads of its plot of intrigue and counter-intrigue held firmly. To read it is to step out of our modern life into a world of powers and adjustments different from our own, and, through that very difference, possessed of a glamour and a magic our own can never have, just because it is our own." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p24 Mr 19 '22 1650w

"The author's method of bringing out the mediæval setting and pageantry of her romance is peculiar but effective. It will be recognized by a choice class of readers and critics as a delicately wrought tale with a passion of soul showing itself beneath the curt sentences." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 131:74 My 10 '22 230w

"It is a curious tale which lifts one out of the present-day materialistic scientific, world, and transports him to an almost mythical world of old. The excellent craftsmanship will be valued by the discerning reader."

+ Spring'd Republican p15a Ap 23 '22 570w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p395 Je 15 '22 550w

Wis Lib Bul 18:156 Je '22

JOHNSTON, WILLIAM ANDREW. Tragedy at the Beach club. 269p $1.75 Little

22-4085

The discovery of the dead body of Dr Rhodes one morning at the Beach club, in Rockmont, Long Island, casts a pall on the colony where the doctor was greatly beloved. The marriage of Rhodes, whom every one had thought a confirmed old bachelor, his will leaving his fortune to Mollie Manners, the disappearance of a scrap of paper on which the doctor was writing a message when shot, are perplexing facts. The strange doings of Paul Carew, to whom Mollie Manners is engaged, and the discovery that the doctor's wife is in an insane asylum and that his child is living, are clues all worked out to a most unsuspected climax.

"We will say for Mr. Johnston that his affairs de coeur are not so bad as most. In fact, we are forced to admit that he not only makes a plot, but he makes, as a rule about two real people as well. That is an achievement. Real people are growing scarce."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 29 '22 280w

"This story will win an audience with those who do not like the ordinary run of murder novels, because it is told in a simple manner, though the mystery grips the reader throughout."

+ N Y Times p2 Mr 26 '22 270w

JOHNSTON, WILLIAM THOMAS, ed. Bill Johnston's joy book. 432p il $2.50 Stewart Kidd

817 Humor. Jokes

22-7764

A book of 2002 jokes and humorous anecdotes. These are arranged under forty-two subjects and supplied with a cross-referenced index.

Booklist 18:356 Jl '22

"Many a reader will make good use of this volume. The public speaker, the club raconteur and their ilk may gnash their teeth when JOHNSTON, WILLIAM THOMAS, ed.—Cont. they find their favorites given to the other fellow, but they will get even by laying heavy hands on the other fellow's pet."

Boston Transcript p7 My 6 '22 210w

St Louis 20:273 N '22

